Senator Kennedy, you have asked whether comprehensive reform is feasible. Our answer is that it is both necessary and feasible. We vigorously disagree with former Governor Edmund Brown who calls for the passage of the bill in its present form as the only possible consensus which can be achieved and who calls for initiation of the amendment process in separate bills "addressing themselves to narrow, specific controversial problems." We believe that such an approach would perpetuate the very hodgepodge which the present legislation is designed to charge.

The section on sentencing is one of the most critical and one of the most promising of the present revision. It does not resolve the current widespread debate about the purpose and mode of sanctions, but develops an interim strategy in order to offer, according to Judge Marvin Frankel in his testimony of June 8, a compromise between

“the unacceptable regime of unfettered judicial discretion which we have now, and the opposite extreme of rigid, mandatory sentences, which many have been driven to propose.”

Unfettered discretion and rigid mandatory sentences are the antipodes of the debate but there are emerging areas of agreement which should inform the sentencing provisions of S. 1437.

First, the discretionary powers of judges should be maintained but limited as a means of controlling disparity. S. 1437 takes this course—in the interim by narrowing somewhat the range and scaling down slightly the maximum terms of most categories of offenses; and in the long range, by establishing a Sentencing Commission which will establish guidelines for determinate sentencing.

We recommend two changes. First, we recommend that maximum sentences be scaled down drastically. The criminal justice system, as the agent of intervention, should intervene in the life of an individual only for socially useful purposes and for very short periods of time.

The 1973 “Report of the National Advisory Commission on Standards and Goals,” page 145, Corrections Volume, concludes that:

Long periods of isolation from society as an answer to increased crime may be self-defeating * * *. The fact remains that if society had to bear the burden of showing that increased restrictions on liberty deter crime, it would undoubtedly fail. In a free society, long prison sentences cannot be justified on the basis of speculation concerning deterrence, particularly where the detrimental effects of imprisonment for the individual offender are known and demonstrable.

The second change we would recommend is that the mandatory imprisonment provisions for class A felonies, trafficking in an opiate and for use of a weapon in the course of a crime, be eliminated. We oppose all forms of mandatory sentences as unworkable and insist that discretion belongs properly with the judiciary.

When you try to impose mandatory sentences, what happens is that, rather than discretion being lodged with the judiciary, it is used by the prosecutor or by the law enforcement personnel.

Our experience in New York State with mandatory drug laws would bear that out.

Senator KENNEDY. We are talking about a 2-year minimum, not a 10-year minimum as you have in New York, or even life imprisonment in New York. We are talking about a 2-year minimum for trafficking in heavy drugs and use of a weapon in a crime, with exceptions written in. We have a list of exceptions, such as age, duress—all kinds of exceptions. And there is only a 2-year minimum.

Reverend MACKAY. We believe that the judiciary should have discretion not to use imprisonment in every instance of imposing a sentence.

Senator KENNEDY. Are you familiar with the fact that the Second Circuit in a hypothetical case involving the same fact situation, gave from 3 years to 20 years?

Reverend MACKAY. Yes; I am aware of the problem of disparity.

Senator KENNEDY. That was in one circuit with the exact same fact situation.

What we are talking about here is trafficking in narcotics with the possibility of mitigating circumstances.

Reverend MACKAY. We are unalterably opposed to mandatory sentences.

Senator KENNEDY. You may continue.

Reverend MACKAY. We oppose the death penalty on principle and could not support a bill which contained it.

A second general area of agreement is that judicial sentences should be subject to review. S. 1437 provides for appellate review if a sentence exceeds the minimum or maximum guidelines. We recommend that the right of review for the defendant not be limited. We believe a sentence could be improper even though it was within the guidelines. We urge this committee to further question the advisability of prosecutorial review because it would seem to place the defendant in double jeopardy.

A third general area of agreement is that guidelines should require a judge to sentence on the basis of the least drastic alternative. S. 1437 enumerates several sentencing options but it has no explicit presumption against imprisonment.

Section 2003(b), which requires a statement of reasons for imposing a sentence, should be revised to include the procedure a judge must follow in determining the least drastic alternative.

Again, we refer you to Standard 5.2 of the Corrections Volume, "National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals;" to the proposed rule of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals, Committee on Sentencing Procedures, II, Dannaz, 1976; and to the Yale Study, "Toward a Just and Effective Sentencing System: Agenda for Legislative Reform," June 1977.

S. 1437 takes cognizance of another area of agreement that, if incarceration is ordered, length of sentence should be determined by the judiciary rather than the Parole Commission. We recommend that abolition of parole be made more explicit on the basis of our concurrence with Professor O'Connell's contention in his testimony of June 8, 1977, that the parole process should not be administratively abolished by the Sentencing Commission. It is Congress that should set the lead time at which the Parole Commission would be phased out as the Sentencing Commission's provisions for determinate sentences are adopted.

If parole determinants are abolished and early release set at nine-tenths of sentence, it is all the more imperative that maximum terms be drastically reduced.

S. 1437 should be structured to avoid the pitfall of longer average times served associated with the determinate sentence schedules proposed or adopted to date. Also, if parole is abolished, the post release services now provided should be available to releasees without coercive supervision.

Finally, in regard to the proposed Federal Sentencing Commission, our preference for the composition would combine the best features of S. 1437 and S. 204, Senators Hart and Javits. The appointments should not be made from the Judicial Conference exclusively. We recommend that the appointments be made on a tripartite basis and that there be nine members, at least one of whom is a former prisoner.

In addition to the perspectives of the Judiciary and the Parole Commission, it is important to have those of the private sector and of affected persons.

Too many of our criminal justice standards and goals are developed in isolation from the testimony of those most affected. Too many of our standards and goals are based on misconceptions about the nature of crime.

We commend S. 1437 for reducing at the Federal level some of the disparity of treatment between so-called white collar crime and that of street crime. But the fact remains that poor and minority persons are most often victimized as well as being those most often sentenced to prison.

David L. Bazelon, chief judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals, District of Columbia Circuit, cautions us against simplistic solutions to that type of crime, New York Times, February 15, 1977.

He reminds us that we convict and demand "tougher sentences" for the street offender, yet :

Street crime has no nostrums apart from profound social reforms, which are generally expensive, inefficient, and unpopular . . . It is always easy to concede the inevitability of social injustice and find the serenity to accept it. The far harder task is to feel its intolerability and seek the strength to change it.

America needs to search for new paradigms for conflict prevention, intervention, and resolution. Fortunately, the religious community is beginning to respond to Roscoe Pound's challenge—lecture at Harvard Law School, 1925—to "give serious attention and show the way to more coherent and ethical ways of dealing with crime."

L. Harold DeWolf, retired dean of Wesley Seminary and a member of our Interreligious Task Force, is one who is building bridges between Judeo-Christian ethics and criminal law. It is his premise that :

Criminal justice, properly understood, is the defense of a community in which people are able to pursue their various legitimate interests. When the existing community is disrupted by crime, it is the task of criminal justice to restore its unity in such a way as to strengthen it against further disruption. Cumberland Law Review, volume 7:393, 1977.

In that definition, justice is not repressive but is the standard by which wholeness is attained and maintained in communities. We wish to continue exploration by the public and private sectors of our Nation into the concepts of social defense and restoration as the bases upon which to build future criminal codes.

In the meantime, we pledge our efforts to the members of this committee so long as you are committed to developing an eminently fair and constitutional code.

Thank you.

Senator KENNEDY. I want to thank you very much. I think it is marvelous that the Interreligious Task Force is working in this area. It is very, very helpful to us. I think there are very profound moral implications as well as legal implications regarding this legislation. I welcome the attention and the interest which you have made here. I want to thank you very much. We hope you will keep in touch with us and give us your views as the legislative process moves ahead. We are very grateful to you.

Our next witness is Ms. Susan Kokinda of the U.S. Labor Party.

STATEMENT OF SUSAN KOKINDA, U.S. LABOR PARTY

Ms. KOKINDA. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I have a prepared statement which I would like to have submitted for the record. I would like to elaborate on what I feel are the critical points.

Senator KENNEDY. We will have it included in the record in its entirety.

Ms. KOKINDA. Thank you.

[The material follows:]

TESTIMONY OF THE U.S. LABOR PARTY REPRESENTATIVE

Mr. Chairman and members of the Senate Judiciary Committee; the U.S. Labor Party views S.B. 1437, the proposed revision of the federal criminal code as incompetent, dangerous and subversive to the Republican principles of law elaborated at the founding of this nation. As a result of a total mislocation of the problem of crime and the proper function of law in society, the American people have been presented in the past two years with a Hobbesian choice as the legislative outcome of the eleven-year project to overhaul the nation's criminal code: a direct police-state by 1978 (the old S-1) or Kennedy's new version, which will bring the U.S. to the same end, but narcotized (quite literally) by Orwellian provisions for so-called equality and individual liberty.

MISLOCATION OF THE PROBLEM

Laws exist to inform the willful impulses of a society and its individual members to absorb the outlooks and methods, and to take the actions which correspond to the society's general interest. There is no way to reform the federal criminal code without applying a definition, at least implicitly, of the society's general will and interest, coincident with defining penalties for crimes against that national interest. As we demonstrated for you in the Law Enforcement Reform Act of 1976, it is precisely the lack of a compelling definition of the national interest and the political failure to win the population to such a definition which is the chief cause for epidemics of crime such as the one this nation is experiencing.

Deterrance, with "equality" of treatment—the motivating point for this bill's mandatory sentencing provisions and the recent resurrection of capital punishment—is a mockery of law well demonstrated in the Gary Gilmore case where the criminal, a confessed murderer, was eagerly accepted as an anti-hero by a degraded U.S. population.

In fighting the war against Britain and in winning the population of the colonies to the Constitution, the Federalists faced similar outbreaks of crime and heteronomy fed by the Tories' ideology of direct democracy and populism, and ideology embraced by the Carter Administration today. They did not turn, as the conservatives on this committee have, to a hoard of law professors, miseducated social scientists, and criminologists who ply their trade on the "insolubility of the crime problem." They did not turn to the ignorant legal codifiers who spin laws on top of each other into infinity with no relationship to the problems they are addressing. Nor did they rush away from defining policies and programs which would properly subsume the problem of crime as this committee has done with eleven years of misinformed debate in which the public good was defined, crime by crime, by the number of years of punishment attached to each.

Instead, the Founding Fathers developed a rigorous definition of the national interest: industrial growth and development, scientific progress under a Republican and federal system. They launched a massive political organizing campaign aimed at raising the general intellectual level of the population to allow for assimilation of the advanced conceptions on which that definition of the national interest was based. Such a program would allow for the proper situation and definition of a criminal justice system, through the individual's compelling moral experience of his freedom, his capacity to create new lawful orders within the necessities posed by society, to mediate the progress of society, and his related capacity to distinguish between good and evil.

IMMEDIATE POLICY IMPLICATIONS OF THE KENNEDY PROPOSAL

Our detailed analysis of this bill is being submitted for the record. Here, we want to touch briefly on Chapters 13 and 14 and on the organized crime section to demonstrate the bill's incorporation of the methods of the Institute for Policy Studies and Ralph Nader into national law. These provisions codify legal procedures which will institute a permanent Watergate against any and all political opposition to the Carter Administration's programs. Since the function of the original Watergate operation conducted by New York banking interests was the destruction of the population's belief in its national institutions, these chapters militate against the government's ability to appropriately define the national interest. They therefore insure continued government by the Rockefeller financial interests.

Since Watergate, radical chic lawmakers have proved their worthiness to lower Manhattan by demonstrating how the invention of new crimes, reform and regulation of the lives of public officials, trial by the press—all sanctimoniously undertaken on behalf of the American little man against complexity and bigness—can effectively destroy political opposition without resort to more tedious methods.

The drive against organized crime was and is the primary vehicle for destroying this nation's trade unions, particularly the Teamsters. The official corruption sections now incorporated into law produced the lawless Federal Election Commission and a cowering Congress eager to separate itself from such "special interest groups" as its own constituencies. The Offenses Involving Government Processes Section with its perjury and false swearing provisions replicates the legal system which emerged in post-1933 Nazi Germany. This Nazi legal system emphasized crimes of omission to regulate both the population and industry. Finally, the corporate accountability and white collar crime provisions echo the Rockefeller-sponsored Naderite drive to strangle American industry.

If the Congress buys the Carter energy and economic programs rather than insisting that the United States join the rest of the world in founding a new world economic order, these sections of the Kennedy Bill will be utilized ruthlessly by the Justice Department in operations to soften the U.S. population for austerity. However, the severe economic looting policies dictated by the drive to pay the New York banking debt will quickly require a shift into the direct police-state methods, of the type set forth in the original S-1.

THE KENNEDY BILL DEFINES A SOCIAL-CONTACT
CONTRARY TO REPUBLIC LEGAL PRINCIPLES

The amoral theorists who have devoted themselves to the Kennedy proposal—precisely because the bill is being discussed apolitically and without regard to a coherent definition of the national interest—have developed an Animal Farm model of the criminal justice system where the sovereign powers and laws of this nation are degraded to the functions of low-grade management experts.

This nation has enacted and upheld laws against drug use—including marijuana—and other "victimless" crimes precisely because it depends on the creative labor power of its population for its continued existence. To the legal management expert, prosecution costs too much and is not efficient—besides the prerogative of an individual to destroy his or her mind is a private interest and not one which should concern the state. The state is simply the collection point for all these private individuals and contracts its services to them. It is only a short step from this notion of law to the point where the state will itself provide the wares for its citizen drug users in order to turn a better and quicker profit. In fact, this has been proposed by Dr. Peter Bourne's endorsement of heroin and cocaine legalization.

Similarly there is a whole new class of citizens to be managed by the federal legal system, the so-called victims of crime. Since there is no real approach to ridding the nation of crime we can assume their numbers will double and triple and all of them must be compensated for this policy failure.

Finally, the legal managers have had to develop efficient and "equal" means for dealing with its regular customers. Now they grade crimes according to their assumed social value and mete out penalties without the need for human intervention. The U.S. Labor Party takes note of the efficiency of the method but asks what reason have you given your properly processed and punished felon for going through the arduous educational process of actually becoming a human being, of defining himself as a member of society?

The problem with all social contracts as our Founding Fathers noted in rejecting such a scheme for the U.S. Constitution is that they postulate a continuous war between the interests of the individual and his society, the antithesis of Republican national policies. If the Congress does not take cognizance of the federalist approach to situating the criminal justice system, if it continues on its present social contract course at the whims of the New York Banks, the associated social and moral breakdown will quickly overcharge Mr. Kennedy's system of efficient management—leading directly to a U.S. police state.

Ms. KOKINDA. The discussion which has taken place so far on the question of Criminal Code reform severely mislocates the real question of crime facing this country. Instead what has taken place is the classic left-right tug of war around two sides of the same coin essentially.

On the left side one has those who favor more rehabilitation and less punishment. On the right side one has those who favor more punishment, perhaps, and less rehabilitation.

Both are missing the critical issue, which is the outbreak of crime and heteronomy in a society whose clearly defined national goals and national interests are now lacking. That is the critical question of an outbreak of crime and heteronomy in society.

What has to be grappled with is that there are essentially two approaches to the question of crime and the relationship of the individual to society.

The first approach, the approach embodied in the founding of this country and in the notion of a republic, is that of the ability of a nation to define its national interests and to define what is a crime against the national interest and the individuals engaged in propagating that national interest.

Our country was founded on a very clear perception of national interest—that of industrial, technological, and scientific progress in opposition to those British financier forces who were attempting to keep this country in a state of enforced backwardness, an agricultural backwater open for British looting.

It is with that kind of definition of national interest that one can then locate the definition of a crime against society.

Take the example of decriminalization of marihuana and other drugs. The use of marihuana and other drugs absolutely must be considered a crime against society. What is the most important precious resource of a society? The ability of the human mind to make creative contributions to the further advancement of the technological and industrial progress of that—

Senator KENNEDY. You are against decriminalization, is that correct?

Ms. KOKINDA. Absolutely.

Senator KENNEDY. Do you think we ought to do the same thing for liquor?

Ms. KOKINDA. No; because the medical evidence for liquor is not the same as the medical evidence for marihuana.

Senator KENNEDY. Please submit that.

Ms. KOKINDA. We certainly will.

Senator KENNEDY. We have evidence quite to the contrary.

Ms. KOKINDA. That is true. I am quite aware of some of that evidence, but I think it is scientifically incompetent, unfortunately.

I will refer as our evidence our testimony on the nomination of Dr. Peter Bourne around the question of decriminalization of marihuana.

Senator KENNEDY. I am familiar with that.

Ms. KOKINDA. In the body of that testimony we discussed the scientific evidence, much of which has been downplayed or underplayed in the press. That scientific evidence is actually quite profound.

I will be more than happy to submit that.

The specific question with regard to marihuana is this. The scientific evidence indicates—evidence which is not very well known but is extremely competent, and actually well known in international circles—

Senator KENNEDY. I have more than just a passing interest because, I am also chairman of the Health Committee. We have spent a great deal of time in all of these areas trying to review the health implications of these issues. That is why I am interested in terms of your testimony that you do not think that the continuing use of alcohol has as serious health implications as marihuana has.

Ms. KOKINDA. Indeed, I would not want to say that it has no serious health implications. However, the impact of marihuana on the creative capability of the mind—

Senator KENNEDY. Do you think we ought to stiffen the penalties for it?

Ms. KOKINDA. I would not want to specifically make a suggestion one way or the other on that, but it definitely should not be decriminalized.

The individual in society must not be given license to destroy his own mind. That is the basic resource of our country.

Senator KENNEDY. Do you think we ought to leave that up to the Federal Government?

Ms. KOKINDA. Absolutely.

Senator KENNEDY. We should not leave that up to the States or—

Ms. KOKINDA. We do have a Federal system, the States have a role.

Senator KENNEDY. We also have a State system.

Ms. KOKINDA. It is necessary for the States to play their proper role in that question.

Senator KENNEDY. You do not think they ought to be able to make a decision on that; is that correct?

Ms. KOKINDA. The States absolutely should make some decisions. The States, in fact, in the past 6 months have taken, we feel, very important steps toward defeating decriminalization in a number of places where we have played a critical role in bringing forward the medical evidence which in general has not been brought forward.

It is not simply a question of some individual's right one way or the other. It is a question of what is the basic resources of a human society. It is that creative potential of the mind. The medical evidence is incontrovertible that extended use of marihuana destroys precisely those—

Senator KENNEDY. Do you think there are more people hooked on alcohol or marihuana in this society.

Ms. KOKINDA. Pardon?

Senator KENNEDY. Are there more people hooked on alcohol or marihuana?

Ms. KOKINDA. I would imagine there are probably more people hooked on alcohol. The question is which is more destructive to the human mind.

Senator KENNEDY. What is the third biggest killer and the most costly disease today in terms of our society?

Ms. KOKINDA. I don't know.

Senator KENNEDY. It is alcoholism.

Ms. KOKINDA. The question again is the question of the most critical resource. That is the question of the human mind.

Senator KENNEDY. Alcoholism—what does that do to the human mind?

Ms. KOKINDA. It does not have the effect on the higher order functions of the mind which marihuana does. That is some of the medical evidence which we and others have brought forward in recent hearings.

I think it is perhaps necessary to move on from this point since this should not be a debate around marihuana.

Senator KENNEDY. Fine.

Ms. KOKINDA. The point I am trying to make here is the question about national interest and how one defines national interest and the activities of the individual in that context. That is the approach we feel is embodied in the Constitution and form of republican government which this country has.

There is a second notion. This is a notion which I think this legislation, unfortunately, embodies. That is the notion in which the individual stands in conflict with his society. It is a social contract notion, an Animal Farm notion. It is a notion in which one keeps the individual in check by a certain amount of punishment—pain and pleasure, if you will. It keeps him in check through the codification of a series of punishments which suppress these anarchic or heteronomic motions.

The question with this social contract notion and what is embodied in this is that it completely ignores the notion of national interest, and mobilizing a population around a clearly defined national interest.

Let me compare the way this legislation goes at the question of an outbreak of heteronomy with the way our Founding Fathers dealt with precisely the same question.

The ability to mobilize the American population, faced with a similar crisis, say, in the 1780's or the 1790's—

Senator KENNEDY. Will you define heteronomy as you are using it, please?

Ms. KOKINDA. It is a more precise form of the word "anarchy" essentially. It is the individual acting without any notion of a larger interest or a larger whole. I guess atomism would be a corollary or anarchy, but heteronomy is a more philosophical use of the term, I think.

What occurred in the 1780's and 1790's in this country on a number of occasions was an outbreak of heteronomy—anarchy in a number of places. Take, for example, the Shays Rebellion in New England. Essentially there were outbreaks of looting and outbreaks of lawlessness—

Senator KENNEDY. You do not think there was justification for the Shays Rebellion? You do not think there was some merit to that?

Ms. KOKINDA. That is precisely the point. How do you deal with the Shays Rebellion? Do you round up the entire population of New England and put it either through rehabilitation or punishment or do you go to the root cause of that in terms of the economic basis?

Precisely what the Founding Fathers did was carry out a political education or a political organizing drive around what the solution to the Shays Rebellion was, which was the establishment of the Constitution, a Federal system, the enhancement of the notion of republic with this very clear notion of what the economic interests of the country were in terms of advancing economic development.

That is the critical question we are facing. We are facing exactly the same question now. We are seeing increasing outbreaks of criminal activity on the part of the American population. The question is why. This country has been in a state of economic decay starting basically from 1958 with the recession but most clearly within the past 5 or 6 years.

That economic decay is most eminent on an international scale right now. Senator Javits last week warned of a full scale outbreak of international depression based on the collapse of the international monetary system.

The question is does one simply try to check the outbreak of criminal activity on the part of a population or does one go to the root cause of what the problem is. That is precisely the question which has to be grappled with by Congress. Anything else is rearranging the deck chairs on the Titanic. In fact, it is much worse. It is punching big holes in the hull of the Titanic.

Senator KENNEDY. How do you explain the reduction in unemployment and the general stability of the economy in the 1960's and yet the growth of crime?

Ms. KOKINDA. Although there was a certain nominal reduction in unemployment, if you actually look at the composition of the work force, you will find a very real reduction in skilled and semiskilled labor in this country and an increasing influx into paper-pushing or labor-intensive kinds of jobs. This correlated with the decrease in the actual capital base of this country starting with the 1958 depression.

The critical question facing, say, youth in the early 1960's or a member of the black population is did he see an expanding work force where he could enter the ranks of the skilled and semiskilled. He did not. He saw perhaps paper-pushing jobs or unproductive labor-intensive jobs. That is the root cause of the outbreak of disaffection, both in the black population and in the youth population in this country.

What this country needs at this moment is a fundamental return to what was called "the American system" in the 1820's, and earlier actually. That would include the principles of Alexander Hamilton, Washington, and most emphatically Franklin and carried forward by such individuals as Henry Clay.

It is a very simple notion—the establishment of a national bank which allows for the social surplus of the Nation to be constantly directed into those areas which would yield the greatest scientific and industrial development and insuring that the industrial interests of the Nation are constantly the interests which are in the forefront. Unless we insure that, we have the situation we face today (and faced in the 1830's) where financier and monetarist interests, who will make profit on a piece of paper at the expense of industrial growth if necessary, will dominate our national economy.

That is the first question that has to be dealt with. How are we going to reestablish the American system of industrial growth in this country in opposition to what President Carter is representing, in opposition to what the financial forces such as the trilateral commission behind him represent?

Unless we do that, we are going to see increasing outbreaks of heteronomy, of criminal activity, and of anarchy. The only way to cope with it is going to be increasing the hue and cry in the population for more punitive punishment or an increasing prison system, in very simple terms.

That is the dilemma facing this Congress. The legislation currently before this subcommittee and the Congress in no way grapples with that question. In fact, in a number of detailed sections of my printed testimony it makes the situation substantially worse.

Senator KENNEDY. Why shouldn't you try to do both?

Ms. KOKINDA. One can only be seen as a subset of the other. We are not doing the first. How can we deal with the criminal question if we are not dealing with the basic economic problems facing the country? You cannot. Indeed, Carter's energy program makes our economic problems worse. Again, you are rearranging the deck chairs on the Titanic.

Senator KENNEDY. Thank you very much.

Ms. KOKINDA. Thank you.

Senator KENNEDY. Our final witness is Ms. Marian Agnew.

STATEMENT OF MARIAN AGNEW, ACCOMPANIED BY JULIAN C. HOLMES

Ms. AGNEW. Mr. Chairman, I have with me my colleague, Mr. Julian Holmes.

We have submitted a statement for the record. I would ask that sections of both House and Senate Labor Committee reports cited at the end of our statement be included in the record as well—those sections which refer to grand juries.

Senator KENNEDY. Your prepared statement will be included in the record in its entirety.

[The material follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF MARIAN K. AGNEW, JULIAN C. HOLMES, AND ARLYN E. UNZICKER

This testimony was prepared following several years of effort to bring certain violations of local and Federal laws committed by local and Federal officials to the attention of appropriate authorities.<sup>1</sup>

We learned an important lesson from this experience: That Federal prosecutors do not hesitate to intimidate and threaten persons who attempt to provide information on white collar crime to grand juries in the Washington metropolitan area.

Section 1326 of S. 1437 deals with the subject of improper approaches to juries. Section 1326 will replace Section 1504 of Title 18 which today specifically permits persons to seek hearings before grand juries. The right to request an audience before a grand jury is not guaranteed or even suggested by the language of Section 1326: "A person is guilty of an offense if he communicates in any way with a juror . . . with intent to influence improperly the official action of the juror."

<sup>1</sup> (a) Hearings before the Subcommittee on Labor of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, United States Senate, 93d Congress, 2d Session, on a Review of the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970, July 22, 30 and 31, August 13 and 14, 1974.

(b) Hearings before the Select Subcommittee on Labor of the Committee on Education and Labor, House of Representatives, 93d Congress, 2d Session, on An Act to Assure Safe and Healthful Working Conditions for Working Men and Women . . . September 17, 1974.

It is argued that the word "improperly" somehow establishes the propriety of a "proper" approach to a grand jury. But unless the right to request an audience is guaranteed, such a request can be considered a criminal offense by prosecutors who over the years have assumed responsibility for directing, controlling, and restricting the daily business of grand juries. When white collar crime is at issue, one best remember that prosecutors sometime serve at the pleasure of the corruptors.

Our experience with prosecutors around Washington suggests that a rewriting of Title 18 Section 1504 should:

1. Reiterate the traditional right of citizens to bring knowledge of wrongdoing to a grand jury.
2. Provide criminal penalties for anyone who interferes with persons who, at the request of a grand jury, are assisting that jury.

The present law provides only one of these vital protections. Section 1326 of S. 1437 provides neither.

It is our belief that persons concerned about wrongdoing in government have little or no hope for relief unless a grand jury of peers can be apprised of such wrongdoing. It is our experience that prosecutors often protect themselves and their political colleagues from investigation, by preventing grand juries from receiving information about high level crime. Under S. 1437, this oppressive practice would be encouraged by weakening the current law.

Thus we believe S. 1437 must be strengthened by including the provisions noted above.

Ms. AGNEW. We would like to thank you for the opportunity to appear today.

This testimony was prepared following several years of our efforts to bring certain violations of local and Federal laws committed by local and Federal officials to the attention of appropriate authorities.

Mr. Holmes, Mr. Unzicker and I took to grand juries facts which we felt should be of major concern to the Justice Department and U.S. attorneys. We learned a very important lesson from this experience. Federal prosecutors will not hesitate to intimidate and threaten persons who attempt to provide information on white collar crime to grand juries in the Washington area.

I have been threatened by a U.S. attorney for bringing to the grand jury information requested by that grand jury.

This testimony addresses a problem of which you have seen primarily the other side—the abuse of prosecutorial power.

We not only experienced that but an even greater problem: acts of omission on the part of the prosecutors when we brought substantive issues which we felt should be discussed before the grand jury to them.

Section 1326 of S. 1437 is a recodification of section 1504 of 18 U.S.C. Section 1504 of title 18 specifies that "Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the communication of a request to appear before the grand jury." This particular section is supported by United States v. Smyth, 104 F. Supp. 283 (N.D. Cal. S.D. 1952), which has been followed consistently in the courts and is cited in the U.S. Code Annotated in conjunction with section 1504.

Compare this wording to that in section 1326 of the new S. 1 which uses the word "improperly" to describe the notion that the prosecutor will have to evaluate whether issues and facts communicated to the grand jury will be legal. There are several places in S. 1437 where this word "improper" is used. It allows the prosecutor a vague standard to accept or reject information. Our position is that a vague standard cannot be used to make the decision as to the legality or illegality of a communication. We feel that this word "improper" is not specific enough.

The Senate Committee Report (1976) also says on page 363 that in addition to requests to grand juries for appearances "only such other 'clearly proper' communications as those involving the court, attorneys and others who counsel jurors as to their functions and duties" would not violate section 1326. Therefore the vague word "improper" has been further diffused into a "not clearly proper" standard. We are most uncertain as to the intent of the authors of this ambiguous language. It is likely that our communication with the Federal grand jury would have violated this standard if the prosecutor had chosen to interpret it according to the text of the committee report.

As no culpability is set forth in this section, the applicable culpability level for "improper" conduct is "knowing," an awareness that the offender was communicating. Furthermore, even though the purpose of the communication contains the element of intent, that "particular motive or reason behind the defendant's intent to influence improperly need not be shown." Senate Committee Report, at 363 (1976). Here the word "improper" circumvents logical reasoning to provide no requirement for a reasonable evaluation as to whether the information communicated was given in the time-honored grand jury tradition of public remedy or was, in fact, a clearly defined illegal act. The distinction is obvious. Therefore, the prosecutor is not required to consider whether the communication is a good faith effort by citizens to give helpful information or an attempt to wrongfully influence. Communication, per se, without the sanction of the prosecutor or court in all cases will violate section 1326 of the new S. 1—a Class A misdemeanor which could sentence a law-abiding citizen to up to 1 year in prison.

We must also object strenuously to the exclusion of the precedent set by United States v. Smyth, Id. from the Senate committee report. Cited in the U.S.C.A. § 1504, in pertinent part the Court held that:

The purpose of 18 U.S.C.A. § 1504 was to prevent anyone from attempting to bring pressure upon or intimidate a grand juror by a written communication with that intent. But that section does not prohibit a grand juror from receiving a communication, written or oral. The grand jury could indict anyone for a violation of that section if the requisite elements were present. But not if they solicited a communication or indicated a willingness to receive one; then the requisite intent would not be present and there would be no crime. Id. at 209 [emphasis added].

This omission is a clear indication that the committee wanted to eliminate the standard of intent and to reverse a sound public policy which has served the public well. Evidently the committee chose to substitute for that policy a vague and ambiguous standard which could be interpreted to thwart the efforts of well-intentioned citizens to bring matters involving white-collar crime to the attention of the juries and to have them prosecuted and imprisoned for trying to do so. We claim that this section of § 1326 must be changed and the applicable sections of § 1504 including the pertinent annotations relating to Smyth must be retained in the U.S. Code.

Senator KENNEDY. Under what now exists there is the language "nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit * * *"

Ms. AGNEW. That is correct.

Senator KENNEDY. If we put that in, in terms of the bill, are you satisfied with that?

Ms. AGNEW. Sir, that handles one of the problems that must be addressed.

Senator KENNEDY. I will make every effort to put that in. I think it should be.

Ms. AGNEW. Thank you, Senator. That is excellent.

Our other request is to provide criminal penalties for anyone who interferes with persons who at the request of a grand jury are assisting that grand jury.

These two provisions will substantially strengthen section 1326 which as now written would effectively prohibit private citizens from bringing to the grand jury the kinds of issues which have traditionally been the purview of the citizen's jury.

Senator KENNEDY. I agree with what your thrust is, but the other side of the argument is the improper influencing of grand juries. That is the balance.

There are people, particularly in the area of organized crime, who will contact all of the members of the grand jury in order to influence them adversely.

These are the balances obviously. We are trying to deal with it.

I would be interested in how you would provide protection against that kind of thing.

Ms. AGNEW. I think you have to deal with that on the grounds of intent, particularly with people who have been targeted by grand juries. However, people have that right to be heard.

I think that you can very easily lean too far on one side. Threats by prosecutors have been made to both Mr. Holmes and to myself. We are not speaking of something in the abstract; this was personal.

There is another provision of the new S. 1 which must be revised. This is section 1358 which again uses the word "improper."

Page 447 of the committee report interprets this particular section by defining "improper" criticism of an illegal act by a Government official as a Federal crime if it does the official some economic harm.

One of the things that we did was request the resignation of certain Labor Department officials as a result of not investigating a very serious crime. We could have been indicted under section 1358 at that time had S. 1437 been law in its present state. If harm had consisted of economic loss or injury to an official, the offense would have been graded as a class A misdemeanor—up to 1 year in prison—committee report, p. 448.

Senator KENNEDY. Why do you think so?

Ms. AGNEW. Because we came before the grand jury. We requested the resignation of a Labor Department official. We would have caused him economic loss and injury by depriving him of his job. We criticized him.

Whether that criticism was "improper" would have been the prosecutor's own determination.

Senator KENNEDY. I do not see how that would have been considered improper. That is going to be a factual question to be decided, is it not?

Ms. AGNEW. Senator, the current prevailing political atmosphere in this country is for reform of our Federal statutes. We hope never again to have the corrupt and regressive situation that we have had under the past administration. However, unless the institutions of our Federal justice system are reformed so that it will be impossible for that kind of regressive situation to occur, I fear that it is possible. It may not be probable but it is possible.

I would hope that any recodification of the United States Code would preclude to the ultimate extent any recurrence of those kinds of events. We do not want a United States Code that is worse than that which got us into the problems that we have had heretofore. We have got to have a U.S. Criminal Code that is far more protective of the right of private citizens to go before grand juries—that traditional right which dates back to the origins of our criminal justice system—to enable citizens to have some effective remedy for injury from white collar crime. That is due process.

We want a Justice Department that functions in the interest of justice, not injustice.

I would like to give the rest of my time to Mr. Holmes.

STATEMENT OF JULIAN C. HOLMES

MR. HOLMES. I think Ms. Agnew has presented our position. I would however, like to comment, Senator Kennedy, on the question of balance.

SENATOR KENNEDY. You see, the language in the statute says a person is guilty of an offense if he communicates in a way with a juror or a member of the juror's immediate family with the intent to influence "improperly" the official action of the juror.

It is incredible to me, although you might find a U.S. attorney who would say that just bringing information to a grand juror's attention falls within that particular definition. You may find a U.S. attorney who interprets it that way. They can interpret any provision illegally, I suppose.

I agree with your point and I think it is well taken. I will be glad to have our people draft language regarding how you can deal with that, but we will not be able to deal with a situation where a U.S. attorney runs amuck. I think your point is well taken and legitimate.

MR. HOLMES. Yes, Senator, we think what you have suggested would be a perfectly suitable way to work out a big part of this problem.

In answer to your particular question about balance, our answer is yes, we were threatened with criminal prosecution by a U.S. attorney who interpreted the law exactly this way which you have found to be surprising. This is what prompted us to think about this matter further.

Perhaps our situation has been unique in that citizens are not appearing before grand juries bringing information about wrongdoing in government everywhere. However, both in the local communities here in Washington and on Federal issues I have had considerable experience with grand juries because I have found that grand juries seem to be at times the only way that a person has any possibility of an action against a corrupt act of a governing official. If he does not bring it before a jury of peers, he may not succeed in finding an ear to listen to the problem.

It has been my personal experience—and I think it has been Ms. Agnew's experience—that prosecutors are very likely—more likely than not—to interpret as "improper" such an approach as we have made to grand juries.

I have written evidence to submit. I will briefly describe one incident which is not atypical.

Senator KENNEDY. Just give it briefly. We would be glad to have it for the record.

Mr. HOLMES. In the summer of 1973 we submitted some information to a grand jury, which jury invited us to testify before it. That jury asked us to bring more detailed information on the crimes which we said we suspected existed, which information we immediately prepared and tried to submit to that jury.

To make a long story short, we were personally threatened with a possible violation of title 18, section 1504 by the prosecutor over here in Alexandria, in the Eastern District of Virginia.

We have a letter among other exhibits in this file, from Senior Judge Walter Hoffmann suggesting that there could be a problem with our submission of evidence even with the protection which is written into the present law.

Our evidence, though, was apparently interesting enough and substantial enough that the judge requested that the prosecutor schedule us to appear again before that grand jury. That is what it took. It took a threat to me. It took a threat to my colleague, Arlyn Unzicker. It took a threat to Ms. Agnew, but we persisted. We ignored those threats.

These threats are sometimes more the rule than the exception. Our experience is that there does need to be a balance, but there also needs to be a balance to protect the public from prosecutors who exercise oppressive power right now under the present law, which is, I think, a little better than the new version of S. 1. That balance is certainly needed.

Senator KENNEDY. We will make sure that these other provisions are considered.

The committee itself is considering grand jury reform. There may be some opportunity in that legislative undertaking to carry this to a conclusion.

Would you submit that and we will make the relevant parts of it part of the record. We will include the entire story as part of the files of the subcommittee.

Mr. HOLMES. Would you like me to note what the documents are?

Senator KENNEDY. Sure.

Mr. HOLMES. One is a letter of July 29, 1973, to the foreman of the U.S. Federal grand jury from the three of us. The second is a letter from—

Senator KENNEDY. Are they all identified or will you identify them and we will make them a part of our complete file.

When you submit them, just give us an explanation and then we will make them a part of the file.

Mr. HOLMES. Yes, I will.

Senator KENNEDY. OK. Fine.

Thank you very much.

The record will be open until July 15.

The subcommittee stands in adjournment.

[Whereupon, at 12:15 p.m., the subcommittee adjourned.]

[Material supplied by last witness follows:]

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

The set of documents which follows is submitted by Marian K. Agnew, Arlyn E. Unzicker, and Julian C. Holmes to illustrate a coverup by Federal prosecutors and the U.S. Department of Justice of violations of law by the U.S. Department of Labor and other Federal and state officials. These exhibits outline the course of our efforts to secure grand jury action on these matters.

Between July of 1973 and June of 1975, we presented indictable evidence to local and Federal grand juries. For having done so, each of us was threatened by Federal prosecutors with criminal prosecution.

Although a Federal grand jury in Alexandria, Va., asked U.S. Attorney General Edward Levi for a special prosecutor to investigate "possible coverup by local and Federal officials", Dr. Levi never granted the request. Thus, the efforts of the Justice Department and its prosecutors to quash any meaningful inquiry—were ultimately successful.

MARIAN K. AGNEW,
JULIAN C. HOLMES,
ARLYN E. UNZICKER.

Enclosures.

INDEX OF DOCUMENTS

1. Hearings on OSHA Act of 1970 Before the Select Committee on Labor of the House Committee on Education and Labor, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 515-516 (1974) (Testimony of Arlyn E. Unzicker). (Discussion or problem with prosecutors and grand jury procedures.)

2. Id. at 687-690 (Testimony of Julian C. Holmes).

3. Unzicker et al., letter to Foreman, U.S. Federal Grand Jury, Norfolk, Virginia, November 11, 1973. (This letter details problems with the U.S. Attorneys in the Eastern District of Virginia and his obstruction of justice with regard to grand jury business.)

4. Agnew et al., letter to Hon. Sam Ervin, November 11, 1973. (Names parties benefitting from obstruction of justice by the U.S. Attorney in the Eastern District of Virginia.)

5. Hon. Walter E. Hoffman, letter to Marian K. Agnew, November 20, 1973. (Letter notes that attempt to provide information to grand jury about obstruction of justice by the U.S. Attorney could be a crime.)

6. Jim Walls, Skyline—Jury Renews Inquiry, The Globe, June 6, 1974. (Article reports that Federal Grand Jury in Norfolk asks for investigation by reluctant prosecutor.)

7. Ben A. Franklin, $50,000 Awarded in Building Collapse, The New York Times, January 14, 1975.

8. Marie C. Caber, letter to Hon. Edward Levi, May 7, 1975. (This was a request by the Acting Foreman of the Alexandria, Virginia Federal grand jury for the Attorney General of the United States to provide a special prosecutor to investigate charges of violations of Federal laws by local and Federal officials. This letter was prepared following testimony before the jury on May 7, 1975 by Julian C. Holmes.)

9. Steve Bates, Justice Tells Juries No Probe Needed, The Globe, October 9, 1975. (Details Justice Department actions to head off grand jury probe with a special prosecutor.)

STATEMENT OF ARLYN E. UNZICKER, ANNANDALE, VA., AND JULIAN C. HOLMES, FRIENDLY, MD., ACCOMPANIED BY DAVID A. SUTHERLAND, ESQ., ALEXANDRIA, VA.<sup>1</sup>

Mr. UNZICKER. We have presented this to a U.S. grand jury, and presented it to the Justice Department. Mr. Chairman, in your opening remarks, we can give you a historic perspective and documentation of the run-around we have had with the Justice Department, with the Watergate Prosecutor, with the FBI and with the U.S. attorney in Virginia.

Mr. GAYDOS. Well, what was the responsibility of the grand jury? Was that a county grand jury?

<sup>1</sup> Excerpts from hearing on Occupational Safety Hazards Act of 1970 before the Select Subcommittee on Labor of the Committee on Education and Labor, House of Representatives, 83d Congress, 2d Sess., 1974.

Mr. UNZICKER. That was a U.S. grand jury.

Mr. GAYDOS. United States.

Mr. UNZICKER. We understand from the U.S. attorney, David Hopkins, acting U.S. attorney, now, that the grand jury decided not to return a bill of indictment on the criminal charges that we brought, which are contained in our report called The Bailey's Crossroads Cover-Up and the Law, which I want to make part of the record.

It is my presentation prepared for the Federal grand jury and the Office of the Special Watergate Prosecutor.

Mr. GAYDOS. You state that you personally testified?

Mr. UNZICKER. Yes, sir. We have testified. We have in September of 1973, in December of 1973, and on June 5, 1974.

Mr. GAYDOS. Let me ask you, I know you comprehend and understand that a grand jury is composed of citizens like you and I.

Mr. UNZICKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAYDOS. And is that grand jury still sitting, do you know?

Mr. UNZICKER. That grand jury is not sitting.

Mr. GAYDOS. Have you made any attempt to contact any of the members of that grand jury at all to find out what went on?

Mr. UNZICKER. Mr. Chairman, when we indicated to the U.S. attorney, Brian P. Gettings, earlier that we charged him in a conference that he wasn't doing anything and that we planned to go to that grand jury and asked for the members, he said, "Mr. Unzicker and Mr. Holmes, I don't like to do this, but I want to caution you that under title 18 you are not permitted to communicate with a grand jury."

Mr. GAYDOS. After it finished sitting?

Mr. UNZICKER. Yes, sir.

Mrs. AGNEW. No, no: this was while it was sitting, after he testified.

Mr. UNZICKER. After September 1973, after we testified.

Mr. GAYDOS. I am talking about after the grand jury made its decisions. I am asking you, have you contacted the grand jury as to why when you made your presentation they saw fit not to recommend to the U.S. attorney to prosecute? That is the only question.

Mr. UNZICKER. All right, that is the question.

Mr. GAYDOS. I am not asking you for a specific response if you haven't done it.

Mr. UNZICKER. No; we haven't done it.

Mr. GAYDOS. Proceed. I didn't want to interrupt you because I will sidetrack you. Excuse me. You may proceed.

Mr. UNZICKER. All right. I am just going to say that we have received, well, the runaround from the U.S. attorney's office in this matter. Mrs. Agnew will testify that when she got—tried to get the list of the grand jurors, the U.S. attorney down in Norfolk was cooperative and was willing to give this list and then later on he called back and said, "I cannot permit you to have that list."

So getting the names of the grand jurors is a problem, isn't it, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. GAYDOS. Well, I wasn't there. I wouldn't know; but if you are posing the question generally and if I may respond on behalf of that nebulous person you are talking to, I might agree with you and say "yes," but I don't know.

It is public; I am advised by counsel it is public and can be available, and if you have time you stop in and see us after you testify and we will show you how to get the names.

Mr. UNZICKER. Well, we will proceed in that direction. We have had a number of things. We have had this Richmond appeal as to trying to pin the responsibility on who is responsible for the construction work, for one, for construction work, and so forth.

Now, in our prepared statement we would like to say that our story is about one of the worst construction disasters in the United States. It is the story of how governmental venality has deprived the public of the protection of our Nation's safety laws and how public officials cover up for influential developers who break them.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, the statement which is sort of a summary of what we found out that OSHA has done in the past is the prepared statement which we submitted to the committee, and we can complete reading that statement, at your pleasure, or we could summarize what is in that statement with a quick summary of what OSHA is not doing today.

MR. GAYDOS. I would appreciate it if you would summarize it because I am more impressed with summaries. I think a man is more persuasive in summarizing rather than reading a statement. I would appreciate your proceeding in that way, if you don't mind.

MR. HOLMES. All right. Some of the facts I think are in order about how bad the coverup was. The average strength of the vertical columns in the lower six floors of building A-4 were below specification. Both construction cranes were erected improperly. Mazes of cracks radiate through the floors around most columns on all 24 floors.

The collapse has been blamed on workman error, that a workman on the day of the collapse pulled supports from under freshly poured concrete on the top floor. Both the Labor Department report and the county's report ignore the fact that the building is rotten from top to bottom, riddled with bad concrete and bad steel work and missing steel work. This is the high-rise building.

The Labor Department found in its report no bad steel work, no missing steel, no bad cracks, and no concrete that could be the cause of the collapses. The Labor Department issued no citations to the builder. It failed to cite the construction subcontractor for the crane violations, the lateral-bracing violations and the out-of-plumb shoring violations.

The outrages of outrages, though, is what is going on now. On May 9 of this year the Smith Co., working in close cooperation with the county officials, announced a plan to patch up the remaining standing portion of A-4 with a system of steel splints and subfloor I-beams. Expansion bolts were to be used to attach the splints to the weak concrete columns.

What is going to happen? The county says it has issued a building permit to rebuild the building and the garage.

What is being done by the Labor Department today? It is continuing to violate at Bailey's Crossroads the most fundamental provisions of the 1970 OSHA Act. It has failed to halt construction activities until the workers are provided with a safe place to work.

It was the intent of this Congress in passing the act to assure safe and healthful working conditions for working men and women. In stark contrast to this worthy purpose, the Labor Department has frustrated the right of citizens to equal protection under the law, has endangered the life and health of workers on tomorrow's jobs by failing to enforce safety regulations today, and has in fact discouraged OSHA Act compliance by employers who trust that the Labor Department will not enforce the law.

The ultimate insult is that the Labor Department has even failed to implement the procedures spelled out in its own compliance manual.

You asked us questions which relate to the motivations of officials, perhaps as to why these things happen, and we feel that it is unfortunate for the taxpayer that there does not seem to be an effective prohibition against making financial campaign contributions to persons who do business with the U.S. Government.

The authors, us, do not understand why the U.S. law, title 18,611 of the United States Code, prohibiting political contributions by Government contractors, should not have applied to the Smith partnerships.

Their Presidential campaign contributions were made while the Department was leasing to the Government buildings such as executive offices of the President.

The fact that the law has not been applied in this case, in Bailey's Crossroads, or in the case of these contributions, excuse me, places the Labor Department in the very uncomfortable position of having to decide how to be fair to a loyal supporter or contributor, and who at the same time is a prominent Government landlord.

We don't know whether the contributions were a factor considered by public officials who engineered the Bailey's Crossroads coverup. The important fact is that by their actions local government and Labor Department officials did cooperate to protect the general class of builders, developers, building inspectors, and construction companies which stand to benefit from less than vigorous enforcement of worker safety laws.

If the reason this was done is not determined, it will happen again and again, just as it has in the past. More people will be maimed and killed, and Government officials will continue to ignore the law with impunity.

We feel there is a difference between the Labor Department coverup at Bailey's Crossroads and the administration coverup of the ITT-Hartford incident, the IRS coverup of President Nixon's tax returns, the coverup of the Watergate burglary, the coverup of the CREEP campaign contributions, the wheat deal, the milk deal, the Justice Department foot-dragging in the Fitzgerald affair, and the commission and coverup of the burglary of Dr. Fielding's office.

There is a difference: At Bailey's Crossroads, 14 men were killed; 46 were injured, some for life.

Concerning the general subject which I will try to clear up in a couple of sentences of our work with the grand jury in Norfolk on the Bailey's Crossroads collapse, it is our feeling, and all three of us have testified before that grand jury and tried to work closely with the Federal prosecutor, that the Federal prosecutor did not want anything to do with any indictments arising out of the Bailey's Crossroads controversy.

We found the grand jury to be what I considered a fair cross-section of the public that I have known in my lifetime; they were most interested in the subject matter, and indicated to us, in our many hours before them, that they thought something should be done. The prosecutor indicated just the opposite at almost every step of the way. And now the grand jury has been sent home and we are in limbo concerning what to do.

It has been dropped, in spite of the fact that we have been given indications that we would be brought back to testify, if we wished, next month.

To summarize the problems at Bailey's Crossroads and OSHA's participation, the photographs which we will present, that I took myself, I think show, I think they document, three simple problems.

The photographs of the high-rise building show how part of the high-rise structure was brought down on top of a rubble pile in which men still lay buried.

The photographs of the garage, which are most of the photographs which I have, show very clearly the inadequate design of this garage to protect workers from being killed—which they were. It shows how a total floor slid down over the columns that were supposed to support it. It shows the lack of bonding between concrete and what few reinforcing bars were there.

Many photographs show very clearly the reinforcing bars sticking out, completely stripped, hardly any little bits of concrete sticking to them.

And the other photographs which I have, two or three, show the nature of the hoisting construction in the garage. It shows the ends of the cable sticking out of their tubes that are tightened up to put compression sidewise on the floors.

And I think these photographs will give the committee a good handle on the physical problem that was there, both in design and with the construction practices used at Bailey's Crossroads. The photographs simply show that there wasn't enough support around in that structure to prevent a tragedy, and I think the photographs will help this committee to come to a conclusion that the sole cause of this collapse, which as given by OSHA and the county officials involved was workmen error, is not a proper conclusion; that the cause of the collapse was a building riddled with problems, and which still is riddled with problems, as the report we have submitted by Law Engineering Testing Co. shows.

OSHA deliberately ignored a major part of the disaster, the garage. OSHA failed to cite the builder for anything. OSHA failed to cite violations in the building that their own technical report on Building A-4 documented.

All kinds of things which could have very well caused or contributed to the building collapse. OSHA did not study the structure of the building. It did not find the bad concrete, the bad steel work, the missing steel, the cracks in the floor.

Today, OSHA is still failing in its duty. Work is going on over on building A-4, a building riddled with all these problems; the building is being rebuilt, and OSHA did not even exercise its opportunity to appear before the county when the county held a meeting, a public meeting on the rebuilding of this building, to send a representative, and OSHA knew about it. And that is part of our file, the notice given to OSHA of that meeting and the response OSHA gave to us.

And OSHA has not done anything to stop the work on the garage to rebuild it, which the county says they have issued a permit for.

Thank you.

Mr. GAYDOS. I wish to thank you for some very impressive and courageous testimony.

MACLEAN, VA., November 11, 1973.

FOREMAN, U.S. Federal Grand Jury,
U.S. District Court,
Norfolk, Va.

DEAR SIR: On September 12 we appeared before the Norfolk Grand Jury and delivered over 3 hours of testimony on matters pertaining to the collapse of two buildings at Bailey's Crossroads in Fairfax County, Va.

During our testimony, U.S. Attorney Brian P. Gettings announced that the decision had been made to proceed with an inquiry into the matter, and it was agreed that we would provide to the Jury our personal files of documentation and any other material that would aid in establishing violations, or probable cause for violations of Federal statutes.

Six days later we had prepared chronological files of documentation. We had developed a witness list with subject matter that we felt should be discussed with witnesses under oath. We reiterated a number of possible crimes that the Jury might pursue, and we provided a list of new citations that updated to September 18 our formal Report to the Grand Jury of July 25, 1973.

On September 18, we hand delivered this material to U.S. Attorney Brian B. Gettings and Assistant U.S. Attorney David H. Hopkins. A letter summarizing the material was addressed to the Grand Jury, and we asked that it be delivered.

On October 23, two of us (Unzicker and Holmes) met again (at our request) with Mr. Gettings and Mr. Hopkins. We have found to our dismay that:

(1) No documents had been acquired from the U.S. Department of Labor file as Mr. Gettings had assured us would be done promptly.

(2) No meaningful inquiries had been made.

(3) Our letter of September 17 addressed to the Grand Jury had not been delivered.

(4) Since September 12, no jury had been called into session in the Bailey's Crossroads matter.

(5) December would be the first occasion on which Mr. Gettings would bring the Bailey's Crossroads matter before the Jury.

In addition we informed Mr. Gettings that:

(6) Important evidence that we had twice urged him to acquire was being destroyed and, his delay was seriously compromising the Grand Jury's case.

(7) We would mail immediately our letter of September 17 to the Grand Jury in Norfolk if Mr. Gettings would provide the addresses of the Jurors.

Mr. Gettings informed us that it would be a Federal Crime (Title 18 USC Sec 1504) to mail the information requested by the Jury to the Jury. Our request for the mailing addresses for the Jurors has brought a threat from Mr. Gettings' office to bring criminal charges against us.

The Annotated United States Code makes it quite clear that our requests are legitimate, and that furthermore it is unlawful to obstruct the flow of information requested of us by the Jury. (Title 18 USC Sec 1503, 1504; U.S. v. Smythe, D.C. Cal 1952, 104 F Supp 283)

We attach hereto our letter to the Jury dated September 17, and we request to appear under oath before the Grand Jury to inform the Jury of:

(9) Recent actions and inactions by the office of the U.S. Attorney that prejudice the Grand Jury investigation of Bailey's Crossroads.

(10) Recently discovered actions of the U.S. Department of Labor to cover up culpability at Bailey's Crossroads.

(11) Evidence being destroyed because of inaction by the U.S. Attorney.

(12) The need for a prompt request from the Grand Jury to the U.S. Attorney General to assign a special prosecutor to the case for the purpose of:

(a) Implementing the investigation started by the Grand Jury on September 12.

(b) Bringing a halt to the destruction of evidence.

(c) Determining whether the conduct of the U.S. Attorney in the Bailey's Crossroads case constitutes an obstruction of justice under Title 18 USC Secs. 1503 and 1505.

We trust that this information is useful, and we wish to cooperate in any way possible to expedite the investigation of the Bailey's Crossroads disaster.

Very truly yours,

ARLYN E. UNZICKER.
MARIAN K. AGNEW.
JULIAN C. HOLMES.

MACLEAN, VA., November 11, 1973.

Hon. SAM ERVIN,

Chairman, Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR ERVIN: On March 2, 1973 at the Skyline Towers construction site at Bailey's Crossroads in Fairfax County, Va., a 24-story vertical section of a high-rise condominium apartment building collapsed. Simultaneously, a separate 2.3 acre, two-story concrete parking garage disintegrated. Over a period of 2 weeks, 14 bodies of construction workers were found in the rubble.

Public officials have produced no meaningful explanation for the separate collapse of the parking garage where flexible steel cables replaced the more familiar self-reinforcing steel rods and where faulty concrete was used. Many men who died were found in the garage.

Our report on the disaster (attached) documents a coverup by local and Federal public servants of gross negligence that caused the collapse of the two separate buildings. We summarize in this letter recent participation in the Bailey's Crossroads coverup by both the U.S. Department of Labor and the Department of Justice.

Among those to benefit from the coverup are the concrete construction industry; a $35,000 contributor to the Committee to Reelect the President; and a now prominent subsidiary of IT&T, the Hartford Accident and Indemnity Company which insured both the negligent local officials and the concrete contractor.

It has now become clear that the Department of Labor "investigation" into the double disaster was directed at only one of the two buildings that collapsed. The reports on tests of the post-collapse concrete are being withheld from the public by the Department of Labor, so that there is no way to ascertain why one investigation was called off. We do know that the uninvestigated garage building used bad concrete and was constructed with insufficient reinforcing steel to provide worker safety. To have investigated and reported on this collapse would have resulted in the condemnation of an unsafe construction practice.

On September 12, we presented over 3 hours of testimony on Bailey's Crossroads to the Federal Grand Jury in Norfolk, Va. The Jury indicated a strong desire to pursue the matter of the coverup by Federal officials and asked us to provide the Jury with documentation and other material that would aid in establishing violations of Federal statutes. We promptly provided this information, but U.S. Attorney Brian P. Gettings has failed to deliver our mail to the Jury, stating that it would be a violation of the law to do so.

Mr. Gettings response to our offer to mail the information ourselves to each Grand Jurors was that such an action would constitute a Federal Crime under Title 18 USC Sec. 1504. The annotated Code cites specifically a Federal Court decision that flatly contradicts Mr. Gettings interpretation of the Code. (U.S. v. Smythe, D.C. Cal. 1952, 104 F Supp 283)

Our request for the mailing addresses of the Grand Jurors has been answered by the office of the U.S. Attorney with a threat of criminal court action against us if we persist in our efforts to mail to the Grand Jury the information it requested. In our opinion, Title 18 USC Secs. 1503 and 1505 bear strongly on this obstruction of justice by the office of the U.S. Attorney.

The building industry is a heavy contributor to political campaigns, and it is very important to this special interest group that the U.S. Government not reveal the truth about construction practices at Bailey's Crossroads. The Committee may wish to inquire whether the IT&T—Hartford intrigues and the $35,000 campaign contribution from the Bailey's Crossroads builders to the CRP provided an incentive for U.S. Attorney Gettings' stalling of the inquiry requested on September 12 by the Federal Grand Jury and calling off the investigation promised on March 3 by Secretary Peter Brennan after consultation with President Nixon.

The Committee may well ask whether the relationship of Secretary Brennan to the Bailey's Crossroads coverup is similar to that of John Mitchell to high level influence peddling. We hope the Committee will find the enclosed material useful in clearing the way for a full investigation of this scandal in which the lives of 14 men were lost and in which much Federal tax money has been spent to protect the guilty and in which the U.S. Justice Department has aided materially the coverup of facts in this record disaster.

Sincerely,

MARIAN K. AGNEW.
ARLYN E. UNZICKER.
JULIAN C. HOLMES.

U.S. DISTRICT COURT,
EASTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA,
Norfolk, Va., November 20, 1973.

Ms. MARIAN K. AGNEW,
MacLean, Va.

DEAR MS. AGNEW: Your certified letter, return receipt requested, addressed to "Foreman, U.S. Federal Grand Jury, United States District Court, U.S. Post Office Building, Norfolk, Va.," was received by the Clerk of this Court and, pursuant to my instructions, he delivered the letter to me as I assumed (and he assumed) that it was a communication from some member of the family of the former Vice President of the United States. As you may know, I presided over the trial of Spiro T. Agnew which was concluded on October 10, 1973.

I opened the letter in question and have noted its contents. It appears clear that the signers of the letter do have a right to appear before the grand jury and I am instructing the U.S. Attorney, Mr. Gettings, to whom a copy of this letter is being sent, to arrange for your appearance at the grand jury session to be held in Norfolk beginning December 10, 1973. However, unless the U.S. Attorney believes that your presence is necessary for the purpose of testifying in conjunction with a case which he has authorized continued prosecution, the signers of the letter will have to pay their own expenses in coming to Norfolk and returning to their residences.

Except for the fact that your request to appear before the grand jury is proper, I have concluded not to deliver your letter to the foreman of the grand jury as it may well be a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1504, in which event I would be a party to such a violation. If, however, you and your co-signers are desirous of expressly violating the law, the U.S. Attorney may wish to present your letter to the foreman of the grand jury at the appropriate time.

Any request for the appointment of a special prosecutor should be directed to the Attorney General of the United States.

I note that you also sent a copy of your letter to Senator Ervin. I do not know what status he has in the matter and, for that reason, am not sending him a copy of this letter. You are, of course, at liberty to forward a copy of my letter to Senator Ervin.

However, I suggest that you refrain from attempting to write to any member of the grand jury.

Very truly yours,

WALTER E. HOFFMAN, U.S. District Judge.

P.S.—I do not have the addresses of the other signers of the letter. Extra copies are enclosed for distribution to them.

---

[From the Arlington Globe, June 6, 1974]

SKYLINE—JURY RENEWS INQUIRY

(By Jim Walls)

A U.S. grand jury in Norfolk has ordered a 90-day investigation into allegations surrounding the collapse of two buildings last year at Bailey's Crossroads, according to a citizen group which appeared before the grand jury Wednesday. "U.S. Attorney David Hopkins has informed us that we presented a clear cut case of a violation of federal criminal law, and that he is initiating an FBI inquiry into the question of whether a District of Columbia or Virginia grand jury should have geographical jurisdiction," said a statement released Wednesday afternoon by the citizen group, which includes Marian K. Agnew, David Sutherland and Arlyn Unzicker of Fairfax County and Julian Holmes of Prince Georges' County, Md.

The citizens would not indicate the nature of the alleged violation. Hopkins would neither confirm nor deny the statement attributed to him.

The citizen group last week released a portion of their prepared testimony, which alleges that federal and local investigations covered up important information regarding the disaster.

The atmosphere of the press conference, held Friday in Washington, was in marked contrast to a similar meeting last July 30. Reporters asked few questions and chatted with the activists afterward. Last year, when the group first officially made their coverup charge, much of the questioning was openly hostile.

The group has been interviewing workmen and public officials and analyzing documents pertaining to the Skyline Center collapse since March 2 of last year, when an 80-foot portion of a 24-story apartment building collapsed during construction. A 2.5-acre parking garage adjacent to the high-rise collapsed simultaneously. The disaster killed 14 construction workers and injured 46 others.

"By their actions, local government and Labor Department officials did cooperate to protect the general class of builders, developers, building inspectors and construction companies which stands to benefit from less than vigorous enforcement of worker safety laws," the prepared statement said. "If the reason this was done is not determined, then it will happen again and again and again."

The group charged that Fairfax County, through its paid consultant Ingvar Schousboe, and the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration—OSHA—limited their investigations to the collapse of the high-rise, and ignored the parking garage.

Schousboe has maintained that the garage collapsed under the impact of debris falling from the high-rise next to it. Schousboe said in a sworn deposition that he limited his investigation to the high-rise, according to the citizen group.

OSHA has had no official comment on the collapse of the garage. The report of the National Bureau of Standards, which performed technical work for OSHA said that "consideration of (the garage's) failure was beyond the scope of this report."

The citizens maintain that the garage, built with post-tensioned concrete, might not have collapsed completely if it had been built with conventional reinforced concrete. Four workers died in the garage area.

The group noted that the OSHA investigation uncovered seven violations of federal safety standards at the Skyline site. However, only three citations were filed by OSHA, and only against the concrete subcontractors, Miller and Long of Virginia Inc. OSHA's failure to issue all the citations, and failure to charge the project's owner-builder, the Charles E. Smith Building Corp., is a violation of the 1970 act creating OSHA, according to the group.

The group also charged that OSHA "covered up and kept from the public the knowledge of the characteristic dangers from easily triggered, total collapse of post-tensioned concrete construction." The group asked the grand jury to determine if that is an indictable offense.

The Fairfax County investigation, the activists alleged, "concentrated on the premature removal of shoring to the exclusion of other possible causes of collapse." They also charged that Schousboe's report "goes beyond the point of simple coverup of material fact." Citing Schousboe's statement that concrete compression tests during construction showed no sub-standard concrete in the area of the collapse, the group said that "over half of the concrete samples tested on the second level of the garage failed to attain minimum strength," according to the same concrete tests.

The activists also noted that officials of the Smith Corp. contributed "substantial" amounts to the Committee to Re-Elect the President in 1972. Information obtained by Common Cause from the Committee to Re-Elect showed that Charles and Robert Smith contributed some $35,000 in the final days before mandatory disclosure came into effect.

However, Presidential secretary Rosemary Woods has disclosed a "secret donors list" which reveals that Smith Corp. officials contributed $55,500 to the re-election effort. The disclosure came in March in the trial of former Cabinet members John Mitchell and Maurice Stans.

The group noted that Smith partnerships collect about $12-million annually in rental income for offices leased to the federal government. The federal grand jury was asked to determine if the contributions are in violation of a campaign statute prohibiting political contributions from anyone "entering into any contract with the United States . . . for the rendition of personal services or furnishing any material, supplies or equipment to the United States."

In a related development, the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors rejected a motion to ask the state licensing board to review the license of the Smith Corp. The motion was made by Annandale Supervisor Audrey Moore whose only support for the action came from Centreville Supervisor Martha Pennino.

Opponents of the measure said that the county should wait until it has received a comprehensive report on a Smith proposal to rebuild the collapsed structures.

Smith's license in the District of Columbia was revoked last Sept. 10, for "having failed and-or refused to file annual reports and pay all fees due" in 1972 and 1973.

[From the New York Times, Tuesday, January 14, 1975]

$500,000 AWARDED IN BUILDING COLLAPSE

(By Ben A. Franklin, Special to the New York Times)

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Jan. 12—A Federal jury here has awarded a $500,000 judgment to a worker who was disabled in a 1973 apartment building collapse in which 14 workers were killed and 34 were injured.

The negligence judgment was returned in United States District Court on Thursday against the architects and consulting structural engineers on the Skyline Plaza project in nearby Bailey's Crossroads.

The judgment went to Joseph Bergen, a 30-year-old former elevator installer. It opened the way for scores of similar suits, asking million of dollars more in worker damage claims not covered by workmen's compensation.

At least 20 more plaintiffs involved in the 1973 construction disaster were described by a lawyer in the case as "getting their papers ready" to sue.

The defendants ordered to pay the $500,000 are the architectural firm of Weihe, Black & Jeffries and the consulting engineers, Heinzman, Clifton & Kendro, both of Washington, D.C.

A "FRIGHTENING" DECISION

A spokesman for the American Institute of Architects described the judgment as "frightening" and said it raised "large, new questions about the professional liability" of architects.

Experts in the field said that if the award is upheld on appeal it could encourage reform of state workmen's compensation laws. Such laws, which vary widely from state to state, generally limit benefits to the dead and injured in on-the-job accidents to low weekly or monthly payments, while shielding employers from any further liability to damage suits.

Mr. Bergen suffered arm fractures, a skull fracture and lung injuries at the bottom of an unfinished elevator shaft when the central third of the building, one of four at the Skyline Plaza project, crashed down on March 2, 1973, as the concrete forms were being removed on the top floors.

He had been receiving Virginia's maximum workmen's compensation benefit for a 100 per cent disability, $160 a week. The payments were suspended last month, according to Lawrence J. Pascal, Mr. Bergen's lawyer, pending a medical reassessment of Mr. Bergen's asserted inability to work since his injury.

The judgment served to revive a citizens' investigation aimed at fixing responsibility for the collapse and for an alleged "cover-up" of culpability.

PROBLEMS WITH INQUIRY

Half a dozen private citizens in Fairfax County, Va., who have failed so far to enlist much official interest in their 18-month effort—said that they were more determined than ever to force government authorities to fix the ultimate blame for the collapse.

Arlyn E. Unzicker, a civilian physicist with the Navy who has been the group's chief spokesman, said that despite nearly two years of investigatory efforts he and other critics of what he has called "the Bailey's Crossroads cover-up" have failed to obtain indictments or "meaningful action" from two Federal grand juries, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the United States Labor Department, a Congressional committee, or from state or county prosecutors.

"We think we may get somewhere now," Mr. Unzicker said in an interview after the judgment was returned. "This decision holds, as we have held all along, that it was the faulty design and supervision of the Skyline Plaza building by the engineers and architects that brought on the collapse. An awful lot of other, corner-cutting building has been going on around the country that should be looked at too."

The suit was the second filed by Mr. Bergen in the case. His original suit was against an array of the project's architects, engineers and contractors, as well as the owners, the Charles E. Smith Company of Washington.

Judge Albert V. Bryan, in whose court Thursday's judgment was made, dismissed the original suit a year ago. He acted then under a standard provision of workmen's compensation laws that forecloses damage suits by injured workers against companies that have made payroll contributions to state workmen's compensation funds.

The theory of these laws is that such employers are covered by compensation benefits, in place of the right to sue for damages.

Judge Bryan ruled, however—and he was subsequently upheld on appeal—that the Skyline Plaza architects and engineers could not automatically escape vulnerability to Mr. Bergen's suit and could be held liable for proved negligence in the design and engineering supervision of the building.

In the four-day trial that ended on Thursday, the judge instructed the jury to decide whether the architects and engineers had been negligent. The jury held that they were. Lawyers for the two firms said that they would appeal.

---

U.S. DISTRICT COURT,
EASTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA,
Alexandria, May 7, 1975.

HON. EDWARD H. LEVI,
U.S. Attorney General, Department of Justice,
Washington, D.C.

SIR: The Federal Grand Jury appearing before this Court requests that a Special Prosecutor be appointed based on testimony heard on May 7, 1975.

The purpose of this appointment is to investigate alleged illegal activities involving possible cover-ups by local and Federal officials centered around the collapse of the Skyline Towers Buildings at Baileys Crossroads, Virginia.

Yours very truly,

MARIE C. CABER, Acting Foreman.

---

[From the Northern Virginia Globe, October 9, 1975]

JUSTICE TELLS JURIES NO SKYLINE PROBER NEEDED

(By Steve Bates)

Two Alexandria-based federal grand juries have been told by at least one U.S. Justice Department attorney that a special Skyline prosecutor should not be appointed because the special Watergate grand jury is the appropriate body to probe allegations surrounding the 1973 high-rise collapse.

But according to court documents and correspondence, the Watergate grand jury went out of existence a month before one of the two Alexandria juries was briefed by Justice, the Watergate jury did not have time to adequately consider citizen allegations about Skyline, and that jury was empowered to deal only with the political contributions aspects of two local citizens' charges.

Citizen activists Aryln Unzicker of Annandale and Julian Holmes of Friendly, Md. have asked a number of federal and state grand juries to probe the reasons for the 1973 Baileys Crossroads high-rise collapse that killed over a dozen men.

They have also presented allegations of a local and federal cover-up of the reason for the collapse, illegal political campaign contributions made by the three principle officers of the Skyline construction firms, and federal cover-up of the contributions violations.

In response to Holmes' testimony on these matters on May 7, 1975, the regular grand jury sitting in the Alexandria federal courthouse formally asked U.S. Attorney General Edward H. Levi to appoint a special prosecutor in the case.

The jury wrote Levi on May 7, "The purpose of this appointment (a special prosecutor) is to investigate alleged illegal activities involving possible cover-ups by local and federal officials centered around the collapse of the Skyline Towers Buildings at Baileys Crossroads, Virginia."

Two weeks ago Justice released a copy of the grand jury's letter to The Globe, which had filed a Freedom of Information Act request and successfully appealed a preliminary refusal of that request.

According to Justice press spokesman John Russell, the department had responded verbally to the jury's letter by sending "someone to testify to the first (Alexandria) grand jury."

Russell said he understands that grand jury was "satisfied" by the testimony, and that when a subsequent regular Alexandria grand jury expressed an interest in the case, Justice told the new jury of the previous juries apparent reaction.

Russell declined to elaborate further on Justice testimony at the grand jury.

In response to Holmes' offer to testify before the current Alexandria grand jury, that jury's foreman wrote Holmes on Sept. 5 that an unnamed Justice attorney advised the jury that "the Attorney General has submitted the transcript of your prior testimony before the previous (Alexandria) grand jury to the special Watergate grand jury."

"As far as the current grand jury is concerned," the Alexandria foreman continued, "the matter is in the proper hands, and we do not think it proper or necessary for you to appear before us."

The Watergate grand jury went out of existence on July 3 and was empowered only to pursue specific allegations of criminal conduct in the Watergate affair and related political contributions.

Outgoing Watergate Special Prosecutor Henry Ruth acknowledged in an Aug. 29 letter to Rep. Marjorie S. Holt of Maryland, Holmes' representative in Congress, that the Watergate grand jury heard testimony from Holmes and Unzicker on political gifts by Skyline officers Charles E. Smith, Robert Smith and Robert Kogod.

Ruth wrote Holt in response to inquires from Holmes, "The grand jury fully considered this matter and . . . did not return any indictments."

But according to a May 9 letter from the foreman of the Watergate grand jury to Holmes, in which he and Unzicker were invited to testify on the contributions, the allegations raised "are very serious and may require many months of investigations before a decision concerning 'probable cause' could be made."

"Therefore," the Watergate foreman concluded, "we are uncertain whether we can reach a conclusion during the remainder of our term."

The jury did not meet many times between Holmes' and Unzickers' June 12 testimony to them and their July 3 expiration. During that time its main order of business was Watergate-related allegations, requiring two jury members to travel to the west coast to take testimony from former President Richard Nixon.

Holmes said he has written the current Alexandria grand jury that it was "apparently" given false information about the duration and scope of Watergate grand jury's probe of Skyline. He said he is asking the new Alexandria jury to take sworn testimony from him and certain "self-serving Justice Department personnel" regarding discrepancies in the case.

Alexandria U.S. Attorney William Cummings, court administration personnel and clerks office personnel have not returned a reporter's calls on Skyline matters.

Legal observers say the current Alexandria grand jury or a federal judge can appoint a special prosecutor for Skyline, although funding and logistical problems would have to be overcome.

Says Holmes, if the current Alexandria grand jury again declines to pursue the matter, he will "go elsewhere with the information if necessary."

---

APPENDIX

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE MEMORANDUM

To: Ronald L. Gainer Office for Improvements in the Administration of Justice.
 From: John M. Beal, Office for Improvements in the Administration of Justice.
 Subject: The Impact on the Federal Courts of Enactment of the Proposed Criminal Code.

FEBRUARY 10, 1977.

This memorandum examines the impact that enactment of the proposed recodification of the federal criminal law may be expected to have on the courts and the judiciary. Section A discusses the potential problems that could result from enactment of the Code. Section B examines the experiences of the courts in several states where codification of the criminal law has recently taken place.

A. IMPACT OF THE CODE ON THE FEDERAL JUDICIARY

(1) Will the proposed Code increase the federal district courts caseload?

The proposed Code should not increase the number of criminal cases in the federal district courts. The number of cases filed is a function of the investigative and prosecutorial decisions made by federal investigators and Department of Justice attorneys. Whether the present law or the proposed code is in effect should not affect the number of cases brought. Likewise, the number of appeals filed is not likely to be markedly affected by the enactment of the recodification. A defendant who wishes to appeal a finding of guilty following a trial can almost invariably locate issues to raise. This would not change under the new code. Nor is there a sound basis for expecting the number of appeals following pleas of guilty to increase consequent to recodification. These suppositions are supported by the experience of states that have codified their criminal law, as described in Section B, below.

(2) Will the proposed Code increase the federal court workload?

(i) Long Term Effect. In the long term the proposed Code will lessen the work per criminal case of the federal courts. This will be the result of simplification of the law and elimination of some present procedures.

There is simplification of both general terminology and definitions of offenses. For example, the present federal criminal law contains some 79 culpability terms that are undefined. In each case the burden is placed upon the courts to define these terms and their meanings within each statute. Under the new code there would be only four carefully defined terms.

With respect to definitions of offenses, federal law contains some 70 theft offenses; 80 forgery, counterfeiting, and related offenses; 50 sections covering perjury or false statements; and approximately 70 arson and property destruction offenses. In the proposed code all 270 of these offenses would be covered in fourteen sections.

In addition to simplification, consistency of terminology is maintained throughout the proposed revision. The result of this increased simplicity, clarity, and consistency will be that both trial and appellate courts will have less work in interpreting the law than at the present time. This will apply to such matters as selection of jury instructions, determination of the statute most applicable to particular conduct, and determination of whether particular conduct is encompassed by a given statute.

Other aspects of the proposed Code will eliminate several types of cases and procedures. Particularly, the decriminalization of the possession of small amounts of marijuana will eliminate one category of cases, the obviation of the need to prove jurisdiction to the jury will save trial time in litigated criminal cases, and the provision for limited appellate review of sentences is expected to reduce the number of post trial, appellate, and collateral attacks on convictions which are, in fact, usually indirect efforts to obtain sentence review.

(ii) Short Term Effect. It is recognized that the adoption of the proposed Code would result, after the effective date, in the necessity for the courts to provide interpretations of terminology used and offenses created. However, many aspects of the Code and its supporting material will minimize the extent of such interpretive work. Moreover, the savings in time that the Code will otherwise bring, even immediately upon its enactment, will substantially offset any interpretive burden. Specifically, there is, first of all, great consistency and repetition of terminology throughout the proposed Code. Consequently, relatively few terms will require interpretation, and the initial interpretation of a term in one context will facilitate, or even eliminate the need for subsequent interpretation elsewhere in the Code.

Secondly, much of the language of the Code is copied directly from current law. It has, therefore, already been interpreted. For example, the substance of the drug offense provisions of the proposed Code are taken directly and exactly from existing law, except that possession of small amounts of marijuana is decriminalized federally, and distribution of controlled substances is subsumed in the possession sections, thereby eliminating the need to prove intent to distribute or sell. Thus, existing interpretations of controlled substances law would apply to the proposed Code, some cases would be eliminated, and a difficult issue presented in many current cases would cease to arise. The significance of the continuity in this area is evident from the fact that in fiscal 1975, of 4,187 criminal cases filed in the U.S. Court of Appeals, 1,322 were for narcotics offenses.

Third, the Congress has been preparing an extraordinarily careful and extensive legislative history for the proposed Code, drafted in large part by experienced appellate attorneys. Congressional intent is set forth explicitly and in great detail, even to the extent of citing particular cases which the Congress intends should continue to be controlling.

Finally, with the expected two year delay between enactment and effectuation, there will be ample time for preparation to minimize the burden of the Code on the Courts. This will provide full opportunity for the drafting and approval of standard jury instructions; for familiarization and training of judges, prosecutors, and defense attorneys; and for preparation by the Department of Justice before the effective date of full briefs on all the major points of law in the Code that differ from current law. This last activity has already begun.

In short, the proposed Code will bring great long term benefits and, with proper preparation, will impose minimal short term burdens on the courts. These expectations are supported by an examination of the experience of several states that have recently codified their criminal law.

B. STATE EXPERIENCE

An examination of the experiences of several states that recently codified their criminal law indicates that the courts of those states had little increase in workload because of the codification. Of course, almost all trial and appellate courts have been experiencing increasing caseloads during the past decade. But it appears that codification has not been a contributing factor to the generally constant increases.

(1) New York.—Codification of the criminal law was effective in New York in September, 1967. Volume 300 of the New York Supplement contains reports of 212 criminal cases in trial and first level appellate courts reported during 1969, almost all of which came under the new code. Only 13 of the 212 cases involved interpretations of the new code. Excluding one case with an eleven page opinion and another which ran eight pages, the cases involving code interpretations averaged less than two pages. The other appeals, involving issues such as search and seizure, confessions, and sufficiency of the evidence, were resolved under the new code just as they would have been under the old law. The new code thus does not appear to have significantly increased the workload of New York state judges.

The foregoing conclusion was supported by Judge Richard Bartlett, Chief Administrative Judge of the New York Trial Courts, and Judge Harold Stevens, Chief Judge of the First Department of the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court. Judge Bartlett said that while some construction of new language was necessary, the volume of cases did not increase and the code had a minimal overall impact on the workload of the courts. He said he was confident that this is the opinion of New York judges generally. Judge Stevens echoed this opinion, stating that in his opinion the effectuation of the code did not measurably affect the workload of the courts.

Another perspective on the effect of the code has been provided by the district attorney for Schenectady County, who, in a law review article, evaluated the effect of codification after two years of experience. He concluded that the codification led to more efficient administration of justice and improved enforcement of the law. He attributed these improvements to a simplification of the law and a great increase in its internal coherence and consistency. This made it easier for police officers, prosecutors, judges, and jurors to understand the law, and, thereby, to more effectively and efficiently fulfill their respective responsibilities. (H. Levine, "The New York Penal Law: A Prosecutor's Evaluation," 18 Buffalo L. Rev. 269, 1969).

In sum, the evidence of the New York experience with codification indicates that it did not noticeably add to the burden of the courts.

(2) Georgia.—Codification in Georgia was effective July 1, 1969. An inquiry into the effect of codification on the workload of the courts reveals that there has been no appreciable impact. The number of criminal cases filed with the Georgia Court of Appeals during the codification period is presented in Table 1.

TABLE 1.—GEORGIA COURT OF APPEALS FILINGS

Year	1968	1969	1970	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
All cases.....	842	826	877	951	931	1,137	1,152	1,547
Criminal cases.....	130	143	142	208	248	346	348	520

From Table 1 it can be seen that the number of criminal cases filed with the Court of Appeals has been increasing rapidly but relatively constantly since 1970. This suggests that the codification did not result in a sharp, temporary increase in work as a consequence of questions of interpretation created by the new code.

This conclusion is buttressed by an examination of all the criminal cases reported in Volume 124 of the Georgia Appellate Reporter, which covers approximately half of the cases decided by the Georgia Court of Appeals in 1971. There were 76 criminal cases. Of those only 14 involved questions of interpretation of the new code, although almost all of the 76 cases involved incidents that took place after the effective date of the new code. Nor do the cases presenting questions of interpretation appear to present more involved problems. Excluding one unusual case with a 23 page opinion, the 13 cases presenting new code questions had opinions averaging 2.6 pages, while all 75 cases averaged 2.3 pages.

The Chief Judge of the Courts of Appeals, John Sammons Bell, who has occupied that position since prior to the effectuation of the code, was asked in a telephone conversation about the impact of the codification on the courts. He said that he believes that the codification actually made the resolution of legal matters easier. He said that there were some interpretive questions presented concerning the codified law, but no more than had regularly been the case under the prior law.

Thus, from case reports and judicial opinion, it appears that in Georgia the 1969 codification did not place a significant burden upon the courts.

(3) Ohio.—The Ohio codification was effective January 1, 1974. The impact of the codification on the workload of the Ohio courts does not appear to have been substantial.

The criminal caseload of the Ohio felony trial courts and the Ohio Supreme Court appear to have been affected very little by the effectuation of the new Code. Table 2 shows the post indictment felony terminations in the criminal trial courts in Ohio and the criminal filings in the Ohio Supreme Court (excluding a small number of original actions).

TABLE 2.—OHIO CRIMINAL CASES

	1973	1974	1975	1976
Common Pleas Court post indictment felony terminations	25,833	28,220	31,230	(1)
Ohio Supreme Court motions for leave to appeal in criminal cases:
Filed	330	306	378	465
Granted	19	22	15	20

<sup>1</sup> Unavailable.

The figures in Table 2 suggest that the Ohio Supreme Court filings reflect the constant increase in felony cases in the trial courts. The relatively constant number of motions for leave to appeal granted by the Supreme Court after codification indicates that there was not a great upsurge in unresolved issues created by the new Code.

An examination of the criminal cases reported in volumes 45 of the Ohio State Reports (2d) and 45 of the Ohio Appellate Reports (2d) reveals that the new code had a very limited impact on the workload of the courts. The Ohio State Reports volume, containing the decisions announced by the Ohio Supreme Court in January through March 1976, contains eight criminal cases. Only three of the eight involve interpretations of the new code, with one of the three being a speedy trial question. The three cases involving the new code averaged eight pages apiece, while all eight cases averaged 6.5 pages.

The Ohio Appellate Reports volume contains all the reported decisions of the Ohio Courts of Appeals from January through June, 1976. There are 25 criminal cases, with seven involving the new code and two of the seven presenting only speedy trial questions. The cases involving the new code average 6.1 pages, while all 25 criminal cases average 5.1 pages. These figures are particularly significant because in Ohio, appellate cases are generally reported only when new or important questions of law are decided. Thus, during the period covered by volume 45 of the Appellate Reports many additional appellate court cases were decided but did not involve interpretative or other significant issues and were not reported.

It appears from the filings and reported cases that in Ohio codification did not significantly increase the workload of the courts.

(4) Other States.—Less extensive information has been obtained from four other states which recently codified their criminal law.

(i) Kansas.—Codification was effective in 1970. The number of criminal filings in the state Supreme Court each year continued to increase at the same rate after codification as it had before, as Figure 1 shows. The Supreme Court is the only appellate court in Kansas, there being no intermediate appellate tribunal.

FIGURE 1.—Criminal cases filed annually in the Kansas Supreme Court.

(ii) Hawaii.—Codification was effective in 1973. As table 3 shows, the rate of criminal filings has grown at a steady rate since before codification. As in Kansas, there is no intermediate appellate court in Hawaii.

TABLE 4.—HAWAII SUPREME COURT CRIMINAL CASE FILINGS

Year	1972	1973	1974	1975	1976
Number of cases.....	28	41	69	78	9

(iii) Illinois.—Codification was effected between 1961 and 1963. The consequence of codification was discussed with retired Illinois Supreme Court Justice Walter Schaefer and sitting Justice Robert Underwood, both on the Court at the time of codification. They both said that while questions of interpretation did arise, neither those questions nor any other aspects of the codification had a significant impact on the appellate workload. Justice Schaefer added that the Illinois Supreme Court promulgated certain rules of criminal and appellate procedure to ease the transition to the new code.

C. CONCLUSION

The fundamental purpose of the proposed recodification of the federal criminal law is to significantly enhance the quality of federal criminal justice. As with any major development in the law, a degree of adjustment must be made at the time of transition. With the recodification, however, the available evidence indicates that the burden of adjustment on the federal courts will be minimal.

The Code has been carefully drafted to avoid litigation on questions of interpretation, there will be ample time for full preparation for the transition, and the experience of the States with criminal law codification is that the burdens placed upon the courts by codification are not substantial.

The permanent benefits that will be brought by the new Code, both to the public and all segments of the criminal justice system, including the courts, are undeniably great. The possible short term burdens are thus not such as to warrant delay in the enactment of this important reform.

---

SENTENCING REFORM: THE PROBABLE EFFECTS ON THE FEDERAL CRIMINAL JUSTICE SYSTEM OF ABOLISHING INDETERMINATE SENTENCES AND PAROLE IN THE CONTEXT OF A SENTENCING GUIDELINES SYSTEM

(By Karen Skrivseth, Office for Improvements in the Administration of Justice, United States Department of Justice)

I. INTRODUCTION

There are under consideration in the Congress and in the Department of Justice a number of proposals to reform sentencing practices in the federal criminal justice system.<sup>1</sup> A common feature of the pending proposals is that each would replace the existing discretionary and indeterminate<sup>2</sup> sentencing scheme with a guidelines sentencing system. While these proposals differ in detail, they all reflect a growing concern that the rehabilitation model—the theoretical basis for indeterminate sentencing—is unsatisfactory from a sociological point of view, that it produces unwarranted disparities in sentencing, and that, in fact, it is no longer used as the sole or even primary basis for determining the appropriate type and length of sentences.

In broad terms, the current sentencing system operates at two stages. First, the judge determines whether a convicted defendant should be sentenced to a term of imprisonment, and, if so, imposes the maximum term to be served; later, the Parole Commission fixes the actual amount of time to be served. Briefly stated, the rationale for this approach is that it permits and encourages rehabilitation of an offender by tailoring the length of his sentence to his individual needs and progress while institutionalized. In recent years, however, a growing number of studies have undermined the rationale for individualized, indeterminate sentencing by demonstrating that it is impossible to determine when or whether rehabilitation has occurred, if indeed it can be induced at all.<sup>3</sup> For this reason, and because indeterminate sentencing is seen as resulting in unwarranted disparity in sentences, it has been proposed that fixed or determinate terms be set by the judge at the time of sentencing pursuant to guidelines that reflect the characteristics of the offense and of the offender. Although the guidelines sentencing proposals now being considered would not explicitly alter the existing parole release system, they obviously raise the question whether that system is the best means of setting a release date.<sup>4</sup>

This paper reviews the existing indeterminate sentencing system, discusses the major proposals for a guidelines sentencing system and examines the probable effects of abolishing the parole system in the context of a guidelines system.

---

<sup>1</sup> See, e.g., the sentencing provisions contained in the proposed Federal Criminal Code, S. 1437, introduced in the Senate by Senators McClellan and Kennedy on May 2, 1977, and H.R. 6869, introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman Rodino on May 3, 1977. See also note 42 infra.

<sup>2</sup> As used in this paper, an "indeterminate" sentence means a sentence to imprisonment which sets the upper limit of the term the sentenced defendant may have to serve, with the sentenced defendant's actual release date to be controlled by factors taking place after the sentence is imposed. A "determinate" sentence, by contrast, means a sentence to imprisonment which sets the exact term the sentenced defendant actually will have to serve.

<sup>3</sup> See Platner, The Rehabilitation of Punishment, 44 The Public Interest 104 (1976); Morris, The Future of Imprisonment, pp. 15-18 (1974); Wilson, Thinking About Crime, pp. 170-172 (1975); Frankel, Criminal Sentences: Law Without Order, pp. 86-102 (1973); von Hirsch, The Aims of Imprisonment, 71 Current History 1 (July/August 1976).

<sup>4</sup> A number of recent publications suggest that parole in its present form be abolished in the context of a determinate sentencing system. See, e.g., O'Donnell, Churgin, and Curtis, Toward a Just and Effective Sentencing System: Agenda for Legislative Reform, pp. 68-71 (1977); Joint Committee on the Legal Status of Prisoners, American Bar Association, The Legal Status of Prisoners, § 9.1, 14 Am. Crim. L. Rev. 589 (1977); von Hirsch, Doing Justice: The Choice of Punishments, p. 18 (1976); Neier, Crime and Punishment: A Radical Solution, pp. 197-98 (1976).

It concludes that all of the necessary functions now performed by the parole system could adequately be replaced under a guidelines sentencing system and that additional advantages to the criminal justice system would result if the parole system were abolished.

II. THE EXISTING FEDERAL SENTENCING SYSTEM

A. Generally.—The sentencing provisions in current federal law were originally enacted on the basis of the theory that a convicted person could be “rehabilitated” if he were “treated” for the conditions that led him to engage in criminal activity, and that his sentence should be indeterminate in length in order that the prison system could provide a corrections program tailored to his individual needs.<sup>5</sup> As a result, the ultimate disposition of a convicted offender is determined by two factors, the sentence initially imposed by the judge and the subsequent working of the parole system.

It is up to the sentencing judge to decide whether the defendant should be placed on probation or given a term of imprisonment. If imprisonment seems warranted, it is also the prerogative of the sentencing judge to set the maximum amount of time to be served before the prisoner may be released, and, if the judge wishes, he may further specify a part of the term of imprisonment as the minimum amount of time to be served before the prisoner becomes eligible for parole. The amount of time actually served by the prisoner, however, is determined by the Parole Commission. Theoretically, this determination should be made on the basis of his progress toward “rehabilitation,” but in practice it is made today almost exclusively for the purpose of mitigating unwarranted disparities in sentences actually served.

B. Unwarranted Disparities in Sentencing—The Role of the Parole Commission.—Unwarranted disparities in sentencing occur when different sentences are imposed on defendants who are similarly situated and who committed the same offenses under like conditions. Such disparities occur chiefly because of the complexity of the sentencing provisions in current law and because of the absence of guidance to sentencing judges. Under current law, the sentencing judge determines whether or not to impose a term of imprisonment solely on the basis of his own, usually unarticulated, theory of sentencing.<sup>6</sup> He might decide, for example, that a person convicted of a major business fraud would not benefit from incarceration and sentence him to probation instead, while concluding that a relatively uneducated defendant convicted of a minor theft should be imprisoned so that he could be “rehabilitated” through job training and educational programs. Moreover, even when a term of imprisonment seems warranted, the statutes generally specify only a maximum term of imprisonment, giving the judge no guidance as to the sentence that should actually be set in a particular case. As a result, disparities occur not only between sentences imposed by judges of the same court,<sup>7</sup> but also between sentences imposed in different district courts.<sup>8</sup>

The fact that judicial discretion in sentencing is limited by statutes prescribing maximum penalties does little to reduce sentencing disparities since there are often a number of different penal statutes under which a defendant may be prosecuted for a particular criminal act, and there are in any criminal case a number of different sentencing statutes that the judge might use in imposing sentence, each of which may have a different impact on the length of time a defendant will actually spend in prison. To begin with, current federal criminal law contains numerous examples of inconsistent maximum sentences applicable to sub-

<sup>5</sup> See von Hirsch, Doing Justice: The choice of Punishments, pp. 9–10 (1976).

<sup>6</sup> See Frankel, Criminal Sentences: Law Without Order, p. 21 (1973).

<sup>7</sup> Partridge and Eldridge, The Second Circuit Sentencing Study: A Report to the Judges of the Second Circuit, Federal Judicial Center, August 1974. Other studies showing significant discrepancies in sentences imposed by judges in the same geographic area include: Engle, Criminal Justice in the City, Temple University, 1971 (unpublished Ph. D. dissertation); Hogarth, Sentencing as a Human Process (1971); and Chiricos and Waldo, “Socio-economic Status and Criminal Sentencing: An Empirical Assessment of a Conflict Proposition,” 40 Am. Sociological Rev. 6 (1975).

<sup>8</sup> Bureau of Prisons discharge files for fiscal years 1974 and 1975 show, for example, that the average term of imprisonment imposed in 35 cases of bank robbery in the Southern District of New York was 78.7 months, while for 10 cases in the Western District of Missouri the average term imposed was 181.2 months. See Attachment B. See also notes 64 and 65, infra, and accompanying text. Studies that indicate disparities in sentencing between different jurisdictions include: Nagel, The Legal Process from a Behavioral Perspective: Homewood, Illinois (1969); Chiricos and Waldo, supra, note 7; Sutton, “Geographical Variations in Federal Sentencing Patterns,” U.S. Department of Justice, Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (1977) (unpublished monograph).

stantially similar offenses. For example, there are more than seventy theft offenses under current law, with maximum sentences ranging from one to ten years.<sup>9</sup> In addition, a defendant who receives a regular adult sentence, where the judge sets only a maximum term of imprisonment and makes no statement as to parole eligibility, will be eligible for parole after service of one-third of his term of imprisonment.<sup>10</sup> The judge can, however, specify under different provisions of law that the defendant will be immediately eligible for parole;<sup>11</sup> or that he will be eligible for parole at a specified time up to one-third the term of imprisonment;<sup>12</sup> or, if the defendant is under 26 years of age at the time of sentencing,<sup>13</sup> sentence him under the terms of the Youth Corrections Act,<sup>14</sup> as a result of which he will be immediately eligible for parole by operation of law.<sup>15</sup> In addition, if a convicted defendant is found to be an addict, he may be sentenced for treatment under title II of the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act of 1966,<sup>16</sup> with the result that he may serve a shorter period of imprisonment than he would have had he not been addicted. Despite all the possible types of sentences available in current law, however, there is no statutory guidance concerning when a particular type or length of sentence would be appropriate, and the judge is not required to, and rarely does, set forth his reasons for imposing a particular type or length of sentence.

To bring some order out of this chaotic situation, the United States Parole Commission<sup>17</sup> began in 1972 to experiment with the use of guidelines to reduce unwarranted disparity in the terms of imprisonment imposed by judges in substantially similar cases.<sup>18</sup> Guidelines have been in use for all federal prisoners eligible for parole since 1973.<sup>19</sup>

The latest version of the guidelines,<sup>20</sup> promulgated after enactment of the Parole Commission and Reorganization Act in 1976,<sup>21</sup> appears in two tables, one that applies to regular adult offenders and one that applies to convicted defendants sentenced pursuant to the Youth Corrections Act<sup>22</sup> or the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act.<sup>23</sup> Each table<sup>24</sup> consists of a grid that grades offenses according to seriousness in six groups from "low" to "greatest" seriousness from the top to the bottom of the table, and ranks the offender according to his "parole prognosis," (i.e., the probability of his success on parole) from "very good" to "poor" across the top of the table.<sup>25</sup> A defendant's "parole prognosis" is determined by giving him a score on each of seven "salient factors" relating to prior criminal record, drug dependence, and employment record.<sup>26</sup>

<sup>9</sup> See, e.g., 18 U.S.C. 288, relating to false claims against the Postal Service, and 18 U.S.C. 641, relating to embezzlement.

<sup>10</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4205(a). If the sentence to a term of imprisonment is a sentence to life imprisonment or a sentence to a term of imprisonment of over thirty years, the defendant would be eligible for parole in ten years if the judge specified only the maximum term. Citations to provisions of the parole laws are to sections of title 18 of the United States Code enacted in Public Law 94-233 unless otherwise indicated.

<sup>11</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4205(b)(2).

<sup>12</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4205(b)(1).

<sup>13</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4216.

<sup>14</sup> 18 U.S.C. 5005 et seq.

<sup>15</sup> 18 U.S.C. 5017(a).

<sup>16</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4251 et. seq. This is one of the few sentencing statutes that specifically states a purpose of sentencing. It requires a specific finding by the court that the convicted defendant "is an addict and is likely to be rehabilitated through treatment . . .". 18 U.S.C. 4253(a).

<sup>17</sup> The United States Parole Commission was called the United States Board of Parole until Public Law 94-233 became effective. For convenience the designation "United States Parole Commission" or "Parole Commission" is used throughout this paper.

<sup>18</sup> Hoffman and Gottfredson, Paroling Policy Guidelines: A Matter of Equity, June 1973 (NCCD Parole Decision-Making Project Supp. Rep. No. 9).

<sup>19</sup> The original parole guidelines appear at 38 F.R. 31942 (1973).

<sup>20</sup> 41 F.R. 37316 (September 3, 1976).

<sup>21</sup> Public Law 94-233, 18 U.S.C. 4201 et seq.

<sup>22</sup> 18 U.S.C. 5005 et seq.

<sup>23</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4251 et seq.

<sup>24</sup> The parole guidelines appear as Attachment A-1 to this paper, and amended salient factor score appears as Attachment A-2.

<sup>25</sup> 38 C.F.R. § 2.20(e), 41 F.R. 37222 (September 3, 1976).

<sup>26</sup> The list of "salient factors" was revised effective April 1, 1977, 42 F.R. 12045 (Mar. 2, 1977). The "salient factors" were selected after extensive empirical research concerning the history and characteristics of defendants released from prison and the relationship of those characteristics to their relative ability to remain free on parole without violation of parole conditions. For discussions of the development and revalidation of the salient factor score, see Hoffman and Beck, Parole Decision-Making: A Salient Factor Score, United States Board of Parole Research Unit; Report Two (April 1974); and Hoffman and Beck, Research Note: Salient Factor Score Validation—A 1972 Release Cohort, United States Board of Parole Research Unit; Report Eight (July 1975).

For each possible combination of offense characteristics and salient factor scores, the grid specifies a narrow range of imprisonment in terms of months. In determining whether to release a prisoner on parole, the Parole Commission is required to take into consideration the term of imprisonment recommended in the guidelines for a person who has been convicted of an offense of the severity of that committed by the prisoner and who has the salient factor score applicable to the prisoner. The terms set forth in the guidelines are not mandatory, however. According to Parole Commission regulations, "These guidelines indicate the customary range of time to be served before release for various combinations of offense (severity) and offender (parole prognosis) characteristics". . . . [E]specially mitigating or aggravating circumstances in a particular case may justify a decision or a severity rating different from that listed [in the parole guidelines.]"<sup>27</sup> Currently, 84.4 percent of the persons released on parole are released after being incarcerated for the period of time recommended in the guidelines. The remaining 15.6 percent of persons who are released on parole serve terms of imprisonment longer or shorter than those recommended in the guidelines because the Parole Commission determines that particular aggravating or mitigating circumstances justify a period of incarceration different from that recommended in the guidelines.<sup>28</sup>

While the parole guidelines have substantially reduced unwarranted disparity in the lengths of terms of imprisonment, it is impossible for the Parole Commission alone to eliminate all unwarranted disparity in sentences. For example, it can do nothing about disparity in the decisions of sentencing judges as to whether or not to incarcerate persons convicted of particular offenses, even though this may be the area of greatest disparity.<sup>29</sup> All it can do for the person who should never have been sentenced to prison at all is release him on his date of parole eligibility; of course, it cannot cause the imprisonment of a convicted person who should have been sentenced to a term of imprisonment but was not.<sup>30</sup> Furthermore, the Parole Commission has no authority to lengthen the sentence of a person sentenced to prison for too short a period or to shorten the term of imprisonment of a person ineligible for parole until after serving an unreasonably long term of imprisonment.

As noted above, under the "rehabilitation" theory of sentencing, the Parole Commission's task should be to determine when a prisoner has been rehabilitated and can safely be released. To make this determination, it should concentrate on the prisoner's reaction to treatment for the conditions that led to his offense. As a practical matter, however, Parole Commission determinations are seldom influenced by a prisoner's progress toward rehabilitation. Although the Commission's regulations provide that "the guidelines are established specifically for cases with good institutional adjustment and program progress,"<sup>32</sup> the parole guidelines themselves do not require the Commission to consider any information that was unknown at the time of sentencing in evaluating a prisoner for purposes of parole.<sup>33</sup> Of course, if the prisoner's institutional behavior has been so poor that his forfeited statutory good time has not been restored, he is automatically ineligible for parole.<sup>34</sup> Only if he has performed exceptionally well

<sup>27</sup> 28 C.F.R. § 2.20(b), 41 F.R. 37322 (September 3, 1976).

<sup>28</sup> C.F.R. § 2.20(d), 41 F.R. 37322 (September 3, 1976).

<sup>29</sup> Meierhoefer, The First Full Year of Regionalization: A Statistical Summary, U.S. Board of Parole Research Unit, p. 6 (January 1976).

<sup>30</sup> A recently completed study of the feasibility of sentencing guidelines notes that what the authors call the "in-out" decision is a frequently overlooked aspect of sentencing variation, and that sentencing should be viewed as a decision involving two steps—first, the decision whether to incarcerate, and, second, the decision as to the length of the sentence. Wilkins et al., Sentencing Guidelines: Structuring Judicial Discretion, Final Report on the Feasibility Study, October 1976, pp. 2-3.

<sup>31</sup> Of the persons convicted of federal offenses in fiscal year 1976, 46.1 percent were sentenced to terms of imprisonment. 1976 Annual Report of the Director, Administrative Office of the United States Courts, Table D-7. Even among similar offenses there is substantial disparity as to incarceration. For example, in fiscal year 1976, 38.6 percent of the persons convicted of "larceny" or "theft" were sentenced to terms of imprisonment, while only 17.5 percent of those convicted of "embezzlement" were sent to prison. Id., Table D-5.

<sup>32</sup> 28 C.F.R. § 2.20(b), 41 F.R. 37322 (September 3, 1976).

<sup>33</sup> Effective April 1, 1977, the salient factor score contained no item of information not known at the time of sentencing. 42 F.R. 12045 (March 2, 1977). Before that date, the salient factor score had included one possible point for a prisoner whose parole release plan was to live with his spouse or children or both. 41 F.R. 37324 (September 3, 1976).

<sup>34</sup> 28 C.F.R. § 2.6, 41 F.R. 37320 (September 3, 1976). This is a fairly unusual occurrence. Of the prisoners for whom the Parole Commission held special review hearings in a one-year period, 11 percent were denied parole on the basis of institutional discipline problems, but not necessarily problems that led to forfeiture or good time.

during confinement will his term of imprisonment be reduced to a period shorter than that provided by the guidelines.<sup>35</sup>

The Parole Commission's preoccupation with ameliorating unwarranted sentencing disparities to the virtual exclusion of considerations of rehabilitation is not surprising since it has become increasingly apparent that the state of knowledge of human behavior is such that it is not possible to determine whether or when a prisoner has been rehabilitated.<sup>36</sup> Moreover, prison authorities themselves increasingly view indeterminate sentences as counterproductive in terms of efforts at rehabilitation because they lower prisoner morale and hamper the ability of prisoners to plan their futures.<sup>37</sup>

III. DETERMINATE SENTENCING PROPOSALS

A. Background.—In the last few years, increased attention has been paid to the problem of unwarranted sentencing disparity. As previously noted, in addition to the growing body of literature concerning problems with existing sentencing law,<sup>38</sup> the United States Parole Commission has issued parole guidelines to reduce unwarranted disparity in the lengths of prison terms.<sup>39</sup> The efforts to structure discretion in the parole decision and the efforts toward legislative revision of substantive federal criminal laws<sup>40</sup> led the Yale Law School to organize a Workshop on Parole and Sentencing to address the problems of sentencing reform. The early drafts of the Workshop's study<sup>41</sup> led to a number of legislative proposals for the creation of a Sentencing Commission within the judicial branch to promulgate guidelines for use by sentencing judges.<sup>42</sup> Under these proposals, guidelines would be applied at the outset of the sentencing process to reduce unwarranted disparity in sentencing, rather than leaving the problem to the Parole Commission which, as stated above, is limited in its ability to mitigate all of the disparities created initially.

B. The Major Proposal.—The major sentencing reform proposal under consideration by the Congress is contained in the proposed Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977 as introduced in the Senate by Senators McClellan and Kennedy (S. 1437) and in the House of Representatives by Congressman Rodino (H.R. 6869). That proposal provides for the creation within the judicial branch of a United States Sentencing Commission, the members of which would be designated by the Judicial Conference of the United States.<sup>43</sup> The Commission would promulgate guidelines recommending narrow ranges of sentences for defendants with a particular history and characteristics who were convicted of particular offenses under specified circumstances.<sup>44</sup> The Commission would also issue policy <sup>35</sup> This occurred in 17 out of 1,080 cases in which prisoners were paroled in the northeast region of the Parole Commission in the period from October 1973 through March 1974. Hoffman and DeGostin, Parole Decision-Making: Structuring Discretion, U.S. Board of Parole Research Unit, Report 5 (June 1974).

<sup>36</sup> See note 3, supra, and accompanying text.

<sup>37</sup> Carlson, "Corrections in the United States Today: A Balance Has Been Struck," 13 Amer. Crim. L. R. 627-35 (1976).

<sup>38</sup> See supra note 3; von Hirsch, supra note 4.

<sup>39</sup> See Part B of chapter II at pp. 2-12, supra.

<sup>40</sup> S. 1 and H.R. 3907 in the 94th Congress.

<sup>41</sup> O'Donnell, Churgin, and Curtis, Toward a Just and Effective Sentencing System: Agenda for Legislative Reform (1977).

<sup>42</sup> In addition to the Sentencing Commission provisions in the compromise version of the proposed federal criminal code in the 95th Congress, introduced by Senators McClellan and Kennedy (S. 1437) and Congressman Rodino (H.R. 6869), the following bills introduced in the 95th Congress would create a sentencing guidelines system: S. 181 (Senators Kennedy, McClellan, Abourezk, Bayh, Haskell, Mathias, Stevenson, Humphrey, and Matsunaga); S. 204 (Senators Gary Hart and Javits); H.R. 470 (Lehman); H.R. 1182 (Rodino); H.R. 2312 (Cohen); and H.R. 5344 (McClory, Butler, and Railsback).

The following bills introduced in the 94th Congress provided for the creation of a sentencing guidelines system: S. 2699 (Senators Kennedy, Abourezk, Bayh, Fong, Phillip A. Hart, Hruska, McClellan, Tunney); H.R. 11655 (Congressman Rodino); H.R. 13492 (Congressmen Tsongas and Dodd); H.R. 13716 (Congressmen Tsongas, Dodd, Mazzoli, Pattison, and Russo); H.R. 13754 (Congressmen Tsongas, Dodd, Cohen, Mazzoli, Pattison, and Russo); H.R. 14014 (Congressmen Tsongas, Dodd, Banens, Bedell, Biaggi, Carney, Cohen, Cotter, Downey, Edgar, Florio, Grassley, Hughes, Keys, Koch, Lehman, Lloyd (Calif.), McCollister, Maguire, Mazzoli, Moakley, Mollohan, Moorhead (Pa.), Nedzi and Nowak); H.R. 14015 (Congressmen Tsongas, Dodd, Ottinger, Patterson, Pattison, Russo, Spellman, and Thornton); and H.R. 14896 (Congressmen Tsongas, Burke (Calif.), Cleveland, Hall (Ill.), Heckler (Mass.), and Matsunaga).

<sup>43</sup> Proposed 28 U.S.C. 991(a).

<sup>44</sup> Proposed 28 U.S.C. 994(a)(1).

statements on other sentencing issues that were not the subject of guidelines.<sup>45</sup>

The proposed legislation specifies for the first time the factors that a judge should take into consideration in imposing sentence on a convicted defendant.<sup>46</sup> In addition to considering the nature and circumstances of the offense and the history and characteristics of the offender, the sentencing judge would be required to consider the four general purposes of sentencing: the need for the sentence to deter criminal conduct, to protect the public from further crimes of the defendant, to provide just punishment for the offense, and to provide needed correctional treatment for the defendant in the most effective manner.<sup>47</sup> In imposing the sentence, the judge would also be required to consider the policy statements promulgated by the Sentencing Commission. The judge would be required to state general reasons for the sentence imposed, and, if the sentence was outside the range suggested in the guidelines, the reason for imposing a sentence outside the guidelines.<sup>48</sup>

Appellate review would be available for sentences outside the guidelines range; the defendant could appeal a sentence above that recommended in the guidelines,<sup>49</sup> while the government could appeal a sentence below the guidelines range if the Attorney General or his designee approved the appeal.<sup>50</sup> If the court of appeals found that the sentence was clearly unreasonable, it would be required to state specific reasons for its findings and either remand the case for imposition of an appropriate sentence or further sentencing proceedings, or resentence the defendant itself.<sup>51</sup>

The sentencing reform proposal set forth in the proposed federal criminal code would retain the United States Parole Commission, but would permit the sentencing judge, after considering the sentencing guidelines, to impose a term of parole ineligibility for a defendant sentenced to a term of imprisonment. Such a term could not extend in any case into the last one-tenth of the term of imprisonment imposed.<sup>52</sup> If the term of parole ineligibility was inconsistent with the sentencing guidelines, the defendant and the government would have the same appeal rights as they would have with respect to a term of imprisonment that was inconsistent with the guidelines.<sup>53</sup>

The sentencing provisions of S. 1437 and H.R. 6869 do not represent abandonment of efforts at rehabilitation. Rather, they constitute a recognition of the fact that rehabilitation should no longer be regarded as the principal reason for giving a particular defendant a particular type or length of sentence. Rather than concentrating exclusively or primarily on rehabilitation, S. 1437 and H.R. 6869 would give equal recognition to the four commonly cited purposes of sentencing: just punishment; deterrence of criminal conduct by others; incapacitation of the criminal for protection of the public; and rehabilitation of the offender.<sup>54</sup> The Sentencing Commission would be directed to consider these purposes in formulating sentencing guidelines for federal offenses, and in formulating policy statements on sentencing in general.<sup>55</sup> The proposed legislation does not attempt to give greater weight to one purpose than to another nor to define the extent to which the purposes may overlap. It leaves to the Sentencing Commission the evaluation of the extent to which each sentencing purpose should and would be served by setting a particular type and length of sen-

<sup>45</sup> Proposed 28 U.S.C. 994(a)(2).

<sup>46</sup> Proposed 18 U.S.C. 2003(a).

<sup>47</sup> Proposed 18 U.S.C. 2003(a)(2).

<sup>48</sup> Proposed 18 U.S.C. 2003(b). The purposes of stating a reason for a sentence within the guidelines are: to make clear to the defendant and to the public the purpose to be served by a sentence, to provide guidance to the Bureau of Prisons in determining the appropriate type of prison and program for the defendant; and to take into account that the guidelines might specify a different sentence for persons sentenced for the same offense for different purposes, such as probation for rehabilitation for a first offense and incapacitation or deterrence for a second offense. The Bureau of Prisons has expressed concern that the statement of reasons for a sentence within the guidelines might be used as the basis of an appeal where, for example, one reason that the sentence was imposed was rehabilitation and the defendant alleges that he is not being rehabilitated and thus should not be incarcerated.

<sup>49</sup> Proposed 18 U.S.C. 3725(a).

<sup>50</sup> Proposed 18 U.S.C. 3725(b).

<sup>51</sup> Proposed 18 U.S.C. 3725(e).

<sup>52</sup> Proposed 18 U.S.C. 2301(e).

<sup>53</sup> Proposed 18 U.S.C. 3725(a) and (b).

<sup>54</sup> Proposed 18 U.S.C. 101(b). See Packer, The Limits of the Criminal Sanction, pp. 35-61; Working Papers of the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws, Vol. I, pp. 3-4.

<sup>55</sup> Proposed 28 U.S.C. 991(b).

tence for a particular offense.<sup>56</sup> For example, the Sentencing Commission might conclude that for many white collar offenses deterrence and punishment should be emphasized rather than rehabilitation or incapacitation. Conversely, in the cases of repeat violent offenders, emphasis might be placed on incapacitation.

These proposals leave unanswered one important question regarding the operation of the new sentencing system: the role of the parole system. The parole system was created to determine when to release prisoners who had been sentenced to indeterminate prison terms for rehabilitation purposes. Since recognition of rehabilitation is no longer regarded as an appropriate determinant of a prisoner's release date, the authority of the Parole Commission is now used primarily as a means of attempting to ameliorate unwarranted disparities in sentencing, and of shortening the average term of imprisonment served from the average terms imposed by sentencing judges. Under the proposed sentencing guidelines system, the problem of sentencing disparity would be addressed at the time of sentencing and there would be no need for subsequent review by the Parole Commission. However, there would still be a need for a mechanism for determining prisoners' release dates. In addition, means would have to be provided for maintaining institutional discipline, encouraging participation in rehabilitation programs, preventing further criminal activity by persons recently released from prison, and providing services to prisoners about to be released or recently released from prison to assist in their transition to the community.

These are functions that are now performed in large part by the parole system. Under S. 1437 and H.R. 6869, they would continue to be so performed, even though the primary justification for the parole system would no longer exist. The question arises, therefore, whether these functions could be performed by other means, with the result that the parole system could be abolished entirely. It would appear that this is a realistic possibility. Determinate sentences could be imposed, with the release date modified from the form of imprisonment only by vested credit toward early release that would be earned if the prisoner complied with institutional rules.<sup>57</sup> The objective of encouraging participation in rehabilitation programs might, as Bureau of Prisons experiments already indicate, be attained by making participation in such programs voluntary. The use of post-release supervision in the community as a means of preventing future criminal behavior by persons recently released from prison needs to be re-examined. If such supervision is believed desirable, it could be provided by the Probation System even if the Parole Commission were abolished. The objective of providing services to prisoners in need of assistance in making the transition back to the community could be met by requiring that the final portion of a term of imprisonment be spent in a minimum security facility. During this period, and for a limited time thereafter, facilities of the Probation System could be made available to assist such prisoners in obtaining employment or medical services and otherwise to facilitate their transition from prison into society.

C. Treatment of Functions of Parole System: Effect of Abolition.

1. Sentencing Disparity.—There has been a growing concern over the fact that many defendants convicted of violent offenses never serve time in prison.<sup>58</sup> In response to this concern, a number of legislative proposals have been put forth that would require the imposition of mandatory minimum terms of imprisonment to be served without parole for a number of serious offenses.<sup>59</sup>

<sup>56</sup> One exception appears in proposed 28 U.S.C. 994(e) as set forth in S. 1437 and H.R. 6869. That provision in effect emphasizes incapacitation and just punishment for certain persons with extensive criminal records or who are involved in criminal activity as a means of livelihood or as part of a major conspiracy by requiring that the sentencing guidelines provide that most persons in those categories receive a "substantial sentence of imprisonment."

<sup>57</sup> Compare 18 U.S.C. 4161 et. seq.

<sup>58</sup> In fiscal year 1976, only 54.4 percent of the persons convicted in the federal courts of burglary, 64.3 percent of the persons convicted of rape (including convictions under 18 U.S.C. 2032) and 46.1 percent of the persons convicted of assault were sentenced to terms of imprisonment. 1976 Annual Report of the Director, Administrative Office of the United States Courts, Table D-5.

<sup>59</sup> Under a Ford Administration proposed amendment to S. 1, 94th Congress (121 Cong. Rec. S 13827 (daily ed. July 26, 1975)), a person convicted of heroin or morphine trafficking, kidnapping, aircraft hijacking, or committing a federal offense with a firearm, would be subject to a mandatory term of imprisonment. S. 3411 and H.R. 13577, 94th Congress, that Administration's heroin trafficking proposal also would have provided mandatory minimum sentences for heroin and morphine trafficking, while S. 2186 and H.R. 9022, 94th Congress, that Administration's gun control proposal would have provided a mandatory minimum sentence for a first offense of committing a federal felony with a firearm.

While these proposals would eliminate disparity from decisions as to whether or not to incarcerate certain violent offenders and would provide minimum terms of imprisonment, they would not eliminate all unwarranted sentencing disparity any more than does the existing parole system.<sup>60</sup> In addition, the mandatory minimum sentence proposals do not recommend an appropriate length of a term of imprisonment, but serve only to specify the minimum term of imprisonment.

The proposed sentencing guidelines system, on the other hand, seeks to eliminate unwarranted sentencing disparity in all federal criminal cases.<sup>61</sup> The guidelines would provide a suggested sentencing range for a particular offense committed by a defendant with a particular history and characteristics.<sup>62</sup> Only if the judge believed that there was a significant aggravating or mitigating factor in a case should he impose a sentence outside the guidelines range, and such a sentence would be subject to appellate review. Perhaps the most important aspect of the guidelines would be that they would recommend whether a person convicted of a particular offense and who had a certain history and characteristics should be sentenced to imprisonment or to probation, thus eliminating a major source of sentencing disparity under current law.

The guidelines would also eliminate disparity between sentencing practices of different districts. Recent statistics of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts show that, while 45.8 percent of the offenders convicted in the federal courts are sentenced to a term of imprisonment, the percentage of convicted defendants who are sentenced to terms of imprisonment in different districts varies from a low of less than 10 percent to a high of over 75 percent.<sup>63</sup> Even if allowances are made for variations in the types of cases brought in different districts, the degree of variation in whether prison terms are imposed remains substantial. A comparison of districts with criminal caseloads of similar size<sup>64</sup> shows that: in one district with fewer than 500 criminal convictions per year over 75 percent of the convicted defendants received prison sentences while in another, similar district only 13.6 percent received prison sentences; in medium sized districts (those having 500–1,000 convictions per year), the rate of imprisonment ranged from 9.6 percent to 70 percent; and among larger districts (those with more than 1,000 convictions per year), the rate varied between 8.3 percent and 67.0 percent.<sup>65</sup>

The major sentencing reform proposals would also eliminate the disparity caused by the differences in the sentencing statutes applicable to regular adult offenders, youthful offenders, and drug addicts. In place of the numerous sentencing statutes now available there would be a single sentencing system applicable to all persons convicted of federal offenses but flexible enough to take into account the age or addiction or other characteristics of a particular offender as appropriate.

<sup>60</sup> See part B of chapter II, supra.

<sup>61</sup> The United States Parole Commission points out that the parole guidelines are both promulgated and implemented by the Parole Commission, while the Sentencing Commission guidelines would be implemented by over 450 federal district court judges, with appellate review by the United States courts of appeals. The Acting Chairman has questioned whether this will lead to the desired consistency in decisions since the Sentencing Commission would not play a direct role in supervision and monitoring of the cases. Memorandum from Curtis C. Crawford, Acting Chairman, United States Parole Commission, to Harry A. Scarr, Assistant Director, Office of Policy and Planning, October 7, 1976. However, the Sentencing Commission would be constantly reviewing sentencing decisions to evaluate the effectiveness of the guidelines in eliminating unwarranted disparity and would have the power to revise the guidelines if they were not initially successful in preventing unwarranted disparity.

<sup>62</sup> Attachment D shows the wide variations in time served in prison by male bank robbers who have similar characteristics, backgrounds in terms of age, marital status, education, and prior criminal record.

<sup>63</sup> 1976 Annual Report of the Director, Administrative Office of the United States Courts, Table D-7.

<sup>64</sup> It would seem that districts with criminal caseloads of similar size would tend to have similar types of crimes to deal with and similar problems in administering their criminal justice systems. For example, large urban districts have more similar criminal problems than do large and small districts. Therefore, a comparison of statistics for comparable districts is more meaningful than a comparison of statistics for dissimilar districts.

<sup>65</sup> Supra, note 63. These differences result from many factors. Some of the disparity can be attributed to differences in the types of cases prosecuted, since this is the major determinant of the types of cases in which sentences are imposed by the courts. For example, the 8.3 percent figure is down from the Southern District of Georgia which handles a large number of traffic cases.

2. Actual Time Spent in Prison. As a consequence of the existing parole system, there is a substantial difference between the average term of imprisonment imposed for federal offenses and the time actually spent in prison. For example, the average term of imprisonment that had been imposed on the 886 adult male offenders released from prison during fiscal years 1974 and 1975 after serving sentences for bank robbery was 129.56 months, while the average time actually spent in prison by those prisoners was 45.46 months, or about 35 percent of the sentence imposed.<sup>66</sup> For 9 federal felonies, including bank robbery, during the same period the time actually served ranged from 35 to 53 percent of the terms of imprisonment imposed by the sentencing judges.<sup>67</sup> The result of the differences between the terms of imprisonment imposed and the actual time served is substantial uncertainty on the part of defendants and of the public as to the effect of a criminal sentence.<sup>68</sup>

If the system of indeterminate systems is replaced by a system of determinate sentences, it is essential in order to prevent further overcrowding of the prisons that a significant increase in the average time actually spent in prison by persons convicted of federal crimes be avoided. This should not be a problem under the sentencing system proposed for two reasons. First, under the proposed revision of the federal criminal laws contained in S. 1437 and H.R. 6869, the maximum terms of imprisonment for federal crimes would be lower than those set forth in current law and in earlier versions of the proposed revision of the federal criminal code.<sup>69</sup> Second, because the Sentencing Commission would be aware of the capacity of the federal prison system and because it would be developing its guidelines in part on the basis of current sentencing practices, it can be expected to develop guidelines that result in an average term of imprisonment for all federal convictions generally similar to the average term that now results from operation of the parole guidelines. Furthermore, the proposed sentencing revisions make clear that the guidelines should be structured so that the longest prison terms for particular offenses would be imposed on serious repeat offenders, persons deriving a substantial part of their livelihood from criminal activity, and leaders of racketeering syndicates. On the other hand, the guidelines would be structured so that a first offender would probably receive no imprisonment or only a short term of imprisonment unless the offense were serious or committed under aggravating circumstances.

3. Determination of Release Date. Under current law, there are two separate, parallel determinations made concerning the release date for each prisoner. These determinations are made under the provisions for good time allowances<sup>70</sup> and for release on parole.<sup>71</sup> While a potential release date is calculated for each prisoner under each of these provisions, the prisoner's release date is in fact generally affected by only one of the two determinations, although there is uncertainty in many cases as to which of the two calculations will ultimately control a particular prisoner's release date.

a. Good Time Allowances. Under the good time statute, each prisoner is given a deduction from his sentence of several days each month, according to the length of his sentence, if his "record of conduct shows that he has faithfully observed all the rules [of the institution] and has not been subjected to punishment."<sup>72</sup> If the prisoner commits an offense or violates a rule of the institution, all or part of this statutory good time deduction he has earned up to the

<sup>66</sup> Under the parole guidelines, 41 F.R. 37322 (September 3, 1976), a person convicted of robbery with a weapon or a threat would serve from 26 to 72 months in prison, depending upon his parole prognosis, while a person otherwise convicted of bank robbery would serve from 16 to 44 months, depending on parole prognosis.

<sup>67</sup> See Attachment C, Statistics from the Office of Program Planning, United States Bureau of Prisons.

<sup>68</sup> In many cases, the public views the parole system as the mechanism that permits even the worst criminals to be released from prison substantially before the ends of their terms of imprisonment. See, e.g., "Puzzling Parole Arithmetic," The Washington Star, September 3, 1976, p. A-2.

<sup>69</sup> If the parole system is no longer used as the means for determining release dates, the maximum terms of imprisonment might be lessened even further in order to help assure that the actual time served by the average prisoner would remain fairly close to the time now served.

<sup>70</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4161 et seq.

<sup>71</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4201 et seq.

<sup>72</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4161. In addition to the deduction for "good conduct" ("statutory good time"), a prisoner may earn "industrial good time" by employment in a prison industry or camp or by exceptional performance in connection with institutional operations, 18 U.S.C. 4162.

time of the offense may be forfeited.<sup>73</sup> Forfeited or withheld good time may be restored in whole or in part by the Attorney General "as he deems proper upon recommendation of the Director of the Bureau of Prisons."<sup>74</sup>

The Institution Discipline Committee for each Bureau of Prisons institution has the responsibility for determining whether and when good time should be withheld or forfeited and whether and when withheld or forfeited good time should be restored. While Bureau of Prisons policy requires that withheld good time must be considered for restoration within six months of the conduct that was the basis for withholding and that forfeited good time must be considered for restoration within one year of the conduct that was the basis of the forfeiture, the standards for restoration vary from institution to institution because of differences in the nature of inmates and violations.<sup>75</sup> The decisions of the Institutional Discipline Committee are subject to review and modification or reversal on appeal to the warden, the appropriate regional director, and the Office of General Counsel of the Bureau of Prisons.<sup>76</sup>

Federal prisons officials consider the good time provisions to be so cumbersome that they avoid using forfeiture or withholding of good time for rules violations if other means of dealing with violations are available.<sup>77</sup> This fact, together with the fact that good time remains constantly subject to forfeiture under current law, creates substantial uncertainty as to the potential effect of the withholding, forfeiture, or restoration of good time on a prisoner's release date.

b. Parole. At the same time as the Bureau of Prisons is calculating the potential release dates of prisoners on the basis of good time, the United States Parole Commission is considering whether prisoners whose sentences exceed one year<sup>78</sup> and who are presently eligible or will become eligible for parole within 30 days<sup>79</sup> should be released on parole.

The date of eligibility for parole varies according to the statute under which the judge imposes sentence. If the judge specifies no specific time for parole ineligibility, a regular adult offender is eligible for parole after serving one-third of his term of imprisonment (or ten years of a sentence of over thirty years or of life imprisonment).<sup>80</sup> If the sentence exceeds one year, the judge may either specify a minimum term of up to one-third of the sentence at the expiration of which the prisoner will be eligible for parole,<sup>81</sup> or may specify that the defendant may be released on parole at any time the Parole Commission "may determine."<sup>82</sup> A prisoner who is serving a sentence of five years or longer must be released on parole after serving two-thirds of that sentence (or 30 years of a sentence of 45 years or longer or of life imprisonment) unless the Commission "determines that he has seriously or frequently violated institution rules and regulations or that there is a reasonable probability that he will commit any Federal, State, or local crime."<sup>83</sup>

These general parole eligibility provisions do not apply to two classes of prisoners, those subject to title II of the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act (NARA)<sup>84</sup> and those sentenced pursuant to the Federal Youth Corrections Act.<sup>85</sup> Under title II of NARA, an addict convicted of a non-violent first or second offense that is not a drug trafficking offense (unless it was committed for the "primary purpose" of supporting his drug habit)<sup>86</sup> is "committed" for an indeterminate sentence not to exceed ten years.<sup>87</sup> A person committed under title II of NARA may be released on parole any time after six months of commitment for treatment.<sup>88</sup> A person sentenced under the Youth Corrections Act is sentenced to an indeterminate sentence that may not exceed four years of im-

<sup>73</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4165. But see notes 114 through 117 infra, and accompanying text.

<sup>74</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4166.

<sup>75</sup> Federal Prison System Policy Statement on Inmate Discipline, No. 7400.5D, July 7, 1975, p. 13.

<sup>76</sup> Ibid., at p. 15.

<sup>77</sup> Interviews by staff of Office of Policy and Planning.

<sup>78</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4205(a).

<sup>79</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4208(a).

<sup>80</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4205(a).

<sup>81</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4205(b)(1).

<sup>82</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4205(b)(2).

<sup>83</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4206(d).

<sup>84</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4251 et seq.

<sup>85</sup> 18 U.S.C. 5005 et seq.

<sup>86</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4251(f).

<sup>87</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4253(a).

<sup>88</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4254.

prisonment,<sup>89</sup> but is immediately eligible for parole.<sup>90</sup> If the court finds that the defendant "may not be able to derive maximum benefit from treatment" within that time, it may sentence under the Youth Corrections Act for any additional period authorized for the offense,<sup>91</sup> but the defendant will be immediately eligible for parole.<sup>92</sup>

When feasible, the initial parole determination proceeding for a prisoner must be held thirty days before the prisoner's parole eligibility date or, if the prisoner is eligible for parole immediately upon the commencement of the service of his sentence, within 120 days following his imprisonment.<sup>93</sup> No hearing is required if the Parole Commission decides to grant parole on the record.<sup>94</sup> If parole is denied, there must be another parole determination proceeding within 18 months for a person with a sentence of more than one but less than seven years, and within 24 months for a person with a sentence of seven years or longer.<sup>95</sup>

The Parole Commission is required to grant parole pursuant to the parole guidelines to any prisoner if three criteria are met, unless it determines that there is good cause for setting a release date that would result in a different length of time in prison than is recommended in the guidelines. The prisoner must have substantially complied with the rules of the institution. In addition, the Commission must determine, upon consideration of the nature and circumstances of the offense and the history and characteristics of the offender, that his release "would not depreciate the seriousness of his offense or promote disrespect for the law; and (2) that release would not jeopardize the public welfare. . . ."<sup>96</sup>

As discussed earlier,<sup>97</sup> there are two sets of parole guidelines. One applies to adult offenders, while the other applies to prisoners sentenced under the Federal Youth Corrections Act or the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act.<sup>98</sup> The two sets of guidelines recommend that the same length of time be spent in prison by most persons to whom either set of guidelines apply if the offense is of "low" or "low moderate" seriousness. However, for more serious offenses, the parole guidelines applicable to adult offenders recommend imprisonment for periods of 2 to 25 months longer, depending on the seriousness of the offense, than those recommended under NARA or the Youth Corrections Act.

e. Application of Release Date Calculations to Individual Prisoners. Even though the Bureau of Prisons and the Parole Commission are simultaneously concerned with the release date of each prisoner whose term of imprisonment exceeds one year, only one of these agencies will actually determine the release date of the prisoner, since the release date is either the date on which the prisoner's sentence expires, minus good time, or the date set for release by the Parole Commission, whichever is earlier.

Approximately 56 percent of all prisoners released, according to a recent study, are released at the expiration of their sentences less good time.<sup>99</sup> Such prisoners fall into three groups. The first group consists of prisoners who were not within the jurisdiction of the Parole Commission because their terms of imprisonment are one year or shorter;<sup>100</sup> they are released upon expiration of their sentences less good time. The second group contains those whose terms of imprisonment are so short that the date of expiration of sentence less good time occurs before the prisoner has spent as much time in prison as is recommended in the parole guidelines. These prisoners are usually released upon the expiration of sentence less good time rather than on parole, although there may be a few instances where—because of unusual mitigating circumstances—they are released on parole on a date that occurs before they have been in prison for the time rec-

<sup>89</sup> 18 U.S.C. 5017(c).

<sup>90</sup> 18 U.S.C. 5017(a).

<sup>91</sup> 18 U.S.C. 5010(c).

<sup>92</sup> 18 U.S.C. 5010(a).

<sup>93</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4208(a).

<sup>94</sup> Ibid.

<sup>95</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4208(h).

<sup>96</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4206(a).

<sup>97</sup> See notes 20-23, supra and accompanying text.

<sup>98</sup> 28 C.F.R. § 2.20, 41 F.R. 37322 (September 3, 1976).

<sup>99</sup> Federal Bureau of Prisons Statistical Report, Fiscal Year 1975 (U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, 1974), p. 19.

<sup>100</sup> Prior to the adoption of 18 U.S.C. 4205(a), the Parole Commission had jurisdiction over all prisoners whose terms exceeded six months. Under S. 1437 and H.R. 6869, the Parole Commission's jurisdiction would be the same as it was before the adoption of 18 U.S.C. 4205(a).

ommended in the guidelines. Finally, Parole Commission regulations deem a prisoner who has forfeited good time that has not been restored to have "violated the rules of the institution to a serious degree,"<sup>101</sup> and, therefore to be unparoleable. If the prisoner is eligible for parole but has any unrestored forfeited good time, he will be released at the expiration of his sentence less any good time that he may have accumulated.<sup>102</sup>

In the period between October 1, 1975 and September 30, 1976, 43.3 percent of all regular adult prisoners with prison sentences exceeding six months were released on parole.<sup>103</sup> Of these, 81.8 percent were released at times within the applicable parole guidelines. Of the remaining prisoners placed on parole, 11.3 percent were paroled after serving a longer time in prison than recommended in the guidelines, and 6.8 percent were paroled earlier than the time recommended in the guidelines.<sup>104</sup>

Most prisoners who are paroled rather than released at the expiration of sentence less good time are those upon whom relatively long sentences have been imposed. Of prisoners released in fiscal year 1975, the average time served by persons released on parole was 27.8 months (or 37.8 percent of their average sentence), while the prisoners released at the expiration of sentence less good time served an average of 12.6 months (or 67.8 percent of their average sentence).<sup>105</sup>

d. Determination of Release Date Under Proposals. Whether or not S. 1437 and H.R. 6869 are amended to abolish parole, the proposed revision of the federal criminal code would result in a substantial reduction in the uncertainty regarding release dates now present under the current system of indeterminate sentences and would eliminate the current duplication of mechanisms for setting release dates. The goal would be achieved by different mechanisms, and possibly with differing degrees of success if the proposed code were amended to abolish parole.

S. 1437 and H. R. 6869 would retain the Parole Commission to determine the actual release date, but would eliminate all good time allowances, including those for good institutional behavior and those for industrial good time. Even though the proposed criminal code would alter the way in which the Parole Commission would make the release date determination, it would not necessarily result in removing all vestiges of indeterminate sentences. The Sentencing Commission would issue both the sentencing and parole guidelines.<sup>106</sup> Presumably, the sentencing guidelines would be based on those factors known at the time of sentencing that the Commission believed should have an impact on sentences, while the parole guidelines would address the question of the effect that subsequent occurrences should have on a prisoner's release date. While the proposed code provides that the term of parole ineligibility could be as high as 90 percent of the term of imprisonment,<sup>107</sup> and permits the Sentencing Commission to recommend a term of parole ineligibility for each set of offense and offender characteristics,<sup>108</sup> there is no requirement that the length of the recommended term or parole ineligibility correspond to the length of the recommended term of imprisonment. In addition, while the sentencing judge would be required in imposing a prison sentence to state whether the term includes a term of parole ineligibility and how long that term will be,<sup>109</sup> he may decide that the term of parole ineligibility recommended in a particular case is inappropriate. Therefore, to the extent that the guidelines did not specify that a particular category of offense committed by a particular category of offender should result in a specified term of imprisonment with the defendant's being ineligible for parole for a

<sup>101</sup> 28 C.F.R. § 2.6(a), 41 F.R. 37320 (September 3, 1976).

<sup>102</sup> Eleven percent of the prisoners who were scheduled by the Parole Commission for review hearings held in the first half of 1975 were denied parole because of "disciplinary infractions." Hoffman, Federal Parole Guidelines: Three Years of Experience, United States Board of Parole Research Unit, November 1975, p. 5-6. Some of these infractions had resulted in forfeited good time. No information is available as to how many of these prisoners were ultimately released on parole and how many served their full sentence less good time.

<sup>103</sup> Meierhoefer, Workload and Decision Trends: Statistical Highlights 10/74-9/76, United States Parole Commission Research Unit, Report Thirteen, Table II, p. 8 (February 1977).

<sup>104</sup> Ibid., Table III, p. 11.

<sup>105</sup> Statistical Report, Fiscal Year 1975, U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Prison System, p. 22. See also, Meierhoefer, supra, note 103, Table II, note 1, p. 10.

<sup>106</sup> Proposed 28 U.S.C. 994 (a) and (f).

<sup>107</sup> Proposed 18 U.S.C. 2301(c).

<sup>108</sup> Proposed 28 U.S.C. 994(a).

<sup>109</sup> Proposed 18 U.S.C. 2301(c).

high percentage of the term of imprisonment, or to the extent that a sentencing judge chose to set a low, or no, term of parole ineligibility, a substantial portion of the term of imprisonment would remain in which the Parole Commission could set a release date. While the potential for disparity created by this situation could be alleviated somewhat by parole guidelines, the result would still be to retain at least some of the uncertainties of current sentencing practices.

If parole were abolished, it would be necessary to substitute another mechanism for determining the release date of a prisoner. One possible method would be to provide that the term of imprisonment imposed by a judge would represent the actual time to be served in prison, except that a prisoner could earn a small percentage of that time, perhaps ten percent, as credit toward early release if he complied with the rules of the institution. This approach would eliminate from the criminal law the remaining vestiges of indeterminate sentencing. The prisoner would be certain of his release date from the outset of his sentence and could easily determine the effect of earning credit toward early release on the time he would actually have to spend in prison.<sup>110</sup>

4. Institutional Behavior.—Both the good time allowance and parole provisions in current law are designed to induce institutional discipline by holding out the potential for early release. However, because of the uncertainties in the release date caused by the complexity of each system and the interrelationship between them, it is doubtful that institutional behavior is actually improved by use of these mechanisms. In fact, many corrections officials believe that the uncertainty of prison release dates is detrimental to prison behavior it makes it difficult for prisoners to plan for their futures.<sup>111</sup>

The administration of existing laws regarding forfeiture of good time for committing an offense or violating the rules of an institution<sup>112</sup> is extremely complex, with practices relating to the restoration of good time varying from institution to institution.<sup>113</sup> Moreover, it is doubtful whether the good time allowances help to control the institutional behavior of prisoners other than those whose sentences are so short that they are directly affected by the provisions and who will probably be released at the expiration of sentence less good time rather than being released on parole.

While the good time provisions may affect somewhat the behavior of prisoners who wish to remain eligible for parole, prison officials indicate that current laws on good time allowances probably have little impact on the behavior of prisoners who anticipate that they will be released on parole. In the first place, the system for administering the good time statutes is so cumbersome that withholding or forfeiture of good time is used only for the most serious disciplinary problems. Prison officials believe that the other means of dealing with normal disciplinary problems,<sup>114</sup> such as withholding of privileges, are effective to maintain discipline.<sup>115</sup> Moreover, under present law, any amount of good time that has been accumulated before an offense may be forfeited<sup>116</sup> since there is no vesting of earned good time. Prison officials indicate that prisoners give little weight to the risk of forfeiting good time since they assume that it will be reinstated when the Institution Discipline Committee considers its restoration.<sup>117</sup>

<sup>110</sup> But see note 139 infra.

<sup>111</sup> The official report on the Attlea riots indicates that the uncertainty of release dates was a major cause of the riots. New York Special Commission on Attlea, Attlea (1972), cited in von Hirsch, Doing Justice: The Choice of Punishments, at p. 31, n. 11. Interviews by the Office of Policy and Planning with prison officials indicated that prison officials and prisoners commonly favored determinate sentences with as little discretion in sentencing as possible.

<sup>112</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4165.

<sup>113</sup> Under Order No. 7400.5D of the Federal Prison System, supra note 75, at 13: "All or part of an inmate's accumulated good time may be forfeited. Authority to restore all types of forfeited and withheld good time is delegated to the Institution Discipline Committee of each institution. Forfeited good time must be considered for restoration on or about one (1) year from the date of the offense which formed the basis of the forfeiture. Forfeited good time may be considered for restoration earlier than the one (1) year date if circumstances warrant."

No further guidance is given to the institutions on when and whether to restore good time.

<sup>114</sup> Disciplinary measures now used by the Bureau of Prisons include changing a prisoner's housing assignment or job, placing him in administrative detention or segregation, or, in extreme cases, assigning a prisoner to a more secure facility or criminally prosecuting him for the offense.

<sup>115</sup> Office of Policy and Planning staff interview with Roy Gerard, Assistant Director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons.

<sup>116</sup> Federal Prison System Order No. 7400.5D, supra note 75 at 13.

<sup>117</sup> See note 75, supra, and accompanying text.

The proposed federal criminal code would drop the good time provisions in current law as unnecessary and administratively burdensome, leaving the Parole Commission to evaluate prison behavior.<sup>118</sup> As discussed earlier,<sup>119</sup> an alternative to this approach would be to amend the proposed criminal code to abolish the Parole Commission and establish a simplified version of the current good time allowance as a mechanism for effecting institutional discipline. Under this alternative, if a prisoner complied with the rules of the institution for a specified period of time, he would receive a certain number of days' credit toward early release.<sup>120</sup> That credit could not be taken away from him at a later date nor could he earn back credit toward early release that had been denied. The prisoner would know at the time of sentencing the maximum period he would have to serve and would know that compliance with prison rules would earn credit of a small percentage of this period toward early release. Thus, this alternative would provide a direct connection between good behavior in prison and the length of time the defendant had to serve in prison in any case in which the sentence was six months or longer.

While the effects of this approach on prison behavior cannot be predicted with certainty, prison officials believe that it would not add to disciplinary problems in prison and that it might even reduce them. With the elimination of parole, good time would become more important since it would be the only mechanism by which most prisoners could reduce their time in prison. Allowing periodic vesting of credit toward early release, rather than permitting any amount of good time earned up to the time of a rules violation to be forfeited and permitting later restoration of forfeited good time, would create a continuing incentive for the prisoner to earn credit toward early release through compliance with institutional rules.<sup>122</sup> The system of periodic vesting of credit toward early release would also be less cumbersome to administer than the current system and could probably be handled in most cases as a routine bookkeeping matter in the absence of serious infractions.

5. Participation in Rehabilitation Programs. Many prisoners participate in vocational training and rehabilitation programs in the belief that they will receive favorable consideration from the Parole Commission when such participation is called to its attention.<sup>122</sup> As a result, many corrections officials view such participation as involuntary, a fact that they regard as possibly detrimental to rehabilitation.<sup>123</sup> Because of this growing concern, the Federal Bureau of Prisons is placing increased emphasis on making all such programs voluntary<sup>124</sup> in the belief that a prisoner will benefit more from a program in which he participates

<sup>118</sup> The National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws, in its draft revision of the federal criminal code, viewed provisions on "good time" as "an unnecessary inducement in view of the parole possibilities." Working Papers, p. 1299.

<sup>119</sup> See note 57 supra and accompanying text.

<sup>120</sup> It has been suggested in the course of the Department's review that a prisoner sentenced to a term of imprisonment of six months or more receive credit toward early release of one day at the end of each ten days of imprisonment beginning after the first six months and before the end of the first three years of his term, and one and one-half days for each ten days beginning after the first three years of his term if the Bureau of Prisons determined that the prisoner had satisfactorily complied with institutional rules approved by the Attorney General and given to the prisoner. If his behavior was less than satisfactory, he would be given no credit toward early release or such lesser amount of credit than he would receive for satisfactory behavior as the Bureau determined to be appropriate.

<sup>121</sup> The Bureau of Prisons has adopted a change in its regulations, effective November 1, 1976, that provides for vesting of industrial good-time (18 U.S.C. 4162), but not of "statutory" good time (18 U.S.C. 4161).

<sup>122</sup> According to Genego, Goldberger, and Jackson, Parole Release Decisionmaking and the Sentencing Process, 84 Yale L.J. 810 at pp. 829-30 (1975), this impression is enhanced by the emphasis in the parole hearings on discussion with prisoners of rehabilitation-oriented matters rather than of the facts necessary to determine the appropriate guidelines to be applied to the prisoner. A Bureau of Prisons survey of the heads of federal institutions indicated that 45 percent of the prison officials who responded to the survey believe that inmates feel the Parole Commission gives some consideration to participation in programs, while 41 percent believe that inmates think the Parole Commission does not consider participation in programs. Memo of Roy E. Gerard, Assistant Director, Correctional Programs Division to Executive Staff of Bureau of Prisons, March 7, 1977. In fact, it is fairly unusual for a prisoner to be released early because of an unusual level of rehabilitation. For example, in the period from October 1973 through March 1974, the Parole Commission made in one region 45 decisions below the guidelines, of which 17 were for "outstanding institutional progress" and 3 were for the reason that "clinical judgment indicates better risk than indicated by salient factor score." Hoffman and De Gostin, Parole Decision-Making: Structuring Discretion, U.S. Board of Parole Research Unit, p. 11 (1974).

<sup>123</sup> Carlson, "Corrections in the United States Today: A Balance Has Been Struck," 13 Amer. Crim. L.R. 627-35 (1976).

<sup>124</sup> Ibid.

voluntarily than from participation for purposes of impressing parole officials.<sup>125</sup> While some corrections professionals believe that prisoners might benefit from programs in which they would not participate unless required to do so,<sup>126</sup> recent experience of the Bureau of Prisons indicates that substituting voluntary programs for involuntary ones "is not detrimental to prison rehabilitation in any way."<sup>127</sup> The growing belief among corrections officials and researchers is that if a prisoner knows what his release date is, he will be more motivated than he is now to plan ahead and to participate in programs that will enable him to find employment when he leaves prison.<sup>128</sup>

6. Community Supervision. Under current law, persons released on parole receive community supervision by probation officers until the expiration of their sentence or until they have been released from parole supervision.<sup>129</sup> In addition, persons released after serving the term of imprisonment imposed by the judge less good-time deductions are subject to supervision for the remainder of their maximum terms of imprisonment less 180 days.<sup>130</sup> This supervision is intended to serve two arguably conflicting<sup>131</sup> purposes, protection of the community from additional crimes by the parolee and facilitation of the parolee's return to the community by assisting him in obtaining such things as employment and medical services.

Whether parole supervision achieves the goal of protecting the community is doubtful. The average federal probation officer supervises 10 parolees and 30 probationers.<sup>132</sup> As a result of this caseload, each probation officer can spend only a limited amount of time supervising each probationer and parolee.<sup>133</sup> In any event, studies on the value of supervision indicate that the degree of supervision has little or no impact on the recidivism of parolees.<sup>134</sup>

"Any combination of visits and reports keeps pressure on the parolee to be law abiding and to stay in touch with the parole office. It is very hard to say whether such supervision really prevents relapses into crime. A parolee determined to make it does not need surveillance; a parolee determined to con his parole officer, evade him, or engage in illicit activities can find ways to do so. [Footnote

<sup>125</sup> Carlson, Speech before the 47th Annual Criminal Justice Institute of the Florida Council on Crime and Delinquency, South Orlando, Florida, July 7, 1976. Mr. Gerard indicated in his memorandum of March 7, 1977, that one-third of the prison officials who responded to the Bureau of Prisons survey commented that "the voluntary, non-coercive approach to programming was a more realistic and philosophically sound position for the Bureau to adopt."

<sup>126</sup> Interview by staff of Office of Policy and Planning with federal prison officials, June 1976.

<sup>127</sup> Letter from Norman A. Carlson, Director, Federal Bureau of Prisons, to Harry A. Searr, Assistant Director, Office of Policy and Planning, U.S. Department of Justice, October 5, 1976.

In a memorandum outlining the results of a survey of officials, supra note 125, Roy Gerard, Assistant Director of the Correctional Programs Division of the Bureau of Prisons indicated that 62 percent of the Bureau of Prisons officials who responded to the questionnaire found that making rehabilitation programs in their institution voluntary had not significantly changed inmate participation, 24 percent found that making the programs voluntary had increased enrollment, and 10 percent found that it had decreased enrollment.

<sup>128</sup> See Sentencing, Parole and Good Time, a position statement of the National Prison Project of the American Civil Liberties Union. This position was also taken by Lawrence Bennet, Director of Research, Department of Corrections in California, and Owen Kennedy, Gerard M. Farkas, and James D. Henderson, regional directors of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, in telephone interviews.

<sup>129</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4210 and 4211.

<sup>130</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4164.

<sup>131</sup> "A compulsory relationship is strained enough, but the tension is worse if one party is polling the other. The strain becomes even more complex and unreasonable if the supervisory party is required to be the other's primary source of advice and help." See Stanley, Prisoners Among Us: The Problem of Parole, p. 102 (1976).

<sup>132</sup> United States Probation Service, Administrative Office of the United States Courts, November 1975 time study.

<sup>133</sup> According to the time study, cited in note 132 above, a probation officer spends an average of 30 minutes per month, or 6 hours per year, in face-to-face contact with each probationer or parolee he supervises. Additional time may be spent in telephone contacts with the person under supervision and on such matters as assistance to the probationer or parolee in seeking employment. See also Stanley, supra note 131, at 125-26.

<sup>134</sup> Stanley, id., at 128-29, citing Neitherent and Gottfredson, "Case Load Size Variation and Difference in Probation/Parole Performance" (Administrative Office of the United States Courts, Probation Division, 1973); and Carter, Glaser, and Nelson, "Probation and Parole Supervision: The Dilemma of Caseload Size" (Administrative Office of the United States Courts, Probation Division, February 1973). See also von Hirsch, Doing Justice: The Choice of Punishment, Report of the Committee on the Study of Incarceration, p. 14, citing Greenberg, "Much ado About Little: The Correctional Effects of Corrections," Department of Sociology, New York University, June 1974 (unpublished); Lipton, Martinson, and Wilks, The Effectiveness of Correctional Treatment Evaluation Studies, p. 119 (1975).

omitted.] A parolee who is not committed either way may be induced to accept guidance and help."<sup>135</sup>

If parole supervision were abolished, it would be desirable to provide an alternative means of facilitating prisoners' return to society. This could be accomplished by establishing a transition period at the end of the term of imprisonment. The transition period could consist of the last thirty days of any term of imprisonment, which could be spent in an environment—perhaps a halfway house or other minimum security facility—that would give the prisoner an opportunity to prepare for his return to the community.<sup>136</sup> During this period, the Bureau of Prisons, in cooperation with the United States Probation System, could provide the prisoner with assistance in locating a place to live and in obtaining employment. This period could be followed by a period of 90 days during which the services of the Probation System would be available if the former prisoner wanted such services. Thus, for example, if the former prisoner believed that the Probation System could help him find a job or obtain necessary medical services, such as a drug treatment program in the community, and requested its help, it could assist him. This approach would permit probation officers to assist persons released from prison without supervising their conduct and would free their time for work with probationers and those recently released prisoners who actually want assistance from the Probation System.

There remains the question of the manner in which criminal conduct by released prisoners should be dealt with if there is to be no parole supervision. Under the existing parole system, parole revocation is sometimes used as a substitute for prosecution of new offenses<sup>137</sup> or to cause incarceration of a person convicted of an offense while on parole but not sentenced to another term of imprisonment. If parole supervision were abolished, an offense committed by a person recently released from prison would be handled in the same manner as an offense committed by anyone else. If the person were prosecuted and convicted, the fact that he had recently been released from prison would be taken into account under the sentencing guidelines applicable to his case. However, there would be no sanction for acts by a released prisoner that now constitute technical violations of parole but that are not criminal. To meet this problem, the Parole Commission has suggested that, rather than abolishing post-release supervision, it would be desirable to provide a fixed period of supervision following every term of imprisonment.<sup>138</sup> If this suggestion were adopted, careful consideration would have to be given to the problem of appropriate sanctions for non-criminal violations. Existing law, which permits reincarceration for a technical violation of parole, is subject to the criticism of unfairness since it permits the incarceration of certain persons for committing acts that do not result in incarceration if committed by anyone else.

D. Impact on the Federal Criminal Justice System. Reform of the federal law on sentencing, whether or not the parole system is abolished, will obviously have a substantial effect on several components of the federal criminal justice system, as well as on the system as a whole. The following is a discussion of the probable effects on the federal criminal justice system of the sentencing reform proposals

<sup>135</sup> Stanley, supra note 131, at 101. One study shows that, while parole supervision continues, it may have an effect on the behavior of a parolee. Lipton, Martinson, and Wilks, The Effectiveness of Correctional Treatment Evaluation Studies, p. 119 (1975). However, after supervision is discontinued, there is apparently no significant difference in the recidivism rates of persons who had been subject to parole supervision and those who had not. Ibid. at 150.

<sup>136</sup> The Bureau of Prisons has suggested that, if parole is abolished, it should be permitted to determine whether a transition period is necessary in a particular case, in order to avoid putting an undue burden on community treatment facilities. A possible alternative would be to require that there be a transitional period for all prisoners incarcerated longer than a set period of time, perhaps two or three years, and permit the Bureau of Prisons to decide whether the transitional period is needed for individual persons serving shorter terms of imprisonment. The Bureau of Prisons also suggests that exceptions be made in the transition period requirements in certain situations, such as when there is a detainer outstanding against a prisoner or when it is necessary to send a prisoner back to prison from a halfway house for serious violation of rules.

<sup>137</sup> See Stanley, supra note 133 at 107. According to Parole Commission records, of the 187 parole revocations in October and November 1974, 116 or 62 percent followed new convictions, 27 or 4.4 percent followed a new arrest without conviction, and 6 or 3.2 percent involved parolees involved in criminal behavior for which there was no arrest or conviction. The remainder of the revocations were for technical violations. From May 16, 1976 (the effective date of the revocation guidelines, 28 C.F.R. § 2.21), through February 28, 1977, 992, or 64.5 percent, of the 1538 parole revocations were in cases in which there was a new conviction or the Commission found that there had been criminal conduct, and the remainder were for technical violations.

<sup>138</sup> Memorandum from Curtis A. Crawford, supra note 61.

contained in S. 1437 and H.R. 6869, and of abolishing the parole system in the context of those proposals.

1. United States Parole Commission. If the sentencing provisions of S. 1437 and H.R. 6869 are adopted, the cost of operating the United States Parole Commission will probably not be altered substantially. The provisions will, however have a substantial impact on the way in which the Parole Commission operates. While the Parole Commission would continue to have jurisdiction to set release dates for persons sentenced to terms of imprisonment, both the parole guidelines and the law concerning parole eligibility would be altered.

The manner of promulgating parole guidelines, as well as the content of the guidelines themselves, would be affected. The parole guidelines would be promulgated by the Sentencing Commission in order to assure that they would be compatible with the sentencing guidelines. As noted earlier, the parole guidelines now in use take into account only factors known at the time of sentencing. Under the proposals, sentencing guidelines would be based on all factors known at the time of sentencing that the Sentencing Commission believed to be relevant to the sentencing judge for the imposition of sentence. This would leave to the parole guidelines the question of how factors unknown at the time of sentencing, such as prison behavior, should affect a prisoner's release date.<sup>139</sup>

The changes in promulgation and form of the parole guidelines would undoubtedly have a substantial impact on the operations of the Parole Commission. While the Commission would no longer promulgate parole guidelines, it should participate in the process of making recommendations concerning them. The changes may also affect the research undertaken by the Parole Commission. The Commission now does a substantial amount of research during the process of developing and revalidating parole guidelines to evaluate their effectiveness in predicting behavior of parolees. Under the revised code, the Sentencing Commission will be authorized to conduct its own research on the effectiveness of different sentencing practices and related issues. It seems likely that, since the Parole Commission will be more concerned with post-conviction events than with matters known at the time of sentencing, the focus of any continued research it might undertake would shift to evaluation of the correlation between prison behavior and post-release behavior.

Making the parole laws inapplicable to persons who committed offenses after the effective date of the code would result in the gradual phasing out of the Parole Commission, which had a budget in fiscal year 1976 of $3.4 million, with 138 positions, including nine Presidential appointees. The Parole Commission probably would not go out of existence immediately, however; it would still be needed to deal with persons convicted of offenses committed before that date.<sup>140</sup> Since 27 percent of the prisoners discharged from federal prisons in fiscal year 1976 had served more than five years in prison and 10 percent spent more than 10 years in prison,<sup>141</sup> it would take 5 to 10 years to phase out the parole system. Since the average prisoner who was released on parole in a recent year served 27.8 months in prison,<sup>142</sup> it also appears that the Parole Commission would need to retain its full complement of employees for at least the first two years after the effective date of a sentencing guidelines system abolishing parole. While normal attrition at the Parole Commission may somewhat reduce the number of employees, the Parole Commission has a relatively low attrition rate. Most <sup>139</sup> The Parole Commission has published for comment the outline of a proposal that would change its hearing practices. The proposal would require that a "presumptive" release date for every prisoner be set early in his term of imprisonment, based on the factors known at the time of sentencing. As the parole release date approached, the prisoner's institutional behavior would be reviewed to determine whether it met the statutory requirement of substantial compliance with institutional rules. If it did not, the parole release date would be rescinded. 42 P.R. 29934, June 10, 1977.

<sup>140</sup> A possible alternative to phasing out the Parole Commission gradually would be abolishing the Commission on the effective date of the code, requiring that a designated authority determine each prisoner's probable release date under the latest parole guidelines and determine what the sentence of the prisoner would have been if he was sentenced pursuant to the new sentencing guidelines, and releasing the prisoner on the earlier of the two dates. When the State of California enacted its recent statute for determinate sentences, it required that the Community Release Board determine what each prisoner's sentence would have been if he had been sentenced under the new provisions, except that if that sentence would have been shorter than the time that the prisoner would have served under the indeterminate sentencing law, the parole date could be set at a later date if specified aggravating circumstances were present. Section 1170.2 of the California Penal Code.

<sup>141</sup> Data from inmate information discharge files: calculations in September 1976 by Federal Bureau of Prisons for Congressional Budget Office study.

<sup>142</sup> Statistical Report, Fiscal Year 1975, U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Prison System, p. 22.

parole specialists would have little difficulty finding other employment with the federal or state corrections systems, with state parole boards, or in other criminal justice related fields. In fact, some of the employees would have knowledge and experience needed by the Sentencing Commission in developing its guidelines and policy statements.

It should be noted that the United States Parole Commission is an extremely costly and complex mechanism for setting release dates for federal prisoners.<sup>143</sup> This is especially true since many of the hearings and review proceedings held by the Parole Commission concerning parole release dates are probably unnecessary. Some hearings are held when there is no realistic prospect that they will result in the setting of a release date;<sup>144</sup> in other cases, release dates could be set on the basis of the records and the guidelines without holding hearings.<sup>145</sup>

If a sentencing guidelines system is established, whether or not parole is abolished, the sentencing guidelines will recommend an appropriate term of imprisonment for persons sentenced to prison, just as the parole guidelines do now. However, if parole is abolished it is necessary to insure that the new system adequately provide for those persons who are now released before or after the periods recommended in the parole guidelines. Release on parole earlier or later than the time recommended in the parole guidelines now occurs in three special cases. First, many cases involve factors that were known at the time of sentencing but were not taken into account to the extent appropriate by the judge in imposing sentence. Second, some cases involve factors that would not be permitted to be considered in setting the release date if the criminal code were adopted. Neither of these first two groups of cases would be affected if parole were abolished. The third group of cases involves factors that would have to be taken into account by other elements of the criminal justice system if parole were abolished.

The Parole Commission undertook to monitor the operation of parole guidelines in one region for a six-month period. The resulting report provides detailed information on the number of parole decisions outside the range recommended in parole guidelines and the reasons for such decisions.<sup>146</sup> Of the 1,080 parole decisions in the period of October 1973 through March 1974 in the northeast region of the Parole Commission, 98 decisions, or 9.1 percent, fell outside the guidelines for the reasons shown in the following table:<sup>147</sup>

Above guidelines (N=53) :

Poor institutional conduct.....	17
To complete specific program.....	19
Aggravating offense factors.....	8
Clinical judgment indicates poorer risk than indicated by salient factor score.....	6
Other .....	3

Below guidelines (N=45) :

Outstanding institutional progress.....	1
Credit for additional time served in state custody or to be served (commitment detainer).....	14
Health or emotional problems.....	7
Clinical judgment indicates better risk than indicated by salient factor score.....	3
Parole to deportation only.....	3
Mitigating offense factors.....	1

<sup>143</sup> According to the Parole Commission, it spent $2,391,000 in fiscal year 1976 to produce 27,471 parole decisions of all types at a cost of approximately $123.44 per decision. Memo of September 17, 1975, from Jim Fife, Executive Assistant to the Chairman of the Parole Commission to Stephen Finau, Office of Policy and Planning.

<sup>144</sup> But see note 139 supra.

<sup>145</sup> Of the parole decisions in the period of October 1, 1975 through September 30, 1976, no more than 18.1 percent fell outside the guidelines. Meierhoefer, supra note 103, Table III. The Parole Commission includes as decisions within the guidelines those decisions that actually fall outside the guidelines in two circumstances. First, the Parole Commission considers a release date to be within the guidelines if the prisoner is released at the expiration of sentence before serving the time in prison recommended in the guidelines. Second, if the release date is above the guidelines recommendation only because the prisoner is ineligible for parole on the date recommended in the guidelines, the release date is considered to be within the guidelines.

<sup>146</sup> Hoffman and De Gostin, Parole Decision-Making: Structuring Discretion, United States Board of Parole Research Unit, Report 5 (June 1974).

<sup>147</sup> Hoffman and De Gostin, supra note 146, Table II at p. 11.

Of these factors that result in setting release dates outside the recommended range in the parole guidelines, several would be known at the time of sentencing and could be taken into account by the sentencing judge. These include aggravating or mitigating offense factors, credit for past or future service in state custody, clinical judgments indicating a poorer or better risk of repeated criminal behavior than suggested by the factors taken into consideration in the guidelines,<sup>148</sup> and health or emotional problems that justify a lighter sentence than might ordinarily be given. In addition, the sentencing judge should be able at the sentencing hearing to direct the Bureau of Prisons to turn a prisoner over to the immigration officials for deportation at the end of a specified term of imprisonment.

As discussed above, some decisions outside the guidelines would not occur under the proposed determinate sentencing provisions. First, sentences above the guidelines for purposes of permitting a prisoner to complete a specific program should not occur with determinate sentences. If the term of imprisonment is known from the beginning, the prisoner's participation in institutional programs can be planned to utilize the time available to the prisoner's best advantage. Conversely, cases are rare in which a sentence below the guidelines is warranted because of outstanding institutional progress. Moreover, if the stated purpose of a sentence is just punishment or deterrence, rather than rehabilitation, outstanding institutional progress should not affect the appropriate length of sentence.

If the parole system is retained, it can deal with the rare cases where a term of imprisonment should be shortened because of outstanding institutional progress or because the prisoner becomes seriously ill. If the parole system were abolished, such cases could be handled by having the Bureau of Prisons transfer the prisoner to an appropriate medical facility or make application to the sentencing court for a reduction of sentence.

If the parole system is retained, as provided in the proposed criminal code, the present duplication of judicial and Parole Commission hearings on the appropriate length of sentence will continue.<sup>149</sup> If parole were abolished, the second hearing on the appropriate term of imprisonment would, of course, be eliminated altogether.

The abolition of parole would obviously obviate the need for the existing complex review procedure for parole decisions, a procedure that, in fact, has little impact on release dates of prisoners. Under current law, the first stage of review of the parole examiners' decisions is conducted by the regional commissioner. There were 3,425 appeals to the regional commissioner between October 1, 1974, and September 30, 1975, and the decision of the hearing examiner panel was affirmed in 86.7 percent of the cases.<sup>150</sup> The regional appellate hearing involves only a single regional commissioner; other regional commissioners become involved in reviewing the record only if the regional commissioner wishes to reverse the decision of the hearing examiners or alter the release date by more than 180 days.<sup>151</sup> There is a final appeal to the National Appeals Board of any denial of an appeal to the regional commissioner. This Board costs $159,000 per year<sup>152</sup> and confirms the decisions at the regional level 94.5 percent of the time.<sup>153</sup> Thus, the total appellate process results in a change in the release date of only 531 of the 3,425 prisoners who appeal release decisions per year.<sup>154</sup>

2. Bureau of Prisons. It seems unlikely that the determinate sentencing proposals will have any appreciable effect on the size of the federal prison population and, therefore, on the budget of the Bureau of Prisons. In establishing sentencing guidelines, the Sentencing Commission will be making judgments as to the appropriateness of incarceration for certain types of offenses and offenders. The process of determining which categories of offenders need to be incarcerated

<sup>148</sup> Many of these cases are based on a rehabilitation theory of sentencing that probably would not be used as the basis of determining the length of sentence under the determinate sentencing proposals.

<sup>149</sup> As noted above, however, Parole Commission hearings would no longer consider factors known at the time of sentencing; those factors would be considered only at the sentencing hearing.

<sup>150</sup> Meierhoefer, supra note 29, at 13.

<sup>151</sup> 28 C.F.R. § 2.25 (b) and (c).

<sup>152</sup> Supra note 143. This figure does not include support cost other than rent and communications that are shared with the regional and central office.

<sup>153</sup> Meierhoefer, supra note 29, at 15.

<sup>154</sup> The same case may appear in these statistics twice because of the possibility that a particular release date has been modified at both the regional and national levels.

and which do not will result in a setting of priorities in the use of prison facilities. While these priorities may result in some changes in the makeup of the prison population, such as more repeat offenders in prison and fewer first offense car thieves, the Sentencing Commission can be expected to take into account the capacity of the federal prison system so as not to create guidelines that would substantially alter the average term of imprisonment or the size of the prison population.<sup>155</sup> However, it is possible that sentencing guidelines will alter the nature of prison facilities somewhat if, for example, the guidelines lead to the incarceration of greater numbers of violent offenders who require particularly secure facilities; and, if fewer non-violent first offenders convicted of minor offenses were sentenced to terms of imprisonment, there would be less need for minimum security facilities.

If parole supervision were abolished, it is possible that there would be an increased burden on community treatment centers because of the need for a prisoner about to be released to serve the last part of his sentence in an environment that will aid his transition back into the community. This burden on the community treatment centers would be lessened if other minimum security facilities were used for some prisoners about to be released and further reduced if the requirement for spending a transition period in a minimum security facility were applied to a narrower class of prisoners or at the discretion of the Bureau of Prisons, as suggested by the Director of the Bureau of Prisons.<sup>156</sup>

The simplified procedure that would result from using credit toward early release rather than the parole system to determine release dates should not be as costly for the Bureau of Prisons to administer as the existing good-time allowance provisions.<sup>157</sup> Under a system of periodic vesting of credit toward early release for good behavior and denial of credit for bad behavior during the same short period of time, it would be less time consuming to keep records than it is under the more complex forfeiture provisions in current law which permit the forfeiture of any amount of good time accumulated up to the time of the violation.<sup>158</sup> In addition, since the simplified procedure would not permit the restoration of credit toward early release that had been withheld because a prisoner had not complied with institution regulations for a ten-day period, the cost of periodic review of the question whether to restore withheld or forfeited good time would be avoided. Further, the provisions for credit toward early release would affect the term of imprisonment of all prisoners to whom they apply, rather than only those prisoners who are released at the expiration of sentence less good time or who are ineligible for parole at the time recommended in the parole guidelines because they have forfeited good time that has not been restored—fewer than half the prisoners in the federal prisons.<sup>159</sup>

It should be noted, however, that credit toward early release could be withheld only after compliance with due process procedures similar to those now required to be followed for the withholding of good times.<sup>160</sup> While the simpler provisions may affect these procedures somewhat, it is not expected that there would be a significant cost saving.

3. United States Probation System. S. 1437 and H.R. 6869 would have very little overall impact on the United States Probation System. Its existing functions would be expanded only by a requirement that the pre-sentence reports it prepares include a statement of the guidelines categories of offense and offender applicable to the defendant and of any factors that the probation officer believes might warrant a sentence outside the guidelines.<sup>161</sup> It is unlikely that this requirement will have an appreciable effect on the workload of the Probation System.

<sup>155</sup> Senator Edward M. Kennedy, in discussing his sentencing guidelines bill, S. 2699, 94th Congress, said:

"It is likely that the guidelines would mandate sentences substantially less than the maximums now authorized by law. But in terms of actual time served I do not see a radical change. Nor do I perceive the possibility of the guidelines approach increasing prison populations. I suspect that sentences of imprisonment would be reserved for the more serious crimes, with petty offenders—too often the cause of overcrowded prisons—avoiding lengthy prison terms." Kennedy, "Criminal Sentencing: A Game of Chance," 60 Judicature 208 (December 1976).

<sup>156</sup> See note 136, supra and accompanying text.

<sup>157</sup> Chapter 309 of title 18, United States Code.

<sup>158</sup> 18 U.S.C. 4165.

<sup>159</sup> See note 103, supra and accompanying text.

<sup>160</sup> See Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 528 (1974).

<sup>161</sup> Proposed amendment to Rule 11(c)(2) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

The abolition of parole supervision would have a greater impact on the Probation System, although it would probably not result in a cost saving or reduction in the personnel level of the System.<sup>162</sup> While there would be no parole supervision, the Probation System would still need to provide assistance to prisoners who request it during the transition to the community. In addition, the Probation System might be required to provide assistance requested by a prisoner during a period—perhaps ninety days—immediately following his release. In providing these services, the Probation System would work closely with the halfway houses and other community-based treatment centers.<sup>163</sup> The cost of this program would obviously depend on the ability of the Probation System to develop programs that were viewed by the prisoners as helpful. It seems probable that many prisoners would seek the services, particularly assistance in obtaining employment, while they were still in custody, in preparation for their release. Once they had been released, however, there might be less incentive to request services from the Probation System because the programs would be entirely voluntary and the prisoner would no longer be under any form of supervision.

Even if the abolition of parole caused a reduction in supervisory responsibilities of the Probation System<sup>164</sup> the overall demands on the Probation System would probably not be reduced, for two reasons. First, if the Probation System did not have to supervise parolees, it would probably, and appropriately, spend more time supervising probationers. Second, there is a growing use in the Federal criminal justice system of pretrial diversion, which involves supervision by probation officers. This supervision is used for an estimated 4 or 5 percent<sup>165</sup> of the matters now referred to the United States Attorney's office in 32 federal districts.<sup>166</sup> The program will probably be used by over half the federal districts within the next year or so.

4. Federal Court System. The creation of the United States Sentencing Commission is the only aspect of the determinate sentencing proposal that will have a measurable impact on the resource needs of the federal courts. However, a number of other aspects of the sentencing proposals will affect the nature of sentencing proceedings and of issues before the appellate courts.

The major cost of the proposals to the Federal court system would probably be the cost of the United States Sentencing Commission itself. The proposals provide for a nine-member Commission. Those members who were not already employed by the federal government would receive compensation at the equivalent of the GS-18 daily rate, and all members would receive transportation and per diem travel expenses. The Commission would have a full time staff of experts in fields related to corrections, with a GS-16 staff director. The Commission would also have power, in connection with its duty to promulgate sentencing guidelines and policy statements, to conduct a research and development program.

It seems unlikely that the sentencing process in an individual case will have an appreciably different cost to the federal court system under the proposals than the sentencing process under current law. Rule 32(a)(1) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure now requires that the defendant be permitted to make a statement in his own behalf and that defense counsel and the attorney for the government also be permitted to speak to the court. Under the proposals the

<sup>162</sup> The United States Probation System in fiscal year 1975 had a budget of $10.5 million and had 595 workyears allocated to parole matters.

<sup>163</sup> Under current law, a parolee or mandatory releasee may be required as a condition of release to reside in or participate in a program of a residential community treatment center. 18 U.S.C. 4209(c)(1). Thus, the Probation System already works with the Bureau of Prisons in the community treatment centers as part of its responsibility to supervise these releasees. 18 U.S.C. 3655.

<sup>164</sup> A probation officer now spends 8.5 percent of his time supervising parolees. (Stanley, Prisoners Among Us: The Problem of Parole, p. 125 (1976), citing Federal Judicial Center, Probation Time Study (February 26, 1973)) Parolees constitute approximately 20 percent of the persons supervised by a probation officer. 1976 Annual Report of the Director, Administrative Office of United States Courts, Table 10, p. 17.

<sup>165</sup> Testimony of Doris Meissner, Office of Policy and Planning, U.S. Department of Justice, on Pretrial Diversion before the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties, and the Administration of Justice, House Committee on the Judiciary, September 19, 1975. Studies are in process on the effectiveness of pretrial diversion in the federal system.

<sup>166</sup> In fiscal year 1975, pretrial diversion was used in 6 demonstration districts and 26 non-demonstration districts, resulting in pretrial diversion of 786 persons. Letter from Doris M. Meissner, Chairperson, Task Force on Pretrial Diversion, U.S. Department of Justice, to Ellen Bergsmann, Division of Probation, Administrative Office of the United States Courts, July 30, 1976.

only change that would be made in the sentencing hearing would be a requirement that the judge announce how the guidelines apply to the convicted defendant and permit the defense and prosecution to comment on the classification. Rather than requiring more time for the hearing, this change should result in focussing the hearing on the characteristics of the offense and the offender, the matters most important to the determination of an appropriate sentence.

The proposals will undoubtedly affect the decisions of defendants as to whether to plead guilty. If, for example, a defendant were charged under current law with an offense carrying a potential maximum term of imprisonment of ten years, he might be reluctant to plead guilty to the charge even if he knew (which he probably would not) that the average time served in prison by persons convicted of the same offense was substantially shorter than ten years. If a sentencing guidelines system were in use, however, he would know the recommended sentence for a person with his history and characteristics who was convicted of the same offense under similar circumstances. If he knew that the evidence against him was strong and believed that the recommended sentence was reasonable, he might be more inclined to plead guilty than under current law. On the other hand, if the defendant believed the evidence was not strong, or if he thought the sentence recommended in the guidelines was too high, he might be more inclined to go to trial.<sup>167</sup>

With respect to appellate review of sentences, the proposals would permit a defendant to appeal a sentence—other than a sentence consistent with a plea agreement or sentence recommendation made pursuant to Rule 11(e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure—if it exceeded the maximum applicable to the defendant under the guidelines. Appeal by the government would be permitted, with the Attorney General's approval, if the sentence were lower than that recommended in the guidelines.<sup>168</sup> It is difficult to estimate the cost of permitting such appellate review of sentences. It can be assumed that approximately 10 to 15 percent of the sentences will be outside the guidelines,<sup>169</sup> as is now the case with the parole guidelines, but for a number of reasons it seems unlikely that all of these will result in petitions for appellate review. First, the requirement of Attorney General approval should minimize the number of appeals of sentences below the guidelines. It can be expected that such appeals will be limited by Department of Justice policy to those cases where the sentence is clearly in error or where the reason for setting a sentence below the recommended guidelines range would set an undesirable precedent. Second, the sentence may not vary sufficiently from the guidelines to warrant an appeal, particularly if the sentencing judge has articulated justifiable reasons for going <sup>167</sup> In order for the sentencing guidelines system to achieve its goal of eliminating or reducing unwarranted disparity in sentencing, it will be necessary to assure that exercises of prosecutorial discretion during the charging and plea bargaining stages of prosecution do not undermine that goal. In commenting on an earlier draft of this paper, the Bureau of Prisons, the United States Parole Commission, and the Director of Research of the Federal Judicial Center all stressed the importance of guidelines for prosecutorial discretion in the context of this proposal.

In January 1977, the Department of Justice distributed, to the United States Attorneys and their assistants, draft instructional materials relating to exercise of prosecutorial discretion in plea negotiations. Those materials emphasized the importance of accepting a plea only where the charge or charges to which the defendant pleads bear a reasonable relationship to the nature of the defendant's criminal conduct, where there is a factual basis for the charge or charges, and where the plea will allow the imposition of a sentence that is appropriate under all of the circumstances of the case. It is expected that a revised version of those materials will be promulgated well before the effective date of the new code.

<sup>168</sup> On March 29, 1977, the Director of the Administrative Office of United States Courts submitted to the Congress proposed legislation approved by the Judicial Conference of the United States to amend Rule 35 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure to provide for appellate review of sentencing at the instigation of either the defendant or the government.

<sup>169</sup> A recent study on the feasibility of sentencing guidelines developed guidelines that were based on empirical research into past sentencing practices. The researchers found that knowledge of six to twelve items of information could be used to predict the sentence a judge would give in 85 percent of the criminal cases in the jurisdictions being studied. The researchers also concluded that additional items would not increase the accuracy of their predictions by a sufficiently great percentage to justify the expenditure of time and money involved in using the information in a guidelines system. Furthermore, they concluded that some departure from guidelines is inevitable:

"Since sentencing deals with an infinite variety of human behavior, it is impossible to plan in advance all possible circumstances which might arise which would justify going outside the guidelines. (If one could identify and include all those factors in the guidelines, the result would be a system which would be more cumbersome than that which exists today!)" Wilkins et al., Sentencing Guidelines: Structuring Judicial Discretion, Final Report of the Feasibility Study October 1976, p. 84 (emphasis in original).

outside the guidelines. While the initial level of appeals may be fairly high, it will probably diminish substantially as a body of case law is developed concerning the appropriateness of particular reasons for sentences outside the guidelines.<sup>170</sup> Under a proposed amendment to Rule 35 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, there may also be claims that inaccurate categorization of the offense or offender resulted in an inappropriate sentence, although the number of such claims will probably not be great and any review of a district court determination would be discretionary.

IV. CONCLUSIONS

Enactment of the sentencing provisions of S. 1437 and H.R. 6869 would enhance the fairness and effectiveness of the federal sentencing process in several respects. First, it would shift the focus of sentencing away from the single, outmoded theory of rehabilitation and permit a more balanced approach to the end product of the criminal justice system. Second, it would provide guidance to judges in carrying out their sentencing responsibilities in a fair manner, thereby serving to eliminate unwarranted disparity at the time of sentencing. Third, it would introduce a logical division of related functions, giving sentencing judges the responsibility for evaluating the effect on a prisoner's release date that should result from factors concerning the offense and offender that are known at the time of sentencing, leaving to the Parole Commission the determination of the effect that subsequent events should have on the release date. Fourth, it would permit continued refinements in federal sentencing policy and practices through provisions for evaluating the effectiveness of the sentencing guidelines and through appellate opinions with regard to sentences outside the guidelines.

If parole were abolished in connection with these proposals, the last vestiges of indeterminate sentencing would be eliminated. The prisoner and the public would know that an announced sentence to a term of imprisonment would actually represent the length of time that a prisoner would spend in prison (except for a small period that might be subtracted for good behavior). The abolition of parole would also eliminate the current, costly duplication of effort involved in having both the sentencing judge and the Parole Commission evaluate information known at the time of sentencing, with possibly inconsistent results. The Parole Commission has been attempting to reduce unwarranted disparity in sentencing for a number of years. The use of sentencing guidelines to address this problem at the beginning of the sentencing process will make it possible to avoid unwarranted disparity in decisions whether or not to incarcerate a convicted defendant and in decisions as to release dates of prisoners who are similarly situated.

The abolition of parole would not have a deleterious effect on prison discipline or participation in institutional educational and vocational programs; in fact, it would have a favorable effect because of the certainty of the release date and the provision of an incentive to plan for the future. Finally, the elimination of parole supervision would have little, if any, effect on recidivism rates of released prisoners, but would permit probation officers to provide assistance to releasees in a context more conducive to success than now exist by virtue of the coercive nature of the parolee probation officer relationship.

<sup>170</sup> It has even been suggested that the availability of appellate review of sentences might actually reduce the burden on the courts of appeals. Some commentators believe that many groundless appeals and petitions for habeas corpus brought today probably would not be brought if the convicted defendant had a mechanism for challenging his sentence. See, e.g., Frankel, Criminal Sentences: Law Without Order, pp. 81-82.

ATTACHMENT A-1 PAROLE GUIDELINES*

ADULT

[Guidelines for decisionmaking, customary total time served before release (including jail time)]

Offense characteristics: severity of offense behavior (examples)	Offender characteristics: parole prognosis (salient factor score)
	Very good (11 to 9)	Good (8 to 6)	Fair (5 to 4)	Poor (3 to 0)
LOW
Marihuana or soft drugs, simple possession (small quantity, for own use). Minor theft (includes larceny and simple possession of stolen property less than $1,000). Walkaway.....	6 to 10 mo....	8 to 12 mo....	10 to 14 mo....	12 to 18 mo.
LOW MODERATE
Alcohol law violations..... Counterfeit currency (passing/possession less than $1,000). Forgery/fraud (less than $1,000)..... Immigration law violations..... Income tax evasion (less than $10,000)..... Selective Service Act violations..... Theft from mail (less than $1,000).....	8 to 12 mo....	12 to 16 mo....	16 to 20 mo....	20 to 28 mo.
MODERATE
Bribery of public officials..... Counterfeit currency (passing/possession $1,000 to $19,999). Drugs: Marihuana, possession with intent to distribute/sale (less than $5,000). "Soft drugs possession with intent to distribute/sale" (less than $500). Embezzlement (less than $20,000)..... Firearms Act, possession/purchase/sale (single weapon—not sawed-off shotgun or machinegun). Income tax evasion ($10,000 to $50,000)..... Interstate transportation of stolen/forged securities (less than $20,000). Mailing threatening communications..... Misprision of felony..... Receiving stolen property with intent to resell (less than $20,000). Smuggling/transportation of aliens..... Theft/forgery/fraud ($1,000 to $19,999)..... Theft of motor vehicle (not multiple theft or for resale).....	12 to 16 mo....	16 to 20 mo....	20 to 24 mo....	24 to 32 mo.
HIGH
Burglary or larceny (other than embezzlement) from bank or post office. Counterfeit currency (passing/possession $20,000 to $100,000). Counterfeiting (manufacturing)..... Drugs: Marihuana, possession with intent to distribute/sale ($5,000 or more). "Soft drugs possession with intent to distribute/sale" ($500 to $5,000). Embezzlement ($20,000 to $100,000)..... Explosives, possession/transportation..... Firearms Act, possession/purchase/sale (sawed-off shotgun(s), machinegun(s), or multiple weapons). Interstate transportation of stolen/forged securities ($20,000 to $100,000). Mann Act (no force—commercial purposes)..... Organized vehicle theft..... Receiving stolen property ($20,000 to $100,000)..... Theft/forgery/fraud ($20,000 to $100,000).....	16 to 20 mo....	20 to 26 mo....	26 to 34 mo....	24 to 44 mo.
VERY HIGH
Robbery (weapon or threat)..... Drugs: "Hard drugs" possession with intent to distribute/sale (no prior conviction for sale of "hard drugs")." "Soft drugs" possession with intent to distribute/sale (over $5,000). Extortion..... Mann Act (force)..... Sexual act (force).....	26 to 36 mo..	36 to 48 mo..	48 to 60 mo..	60 to 72 mo.

See footnotes at end of table.

ATTACHMENT A-1 PAROLE GUIDELINES*—Continued

ADULT

[Guidelines for decisionmaking, customary total time served before release (including jail time)]

Offense characteristics: severity of offense behavior (examples)	Offender characteristics: parole prognosis (salient factor score)
	Very good (11 to 9)	Good (8 to 6)	Fair (5 to 4)	Poor (3 to 0)
GREATEST
Aggravated felony (e.g. robbery, sexual act, aggravated assault)—weapon fired or personal injury.	} (Greater than above—however, specific ranges are not given due to the limited number of cases and the extreme variations in severity possible within the category.)
Aircraft hijacking
Drugs: "Hard drugs" possession with intent to distribute/sale for profit (prior conviction(s) for sale of "hard drugs.")
Espionage
Explosives (detonation)
Kidnaping
Willful homicide

NOTES

1. These guidelines are predicated upon good institutional conduct and program performance.
  2. If an offense behavior is not listed above, the proper category may be obtained by comparing the severity of the offense behavior with those of similar offense behaviors listed.
  3. If an offense behavior can be classified under more than one category, the most serious applicable category is to be used.
  4. If an offense behavior involved multiple separate offenses, the severity level may be increased.
  5. If a continuance is to be given, allow 30 d (1 mo) for release program provision.
  6. "Hard drugs" include heroin, cocaine, morphine, or opiate derivatives, and synthetic opiate substitutes. "Soft drugs" include, but are not limited to, barbiturates, amphetamines, LSD, and hashish.
- * 28 C.F.R. §2.20, 41 F.R.37322 (September 3, 1976).

YOUTH AND NARA

[Guidelines for decisionmaking, customary total time served before release (including jail time)]

Offense characteristics: severity of offense behavior (examples)	Offender characteristics: parole prognosis (salient factor score)
	Very good (11 to 9)	Good (8 to 6)	Fair (5 to 4)	Poor (3 to 0)
LOW
Marihuana or soft drugs, simple possession (small quantity, for own use).	} 6 to 10 mo.... 8 to 12 mo.... 10 to 14 mo... 12 to 18 mo.
Minor theft (includes larceny and simple possession of stolen property less than $1,000).
Walkaway
LOW MODERATE
Alcohol law violations	} 8 to 12 mo.... 12 to 16 mo... 16 to 20 mo... 20 to 26 mo.
Counterfeit currency (passing/possession less than $1,000).
Forgery/fraud (less than $1,000)
Immigration law violations
Income tax evasion (less than $10,000)
Selective Service Act violations
Theft from mail (less than $1,000)
MODERATE
Bribery of public officials	} 9 to 13 mo.... 13 to 17 mo... 17 to 21 mo... 21 to 28 mo.
Counterfeit currency (passing/possession $1,000 to $19,999).
Drugs:
Marihuana, possession with intent to distribute/sale (less than $5,000).
"Soft drugs," possession with intent to distribute/sale (less than $500).
Embezzlement (less than $20,000)
Firearms Act, possession purchase sale (single weapon—not sawed-off shotgun or machinegun).
Income tax evasion ($10,000 to $50,000)
Interstate transportation of stolen/forged securities (less than $20,000).
Mailing threatening communications
Misprision of felony
Receiving stolen property with intent to resell (less than $20,000).
Smuggling/transporting of aliens
Theft/forgery/fraud ($1,000 to $19,999)
Theft of motor vehicle (not multiple theft or for resale)

See footnotes at end of table.

YOUTH AND NARA—Continued

[Guidelines for decisionmaking, customary total time served before release (including jail time)]

Offense characteristics: severity of offense behavior (examples)	Offender characteristics: parole prognosis (salient factor score)
	Very good (11 to 9)	Good (8 to 6)	Fair (5 to 4)	Poor (3 to 0)
HIGH
Burglary or larceny (other than embezzlement) from bank or post office.	} 12 to 16 mo... 16 to 20 mo... 20 to 26 mo... 26 to 32 mo.
Counterfeit currency (passing possession $20,000 to $100,000).
Counterfeiting (manufacturing).....
Drugs:
Marihuana, possession with intent to distribute/sale ($5,000 or more).
"Soft drugs," possession with intent to distribute/sale ($500 to $5,000).
Embezzlement ($20,000 to $100,000).....
Explosives, possession/transportation.....
Firearms Act, possession purchase sale (sawed-off shotgun(s), machinegun(s), or multiple weapons).
Interstate transportation of stolen/forged securities ($20,000 to $100,000).
Mann Act (no force—commercial purposes).....
Organized vehicle theft.....
Receiving stolen property ($20,000 to $100,000).....
Theft/forgery/fraud ($20,000 to $100,000).....
VERY HIGH
Robbery (weapon or threat).....	} 20 to 27 mo... 27 to 34 mo... 34 to 41 mo... 41 to 48 mo.
Drugs:
Hard drugs possession with intent to distribute/sale (no prior conviction for sale of hard drugs).
Soft drugs possession with intent to distribute/sale (over $5,000).
Extortion.....
Mann Act (force).....
Sexual act (force).....
GREATEST
Aggravated felony (e.g. robbery, sexual act, aggravated assault)—weapon fired or personal injury.	} (Greater than above—however, specific ranges are not given due to the limited number of cases and the extreme variations in severity possible within the category.)
Aircraft hijacking.....
Drugs: "Hard drugs" possession with intent to distribute/sale for profit (prior conviction(s) for sale of hard drugs)
Espionage.....
Explosives (detonation).....
Kidnaping.....
Willful homicide.....

NOTES

1. These guidelines are predicated upon good institutional conduct and program performance.
2. If an offense behavior is not listed above, the proper category may be obtained by comparing the severity of the offense behavior with those of similar offense behaviors listed.
3. If an offense behavior can be classified under more than one category, the most serious applicable category is to be used.
4. If an offense behavior involved multiple separate offenses, the severity level may be increased.
5. If a continuance is to be given, allow 30 d (1 mo) for release program provision.
6. "Hard drugs" include heroin, cocaine, morphine, or opiate derivatives, and synthetic opiate substitutes. "Soft drugs" include, but are not limited to, barbiturates, amphetamines, LSD, and hashish.

ATTACHMENT A-2

SALIENT FACTOR SCORE*

- Item A -----
 Total score -----
     (No prior convictions adult or juvenile) =3
     One prior conviction =2
     Two or three prior convictions =1
     Four or more prior convictions =0
- Item B -----
     No prior incarcerations (adult or juvenile) =2
     One or two prior incarcerations =1
     Three or more prior incarcerations =0
- Item C -----
     Age at first commitment (adult or juvenile)
         (26 or older) =2
         (18 to 25) =1
         (17 or younger) =0
- Item D -----
     Commitment offense did not involve auto theft or check (s) =1
     Otherwise =0
- Item E -----
     Never had parole revoked or been committed for a new offense while on parole, and not a probation violator this time =1
     Otherwise =0
- Item F -----
     No history of heroin or opiate dependence =1
     Otherwise =0
- Item G -----
     Verified employment (or full-time school attendance) for a total of at least 6 months during the last 2 years in the community =1
     Otherwise =0
- Total score -----

*28 C.F.R. § 2.20, 42 F.R. 12045 (March 2, 1977).

ATTACHMENT B

AVERAGE SENTENCES IMPOSED AND SERVED FOR FEDERAL OFFENSES COMMITTED IN RANDOMLY SELECTED DISTRICTS

District <sup>1</sup> (number of judges)	Bank robbery			Securities
	Number of cases	Average sentence served (imposed <sup>2</sup> ) (months)	68 percent <sup>1</sup> sentence range (months)	Number of cases	Average sentence served (imposed <sup>2</sup> ) (months)	68 percent sentence range (months) <sup>a</sup>
Alabama, Southern (2).....	5	47.8 (176.4)	38.0- 57.6 (98.3-254.5)	1	33.0 (72.0)
Oklahoma, Eastern (3).....	1	32.0 (120.0)	NA	0
Pennsylvania, Eastern (19).....	50	38.4 (92.0)	22.4- 54.4 (54.0-130.0)	4	12.3 (39.0)	5.0-19.6 (1.0-86.4)
Texas, Southern (8).....	10	41.0 (104.4)	21.7- 60.3 (61.8-147.0)	5	18.8 (44.4)	8.7-28.9 (23.1-65.7)
Virginia, Eastern (6).....	25	35.6 (139.2)	17.5- 53.7 (92.1-186.3)	10	17.2 (62.4)	14.8-21.6 (64.6-90.2)
Illinois, Northern (12).....	21	45.3 (94.7)	19.2- 64.4 (38.9-150.5)	14	24.7 (46.1)	11.5-37.9 (14.3-77.9)
New York, Southern (27).....	9	13.2 (30.7)	5.2- 21.2 (8.9- 52.5)	19	12.2 (23.2)	3.9-20.5 (1.0-47.3)
California, Middle (16).....	25	17.7 (31.1)	6.9- 28.5 (10.4- 51.8)	6	29.2 (50.0)	10.9-47.5 (23.0-77.0)
Georgia, Northern (6).....	36	20.0 (41.4)	8.0- 32.0 (19.6- 63.2)	8	13.0 (33.5)	6.6-19.4 (14.5-52.5)
Missouri, Western (5).....	16	15.8 (31.0)	6.7- 24.9 (9.3- 51.7)	6	21.7 (25.0)	3.8-39.6 (1.1-49.9)
Florida, Northern (2).....	18	23.4 (48.7)	7.1- 39.7 (23.6-73.8)	0
Kansas (4).....	32	27.8 (56.0)	18.5- 37.1 (35.5- 74.5)	10	28.3 (58.8)	11.2-45.4 (26.8-98.8)

<sup>1</sup> The range is derived from the standard deviation (not shown). 68 percent of all sentences given for each group of offenders are within this range.

<sup>2</sup> If a youth offender is sentenced under 18 U.S.C. 5010(b), the Bureau of Prisons records the sentence imposed as 6 years. If a youth offender is sentenced under 18 U.S.C. 5010(c), the record shows the actual sentence imposed.

Source: Bureau of Prisons Statistics on releasees in fiscal years 1974 and 1975.

ATTACHMENT C

MALE OFFENDERS DISCHARGED FROM PRISON DURING FISCAL YEARS 1974 AND 1975 (FEDERAL OFFENSES)

Crime	Average sentences imposed (months)	Average sentence served (months)	Percentage of imposed sentence actually served	Number of offenders
Bank robbery.....	129.56	45.46	35	886
Marihuana <sup>1</sup> .....	38.84	14.89	38	1,001
Auto theft.....	42.90	22.00	51	839
Narcotics.....	56.49	23.50	42	1,396
Controlled substance <sup>1</sup> .....	32.47	14.40	44	406
Securities.....	46.30	20.81	45	251
Embezzlement.....	25.82	11.80	46	156
Fraud.....	30.28	12.86	42	340
Forgery.....	37.58	19.86	53	409

<sup>1</sup> The parole guidelines issued Sept. 3, 1976 (41 CFR 37316) changed the rating of the offenses of possession of a small quantity of marihuana or "soft drugs" for personal use from "low moderate" to "low," thus changing previous range of sentences within the guidelines of 8 to 25 months to a new range of 6 to 18 months, depending upon the alien factor score of the particular prisoner.

Source: Office of Program Planning, U.S. Bureau of Prisons.

ATTACHMENT D
SENTENCES SERVED BY MALE BANK ROBBERS ACCORDING TO OFFENDER CHARACTERISTICS

Age	Offender characteristics 1		Average sentence served for 1st offense (months)	Number of first offenses	Range which includes percent of cases <sup>2</sup> (months)	Average sentence served for 2d offense <sup>3</sup>	Number of second offenses	Average sentence served for more than 2 offenses <sup>3</sup>	Number of third or subsequent offenses
	Employment (months)	Marital status
-26	+6	M	30.1	7	20.8-39.4			42.7	3
-26	+6	M	29.1	10	15.3-42.9			44.2	6
-26	+6	S	26.6	5	18.7-34.5
-26	+6	S	25.7	3	15.2-35.9	42	1	36.0	1
-26	-6	M	40.7	3	26.8-54.6			29.0	3
-26	-6	M	30.1	7	18.3-41.9	51	1	36.9	7
-26	-6	S	25.0	3	12.8-37.2			41.0	1
-26	-6	S	28.7	6	19.0-37.4			40.5	2
+26	-6	M	32.6	5	16.1-49.1			54.8	5
+26	-6	M	31.3	3	24.4-38.2	38	1	60.8	14
+26	-6	S	39.6	8	19.4-59.8			42.1	13
+26	-6	S	32.0	5	22.6-41.4			50.6	16
+26	+6	M	41.9	17	27.8-56.0			42.9	16
+26	+6	M	33.3	12	15.6-51.0	41	1	54.4	34
+26	+6	S	35.0	41	18.5-51.5			51.4	29
+26	+6	S	38.9	34	15.3-62.5			51.6	77

Source: Bureau of Prisons discharge file, fiscal years 1974 and 1975.

1 Explanations of symbols:

Age—(-26) 26 yr old or younger. (+26) over 26 yr old.

Employment—(-6) employed for 6 mo or less on last job in the 2 yr prior to commitment. (+6) employed for more than 6 mo on last job in the 2 yr prior to commitment.

Marital status—(M) married at time of commitment. (S) single, separated, divorced, or widowed at time of commitment.

Education—(-12) less than a high school degree. (+12) high school degree or more.

<sup>2</sup> The range was determined by use of the standard deviation (not shown). 68 percent of all sentences given for each group of offenders are within this range.

<sup>3</sup> The most recent conviction was for bank robbery; previous convictions considered in this chart were for felonies.

U.S. SENATE,
 COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
 SUBCOMMITTEE ON CRIMINAL LAWS AND PROCEDURES,
 Washington, D.C., June 23, 1977.

HON. GRIFFIN B. BELL,
Attorney General of the United States,
Department of Justice, Washington, D.C.

DEAR GENERAL BELL: Enclosed is a copy of the statement of the American Civil Liberties Union and The Reporters' Committee for Freedom of the Press submitted in hearings before the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures on S. 1437, the "Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977".

It would be most helpful to the Committee to have for the record your comments with respect to the issues raised in these statements. Since the record will be closed July 15, 1977, I would appreciate your observations before that date.

With kindest regards, I am
 Sincerely yours,

JOHN L. McCLELLAN.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
 Washington, D.C.

HON. JOHN L. McCLELLAN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to your request, there are enclosed two series of Departmental comments concerning suggestions for the modification of S. 1437 that have been made in statements filed with your Subcommittee by the American Civil Liberties Union and by the Legal Defense and Research Fund of the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press.

The suggestions made by the ACLU and the Reporter's Committee are directed largely to obtaining change in particular provisions of the new Code that would carry forward the existing state of the federal criminal law. The fact that certain Code provisions are derived from existing law, of course does not necessarily mean that they reflect the best possible approach to the issues involved. It may mean, for example, that difficulty may have been anticipated in securing congressional agreement as to the need for change in the law, and, if need were established, agreement as to the direction which any change should take. As you know, that difficulty did arise with respect to many of the particular issues that have been raised in the statements. The Code provisions in those areas adopted the existing law approach because it was a reasonable and acceptable middleground.

What is really needed at this time is an integrated, workable basic structure for the federal criminal code, together with such substantive changes from current law as can generally be agreed upon. Other specific changes may then be made, within that structure, in the future.

Both series of comments follow the order of the subjects as they appear in the statements. We appreciate the additional time that has been afforded for the review of the statements, and hope that the comments will prove helpful to the Judiciary Committee in the course of its work.<sup>1</sup>

We look forward to early Senate passage of S. 1437.

Sincerely,

GRIFFIN B. BELL, Attorney General.

Enclosures.

<sup>1</sup> The comments by the Attorney General were not provided until after the Subcommittee reported the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary on August 5, 1977, and include observations on the bill as reported.

COMMENTS ON ACLU SUGGESTIONS CONCERNING S. 1437

1. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU suggests that section 401(a) relating to accomplice liability, should be narrowed by eliminating the term “counsel” from the definition of “abet”.

Comment.—The word “counsel”, which appears in the existing statute pertaining to accomplice liability (18 U.S.C. 2), was carried forward in the bill in order to parallel the current scope of the law. In the August 4 Committee Print of S. 1437, however, the term has been deleted from the definition of “abet” for the reason that “counseling” is included in the concept of “aids”, also prescribed in section 401. Counseling will still be covered by the Code, but the new version clarifies the fact that it is covered only to the extent that it constitutes aiding, as proposed by the Brown Commission.

2. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU suggests that section 401(b), which carries forward the “Pinkerton” doctrine under which conspirators may be held liable for the “reasonably foreseeable” substantive crimes committed by their fellow conspirators, should be eliminated.

Comment.—The rule announced by Justice Douglas in the case of Pinkerton v. United States, 328 U.S. 640, is predicated on the hypothesis that a person who sets in motion a chain of criminal events by agreeing with others to perform one or more illegal acts should be liable for other crimes that foreseeably are committed by the members of the conspiracy (e.g., stealing a car for use as the escape vehicle in connection with an agreed-upon bank robbery). It is a reasonable principle of criminal liability, and has proved useful in a variety of situations where most observers would agree that criminal responsibility should be recognized. S. 1437 narrows the theoretical reach of the Pinkerton doctrine somewhat by adopting the dictum in the case and making it clear that the crime not only must be reasonably foreseeable but must be committed “in furtherance of the conspiracy”.

3. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU suggests that section 404(b), which provides that it is not a defense to a charge of accomplice liability that the accomplice’s principal has been acquitted, should be deleted (and suggests that the same deletion should be made in section 1002(e) which precludes a similar defense in the conspiracy context).

Comment.—This aspect of S. 1437 is consistent with existing case law. See United States v. Bryan, 483 F. 2d 88, 93–94 (3d Cir. 1973). Such a provision was recommended by the Brown Commission and has been included in several recent state codes.

A contrary rule, automatically extinguishing criminal liability for an accomplice if the principal is acquitted, would appear to be proper if the acquittal was on the ground of lack of proof of the principal’s guilt of an offense beyond a reasonable doubt, but would not appear to be proper if the basis for the principal’s acquittal was, for example, a defense of insanity. Protection today to a defendant in the former situation is provided by the doctrine of collateral estoppel, a doctrine that would still be available under the Code.

Nor would a required acquittal of an accomplice appear proper if the principal’s acquittal is predicated on the inadmissibility of certain evidence as to which only the principal had standing to object (e.g. incriminating evidence obtained during an overly-broad search of the principal’s house). In such a situation the principal’s acquittal would have nothing to do with his guilt or innocence. Avoiding a mandatory acquittal in such a situation does not undermine the exclusionary rule, which today is conditioned on standing so that only a person whose privacy rights were infringed by an illegal search may invoke the deterrent consequence of precluding jury consideration of the resulting evidence. Thus, if an accomplice and his principal, or two coconspirators, are jointly tried, only the party aggrieved is entitled to have illegally obtained evidence suppressed (e.g., Alderman v. United States, 394 U.S. 165), and there is no reason to alter the rule if they are tried separately. S. 1437 is consistent with this rule.

It should be noted that no objection is made to the doctrine in current law (carried forward in section 401(b)) that it is no defense for an accomplice that the principal was immune from prosecution (e.g., because of incompetence, diplomatic immunity, etc.). Similarly, it should not be a defense that the principal was acquitted, if the reason for the acquittal was unrelated to a determination of innocence on the merits.

4. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU suggests that section 1001 should be modified to make the test for an attempt whether the conduct constituted a “substantial step towards completion of the crime. It also suggests that the renunciation defense (which appears in the conspiracy section as well) is too narrow to be of value.

Comment.—The formulation of attempt in S. 1437—i.e. intentional conduct that “amounts to more than mere preparation for the commission of the crime, and that indicates [the defendant’s] intent that the crime be completed”—differs substantively very little from the “substantial step” test. Of the two approaches, the Code formulation appears to be the more accurate synthesis of present federal case law.

The renunciation defense excuses conduct, otherwise criminal, in a case where a defendant voluntarily has averted the actual commission of the offense he originally planned. It provides an incentive for persons to stop criminal conduct. It is new to the law, and appears to be of reasonable and useful scope.

5. ACLU recommendation.—While implicitly recognizing that the Code carries forward the present formulation of the conspiracy offense (18 U.S.C. 371)—i.e. an agreement to commit a crime plus an overt act intended to effect an object of that agreement—the ACLU suggests that the Code should undertake to discourage abusive conspiracy prosecutions by narrowing the offense to require one of the conspirators to have taken a “substantial step” toward completion of the conspiratorial goal.

Comments.—The present formulation of the conspiracy offense is a reasonable one, and is no more subject to potential abuse than a variety of other accepted statutes. The Supreme Court has repeatedly expressed its view that the offense serves significant interests in protecting society. E.g., United States v. Feola, 420 U.S. 671. Moreover, it should be noted that S. 1437 somewhat narrows current federal law by making applicable to all conspiracy offenses the section 1002 requirement of proof of an overt act. Present federal law contains a number of conspiracy statutes apart from 18 U.S.C. 371—for example the ones applicable to narcotic offenses, 21 U.S.C. 846 and 963—that require proof merely of an unlawful agreement without the need to show any overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy.

6. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU opposes the solicitation offenses in section 1003 on grounds of First Amendment considerations and overbreadth.

Comment.—Solicitation of a crime is no more pure, protected speech than is perjury or offering a bribe. As Professor Thomas Emerson has noted:

Most crimes * * * involve the use of speech or other communication. Where the communication is an integral part of a course of criminal action, it is treated as action and receives no protection under the First Amendment. * * * [T]he applicable legal doctrine [in solicitation] undertakes to draw the line between ‘expression’ and ‘action.’ The fact that issues of this nature rarely arise indicates that establishing the division between free expression and solicitation to crime has not created a serious problem.

No examples of overbreadth are provided except for a general assertion that soliciting a misdemeanor should not be an offense. The basis for such a distinction is not apparent. Certainly the solicitation of a violation of many regulatory misdemeanors in such areas as environmental quality or food and drug purity would be a serious matter.

7. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU raises a general objection to section 1111, dealing with sabotage, on First Amendment grounds. It states that the section should be amended to require that the property covered—i.e., property used in or “particularly suited for use in the national defense”—also be required to be “designated” for such use, or alternatively that the suitability of the property be made subject to a “knowing” rather than a “reckless” standard of culpability. The ACLU also proposes the limitation of section 1112, dealing with impairing military effectiveness, to time of war.

Comment.—The First Amendment assertions do not take into account the requirement of the section that the conduct be accompanied by a specific “intent to impair, interfere with, or obstruct” war or defense activities. Accordingly, the example of an anti-war demonstration which coincidentally obstructs traffic certainly would not be covered by the section.

The requirement that the property be “designated,” as well as “particularly suited” for the national defense has already been incorporated in the section’s provision relating to public facilities. In the provision relating to government property, such a requirement would inappropriately narrow current law (18

U.S.C. 2151-2156), since the property's federal ownership and defense utility should be sufficient to place persons on notice that it is an appropriate subject for statutory protection. The formulation of property "particularly suited" for use in the national defense is a fair synthesis of the terms used to describe categories of property employed in the present statutes.

The suggestion that the culpability concerning the property's status be elevated to "knowing" does not appear to be warranted. A person who, as section 111 requires, "with intent to impair, interfere with, or obstruct the ability of the United States * * * to prepare for or to engage in defense activities, damages, tampers with, contaminates, defectively makes, or defectively repairs" property should not also have to be shown specifically to know that the property is particularly suited for use in the national defense in order to be guilty of sabotage. It should be enough that he is "reckless" as to the nature of that property—recklessness being defined in S. 1437 to require proof that the defendant was aware of but disregarded, a risk that the property is of the type covered, under circumstances demonstrating that such disregard constituted a gross deviation from the standard of care that a reasonable person would utilize.

Finally, to limit the application of 1112 to wartime would constitute a major contraction of present law, which applies not only in wartime but in time of declared national emergency (18 U.S.C. 2153, 2154) and in time of peace (18 U.S.C. 2155). See United States v. Bishop, 555 F. 2d 77 (10th Cir. 1977). In view of the importance of the nation's being able to deter hostilities as well as to defend against them, there is clear reason to retain the present coverage.

8. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU, with regard to the Code's carrying forward of present statutes relating to espionage, suggests making clear in the legislative history that proof of intent to injure the national defense is an essential element of espionage. It also suggests that the word "communicate" is defined too broadly in section 111 to reflect the proper scope of the term as used in the espionage statutes.

Comment.—The current espionage statutes use the language "with intent or reason to believe" that the information disclosed is to be used to the injury of the United States. 18 U.S.C. 793, 794. The proposed addition to the "legislative history" would therefore be at odds with the clear coverage of the existing statutes. It would also be at odds with the bill's design of carrying forward the exact state of the current law in this area, a device that was found necessary to avoid potential conflicts concerning the manner in which the coverage of existing law should be changed.

With regard to the section 111 definition of "communicate", the definitions of that section do not apply to offenses retained outside the new Title 18.

9. ACLU recommendation.—To make it clear that section 1301 of the Code cannot be "used to prosecute legitimate journalistic activities," the ACLU suggests that the section be limited to "material" obstructions of government functions through fraudulent means and that defenses be added excluding liability for such obstructions where the "primary purpose" is the dissemination of information to the public.

Comment.—Addition of the word "material" would tend to confuse the application of the statute, which continues current law (18 U.S.C. 371). For example, the prompt delivery of five dollars worth of food stamps might be material to a person in need, while a few days delay in the delivery of a multimillion dollar bomber might not result in any real inconvenience. If a person specifically intends to obstruct a government function through fraudulent means, it seems clear that he, at least, regards the function as material. Proof of this element beyond a reasonable doubt should suffice to limit the application of the statute to appropriate bounds.

Excluding liability for obstructing "lawful" government functions by fraudulent means would encourage out-of-court testing of the legitimacy of private, subjective interpretations of law. If a government function is thought to be unlawful, the civil law provides the forum for testing the legality of the function. There appears to be no reason to provide an incentive to fraud as a device for testing the validity of a government act.

It is unclear why it is thought that there should be a defense for situations where the primary purpose of a fraud is news dissemination. The section requires a specific intent to obstruct a government function by fraud and that intent would have to be proven beyond a reasonable doubt. It is difficult to envision a situation in which a defendant's specific intent is to obstruct a government function by fraud but his primary purpose is to disseminate information to the public.

10. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU proposes that the preclusion of a defense in section 1311(c) be removed out of concern that the section's coverage of "concealing [a fugitive] or his identity" might otherwise be construed to reach a journalist who refuses to divulge the identity of a news source who is a fugitive.

Comment.—The section does not reach anyone who merely refuses to identify a fugitive. As the draft Senate report on the bill makes clear, only affirmative acts of concealment are covered, as is the case under current law.

11. ACLU recommendation.—In section 1344 (Tampering with a Government Record), the ACLU suggests that the phrase "otherwise impairs the integrity of a government record" could be interpreted to criminalize unauthorized photocopying of a record even if the document was not removed from government premises or altered in any way. It proposes a clarifying amendment or legislative history disavowing such an interpretation.

Comment.—The draft Senate report on the bill expressly disavows such an interpretation, as have the courts with regard to the current statute. See United States v. Rosner, 325 F. Supp. 515 (S.D.N.Y., 1972), aff'd and remanded for resentencing, 485 F. 2d 1213 (2d Cir. 1973).

12. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU proposes a journalist's privilege to the offense of retaliating against a public servant where the offense is committed through economic injury rather than physical injury.

Comment.—The suggestion has been mooted by the deletion, in the August 4 Committee Print of S. 1437, of this aspect of the offense.

13. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU proposes deleting paragraph (1) of section 1302(a), punishing the intentional obstruction or impairment, by means of physical interference or obstacle, of the performance by a federal public servant of an official duty. The ACLU suggests that there be substituted a provision comparable to 18 U.S.C. 1114, which lists various classes of public servants who are covered by the proscriptions of 18 U.S.C. 111 against physical interference with official duties.

Comment.—Current federal law contains many statutes besides 18 U.S.C. 111 and 1114 that punish intentional interference with the performance of official duties by particular classes of federal servants. The purpose of section 1302 is to combine these provisions and to fill unwarranted gaps in coverage. The section is designed, therefore, to expand current law, which is erratic and inconsistent in its scope. The Brown Commission's Final Report and the Model Penal Code contained a similar coverage. The provision seems reasonable, and its specific intent requirement limits its application to appropriate bounds.

14. ACLU recommendation.—Section 1328 deals with demonstrations intended to influence judicial proceedings. The ACLU suggests that it be limited to cover such demonstrations only while court is in session, and even then only if the demonstration actually disrupts the session by unreasonable noise, obstruction of access, or threat of force.

Comment.—The bill provides a defense if court was not in session (including a half hour before and after a session) and if the conduct did not involve the specific kinds of conduct the ACLU would prohibit. It does, however, cover demonstrations while the court is in session, whether or not an actual disruption is apparent. The purpose is to avoid improper pressures designed to influence judges and juries in carrying out their often-difficult responsibilities. Criminal and civil cases must be decided on the basis of facts established under the rules of evidence in the courtroom—not on the basis of pressures by demonstrators, no matter how worthy their motivation. As long as the described conduct takes place in the specific intent of influencing the judicial proceeding, this offense appropriately should continue to be recognized by the criminal code.

15. ACLU recommendation.—Section 1331 of S. 1437 as introduced created an affirmative defense to contempt of a court order if the order was "clearly invalid" and if the defendant "did not have a reasonable opportunity to obtain a judicial review or a stay thereof prior to the disobedience or resistance charged." The ACLU suggests the substitution of "or" for "and" in this defense so that, inter alia, disobedience of a "clearly invalid" order would not be an offense. The ACLU also expresses concern that the provision permitting a separate prosecution for a substantive offense involved in the contempt, e.g., assault on a juror, may raise double jeopardy problems.

Comment.—It is settled law that the invalidity of a court's order is no defense to a charge of contempt for disobedience of the order. The rationale is that recourse to the courts through the appellate process is the only legally tolerable means of challenging a judicial order. It is debatable whether federal law now even recognizes an exception for "transparently" unlawful orders as the ACLU assumes. The affirmative defense created in the August 4 Committee Print of S. 1437, which is somewhat modified from that in the bill as introduced, is in any event carefully framed to accommodate the competing interests at stake. By allowing a defense only when the order is clearly invalid and recourse to the appellate process has proven ineffective, the provision does not encourage resort to self-help while it does permit a defendant to rid himself of criminal liability for disobedience of a plainly invalid order when such obedience is the only effective means of vindicating the right at issue. By contrast, the ACLU's proposal would encourage some defendants to risk a violation of a court's order based on an assessment of its "clear" invalidity, irrespective of the opportunity to appeal, and would, on the other hand, denigrate the authority and respect due judicial orders that are not "clearly invalid" by allowing a defense merely because no appeal is immediately available.

The suggestion that double jeopardy problems arise from allowing prosecution for a specific offense as well as the contempt has not been supported by the courts. See, e.g., Jurney v. McCracken, 294 U.S. 125 (1935); United States v. Rollerson, 449 F. 2d 1009 (D.C. Cir. 1971). In any event, credit is given in the section for time served on the underlying offense.

16. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU suggests the amendment of section 1343, insofar as it covers oral false statements to law enforcement officers, by limiting the offense to instances involving "false alarms or a person's intentional false implication of another person in the commission of a crime."

Comment.—The ACLU correctly points out that a conflict in case law exists whether the principal, present federal false statement statute reaches oral false statements to law enforcement agents. The great weight of such case authority, however, is in favor of such coverage. United States v. Adler, 380 F. 2d 917 (2d Cir.); United States v. Lambert, 501 F. 2d 943 (5th Cir.) (en banc); United States v. Goldfine, 538 F. 2d 815 (9th Cir.); contra, Friedman v. United States, 374 F. 2d 363 (8th Cir.). See generally United States v. Chevoor, 526 F. 2d 178, 182–183 (1st Cir.). The position taken in section 1343 of S. 1437 substantially restricts such current law application by conditioning coverage of oral false statements on proof (1) that the defendant knew the person to whom the falsehood is told is a law enforcement agent, and (2) that the statement is volunteered or is made after the defendant has been advised that making such a false statement is an offense. These limitations seem to represent more appropriate boundaries for the offense than the narrower ones suggested by the ACLU. Persons should not be able to lie with impunity to an individual known to be a law enforcement agent, since such a lie, whether or not it consists of implicating another person in an offense, may cause the agent, or the agency for which he works, to commence an investigation and thereby waste or divert valuable resources and needlessly embarrass other persons. The limitations in the Code also guard against the situation of a law enforcement officer seeking to trap an unwary target into a falsehood; the requirement of knowledge of the status of the person as an officer, and the requirement that the statement be volunteered or made after a warning, protect against official overreaching.

17. ACLU recommendations.—The ACLU suggests that gratuitous transfers of small amounts of marijuana should be decriminalized along with simple possession. It further suggests that criminal punishment of drug addicts is unconstitutional.

Comment.—Sections 1812 and 1813 of S. 1437 decriminalize federally both the simple possession and gratuitous transfer of ten grams or less of marijuana, thus according in part with the ACLU recommendation. Possession or gratuitous transfer of more than ten grams is punishable by up to thirty days in prison and a $500 fine, a material reduction from the current penalty of one year's imprisonment and a $5,000 fine.

The suggestion that drug addicts may not constitutionally be held liable for drug offenses has not been supported by the federal courts. See Powell v. Texas, 392 U.S. 514 (1968); United States v. Moore, 486 F.2d 1139 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 980 (1973).

18. ACLU recommendation.—S. 1437, in section 111, defines "incite" as "to urge other persons to engage imminently in conduct in circumstances under which there is a substantial likelihood of imminently causing such conduct." The ACLU, in connection with the offense of inciting a riot under section 1831, suggests amending the definition to insert a requirement that the actor know, rather than be reckless as to the fact, that the circumstances are such that there is a substantial likelihood of his imminently causing a riot. It also suggests that the offenses of leading a riot (section 1831) and engaging in a riot (section 1833) are too vague.

Comment.—The bill's definition is taken from the Supreme Court's decision in Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444. It appropriately uses a reckless rather than a knowing culpability standard as to the nature of the surrounding circumstances in which the actor's conduct occurs. A "knowing" standard would seem to be too high, in view of the definition of "riot" as a public disturbance that involves violent and tumultuous conduct, that involves ten or more participants, and that causes, or creates a grave danger of imminently causing, injury to persons or damage to property (section 1834). It appears proper to render liable for inciting a riot a person who knows that he is urging an imminent public disturbance that involves violent and tumultuous conduct and who disregards a known risk that the number of participants in the group being incited is ten or more and that the danger of injury to persons or property being imminently created is "grave".

As to the vagueness allegations raised with regard to sections 1831 and 1833, the sections seem to be adequately clear. "Riot" is carefully defined in section 1834, and "leads," "gives commands, instructions, or directions in furtherance of", and "engages in" are words of common understanding. The draft Senate report on the bill makes it evident that merely being swept up in a riot is insufficient to constitute an offense under section 1833.

19. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU urges that the obscenity offense (section 1842) be deleted. It then states that at least the venue provisions should be modified to reduce the liability of defendants to prosecution in any one of several districts that may have a connection with the offense.

Comments.—The retention of some form of federal obscenity offense may be necessary to assure a reasonable supplement to state proscriptions in this area. It is worthy of note that the provision in S. 1437 considerably narrows the reach of present federal law by punishing only commercial dissemination of obscene matter, or its distribution to minors, or its display in such a manner as not to permit persons to avoid exposure to it. Mere possession of, or profitless transactions in, obscene material among consenting adults—penalized under current law—are eliminated from the purview of the Code.

S. 1437's venue provisions applicable to this section (3311) carry forward present 18 U.S.C. 3237(a), which provides that any "offense involving the use of the mails, or transportation in interstate or foreign commerce . . . may be inquired of and prosecuted in any district from, through, or into which such commerce or mail matter moves." To be sure, just as is the case with mail fraud and other crimes, this often permits the commencement of a prosecution in any of several districts with which the offense is connected. To avoid too tenuous an interconnection, however, the August 4 Committee Print restricts the districts in which a prosecution may be initiated for a conspiracy to violate the obscenity section (section 3311(b)).

20. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU objects to various aspects of the infraction offense in the Code concerning failure to obey a public safety order. The ACLU asserts that the phrase "or other condition that creates a risk of serious injury," which appears after the words "fire, flood, riot," is too vague and should be deleted; that authority to issue public safety orders should be more confined; and that the offense should carry no criminal penalty but instead should be a civil violation subjecting the offender to a "minimal" fine.

Comment.—The offense provides that a person is guilty of an offense if he disobeys an order of a public servant to move, disperse, or refrain from specified activity in a particular place, and the order: "(1) is issued in response to a fire, flood, riot, or other condition that creates a risk of serious injury to a person or serious damage to property; and (2) is, in fact, lawful and reasonably designed to prevent serious bodily injury to a person or serious damage to property." The offense carries a maximum penalty of five days in prison and a fine of $1,000.

The "or other condition" clause is not vague in its context, and plainly is needed to cover a variety of miscellaneous situations, such as law enforcement efforts to apprehend a sniper, where public safety is jeopardized.

The concern that personnel without authority to act might be granted broad powers by the section is not supported by the section's language. The section's requirement that the order in fact be lawful precludes its application to a situation in which an order is issued by a person without authority to do so. That provision, in combination with the requirement that the order be "reasonably designed" to safeguard the interests at stake, constitute ample protections against overreaching by officials who are not authorized to exercise authority in the circumstances or who are abusing authority that has been conferred.

The suggestion that the offense should be a "civil violation" does not adequately recognize the exigencies of such situations. The situations in which such orders may need to be issued are, by definition, of a kind in which compliance with the order is essential if serious personal injury or property damage is to be avoided. Thus, providing that a refusal to obey a lawful public safety order is a criminal offense—even though a minor one—is needed to insure that, when necessary, an arrest can take place to remove a recalcitrant individual from a location where he is interfering with the difficult work of public safety officers such as firefighters, civil defense personnel, bomb squad experts, or law enforcement agents.

21. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU questions whether it is appropriate for Congress to delegate to a commission the function of developing sentencing guidelines. It also suggests that the Code should not be enacted until the sentencing commission has made its report to Congress and Congress has had an opportunity to review the commission's proposals. It further suggests that the commission be required to submit its guidelines within a set period of time.

Comment.—The Code's proposal for a sentencing guidelines commission (which is established as an agency in the Judicial Branch) contemplates an active congressional review of the guidelines. Under 28 U.S.C. 994(k), as it would be added by the August 4 Committee Print of S. 1437, the Congress would have 180 days to review, revise, and vote on the guidelines after they had been submitted by the sentencing commission. This system is similar to that in effect with respect to the promulgation by the judiciary of Rules of Criminal Procedure, and would seem to afford Congress an adequate opportunity for review so as to meet any claims of improper delegation.

There is no reason to delay passage of the Code until the sentencing guidelines have been promulgated. The Code carries a two-year delayed effective date. That period should be sufficient to permit the sentencing commission to complete its development of sentencing guidelines and to permit their consideration by the Congress. If two years proves to be insufficient, the Congress may decide at a later time whether to extend the Code's effective date, or to permit it to take effect with the sentencing decisions continuing to be made, as they are now, by judges without the benefit of the guidelines until such time as the guidelines are established. There is, in any event, no reason to delay enactment of the Code.

The bill probably should, as the ACLU suggests, provide a fixed time within which the commission is to submit its proposed guidelines. A one-year period, however, is probably too short.

22. ACLU recommendations.—The ACLU suggests that an opportunity has been lost in the Code to reexamine the wiretap authorization statutes (18 U.S.C. 2510-2520).

Comment.—As the ACLU recognizes, S. 1437 essentially recodifies current law in this area. This is partly the result of a decision, first made by the Brown Commission, to avoid any attempt at this time to undertake major procedural reform as opposed to substantive reform. It is also partly the result of a decision to resolve controversial areas by adopting current law. In light of the strong and divergent views in this area concerning matters of fact (e.g., court-authorized wiretapping being "remarkably unsuccessful" as an investigative tool) and matters of policy, it seems appropriate, as in the national security area, to retain current law.

23. ACLU recommendations.—The ACLU notes in passing that the Code restates the existing statutes on compulsion of witnesses' testimony (18 U.S.C. 6001-6005), which the ACLU opposes.

Comments.—The present statutes, which provide for the conferring of "use immunity", date from 1970 when the Congress enacted this Brown Commission proposal to replace a number of laws that conferred "transactional" immunity. The Supreme Court has sustained the constitutionality of these provisions, and experience has demonstrated their superiority over the previous system. See also Lefkowitz v. Cunningham, — U.S. — (decided June 13, 1977). Irrespective of the merits, moreover, this is another procedural area in which it is understood that no change from the present laws could be agreed upon at this time.

24. ACLU recommendations.—The ACLU suggests that the basic six-month period of custody that S. 1437 (section 3611) provides for a determination of competence to stand trial, while reasonable for persons charged with a felony, is too long a period as applied to accused misdemeanants.

Comment.—Just as the Code makes no distinction between the time needed to determine mental competency depending upon the grade of felony charged (i.e., Class E to Class A carrying a range of maximum incarceration from three years to life) so it makes no distinction between accused misdemeanants and felons in this respect. Rather the time period selected, while necessarily arbitrary to a certain extent, is based upon an assessment of what length of observation may be needed to determine “whether there is a substantial probability that in the foreseeable future [the defendant] will attain the capacity to permit the trial to proceed.” The six-month interval adopted by the Code is not unreasonable in this context.

25. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU suggests that the Code should not permit any Federal retention of custody over an individual who has been found not guilty by reason of insanity.

Comment.—S. 1437 does permit civil custody and hospitalization—contrary to current federal law except in the District of Columbia—but only after there has been a judicial determination at a hearing, based upon “clear and convincing evidence,” that the person “is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of serious bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another”, and only if the person’s state of domicile will not assume responsibility for his custody, care, and treatment (section 3613). The detention may continue only until the person has recovered to the extent that he no longer poses such a danger or until he can be turned over to state authorities. The Code takes the position, in short, that in these circumstances it is preferable to continue federal custody over a dangerously disturbed individual than to release him on the streets. The lack in present federal law of any such residual commitment authority is an unwarranted gap that poses a serious, albeit only occasional, threat to the public safety. Such a proposal was suggested by the Brown Commission staff and was also suggested by the Judicial Conference.

26. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU objects to the fact that the S. 1437 carries forward, in sections 3713 and 3714, procedural provisions of current law (18 U.S.C. 3501, 3577) relating to the admissibility of confessions and of evidence in sentencing proceedings.

Comment.—The ACLU asserts that section 3713 “is an attempt . . . to undercut the Miranda decision.” Miranda, however, is predicated on constitutional grounds, and any legislative attempt to override that decision would be fruitless. Moreover, section 3713, like the present statute, contains several useful provisions that plainly do not pertain to Miranda situations. In any event, the Code adds a new clause at the outset of the statute (“Unless otherwise required by the Constitution”) to insure that it is not construed as an effort to overrule Miranda.

Section 3714 continues the existing law that “no limitation shall be placed on the information . . . which a court of the United States may receive and consider for the purpose of imposing an appropriate sentence” (18 U.S.C. 3577). Although the Federal Rules of Evidence contain a provision for their own inapplicability to sentencing proceedings (Rule 1101(d)(3)), there is no statute apart from this that indicates the principle of evidence that does apply. The broad principle carried forward by this section is a reasonable means of assuring as informed a sentencing decision as is possible, and the importance of such informed decisions appears to outweigh any reasons for extending the technical rules of evidence to control defense and prosecution information pertinent to punishment. See, e.g., United States v. Lee, 540 F. 2d 1205, 1212 (4th Cir.).

27. ACLU recommendation.—The ACLU suggests that the legislative history of section 1525 (revealing information submitted for a government purpose) express the intent of precluding offenses based on release of internally generated documents or of documents available under the Freedom of Information Act or under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

Comment.—Documents which must be produced under the Freedom of Information Act or the civil rules are clearly not documents released in violation of a specific duty, as the offense requires, and thus do not come within the statutory proscription. The draft Senate Report makes this clear. It also makes clear that most forms of internally generated documents are not covered. However, some internal documents would appropriately be covered, such as taxpayer data that is put on another form, or computerized and printed out. It is the information given in confidence which needs protection, not the particular sheet of paper on which it arrives.

28. ACLU recommendations.—The ACLU suggests amending the bar to prosecution in section 1739 to make clear that a reporter's normal salary is not meant to be included in the "anything of value" exclusion from the defense.

Comment.—The requirement that a person, in order to avail himself of the bar to prosecution for theft or receiving stolen property, did not derive "anything of value" from obtaining, using, or disseminating the information to the public, has been deleted in the August 4 Committee Print of S. 1437. The bar to prosecution in section 1739 now requires, in this respect, only that the defendant obtained or used the property primarily for the purpose of disseminating it to the public.

COMMENTS ON REPORTERS COMMITTEE SUGGESTIONS CONCERNING S. 1437

1. Reporters committee recommendations.—Section 1358 seeks to protect public servants from retaliatory acts taken against them or others because of their official actions or status as public servants. In S. 1437, as introduced, the acts can be physical or economic. The Reports Committee objects to the provision concerning economic retaliation, since it construes the provision to reach press criticisms which may be found to lead to economic loss.

Comment.—The protection from economic retaliation appeared in S. 1437 as a result of a gap in existing coverage demonstrated by an incident in which an attempt was purportedly made to fire a federal employee because he had testified forthrightly before a congressional committee investigating serious cost overruns in defense contracts. It is difficult to see how the provision could be applied as the Reporters Committee suggests. Nevertheless, the issue is now moot, since this provision has been eliminated from the August 4 Committee Print of S. 1437.

2. Reporters committee recommendations.—Sections 1331 and 1335 continue the present statutory coverage of acts in the nature of contempt of court, but provide an express exception to liability if the order disobeyed was clearly invalid and the defendant took reasonable and expeditious steps to obtain a review or stay of the order but was unsuccessful in doing so. The Reporters Committee states that orders restraining the press are always invalid unless the actions of the press would present a clear and present danger to the national security, and that as "an absolute minimum, it can be no federal crime to publish in violation of an illegal gag order." The Committee apparently opposes both the formulation of the contempt offenses and the defenses.

Comment.—The contempt offenses in S. 1437 do not change current law, and they certainly have no special application to news reporters. As under existing law, the First Amendment would continue, of course, to confine narrowly the circumstances under which an injunctive order can be issued against the press. Accordingly, it is unclear just what argument the Reporters' Committee is attempting to make in suggesting that the new Code would foster an unwelcome change.

If the Committee's objection is directed to the formulation of the new statutory defense, it apparently is of the view that an intended protection that does not go as far as the Committee believes warranted is worse than no protection. It would be surprising if this were so in this situation, but deference probably should be paid to those groups whose members conceivably would have a principal interest in the subject. Before acting with regard to this issue, however, the Congress should be careful to ascertain whether dropping the defense would in fact be favored by the news reporting community, and whether in any event it would be in the general interest to maintain the defense for the benefit of others.

3. Reporters committee recommendations.—The Reporters Committee asserts that section 1331 would improperly apply to a reporter who willfully disobeys a court order to reveal sources or disclose notes.

Comments.—Section 1331, the general contempt section, applies to any person just as does its current law counterpart (18 U.S.C. 401). Neither reporters nor other groups of individuals are singled out by the statute for special application. The Committee does not identify the manner in which it would seek to change the statute, unless it means to debate the new defense.

4. Reporters committee recommendation.—Section 1333 punished persons who refuse a court or congressional order to provide testimony or evidence without any legal privilege to do so. The Reporters Committee objects to the section, asserting that a civil contempt provision is all that is needed and that a criminal provision is unnecessary.

Comments.—A potential witness who refuses without privilege to answer proper questions may deprive the courts or the Congress of important information, perhaps resulting in the permanent failure of an investigation or trial. In addition to the civil contempt power designed to induce a witness to testify, employment of the criminal contempt provisions occasionally is warranted. There appears to be no reason to change the existing law in this regard.

5. Reporters committee recommendation.—Section 1311 covers any person who, among other things, conceals or destroys records, or conceals a person's identity, and thereby interferes with the apprehension, prosecution, conviction, or punishment of a person who he knows has committed or is being sought for a crime. It is no defense under the section that any concealed records eventually turn out to be inadmissible because of privilege or otherwise.

The Reporters Committee opposes the section on the grounds that it would cover the act of concealing a record even if harmless because the record was inadmissible, and that it would cover reporters who simply decline to reveal their sources.

Comment.—As to the first objection, an individual, reporter or otherwise, cannot be permitted to make an unreviewable determination of the law which may affect the outcome of another person's criminal trial. Destruction of a record is a final act. Concealment of a record may be equally serious, as the resulting delay in a criminal investigation can be irreparable. If a record is in fact legally privileged, the court can promptly determine that fact in the course of reviewing the propriety of a subpoena or warrant and the possessor of the document will adequately be protected thereby. But if the record is not privileged and is destroyed or hidden, the court and the public will be deprived of potentially important evidence and that deprivation may be irreversible. The provision is a reasonable one.

As to the second objection, the draft Senate report makes it clear that the section, like the misprision provision of current law (18 U.S.C. 4), requires active concealment, and that the refusal of any person to identify a fugitive could not constitute a violation of the section.

6. Reporters committee recommendation.—Sections 1731–1733 are the general theft and receipt of stolen property offenses. In section 1739 of the bill a bar to prosecution is provided where intangible property was obtained without a trespass solely for public dissemination and not as consideration for "anything of value." The Reporters Committee objects to this provision as being inadequate because a reporter's salary or a newspaper's profit might be construed to remove them from the protection of the bar.

Comment.—The August 4 Committee Print of the bill, at the suggestion of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, deletes the "anything of value" requirement and permits the bar to prosecution to be applied as long as the primary purpose of obtaining the information is to disseminate it to the public.

7. Reporters committee recommendation.—Section 1344 punishes, among other things, the removal of a government record, thereby impairing its availability. The Reporters Committee suggests that the language would cover photocopies of government records even if the original were not removed.

Comment.—Even though it is quite apparent that under normal circumstances removal of a photocopy could not impair the "availability" of a record, the August 4 Committee Print of S. 1437 specifies that the removal, to be covered by the section, must impair the record's "physical" availability.

8. Reporters committee recommendation.—Section 1301, which is derived from present law (18 U.S.C. 371), punishes those who intentionally obstruct or impair a government function by defrauding the government in any manner. The Reporters Committee opposes the section on the ground that a part of the Ellsberg indictment charged a conspiracy to defraud the government under 18 U.S.C. 371 by disseminating officially controlled documents.

Comment.—The provisions of 18 U.S.C. 371 cover both property-taking fraud and non property-taking fraud (such as misusing the CIA in the Watergate case). The essence of the former is theft, the essence of the latter is obstructing a government function. S. 1437 divides the coverage, placing part in section 1731 (Theft) and part in section 1301 (Obstructing a Government Function). The taking of government records falls within the theft coverage of the new Code, provisions already subject to a bar to prosecution in the situation that concerns the Reporters Committee.

9. Reporters committee recommendation.—Section 1525 punishes government employees who disclose private information that members of the public are required to submit to the government and that is barred from release under a specific duty imposed by law. The Reporters Committee objects to the section on the ground that it would reduce the flow of information to the public.

Comment.—The section consolidates a number of existing offenses punishing the release of tax information, census data, trade secrets, and the like. Since it requires breach of a pre-existing duty before the section applies, its primary effect is in affording a single penal statute with a common penalty. Consequently, it is not likely to alter substantially the existing availability of data.

The Reporters Committee proposes that a defense be inserted which would exculpate a government employee who publically releases private information in government files. Such a defense would seriously compromise recent efforts to help ensure against unwarranted breaches of citizens' privacy.

10. Reporters committee recommendation.—Section 3807 carries forward 21 U.S.C. 844, which permits the sealing of arrest and disposition records of certain first-time drug possessors who were under the age of 21 at the time of the offense. The Reporters Committee criticizes it as a "dangerous first step" in cutting off access to information about the criminal justice system.

Comment.—This provision, which was designed as a device to promote the rehabilitation of youthful drug offenders, has been law for seven years. In that time, it does not appear to have blocked access to important information that warranted wider public dissemination. The competing interests in this area are clearly appropriate matters for congressional resolution.

---

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D.C., February 19, 1976.

HON. JOHN C. McCLELLAN,

Chairman, Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: While, as you know, the Department of Justice considers that the S. 1 provisions dealing with public corruption offenses are generally very satisfactory and make notable improvements over current law in some areas, I am disturbed by the fact that S. 1 would not carry forward the "under color of official right" offense presently contained in the Hobbs Act, 18 U.S.C. 1951, and punishable by up to twenty years in prison.

The non-codification of this offense evidently represents a conscious decision by the draftsmen of the bill. In discussing the matter, the draft Senate Report takes the position that the conduct covered by the offense can almost always be proved either to constitute classic extortion, or bribery, both punishable under S. 1 at a Class C felony level (up to fifteen years in prison). As the Report puts it: "[A]s a practical matter, where a public official receives property to which neither he nor his office is entitled from persons who pay, e.g., because of an understanding or custom that every person doing business with the city has to pay, it can readily be shown—and normally is by the prosecution—that the payment was made unwillingly because of an implicit threat of force or fear [of a harmful economic consequence]". The report further asserts that, where no explicit or implicit threat of harm accompanying the payment can be shown, S. 1 will permit prosecution of the official for bribery.

The fact, is however, that S. 1 does not perpetuate the full scope of the "under color or official right" offense since a threat of reprisal if payment is not made is often very difficult to establish and since, even assuming that a bribery prosecution would always be a viable means of reaching the identical conduct proscribed, the jurisdictional provisions applicable to bribery in S. 1 do not include an "affecting commerce" base as does the Hobbs Act today, and thus would not permit successful federal prosecution of such cases as United States v. Mazzei, 521 F. 2d 639 (3d Cir. 1975) (en banc), involving a corrupt local official. Moreover, contrary to the assumption in the draft Report, the conduct reached by the "under color of official right" offense would not be preserved by the possibility of a prosecution for classic bribery. To establish bribery under section 1351 of S. 1 the prosecution must show that the defendant public servant accepted "anything of value in return for an agreement or understanding that the recipient's official action as a public servant will be influenced thereby, or that the recipient will violate a legal duty as a public servant." Proving the existence of such a quid pro quo, which is the essence of bribery, presents far more difficult problems of proof than to make out the "under color of official right" offense.

Because the "under color of official right" offense has received favorable treatment recently from the courts and promises to be a highly useful prosecutive tool against corrupt public officials, it would seem appropriate—and on behalf of the Department of Justice I strongly urge—that the offense be restored to S. 1.

Specifically, I suggest that the "under color of official right" offense be added to S. 1's extortion section (1722), which already contains an "affecting commerce" jurisdictional base. In recognition, however, of the fact that the conduct required to commit this offense most closely resembles that proscribed by S. 1's graft section, 1352 (a Class E felony) and that Class C felony treatment, equivalent to forcible extortion under section 1722, is not justified, I recommend grading the "under color of official right" offense as a Class E felony. The section, if amended as proposed, would then read, in pertinent part, as follows (new matter underlined):

"§ 1722. Extortion

"(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he obtains property of another:

"(1) by force or by threatening or placing another person in fear that any person will be subjected to bodily injury or kidnapping or that any property will be damaged; or

"(2) under color of official right.

"(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

"(1) a Class C felony in the circumstances set forth in subsection (a) (1);

"(2) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in subsection (a) (2).

Of course, from our point of view the location of the offense in the Code is not of great significance and we would not object to its placement elsewhere. At the risk of undue reiteration, however, I do wish to emphasize the importance of the "under color of official right" offense to this Department's current efforts to root out corruption and I therefore hope that serious consideration will be given to an amendment to restore this offense to the criminal code.

Sincerely,

RICHARD L. THORNBURGII,
Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., June 21, 1976.

HON. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. SENATE,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR TED: We greatly appreciated the May 13 letter from your staff informing us of the status of negotiations on S. 1, and we apologize for the delay in commenting on the changes negotiated thus far.

As former members of the Brown Commission, and as House sponsors of criminal code reform legislation, we share your belief that reform of the federal criminal law is an important task facing the Congress. Efforts to make this legislation more widely acceptable, and thus more likely to achieve eventual passage, certainly must be encouraged. You and your colleagues are to be commended for the enormous headway you have already made in dealing with a number of the more controversial aspects of this legislation. As negotiations are continuing, we would like to indicate our support for your efforts.

There still are several aspects of S. 1 which cause us great concern and it seems most useful at this point to share those concerns with you. While the attached list of suggestions do not cover all of the items with which we have problems, these are the most important and may be helpful to you in your further pursuit of compromise legislation.

We should also note that we have spoken to the various members of the House who would be responsible for guiding the bill through hearing and markup, and it is their estimation that there is not sufficient time remaining in this session to complete House action on the bill. Nevertheless, your efforts in the Senate to achieve needed amendments to the proposed code reform will place us much closer to the goal of eventual recodification. We would appreciate being kept informed of any further progress you might make on this issue.

Sincerely,

ROBERT W. KASTENMEIER.
DON EDWARDS.
ABNER J. MIKVA.

Sec. 511 (Statute of Limitations): A 5 year period of limitations for misdemeanor offenses is excessive. Compare section 701 of the Brown Commission Report (embodied in H.R. 333) (3 years); section 511 of H.R. 12504 (2 years).

Secs. 521-552 (Defenses): Although deletion of all the defenses removes an area of significant controversy, we note that such an approach misses the opportunity to achieve important reforms and bring greater clarity to this area of criminal law.

The recent case of Hampton v. United States, 44 U.S.L.W. 4542 (April 27, 1976), holding that a predisposed defendant cannot claim entrapment even when the government is both the supplier and purchaser of contraband, is but another illustration of the need for reform of this defense.

Sec. 1001 (Attempt): We prefer the "substantial step" formulation contained in both the Brown Commission Report (H.R. 333) and H.R. 12504 to that contained in S. 1. Of equal significance, the language of the Senate Draft Report (p. 172) derived from earlier versions of S. 1 and the Model Penal Code describing conduct deemed sufficient to constitute an attempt is strongly objectionable. Such matters are best left to continued case-by-case development in light of particular facts in individual instances.

Preclusion of the defenses of legal or factual impossibility will also lead to unwarranted results in certain circumstances. See United States v. Hair, 356 F. Supp. 339 (D.D.C. 1973).

Sec. 1002 (Conspiracy): Lon Schwartz, staff director of the Brown Commission, has been highly critical of the S. 1 formulation of the overt act requirement for conspiracy. Compare section 1002 of H.R. 12504 ("substantially tends to effect"). See also the suggested alternative comment in section 1004 of the Brown Commission Report ("substantial step").

We also support abolition of the Pinkerton rule of co-conspirator liability, a position endorsed by both the Brown Commission and the American Bar Association.

Secs. 1111-1112 (Sabotage Offenses): The agreement to eliminate references to "delays or obstructs" is an important and necessary amendment. However, we continue to question whether a "reckless sabotage" offense (section 1112) is necessary or desirable, notwithstanding the argument that this merely preserves existing law. Note that the "reason to believe" phrase of the existing statute is subject to the same conflicting interpretations as is the case with the similar phrase used in current espionage statutes. S. 1 resolves this ambiguity in favor of broader application.

Secs. 1116-1117 (Incitement Offenses): Like section 1831 (Riot), these offenses should be amended to incorporate the Brandenburg definition of incitement. The amendment should be clear in requiring knowledge of the existence of the requisite circumstances, not merely reckless disregard.

In addition, in the sensitive area of aiding mutiny, insubordination or desertion by members of the armed forces, the culpability level should be amended to require specific intent, rather than merely knowing aid.

Sec. 1302 (Obstructing a Government Function by Physical Interference): The problems with this section seem to be of draftsmanship as much as anything else. All agree that there is a legitimate need for an offense to protect government inspectors, federal marshals serving process, and so on from physical obstruction while performing their duties. However, in creating this generic offense, broad language has been used which at least arguably would make it applicable to a wide range of First Amendment related activities (absent a saving Court construction). Consideration should be given to enumerating in the statute the kinds of conduct intended to be covered, and making clear in the Report that which is excluded from this section.

Other Demonstration Offenses: Whether drafting an affirmative defense for peaceful, non-disruptive demonstrations on the grounds of a courthouse will be sufficient to remedy the difficulties with section 1328 (Demonstrating to Influence a Judicial Proceeding) is difficult to evaluate without examining the text.

Limiting section 1863 (Failing to Obey a Public Safety Order) to riots and natural disasters is a desirable amendment, but it seems equally desirable to follow the Brown Commission recommendation that the authority to issue such legally binding orders be limited to supervisory personnel. See section 1804 of H.R. 333.

Section 1861, like all disorderly conduct statutes, presents great difficulty. In attempting to reach a wide variety of disruptive conduct not covered by more specific statutes, disorderly conduct offenses tend to reach the outer limits of constitutional boundaries, both in vagueness and in overinclusiveness.

Two of the remaining subsections of section 1861 continue to pose these problems: (A) "obstructs vehicular or pedestrian traffic, or the use of a public facility" and (a) (4) "engages for no legitimate purpose in any other conduct that creates a hazardous or physically offensive condition." As to the former, many demonstration activities will involve some measure of obstruction of traffic or of use of public facilities. These activities, however, should ordinarily be protected. Yet lying down in a line across a public street goes too far, and may legitimately be subject to criminal sanction. The present statute fails to find a balance. Much the same consideration may apply to (a) (4).

Disorderly conduct is an infraction. Both the Brown Commission Report and H.R. 12504 provide no authorized term of imprisonment for infractions; S. 1 authorizes 5 days. If this offense were reduced to a civil violation handled much the same as a traffic offense, then the threat that unjustified arrests could be used to break-up demonstration activities would be greatly reduced.

Chapter 13 (Perjury Offenses): It has been asserted that section 1343 merely preserves existing law by making false oral or unsworn statements to a law enforcement officer an offense. Yet the Senate Draft Report itself (pp. 397-398) citing Friedman v. United States, 374 F. 2d 363 (8th Cir. 1967), indicates a split of authority over whether present 18 U.S.C. section 1001 covers such statements. The Brown Commission Report (section 1354) sharply limited criminalization of false oral statements to "false alarms" and those where another person is intentionally falsely implicated in crime. The American Bar Association recommendation goes even further and supports deletion of the oral statement provision. H.R. 12504 contains no provision punishing false oral statements.

Both H.R. 333 and H.R. 12504 take a more limited approach to abrogating the two-witness rule in perjury prosecutions than does S.1. See section 1351(2) of H.R. 333 and section 1347(b) of H.R. 12504.

Both the Brown Commission Report and H.R. 12504 require for conviction of perjury that the defendant did not believe his statement to be true. S. 1 merely requires that the defendant be reckless (under an objective standard) with regard to the falsity of the statement.

Chapter 18 (Marijuana): In view of the agreement to reduce the penalties for possession of small amounts of marijuana (and to provide no federal penalty for possession of very small amounts), we question whether a 1 year penalty for gratuitous transfers of small amounts of marijuana and a 7 year penalty for sales of large amounts is justifiable. (Section 1812). Also, the jurisdiction provision should be amended to provide no federal penalty in those states that act to decriminalize marijuana entirely.

Sec. 1842 (Obscenity): We support your original proposal that there be no federal obscenity offense.

However, if this cannot be agreed to, at the very least the venue provisions (section 3311) should be amended so that publishers, filmmakers and others cannot be harassed by multiple prosecutions in every district through which the material has passed in the mails or otherwise. The Senate Draft Report (p. 863) endorses this undesirable practice.

Sentencing: We understand that six general principles for redrafting the entire federal sentencing system have been indicated.

Incorporating a sentencing guideline represents a fundamental shift in approach to the subject of sentencing. This attempt to reduce judicial discretion may be desirable, but it necessarily calls for a review of the entire process. For example, while the substance of the Parole Reform Act is to be included in S. 1, the desire to remove discretion from the system would require substantial change in the parole provisions as well. Indeed, the logical extension of the guideline approach calls for abolition of the parole system in its entirety.

We raise these points not to indicate our disapproval of the general approach you are following, but merely to note that such a substantial reform of the sentencing process will call for the most careful scrutiny, and until more of the details have been worked out, it is impossible for us to evaluate these proposals properly.

Secs. 3611-3617 (Civil Commitment) : Objections have been raised to expanding federal authority in this area, and to the details of the proposals in S. 1. We commend to your attention several procedural changes contained in H.R. 12504, including composition of the examining panel of psychiatrists, videotaping of evaluative conferences, and frequency of reports from the hospital staff to the committing authority.

As to incompetency to stand trial, time limits for duration of commitment and dismissal of charges must be provided (though they need not necessarily be the same time limit).

Sec. 3715 (Admissibility of Evidence at Sentencing) : The new Federal Rules of Evidence, in Rule 1101(d)(3), already provides that the Rules do not apply to sentencing proceedings. Thus, if this section is not intended to undermine the Fourth Amendment's exclusionary rule, it should be deleted as surplusage.

---

ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE OF THE U.S. COURTS,
SUPREME COURT BUILDING,
Washington, D.C., March 31, 1977.

HON. JOHN L. McCLELLAN,
U.S. Senate, Dirksen Senate Office Bldg., Washington, D.C.

Attention: Mr. Paul Summitt

Re Criminal Code Recodification Bill

DEAR SENATOR McCLELLAN: In reference to a telephone conversation Mr. Judd Kutcher of my staff had with Mr. Paul Summitt of the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures of the Senate Judiciary Committee concerning chapter 36, "Disposition of Juvenile or Incompetent Offenders." I would like to offer the following observations on that subject. One of the functions of this office is to provide legal advice to United States District Judges, United States Magistrates, and United States Probation Officers relative to the legal construction of federal statutes, including construction of the intended practical application of the Juvenile Delinquency Act of 1974. In performing that function, it appeared to me that several aspects of that Act required clarification. The present draft of §§ 3601-3606 addresses some of these subjects; however, it appears that further elucidation regarding some important items critical to the practical application of the Act would be helpful.

First, under F.R. Crim. P. 54(b)(5), the rules of criminal procedure only apply to juvenile delinquency proceedings so far as they are consistent with that chapter. It would be helpful if chapter 36 could affirmatively indicate any rule not intended to apply (for example, chapter 36 is silent as to the application of the rules relating to arrest warrant, initial appearance, preliminary hearing, etc.) or if the statement in Rule 54(b)(5) were reiterated in chapter 36.

Second, this office has taken the view that a fine may not be imposed as part of a juvenile's disposition or as a condition of probation since § 5037 of title 18 is silent on that subject and imposition of a fine would appear to constitute a combination of rehabilitation treatment and retributive punishment inconsistent with the purpose of the Juvenile Act. An express reference in § 3603(e) regarding this issue and the related issue of restitution could clarify this question, such as the addition of the following sentence:

"No fine, other than a restitution, may be imposed either as a juvenile's sentence, part of his sentence, or as a condition of his probation."

Third, it is the opinion of this office that a juvenile charged with an act of juvenile delinquency who is released on bail pending the disposition of that charge and jumps bail is not subject to prosecution under § 3150 of title 18, which by its terms only applies to persons released in connection with a charge of felony or misdemeanor. This problem could be remedied if proposed § 1312 included the phrase: "or if the person was released in connection with a charge of juvenile delinquency;"

Fourth, this office has been presented with numerous questions regarding the practical application of nondisclosure of juvenile records. In construing § 5038 of title 18, I have concluded that: (1) § 5038 is remedial and should be applied retroactively; (2) the exceptions to nondisclosure should apply to any release of juvenile information collected during the "safeguarding" stage of the juvenile proceeding as well as to sealed records; (3) the term "juvenile proceeding" encompasses the time from the juvenile's arrest until the completion of his final discharge or dismissal—thus all his records during that time are "safeguarded" until his dismissal or discharge, at which time the records are "sealed;" (4) § 5038 permits the disclosure of favorable information in a juvenile's records where a juvenile requests such release and expressly consents to the disclosure;<sup>1</sup> and (5) authorizes the sentencing court to order a juvenile's records sealed, and in conjunction with such an order, to instruct the clerk of the court to collect all court records, including records in the custody of employees of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts and the United States Probation Office, for the purpose of sealing the juvenile's records, and as to information and records relating to a juvenile proceeding prepared in the discharge of an official duty of an employee of other governmental agencies, instruct the clerk of the court to provide the appropriate agencies with a copy of the sentencing court's sealing order; and (6) a juvenile may not deny his juvenile arrest, information, or adjudication without being subject to possible prosecution for perjury or false statement.

As regards the first four juvenile record questions, a simple reference would suffice to clarify the intended application of § 3605. As to court procedure, the following statement, adapted from the recommendations of the Judicial Conference of the United States in reference to § 844(b) (1) of title 21, would be helpful:

"The sentencing court must ensure that all records and information pertaining to a juvenile proceeding, from the time of a juvenile's arrest until his dismissal or discharge, be safeguarded. Upon a dismissal or discharge, the sentencing court shall order all records and information pertaining to his juvenile proceeding be sealed, and instruct the clerk of the court to collect and seal all court records and provide other government agencies with a copy of the seal order so that they may seal all records or information in their custody pertaining to his juvenile proceeding."<sup>2</sup>

The above described procedure for accomplishing the sealing of a juvenile's records would seem imperative if such records are to be effectively removed from access to achieve the purpose of giving the juvenile a second chance free of the taint of the juvenile proceeding.

Finally, as regards whether a juvenile can legally give a negative response to a question concerning his juvenile proceeding, a negative response would comport with intent of § 5038 and the proposed § 3605, yet the present language used in those sections fails to explicitly provide this right, as Congress did, by contrast, in § 844(b) (2) of title 21. Accordingly, I would recommend that a statement similar to the provisions of § 844(b) (2) be added to § 3605:

"no person found to have committed an act of juvenile delinquency shall be found thereafter under any provision of any law to be guilty of perjury or otherwise giving a false statement by reason of his failure to recite or acknowledge his arrest, information, or adjudication in response to any inquiry made to him for such a purpose."

I very much appreciate the opportunity to express the views of my office on this important legislation and hope my comments prove helpful to you.

Sincerely,

CARL H. IMLAY,
General Counsel.

<sup>1</sup> A juvenile's request for such information would likely arise in the context of a probation officer's efforts to place him in a job. By virtue of his title, the probation officer would alert the potential employer that the juvenile was involved in some judicial proceeding, yet by a strict application of § 5038, the probation officer would be precluded from responding in any way to the employer's inquiry into the nature of the juvenile's offense and behavior—an inquiry which must be expected in that situation. In such circumstances the juvenile, with counsel, should be able to waive the restrictions of § 5038 with respect to favorable information. Otherwise the practical application of § 5038 would ensure the failure to secure the juvenile a job, rather than achieving the section's intended purpose of helping him secure a job.

<sup>2</sup> Adapted from a Judicial Conference standard order. See Proceedings of the Judicial Conference (1973), pp. 14-15.

JULY 13, 1977.

HON. JOHN L. McCLELLAN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures, U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR McCLELLAN: As individuals interested in the sentencing and correctional process, we would like to take this opportunity to express our views on certain provisions of the proposed federal criminal law revision, S. 1437.

We strongly favor the main sentencing provisions of S. 1437. The creation of a commission to set guidelines for judicial sentencing decisions will do much to alleviate disparity, and bring order and rationality to the present chaos.

We have, however, certain reservations about the bill's provisions concerning parole, which we would like to bring to your attention. The bill goes far towards authorizing the near-eclipse of parole—by permitting the Sentencing Commission to prescribe periods of parole ineligibility of up to nine-tenths of the sentence. It also eliminates the Parole Commission's power to set release guidelines, transferring those to the new Sentencing Commission.

We share the skepticism that has been expressed in many quarters about the traditional rehabilitative rationale for parole. However, this is not the only function that can be served by a parole authority. Parole plays a critical role in the actual operation of the sentencing system. Judges are accustomed to imposing lengthy sentences which could not possibly be carried out given the limitations of prison space and which would be disproportionately severe were they carried out. It has been a practical function of the parole board to scale down the actual duration of confinement to more manageable levels. It may be desirable for the Parole Commission, a small, compact, and specialized body to continue its practical function of reducing undue disparity in the actual length of prison terms. Parole also performs a miscellany of other important functions, such as providing incentives for good behavior in prison. Unless care is taken, therefore, the precipitate abolition or downgrading of parole could have unintended effects that could seriously diminish the usefulness of the reform you are undertaking.

Even omitting any change in the status of parole, the Sentencing Commission will face formidable tasks. It must develop guidelines on the critical choice of whether to send the offender to prison or impose a lesser sentence such as probation. The latter is an exclusively judicial choice for which no standards whatever now exist. In developing its guidelines, the Commission must decide how broad or narrow the limits of judicial discretion should be. It must address the perplexing question of how its guidelines are likely to affect and be affected by prosecutorial decisions. It must develop methods of monitoring judges' decisions, to see whether the standards are being complied with. Given these tasks, we do not see how a Commission having human limits of energy and time can also, at the outset, regulate the standards for parole release and consider fundamental changes in the parole system.

For several years, the U.S. Parole Commission has been continually developing and revising guidelines governing its parole release decisions. While we might quarrel with some of the details of the guidelines, they do constitute a substantial step towards structuring the discretion to release prisoners. If the Parole Commission's standard-setting function is transferred immediately to the Sentencing Commission during the latter's difficult initial stages of organization, that function might be performed less well.

We therefore think it preferable at present to reduce the provision on parole ineligibility to a maximum of not more than one-third of the sentence imposed, and continue to have the Parole Commission set the parole release guidelines. This will allow the Sentencing Commission to get organized and issue its guidelines for sentencing judges; and it will allow Congress, scholars and the public to look at the Commission's handiwork. It will also allow more time and a more informed setting to debate the question of parole abolition and its collateral consequences. In the meantime, to ensure that the Parole Commission and Sentencing Commission adopt guidelines that are consistent, the statute should require the two bodies to consult with one another.

On a different issue, we also have equally serious reservations about S. 1437's proposed standards for appellate sentencing review. Restricting appeals to sentences outside the guidelines found by the sentencing judge to be applicable (§ 3725) may eliminate the opportunity to hear appeals based upon an incorrect judicial application of the guidelines. Further, conditioning appellate relief on a finding that a sentence outside the guidelines is 'clearly unreasonable' may make it so difficult to overturn a sentence as to substantially reduce the ability of the guidelines to structure discretion and promote equity.

Yours sincerely,

PETER B. HOFFMAN,
Director of Research, U.S. Parole Commission.

MORRIS E. LASKER,
Judge, U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York.

LESLIE T. WILKINS,
Professor of Criminal Justice, School of Criminal Justice, State University of New York at Albany.

DONALD J. NEWMAN,
Acting Dean and Professor, School of Criminal Justice, State University of New York at Albany.

MICHAEL TONRY,
Assistant Professor, University of Maryland Law School.

ANDREW VON HIRSCH,
Associate Professor, Graduate School of Criminal Justice, Rutgers University.

FRANKLIN E. ZIMRING,
Professor of Law, University of Chicago Law School.

DON M. GOTTFREDSON,
Dean and Professor, Graduate School of Criminal Justice, Rutgers University.

---

STATEMENT OF PROF. HEATHCOTE W. WALES

Section 3616 and 3616 exacerbate the existing constitutional infirmities of 18 U.S.C. §§ 4246-48 by expanding federal power to preventively detain the mentally ill. The sections isolate three classes of persons for whom no further criminal proceedings or confinement are justifiable—persons acquitted by reason of insanity, persons deemed unlikely ever to be competent to stand trial,<sup>1</sup> and federal prisoners whose sentences have expired—and subject them to federal civil commitment proceedings if they are believed mentally ill and dangerous. Commitment under these provisions if indefinite.

Federal power to civilly commit is expanded in three ways. First, § 3613 creates federal power over those acquitted by reason of insanity, a power previously thought not to exist.<sup>2</sup> Second, §§ 3613 and 3616 expand the concept of dangerousness to include danger to state as well as federal interests.<sup>3</sup> Third, both new sections would pre-empt state law by requiring federal civil commitment regardless of state willingness to accept jurisdiction over the person committed.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Sections 3611(d) and 3616(a) and the case upon which they are based, Jackson v. Indiana, 406 U.S. 715 (1972), fail to guide the courts and prosecutors as to when criminal charges should be dropped against a person deemed unlikely ever to be competent to stand trial. Thus, a portion of this class of committable persons may technically still be within the criminal jurisdiction of the United States, although the clear spirit of §§ 3611(d) and 3616(a) is to apply only to those who will never be prosecuted.

The Supreme Court has clearly invited lower court and legislative guidance on the issue of when charges against such persons should be dropped. 406 U.S. at 740. One should hope Congress might address itself to this problem when it considers amendments to § 3611, insofar as it may be better situated than the courts to establish a coherent policy on the issue.

<sup>2</sup> A person is eligible for commitment if he is "presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of serious bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another." §§ 3613, 3616. This paper will continue to use the shorthand phrase "mentally ill and dangerous" to refer to the above-quoted language.

<sup>3</sup> See note 19 infra.

<sup>4</sup> See note 21 infra.

<sup>5</sup> The extent to which the new law would pre-empt state civil commitment authority may be less under § 3616 than under § 3613. Under § 3616(a), the director of a facility in which the relevant classes of persons are confined is directed to ascertain the willingness of the state of domicile to hospitalize the person before triggering federal civil commitment. However, there is no mechanism in the statute to enforce this obligation; the court conducting the federal commitment hearing is not empowered to review the director's efforts to discharge this duty. § 3616(d). See note 22 infra; notes 55-56 infra and accompanying text. See also note 45 infra.

At the outset, any effort to legislate federal civil commitment authority over the mentally ill is caught between two competing constitutional limitations of power. On the one hand, civil commitment authority in general is a power thought to be reserved to the states. Confinement and treatment of the mentally ill is a federal matter only insofar as it is necessary and proper to the exercise of some other federal power—here the power to legislate federal criminal law.<sup>6</sup> On the other hand, considerations of due process and the prohibition on cruel and unusual punishment require that civil commitment of the mentally ill be dissociated from governmental exercise of its criminal law powers.

Civil commitment, historically a coloidal mix of police and parens patriae powers, is designed to be non-punitive in nature. Although it seeks to achieve some of the goals of punishment, notably restraint and rehabilitation, civil commitment is not designed to achieve retribution or deterrence and does not constitute punishment for constitutional purposes<sup>7</sup> unless conducted without treatment.<sup>8</sup> Nor is civil commitment based on prior criminal conduct; rather it follows from a prediction of future behavior which may or may not be based on prior antisocial acts.<sup>9</sup>

The fact that a mentally ill person originally came to the attention of the authorities through the criminal justice system does not permit any different type of commitment than if there had been no criminal charge. Thus, in Baxstrom v. Herold,<sup>10</sup> the Supreme Court held that a state prisoner was denied equal protection when he was committed at the end of his prison term to a facility not used for civilly committed persons generally and when he was not afforded procedural rights accorded in ordinary civil commitments. The Court found the following principle controlling: "there is no conceivable basis for distinguishing the commitment of a person who is nearing the end of a prison term from all other civil commitments."<sup>11</sup>

The Baxstrom principle was extended to commitment of persons acquitted by reason of insanity in Bolton v. Harris,<sup>12</sup> and to persons found unlikely ever to be competent to stand trial in Jackson v. Indiana.<sup>13</sup> In Jackson, the Court reasoned:

"If criminal conviction and imposition of sentence are insufficient to justify less procedural and substantive protection against indefinite commitment than that generally available to all others, the mere filing of criminal charges surely cannot suffice."<sup>14</sup>

In short, the only raison d'être for the presence of provisions like §§ 3613 and 3616 in a federal criminal code is that the classes of persons affected come to the attention of federal authorities in the course of the administration of federal criminal laws. Yet the Baxstrom principle requires that such persons be treated equally under the law of civil commitment with those not charged with crime. In the federal context, the applicable law of civil commitment should be that of the state of the prisoner-patient's domicile. Section A of this paper argues that §§ 3613 and 3616 should be replaced with a simple provision allowing for transfer of the persons covered to their state of domicile.<sup>15</sup> Section B suggests how §§ 3613 and 3616 might be amended to render them more palatable, constitutionally and practically, should Congress reject the argument in Section A.

A. THE FEDERALISM OBJECTION TO §§ 3613 AND 3616

The courts and Congress have traditionally assumed that the care and treatment of the mentally ill was the province of the states, beyond the power of

<sup>6</sup> See notes 17–27 infra and accompanying text.

<sup>7</sup> See Robinson v. California, 370 U.S. 660 (1962).

<sup>8</sup> See authorities cited note 40 infra.

<sup>9</sup> Thus, for example, one who is charged with disrupting a judicial proceeding (§ 1334) could be committed on the basis of expert testimony that he is a compulsive thief and likely to commit theft offenses in the future.

<sup>10</sup> 383 U.S. 107 (1966).

<sup>11</sup> Id. at 111–12.

<sup>12</sup> 395 F. 2d 642 (D.C. Cir. 1968). Bolton is cited with approval in Jackson v. Indiana, 406 U.S. 715 (1972). Accord, Reynolds v. Neill, 381 F. Supp. 1374 (N.D. Tex. 1974), vacated sub nom. Sheldon v. Reynolds, 422 U.S. 1050 (1975); State v. Clemons, 110 Ariz. 79, 515 P. 2d 324 (1973); Wilson v. State, 256 Ind. 375, 287 N.E. 2d 875 (1972); People v. McQuillen, 392 Mich. 411, 211 N.W. 2d 569 (1974). But see United States v. Ecker, 543 F. 2d 178 (D.C. Cir. 1976).

<sup>13</sup> 406 U.S. 715 (1972). See also Humphrey v. Cody, 405 U.S. 504 (1972).

<sup>14</sup> 406 U.S. at 724.

<sup>15</sup> The provision would resemble § 3616(f) but would be broadened to cover the three classes of persons which §§ 3613 and 3616 make eligible for federal commitment. See note 26 infra.

Congress under Article I, section 8, clause 18. Legislative exceptions to this rule generally have been confined to the care and treatment of those currently within the criminal jurisdiction of the United States—those awaiting federal criminal trials and those serving federal criminal sentences.<sup>16</sup> Current developments in the treatment of the mentally ill and in the state law of civil commitment greatly strengthen the policy reasons for maintaining the traditional state-federal balance. The first alternative for Congress then should be simply to eliminate §§ 3613 and 3616 and replace them with a simple provision for transferring the persons covered to the relevant state authorities for civil commitment or release, in accordance with state law.

1. The constitutional issue

The traditional view of the state-federal division of power over civil commitment has been stated by the courts as follows:

"While the care of insane persons is essentially the function of the states in their sovereign capacity as parens patriae, and while the federal government has neither constitutional nor inherent power to enter the general field of lunacy, Congress has the power to make provision for the proper care and treatment of persons who become temporarily insane while in custody of the United States awaiting trial upon criminal charges, and to make provision for the care and treatment of federal prisoners who become mentally incompetent during their incarceration after conviction."<sup>17</sup>

Congress had a similarly restrained view of federal power when, in 1949, it enacted 18 U.S.C. §§ 4241-48, the statute which chapter 36, subchapter B, of S. 1437 would supercede. The report of the Committee of the Judicial Conference upon which the 1949 statute was based stated:

"If the accused's mental disability appears not to be a transitory condition, but in all likelihood he will, because of his insanity, never be brought to trial, it would seem that as a general rule the federal government should not assume responsibility for his hospitalization merely because he has been accused (but not convicted) of a federal crime. Normally such a person should be turned over to the state of his domicile to be confined in a state mental hospital if hospitalization is called for."<sup>18</sup>

To ensure the appropriate state-federal balance, Congress limited federal civil commitment power in several significant ways. First, the statute made no provision for those acquitted by reason of insanity, apparently because the federal government was thought to be without power once an individual was acquitted of federal charges.<sup>19</sup> Second, federal commitment was permitted only where the individual was found to be mentally ill and a danger to "the officers, the property, or other interests of the United States."<sup>20</sup> This clause has been interpreted to require a showing of danger to federally protected interests, as distinct from purely state criminal law concerns.<sup>21</sup> Third, federal authorities

<sup>16</sup> 18 U.S.C. §§ 4247-48 go beyond the general rule, permitting commitment of mentally ill and dangerous federal prisoners whose sentences have expired. This authority, however, has rarely if ever been used. See note 43 infra.

<sup>17</sup> Wells, by Gillig v. Attorney General, 201 F. 2d 556, 559 (10th Cir. 1953), quoted in Higgins v. United States, 205 F. 2d 650, 653 (9th Cir. 1953).

<sup>18</sup> Report of Committee to Study Treatment Accorded by Federal Courts to Insane Persons Charged With Crime, July 30, 1945, at 7, quoted in Greenwood v. United States, 350 U.S. 366, 373 (1956).

<sup>19</sup> See Dixon v. Steele, 104 F. Supp. 904, 912-13 (W.D. Mo. 1952). The legislative history of §§ 4241-48 is silent on this point. The practice has been to refer such individuals to state authorities for hospitalization if state law so required.

A subsequent effort to legislate federal civil commitment power over insanity acquittees—S. 3689, 89th Cong., 2d sess. (1966), introduced by the late Senator Kennedy of New York, 112 Cong. Rec. 18326 (Aug. 4, 1966)—failed to pass out of committee.

<sup>20</sup> 18 U.S.C. § 4247.

<sup>21</sup> See Royal v. United States, 274 F. 2d 846, 852-53 (10th Cir., 1960). The Royal distinction and the related language from 18 U.S.C. § 4247 is erased by §§ 3613 and 3616 of S. 1437.

A predecessor to § 3613, introduced by the late Senator Kennedy of New York in 1966, note 19 supra, cited the Royal distinction with approval, 112 Cong. Rec. 18325 (Aug. 4, 1966), and incorporated it into the statutory language. Under subsection (b) of that bill, only those insanity acquittees evidencing a danger to "the officers, property, or other interests of the United States" would be federally committed, the remainder to be released to their state of legal residence. Under subsection (c) persons federally committed who were still dangerous to themselves or others generally, but no longer dangerous to any identifiable federal interest, were to be released to their state of legal residence, if known, or, in the alternative, to the state in which they had originally been tried.

were to institute federal commitment proceedings only in cases where no state would assume jurisdiction over the individual.<sup>22</sup>

Admittedly, the 1949 statute was not free from federalism objections. Although federal power to hospitalize those serving federal prison sentences seemed clear, no court has ever ruled on the constitutionality of federal commitment of persons whose prison terms have expired under 18 U.S.C. §§ 4247-48.<sup>23</sup> Judicial attention has been limited to whether federal power could properly be extended to federal commitment of those incompetent to stand trial. Whereas the courts agreed that temporary federal commitment was permissible as necessary and proper to the exercise of federal criminal jurisdiction, several courts ruled that where incompetency was permanent with no hope of trial ever occurring, federal authorities were required to release the defendant even if no state would accept jurisdiction over him.<sup>24</sup> The issue reached the Supreme Court in Greenwood v. United States,<sup>25</sup> where the Court held that more than temporary commitment was constitutional under the necessary and proper clause of Article I, section 8, clause 18, so long as federal authorities retained criminal jurisdiction over the defendant through a valid pending indictment.<sup>26</sup> The Court rejected the distinction made by lower courts between temporary and permanent incompetence because of "the uncertainty of diagnosis in this field and the tentativeness of professional judgment. . . . Certainly, denial of constitutional power of commitment to Congress in dealing with a situation like this ought not to rest on dogmatic adherence to one view or another on controversial psychiatric issues."<sup>27</sup>

The Court's narrow holding in Greenwood avoided a series of other constitutional questions in the case. The due process, equal protection and speedy trial clauses of the Constitution all suggest limitations on the duration of the commitment upheld in Greenwood and on the duration of the indictment. In Jackson v. Indiana, the court gave preliminary answers to these questions, holding that the pendency of charges empowered the state to detain one deemed incompetent to stand trial for only "the reasonable period of time necessary to determine whether there is a substantial probability that he will attain that capacity in the foreseeable future."<sup>28</sup> If the defendant is unlikely to become competent within that period, he must be released unless subject to the same civil commitment provisions as other citizens not charged with crime. The fact that he has once been charged with crime is no longer a relevant factor in his status before the law. A similar analysis had previously been applied to prisoners whose sentences had expired<sup>29</sup> and persons acquitted by reason of insanity.<sup>30</sup>

<sup>22</sup> See Report, supra note 8, at 7-9, citing examples; 2 U.S. Code Cong. Serv., 81st Cong., 1st sess. (1949), at 1929.

Although the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in one case has read this provision to confer federal power to commit where a state amidst jurisdiction over an individual, but determines that he must be released under state law, Greenwood v. United States, 219 F. 2d 376 (8th Cir. 1955), aff'd, 350 U.S. 366 (1956), most courts seem to follow the practice that if the state of domicile admits jurisdiction, but declines to commit pursuant to state law, the individual must be released. See, e.g., United States v. Walker, 335 F. Supp. 705 (N.D. Cal. 1971); Cook v. Ciccone, 312 F. Supp. 822 (W.D. Mo. 1970); United States v. Jackson, 306 F. Supp. 4 (N.D. Cal. 1969). The Supreme Court, in affirming Greenwood, supra, did not reach this issue. See notes 25-27 infra and accompanying text. Sections 3613 and 3616 of S. 1437 would clearly require federal commitment for this situation. See Staff of Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 93d Cong., 2d sess., Report on Criminal Justice Codifications, Revision, and Reform Act of 1974, at 1010, 1017 (Comm. Print 1974) [hereinafter cited as Senate Comm. Print].

<sup>23</sup> At least since 1965, the Bureau of Prisons has not sought federal commitment of any prisoner whose prison term has expired. Any persons who might have been eligible for such commitment under 18 U.S.C. §§ 4247 and 4248 have been turned over to state authorities. See note 43 infra. The disuse of these provisions is particularly striking since they were originally included in the 1949 legislation at the behest of the Director of the Bureau of Prisons. See Hearings on S. 850 Before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, 80th Cong., 2d sess., at 7 (1948).

<sup>24</sup> See, e.g., Higgins v. United States, 205 F. 2d 650 (9th Cir. 1953); Wells, by Gillig v. Attorney General, 201 F. 2d 556 (10th Cir. 1953); Edwards v. Steele, 112 F. Supp. 382 (W.D. Mo. 1952); Dixon v. Steele, 104 F. Supp. 904 (W.D. Mo. 1952).

<sup>25</sup> 305 U.S. 366 (1956).

<sup>26</sup> At a minimum, Greenwood seems to require constitutionally the approach taken by the draftsmen of S. 1437 in § 3616(f) (persons incompetent to stand trial whose federal charges are dismissed for reasons unrelated to mental condition must be released to their state of domicile). Nor does Greenwood suggest why persons incompetent to stand trial whose federal charges are dismissed for reasons related to their mental conditions (§§ 3611(d) and 3616(a)) should be treated any differently.

<sup>27</sup> 350 U.S. at 375-76.

<sup>28</sup> 406 U.S. 715, 738 (1972).

<sup>29</sup> Baxstrom v. Herold, 383 U.S. 107 (1966).

<sup>30</sup> See cases cited at note 12 supra. See also notes 10-14 supra and accompanying text.

Reading the due process and equal protection limitations of Jackson together with the Greenwood reading of the scope of the necessary and proper clause suggests that when the United States loses criminal jurisdiction over an individual, it loses the auxiliary power to hospitalize him as well. Unless and until Congress determines in a manner consistent with Article I, section 8, that it has general parens patriae authority for the care and treatment of the mentally disabled, such persons should be left to the operation of state civil commitment laws and institutions.<sup>31</sup> This analysis includes all classes of persons covered under §§ 3613 and 3616 of S. 1437, except those incompetent to stand trial against whom federal charges are still pending.<sup>32</sup>

The policy issue

The expansion of federal civil commitment power proposed by §§ 3613 and 3616 comes at a time when Congress should be contracting federal authority over the care and treatment of the mentally disabled. Even the civil commitment authority claimed by the 1949 statute appears unwise in light of intervening developments in medicine and law concerning the mentally disabled.

In 1949, the principal "treatment" of the severely mentally disabled and dangerous was extended hospitalization. Isolation of the patient from the stresses of the community, shock treatments, and marginal efforts at psychotherapy were the therapeutic embellishments to what was essentially a warehousing program to protect the community.<sup>33</sup> State mental hospitals were far more overcrowded and understaffed than they are today. As a result, state mental health systems were especially reluctant to assume the burden of care for prisoners and persons incompetent to stand trial in the federal system.

The revolution in modern psychiatric treatment stems largely from discoveries of major psychotropic medications during the late 1940's and early 1950's. The new drugs enabled a dramatic reduction in the average period of hospitalization and a movement towards community mental health.<sup>34</sup> Spurred on by federal money from the Community Mental Health Centers Act of 1963,<sup>35</sup> a vast expansion of outpatient services has occurred at the state and local level over the past twenty years.<sup>36</sup> At the same time research showed, contrary to earlier theories of mental health care, that separation of the patient from the family and community in which stresses had arisen and the effects of institutionalization caused patients to get sicker.<sup>37</sup> Indeed, post-hospital studies of patients hospitalized for varying periods of time have found that the patient's ability to function in the community is negatively correlated with length of stay in the hospital.<sup>38</sup>

Hence, to be effective, hospitalization must be brief and must be conducted in a setting where outpatient programs, the family, and community resources can be involved in the overall treatment program. Lengthy hospitalization in places remote from the patient's community may keep the mentally disabled off the streets, but is not conducive to amelioration of their ability to function normally in society.

What good medical policy dictates, the courts are beginning to require as a constitutional matter through the twin doctrines of right to treatment and least

<sup>31</sup> Put differently, enactment of §§ 3613 and 3616 would establish a significant Congressional precedent for the proposition that Congress does in fact possess such a generalized parens patriae authority pursuant to Art. I, § 8, cl. 18. The dangers to civil liberties and to principles of federalism which might ensue may seem speculative to some, but, to this writer at least, should be addressed by the Congress and thought through with utmost seriousness.

<sup>32</sup> See note 1 supra.

<sup>33</sup> See Deutsch, The Mentally Ill in America 446-57 (1949).

<sup>34</sup> "The drug revolution has probably had a more profound effect on the mental hospital as an institution and as part of a community care program than all other changes combined." B. Passamanick, F. Scarpitti, & S. Dinitz, Schizophrenics in the Community 17 (1967). See also, Englehardt, Freedman, Glick, Hankoff, Mann & Margolis, Prevention of Psychiatric Hospitalization With Use of Psychopharmacological Agents, 173 J. A.M.A. 147 (1960) M. Greenblatt, R. Moore, R. Albert & M. Solomon, The Prevention of Hospitalization: Treatment Without Admission for Psychiatric Patients (1963).

<sup>35</sup> Pub. L. No. 88-164, tit. II, 77 Stat. 290, as amended, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2681-87 (1970).

<sup>36</sup> See C. Taube, Distribution of Patient Care Episodes in Mental Health Facilities, 1969, Statistical Note 58, Survey and Reports Section, National Institute of Mental Health (1972); C. Taube, Changes in the Distribution of Patient Care Episodes—1955-1968—By Type of Facility, Statistical Note 23, Survey and Reports Section, National Institute of Mental Health (1970).

<sup>37</sup> See, e.g., E. Goffman, Asylums (1961); Mendel, On the Abolition of the Mental Hospital, in Comprehensive Mental Health: The Challenge of Evaluation (L. Roberts, N. Greenfield & M. Miller ed. 1968).

<sup>38</sup> Mendel, Brief Hospitalization Techniques, 6 Current Psychiatric Therapies 310 (1966).

restrictive alternative. Although the Supreme Court has not yet ruled on whether a right to treatment exists for persons deemed mentally ill and dangerous,<sup>39</sup> several lower courts have found such a right to exist<sup>40</sup> to avoid the constitutionally repugnant prospect of detaining a person solely to prevent future criminality.<sup>41</sup> The least restrictive alternative doctrine goes toward balancing the patient's needs for particular treatment modalities against his due process right to liberty. Thus a patient is entitled to the minimum intrusion on his liberty consistent with medical needs in conducting treatment and controlling any danger the patient presents toward others.<sup>42</sup> These two emerging constitutional doctrines then, combined with modern practices and techniques of treatment of the mentally disabled, render untenable the indefinite total hospitalization of patients in federal facilities located far from the patients' communities and associated outpatient services.

Finally, the Attorney General, to whose custody §§ 3613 and 3616 would commit patients, currently has no medical facilities under his control in which to place the infinitesimal number of patients he is likely to receive under these provisions.<sup>43</sup> Although Veterans Administration hospitals may take some of these patients, their current practice is not to accept such patients unless charges have been dropped and the Attorney General has relinquished all authority over the individual. Medical facilities under the Bureau of Prisons could not be used for civilly committed patients without creating serious constitutional difficulties.<sup>44</sup> Contracting out such patients to state medical facilities pursuant to § 3617(h) (1) presents the most ludicrous alternative of all. The Attorney General would only be saddled with such patients in the event that the state of the patient's domicile refuses to take responsibility for the patient. But what state administrator would accept such responsibility if he knew the Attorney General's only other alternative was to pay the state to take the patient?<sup>45</sup>

<sup>39</sup> See generally O'Connor v. Donaldson, 422 U.S. 563 (1975).

<sup>40</sup> See, e.g., Wyatt v. Aderholt, 503 F. 2d 1305 (5th Cir. 1974); Rouse v. Cameron, 373 F. 2d 451 (D.C. Cir. 1966); Stachulak v. Coughlin, 364 F. Supp. 686 (N.D. Ill. 1973); Nason v. Bridgewater, 353 Mass. 604, 233 N.E. 2d 908 (1968). See generally, Developments, Civil Commitment of the Mentally Ill, 87 Harv. L. Rev. 1190, 1316-33 (1974).

<sup>41</sup> See In Re Williams, 157 F. Supp. 871 (D.D.C. 1958), aff'd 252 F. 2d 629 (D.C. Cir. 1958).

<sup>42</sup> See, e.g., Covington v. Harris, 419 F. 2d 617 (D.C. Cir. 1969); Dixon v. Attorney General, 325 F. Supp. 966 (M.D. Pa. 1971). For a comprehensive treatment of the doctrine as applied to the mentally disabled, see Chambers, Alternatives to Civil Commitment of the Mentally Ill: Practical Guides and Constitutional Imperatives, 70 Mich. L. Rev. 1107 (1972). See also Developments, supra note 40, at 1245-53.

<sup>43</sup> In the years 1965-74, a total of 176 persons have undergone the commitment procedures of 18 U.S.C. § 4248 (the current analogue to § 3616 of S. 1437), an average of 17.6 per year. The great majority of these have been referred to state hospitals for commitment pursuant to state laws. A few have gone to private hospitals and the remainder have been placed in Veterans Administration hospitals. All 176 were persons incompetent to stand trial. For at least the period 1965 to present, no prisoner whose sentence has expired has undergone § 4248 proceedings. Conversation with Dr. Colla Frank, Bureau of Prisons, July 9, 1975. These statistics dramatically undercut the conclusory statements based on anecdotal evidence in Tydings, A Federal Verdict of Not Guilty by Reason of Insanity and a Subsequent Commitment Procedure, 27 Md. L. Rev. 131, 133-34 (1968), cited in Senate Comm. Print at 1006, n. 33.

Although the numbers may increase slightly with the addition of those acquitted by reason of insanity (§ 3613), the increase should be insubstantial. Data collected in the District of Columbia under the operation of the Durham rule showed insanity acquittals occurring in 2 percent of all cases terminated. United States v. Brawner, 471 F. 2d 969, 989 (D.C. Cir. 1972).

<sup>44</sup> See, e.g., People v. Feagley, 14 Cal. 3d 338, 535 P. 2d 373, 121 Cal. Rptr. 509 (1975); Kesselbrenner v. Anonymous, 33 N.Y. 2d 161, 305 N.E. 2d 903, 350 N.Y.S. 2d 889 (1973); In Re Maddox, 351 Mich. 358, 88 N.W. 2d 470 (1958).

The fact that §§ 3613 and 3616 commit patients to the custody of the Attorney General, rather than to some department concerned with mental health care, may in itself raise constitutional doubts about these provisions. Compare the proposed legislation cited in note 19 supra (commitment of patients to Surgeon-General). Cf. Child Labor Tax Case, 259 U.S. 20, 37 (1922).

<sup>45</sup> Under this alternative, there is also the prospect that a patient will be treated with other state-committed patients who are hospitalized under narrower commitment standards than the federal patient. For example, many states do not permit indefinite commitments. Others require a higher standard of proof than §§ 3613 and 3616. Still others require more specific showings of dangerousness, some of which exclude danger to property as a criterion for commitment.

Furthermore, one may assume that different procedural schemes for committed patients may be linked to variations in the nature of the treatment provided. Thus federal patient A, contracted out to state facility X where procedural protections are high, may be receiving intensive treatment designed to ready him for release in a few months, whereas federal patient B, contracted out to state facility Y, may be receiving something not much better than custodial care.

B. CONSIDERATIONS FOR ALTERNATIVE AMENDMENTS TO §§ 3613 AND 3616

The discussion thus far is directed to the conclusion that §§ 3613 and 3616 constitute an impractical and unconstitutional arrogation of power that properly should be left to the states. Should Congress reject these contentions by attempting to preserve the thrust of these sections, it may wish to consider a series or perfecting amendments to deal with other more limited constitutional objections and practical difficulties summarized below.

Prisoners whose sentences have expired. Section 3616(a) directs that prisoners believed by the director of the facility in which they are confined to be mentally ill and dangerous may be detained after their sentences have run on the basis of a certificate filed by the director until a court hearing occurs under § 3616(c). No time limitation is set for this detention, no probable cause is required, nor is any mental examination required. Pure, unbridled discretion is left in the hands of the director. No reason is given why the examinations required by § 3616 (c) and (d) cannot occur before the sentence has run.

Psychiatric examinations—Place of confinement. Section 3617(b) gives the court discretion to designate the facility in which the examination is to occur. Experience shows that judges often have left persons awaiting examinations in jail. This section should specifically exclude jails and prisons from the clause "or another facility designated by the court as suitable" in the interests of humane treatment of the mentally disabled.<sup>46</sup> The same problem appears in §§ 3613(d) and 3616(d).

Psychiatric examinations of persons acquitted by reason of insanity. Section 3617(b) allows persons undergoing civil commitment because their prison sentences have expired or because they are unlikely to become competent to stand trial to have appointed a psychiatrist of their choice for the pre-hearing examination, while denying that right to persons acquitted by reason of insanity. Since all three classes of persons are being subjected to precisely the same loss of liberty on precisely the same basis—mental illness and dangerousness—the distinction seems to raise significant equal protection problems.

Furthermore, § 3617(b) permits a 60-day commitment of persons acquitted by reason of insanity for purposes of examination without any showing of probable cause to believe the person is presently mentally ill and dangerous.<sup>47</sup> Similarly, § 3613(a) states that "the court shall order a hearing" on indefinite commitment for such persons regardless of the absence of probable cause. The fact that a jury has entertained reasonable doubt that the person, because of mental illness at the time of the alleged offense, could be held culpable for the crime charged does not of itself provide probable cause to believe he is presently mentally ill and dangerous.<sup>48</sup> It should also be made clear in the legislative history of the bill that the fact that such 60-day commitments are discretionary means that one otherwise entitled to bail should be permitted an examination on an out-patient basis.<sup>49</sup>

Finally, the draftsmen have left to the court's discretion the issue of whether the examining psychiatrist under this provision may be the same person who examined the patient for his insanity defense.<sup>50</sup> Experience in the District of Columbia has revealed what Professor David Chambers has called a "conflict of interest" for psychiatrists conducting court-ordered examinations at St. Elizabeth's Hospital.<sup>51</sup> If the examination of the accused before the trial on the issues of insanity and incompetency is conducted by staff from the hospital where the accused will be hospitalized if found insane or incompetent, pre-trial psychiatric conclusions will be influenced by staff willingness to have the accused as a patient. Similarly, a psychiatric conclusion as to a patient's present mental illness and dangerousness may tend to be influenced by the desirability of receiving the patient should the court order commitment. The issue is not which psychiatrist should conduct the examination, but which facility should do it. The addi-

<sup>46</sup> A simple amendment here would be to add a word to the above-quoted language to make it read: "or another treatment facility designated by the court as suitable." For similar language, see the proposed bill cited at note 19 supra.

<sup>47</sup> See In Re Barnard, 455 F. 2d 1370 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

<sup>48</sup> Contra, United States v. Ecker, 543 F. 2d 178 (D.C. Cir. 1976).

<sup>49</sup> See Marcey v. Harris, 400 F. 2d 772 (D.C. Cir. 1968).

<sup>50</sup> Senate Comm. Print. at 1009.

<sup>51</sup> Brief of David L. Chambers as Amicus Curiae at 3, United States v. Brawner, 471 F. 2d 969 (D.C. Cir. 1972). See also Brawner 471 F. 2d at 1018, n. 21; Judicial Conf. of the District of Columbia Circuit, Report of the Comm. on Problems Connected With Mental Examinations of the Accused in Criminal Cases Before Trial 97 (1966).

tion of a simple sentence to the dispositional sections of the statute, §§ 3613(d) and 3616(d), would resolve the issue.

Time limits for reports and hearings. In its current version the bill sets no time limits for psychiatric reports in court-ordered mental examinations. Nor are there time limits set for the commencement of a hearing, once the reports have been filed. The experience of trial attorneys demonstrates that the mere recommendation that reports be filed and hearings held "promptly" or "within a reasonable time"<sup>52</sup> are inadequate in many cases, particularly when the patient is confined.

Access to psychiatric records. Section 3617(c) provides that attorneys for the government and for the patient be given copies of the psychiatric report filed with the court. Experience indicates that such reports tend to be boilerplate and relatively undetailed, particularly with regard to information of dissenting views of hospital staff who have seen the patient and information of behavior which conflicts with the ultimate conclusions of the examining psychiatrist. This section should be broadened to permit access not only to the conclusory final report,<sup>53</sup> but also to all records concerning the examination kept by the hospital staff.

Consideration should also be given to requiring a videotape of the staff conference upon which the psychiatric report is generally based. At issue is the patient's right of confrontation.<sup>54</sup> Although it might be impractical to require the presence of the patient's attorney, a videotape would not adversely affect the conduct of the staff conference while it would provide attorneys with fuller information of what goes into the final report.

Furthermore, § 3617(c) should be amended to reflect the fact that such reports are generally the product not only of the psychiatrist's findings, but also those of psychologists, neurologists, social workers, and other ward staff. The term "psychiatric report" should be replaced with the term currently used by mental health professionals, "mental status report," and it should be made clear that although the psychiatrists may be in charge of the examination, the report is to include the input of the entire ward staff.

The commitment hearing generally. Sections 3613(d) and 3616(d) suggest that the commitment hearing and determination should be held first, followed by efforts of the Attorney General to release the committed person to state authorities.<sup>55</sup> Current law, 18 U.S.C. 4248, states the procedure in reverse order. Since the majority of such persons are indeed released to state authorities for commitment under state law,<sup>56</sup> the existing procedure would seem more efficient than that proposed by S. 1437. Why proponents of S. 1437 wish to provide for a number of court hearings which will have no effect on the ultimate administrative disposition of most cases is puzzling.

The right to a jury. Many states provide the right to a jury trial in civil commitments.<sup>57</sup> The jury serves as the community's conscience on the issues of what degree of mental impairment and/or dangerousness is sufficient to deprive an individual of liberty.<sup>58</sup> Since neither medical experts nor legal and social philosophers have come to any clear conclusions on these issues, the jury's role is particularly important in commitment determination. Although jury trials are typically waived where the right is accorded,<sup>59</sup> the right should be established for those cases in which the patient wishes a jury.

The Role of Experts. In § 3617(c), Congress is challenged with a unique opportunity to attempt resolution of one of the great issues of the period in the inter-

<sup>52</sup> See Senate Comm. Print at 1009-10. See also §§ 3613(e) and 3616(e).

<sup>53</sup> Section 3617(c)(4) exacerbates the current practice of filing conclusory reports by requiring the report to include legal conclusions by non-legal experts. Compare Washington v. United States, 390 F. 2d 444 (D.C. Cir. 1967), Cf. Hicks v. United States, 511 F. 2d 407 (D.C. Cir. 1975) (hospital held negligent in wrongful death action for filing conclusory report inadequately informing court of patient's condition).

<sup>54</sup> See Thornton v. Corcoran, 407 F. 2d 695 (D.C. Cir. 1969).

<sup>55</sup> Section 3616(a) requires "the director of a facility" to investigate state commitment options before triggering a federal commitment proceeding. The extent and nature of that obligation are unclear, however. See note 5 supra. Nor is it clear that the director is the most appropriate person to make such inquiries. In any event, no such screening occurs for § 3613 commitments.

<sup>56</sup> See note 43 supra.

<sup>57</sup> See, e.g., Quesnell v. State, 83 Wash. 2d 224, 517 P. 2d 568 (1974); D.C. CODE ANN. § 21-544 (1973). See generally Developments, supra note 40, at 1291-95.

<sup>58</sup> See generally Humphrey v. Cady, 405 U.S. 504, 509 (1972); notes 61-65 infra and accompanying text.

<sup>59</sup> See Developments, supra note 40, at 1293, n. 168; Pfrender, Probate Court Attitudes Toward Involuntary Hospitalization: A Field Study, 5 J. Fam. L. 139, 148 (1965).

face of law and psychiatry—that of the psychiatric expert witness.<sup>60</sup> Unfortunately, in § 3617(c) (4), the draftsmen break and run the other way. To avoid the prospect of wholesale legislative retreat on the issue, § 3617(c) (4) (A)–(D) should be deleted. To advance the state of the law on this question, those same subsections should be rewritten.

Of particular relevance to commitments under §§ 3613 and 3616 is § 3617(c) (4) (C),<sup>61</sup> which asks examining psychiatrists and psychologists to state their opinion in writing for the court as to whether the patient “is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of serious bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another.”<sup>62</sup> The language assumes that psychiatrists and psychologists are experts in assessing each element of the commitment standard when in fact they are not. To be sure, qualified examiners are expert in the diagnosis and treatment of mental disorders. They are not experts, however, on the definition of “mental disease or defect” for purposes of this section nor on the prediction of antisocial conduct.

A conclusion as to whether a patient is “mentally ill” is immaterial in ordinary private psychiatric practice. If the patient presents himself to the therapist complaining of unwanted thoughts or behaviors, it is the therapist’s role to advise and assist the patient in ways to cope with or eradicate such thoughts and behaviors. It is only when some third party becomes involved in the therapist-patient relationship that the existence or nonexistence of mental illness as such becomes an issue.<sup>63</sup> Thus, for purposes of invoking insurance coverage for treatment, mental illness may be broadly defined. For purposes of deciding what criminal defendant should be held not culpable for their conduct, the definition of mental illness may be considerably more narrow. The point is that “mental illness” is not a purely medical concept, but a social one employed for a variety of social purposes.<sup>64</sup> To make the therapist the judge of what constitutes a sufficient mental disease or defect for purposes of §§ 3613 and 3616 is to abdicate the proper role of legislature and courts in formulating this essentially social judgment. Furthermore such abdication perpetuates the myth that certain social problems are in fact medical problems so that society suspends efforts to deal intelligently with the social aspects of those problems.

Legislating medical expertise over the prediction of antisocial behavior flies in the face of repeated disclaimers of such expertise by the country’s foremost

<sup>60</sup> See Washington v. United States, 390 F. 2d 444 (D.C. Cir. 1967). See generally United States v. Brawner, 471 F. 2d 969 (D.C. Cir. 1972); R. ARENS, THE INSANITY DEFENSE (1974); J. ZISKIN, COPING WITH PSYCHIATRIC AND PSYCHOLOGICAL TESTIMONY (1970); Bazelon, The Perils of Wizardry, 131 Am. J. Psychiat. 1317 (1974); Bazelon, Psychiatrists and the Adversary Process, 231 Sci. Am. 18 (June 1974); Diamond & Louisell, The Psychiatrist as an Expert Witness: Some Ruminations and Speculations, 63 Mich. L. Rev. 1335 (1965); Ennis & Litwack, Psychiatry and the Presumption of Expertise: Flipping Coins in the Courtroom, 62 Cal. L. Rev. 693 (1974).

<sup>61</sup> Although this paper confines itself to examination of subsection (C), relating to commitments under §§ 3613 and 3616, many of the comments made here are also relevant to subsections (A), (B), and (D).

<sup>62</sup> Although the statute does not compel the court to be bound by the expert’s opinion on these matters or even to admit the expert’s opinion into evidence, § 3617(c) (4) strongly suggests that such conclusions are admissible evidence (Contra, Washington v. United States, 390 F. 2d 444 (D.C. Cir. 1967)), and that they are to be accorded the weight ordinarily attributed to expert testimony.

<sup>63</sup> Even when mental disorder is attributed to organic causes, such as a tumor, there is no precise point at which the tumor becomes so intrusive upon the patient’s functioning that experts would agree that the condition constitutes “mental disease or defect.” The task becomes even more subjective when, as is usually the case in patients seen by forensic psychiatrists, no organic cause for the signs and symptoms displayed by the patient can be demonstrated.

<sup>64</sup> See Humphrey v. Cady, 405 U.S. 504, 509 (1972).

For empirical support of this statement, see, e.g., Pugh, The Insanity Defense in Operation: A Practicing Psychiatrist Views Durham and Brawner, 1973 Wash. U.L.Q. 87, 95–96; Dix, Acute Psychiatric Hospitalization of the Mentally Ill in Metropolis: An Empirical Study, 1968 Wash. U.L.Q. 485.

Dr. Pugh has written of his experiences from 1968 to 1970 at the forensic unit at St. Elizabeths Hospital in Washington, D.C.

“Some doctors seemed to have the ‘policy’ that anyone who committed a sex crime was insane. Some doctors tended to find a defendant insane if they felt the hospital could ‘help’ him—or if they felt sorry for him. One psychologist had a racial quirk: though he might find black defendants either sane or insane, he invariably found any white defendant to be insane.” 1973 Wash. U.L.Q. at 96.

One survey of residents of Manhattan concluded that only 18.5 percent of the population was “free of significant symptoms of mental pathology.” L. SROLE, T. LANGER, S. MICHAEL, M. OPLER & T. RENNIE, MENTAL HEALTH IN THE METROPOLIS 135 (1962).

forensic psychiatrists and psychologists.<sup>65</sup> Nor do the judgments as to what constitutes "a substantial risk," "serious bodily injury," or "serious damage to property" lend themselves to psychiatric expertise. Such issues must be addressed by courts in hearings under §§ 3613 and 3616, and judgments must be rendered in each case, however crude the present ability of courts to make them. But the capabilities of courts to render such judgments intelligently and in a manner consistent with current social mores will not be advanced—indeed they will be retarded—so long as courts are encouraged or even required by statute to pretend that their function may be adequately discharged by merely asking a medical "expert" to make such judgments for them.

A properly redrafted § 3617(c) (4) (C) would attempt to pinpoint the kinds of information over which examiners possess expertise which can be most helpful to a court presented with the difficult task of applying the statute's necessarily vague standard for civil commitment. What this subsection should not do is to perpetuate demonstrably erroneous myths which serve to impede judicial development of our social and political values concerning the proper relation between the state and its potentially anti-social citizens.

Indefinite commitment. Sections 3613(d) and 3616(d) require the Attorney General to hospitalize indefinitely committed persons for whom no state will take responsibility. Although this section could be construed consistent with the least restrictive alternative doctrine,<sup>66</sup> additional statutory language would clarify the obligation of the committing court to seek out with the assistance of the Attorney General a disposition which would provide the minimal intrusion on the patient's liberty consistent with the needs of maintaining treatment and protecting the community.

The Congress should also consider placing absolute time limits on total hospitalization.<sup>67</sup> If such limitations are imposed, they should be drafted to accord with desirable medical practice, rather than being tied to the sentence the patient might have received had he been convicted of the offense charged as some states have done.<sup>68</sup> Limitation in terms of potential criminal sentence suggests a criminal rather than civil commitment and more nearly approximates constitutionally suspect preventive detention. Sentence-linked limitations would also be inconsistent with the commitment and release provisions of the statute which are drafted in terms of the patient's present mental condition and dangerousness.

One mechanism for limiting indefinite commitments is to require the admitting psychiatrist to draw up a treatment plan to be filed with the court as part of the commitment papers.<sup>69</sup> Such a plan should specify to the greatest degree possible the treatment modalities suitable for the particular patient and rough time schedule for carrying out the plan. The treatment plan also establishes a basis for reports back to the court which will be more frequent and more informative than the boilerplate reports called for in § 3617(e). Such a plan also facilitates judicial administration of the least restrictive alternative doctrine by requiring medical justification for the treatment modalities and degrees of confinement selected at each stage of the plan.

<sup>65</sup> A prominent forensic psychiatrist, upon reviewing the studies on psychiatric predictions of dangerousness, concluded:

"Neither psychiatrists nor other behavioral scientists are able to predict the occurrence of violent behavior with sufficient reliability to justify the restriction of freedom of persons on the basis of the label of potential dangerousness."

Diamond, The Psychiatric Prediction of Dangerousness, 123 U. Pa. L. Rev. 439, 452 (1974). See also, American Psychiatric Association, Clinical Aspects of the Violent Individual (1974); A. Stone, Mental Health and Law: A System in Transition (1975); Rubin, Prediction of Dangerousness in Mentally Ill Criminals, 27 Arch. Gen. Psychiat. 397 (1972); Developments, supra note 40, at 1240-45.

<sup>66</sup> See note 42 supra and accompanying text.

<sup>67</sup> See, e.g., CAL. WELF. & INST. CODE §§ 5000 et seq. (Supp. 1972). See also notes 34-38 supra and accompanying text.

Subsection (e) of a 1966 bill for commitment of insanity acquittees, note 19 supra, would have provided for a new commitment hearing, with the burden of proof on the government, at least once every two years. Although two years may be too long a time period, the basic model of short-term commitments with the power to recommit allows for far greater court supervision over commitments than does the model of indefinite commitments with periodic reports set forth in ch. 36, subch. B.

<sup>68</sup> See, e.g., N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 730.50 (McKinney's Consol. Laws c. 11-A, 1971); ILL. ANN. STAT. c. 38, § 104-3(c) (Supp. 1969).

<sup>69</sup> Cf. Ashe v. Robinson, 450 F. 2d 681 (D.C. Cir. 1971). See generally Schwitzgebel, The Right to Effective Mental Treatment, 62 Cal. L. Rev. 936 (1974).

Discharge. Sections 3613 (d) and (e) and 3616 (d) and (e) suggest that a patient should be released when his mental condition has improved to the extent that he is no longer a danger. This conflicts with the commitment standard which requires showings of both mental illness and dangerousness. According to the release provisions as drafted, a committed person could recover from his mental illness, still be dangerous, and hence be ineligible for release. Such a case would amount to pure preventive detention. Discharge should occur either when the patient is no longer mentally ill or when he is no longer dangerous.<sup>70</sup>

More serious are the immense hurdles the committed patient must overcome to obtain release in §§ 3613(e) and 3616(e). Having persuaded the hospital director of his eligibility for release, the patient must, if the court or Attorney General so choose, bear the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that he is no longer dangerous.

From the theoretical standpoint, placing such a burden on the patient makes little sense. If clear and convincing evidence is required to force confinement and treatment upon him, why is not the absence of such evidence sufficient for release?<sup>71</sup> Whereas it is logical to place the burden of persuasion on the patient when he initiates release proceedings, as in habeas corpus, the contrary should be true when it is the government's own doctors who are seeking release.

From a practical standpoint, the provision makes even less sense. First, it requires the patient to prove a negative—that he is no longer dangerous—a feat made even more difficult if the patient has been confined in an artificial hospital setting since confinement. If his pre-confinement offense was a serious one, even the model patient will find proof of non-dangerousness impossible at least until he has "served" time roughly approximating a criminal sentence for his conduct.<sup>72</sup> Furthermore, such a system places considerable control in the hands of the Attorney General. Psychiatrists are notoriously (and understandably) reluctant to testify in an adversary setting, both because of the fear of embarrassment on the stand and because of the time court hearings and continuances take from their busy schedules. I have been told on more than one occasion by state directors of facilities for the "criminally insane" that, faced with certain opposition from the prosecutor in a release proceeding, they will forego their recommendation for release rather than "waste time."

---

SAVE PAROLE SUPERVISION<sup>1</sup>

(By Robert Martinson and Judith Wilks)

The increasing attacks on the institution of parole in the U.S. today fail to distinguish between parole as a method for releasing offenders from (or returning offenders to) imprisonment and parole as a method for supervising offenders in the community. These two distinct functions need to be separately evaluated for an overall assessment of the usefulness of parole and its fairness in our system of criminal justice.

The parole release (and revocation) decision is inseparable from the indeterminate sentence. Decision-making is a quasi-judicial process carried on by small groups of appointed officials organized into Parole Boards. Parole supervision, on the other hand, is not dependent on the indeterminate sentence. It is a method for controlling, helping, or keeping track of offenders in the community. For hundreds of thousands of convicted offenders, it is a major institutional alternative to extended periods of imprisonment. The supervision functions of parole are carried on by an extended network of thousands of agents organized into parole district offices and divisions.

The essential criterion for parole as a quasi-judicial process is simple fairness and equity. Such issues are especially critical when unreviewed discretion in-

---

<sup>70</sup> Accord, proposed bill cited supra note 19.

<sup>71</sup> This is the approach favored by the proposed bill cited supra note 19.

The habeas corpus provision, § 3617(g), may be in conflict here if it is interpreted to permit the patient to establish a right to release by demonstrating the absence of clear and convincing evidence of commitability.

<sup>72</sup> See Covington v. Harris, 419 F. 2d 617 (D.C. Cir. 1969).

<sup>1</sup> Article has been accepted for publication in the September 1977 issue of Federal Probation. Data for this article was derived from a project conducted for the National Institute of Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice under grant No. 76NI-99-0023. Points of view expressed are those of the authors and do not represent the official position of the the U.S. Department of Justice.

volves deprivation of liberty. Many critics have rightly argued that the parole decision-making process is lamentably brief for such an important decision, lacking in essential elements of due process, frequently arbitrary and subject to political interference, and based in part on a myth that Parole Boards have the ability to accurately predict when a particular offender is "ready" for parole.

The usual criterion for assessing parole supervision has been how effective it is in reducing the criminal behavior of those under supervision. Such effectiveness need not be gained at the price of unfairness. On the contrary, since the consequence of engaging in criminal behavior is to be reimprisoned, supervision which is effective directly contributes to fairness in the sense that fewer offenders are deprived of their liberty. By preventing or inhibiting criminal behavior, effective parole supervision insures that fewer offenders will be re-arrested, convicted and returned to prison.

Unfortunately, in their haste to restrict or eliminate the Parole Board decision-making function (and the indeterminate sentence on which it rests), some critics propose to throw the baby out with the bath water. Yet there is no reason why a mandatory and definite parole sentence could not be substituted for the present system of Parole Board discretion and conditional release under threat of revocation for rule-breaking.<sup>2</sup> And those who propose such radical surgery would do well not to speak in the name of the offender for there is grave danger that the overall consequence of abolishment of parole supervision would be to consign larger numbers of offenders to prison.

One critical empirical question that must be answered is: would the abolition of the present system of parole supervision increase or decrease the rates at which persons released from incarceration would be re-processed into the criminal justice system? Previous research has not addressed this question. Such research deals primarily with variants of parole supervision within the existing system.<sup>3</sup> Inferences from such research are speculative and do not permit a ". . . direct comparison of offenders under parole supervision with offenders set entirely free."<sup>4</sup>

Parole has never been a universal method for releasing offenders from incarceration, and therefore in most jurisdictions in the U.S. some persons are released on parole supervision while others are released at the expiration of their terms, i.e., "set entirely free." Clearly, the most obvious research method, available to researchers since parole was established in the U.S., would be controlled comparisons of persons released under parole supervision with comparable persons released directly from imprisonment without parole supervision. This is the method to be used in the present analysis.

THE SURVEY

The data presented in Table 1 is taken from a larger survey of criminal justice research. The survey was designed to provide a standard procedure for maximizing the accumulation of existing information so that substantive questions can be answered and decisions taken on matters of public policy. For a description of the search procedure, the classification of documents received, and the variables coded, it is necessary to read the preliminary report.<sup>5</sup> The present sub-study illustrates the utility of the procedure adopted.

Two key concepts were employed in collecting, coding and organizing the data taken from more than 600 recent documents: the "batch" and the "computable recidivism rate."

a. Batch. A "batch" is any number of persons at some specificable location in the criminal justice system for whom a "proper" recidivism rate is computable. A proper recidivism rate must specify what proportion of a batch are recidivists. The term "parent batch" refers to a universal set which contains two or more batches. For example, a universal set of, say, 1000 male and female parolees may be broken into one batch of 800 male parolees and one batch of 200 female parolees. Each of these batches is coded as "exclusive" since together they ex-

<sup>2</sup> See J. Wilks and R. Martinson, "Is the Treatment of Criminal Offenders Really Necessary?" Federal Probation, v. XXXX, n. 1 (March 1976), pp. 3-9.

<sup>3</sup> See, for example, D. Lipton, R. Martinson, and J. Wilks, The Effectiveness of Correctional Treatment, New York: Praeger Publishers, 1975, sections on Probation and Parole.

<sup>4</sup> D. T. Stanley, Prisoners Among Us, The Problem of Parole, The Brookings Institution, Washington, D.C., 1976, pp. 181-2.

<sup>5</sup> See R. Martinson and J. Wilks, Knowledge in Criminal Justice Planning, A Preliminary Report, October 15, 1976, 58 pp. (processed).

haust the parent batch and have no members in common. All batches in Table 1 are exclusive batches with an N or 10 or more.

b. Recidivism Rate. The primary unit of analysis in the survey is the computable recidivism rate. Each such rate specifies what proportion of any batch shall be identified as "recidivists" according to whatever operational definition of recidivism is utilized by the researcher. Such an operational definition will normally specify the length of time which the batch was followed-up in addition to the criminal justice action (arrest, suspension, conviction, return to prison, and so forth) which led to the decision to classify a particular person as a "recidivist." All such definitions were coded into seven categories. Three of these categories—arrest, conviction, and return to prison with a new conviction—were judged to be appropriate for a comparison of parolees and persons released from incarceration with no supervision ("max out").<sup>6</sup>

The term "system re-processing rate" specifies precisely what is being measured in Table 1. An "arrest," for example, is an event that can occur to a person under the jurisdiction of criminal justice, and an arrest rate simply reports what proportion of any batch included in Table 1 were reported as being re-processed in this way in the documents coded in the survey.

Each recidivism rate in the survey has been coded with additional items of information. The coding system developed was guided by the primary aim of the accumulation of knowledge based on the existing state of the art in criminal justice research. Codes were designed to maximize the information produced by the standard procedures now used in the body of documents encountered. Many of the items specify critical methodological features of the study such as whether the batch is a population or a sample, the type of research design utilized, months in follow-up, months in treatment, the type of population or sample (e.g., "termination" sample), and so forth. Since studies report information on the characteristics of batches in a bewildering variety of ways, a standard attribute code was developed so as to maximize the reporting of such information as educational attainment, current offense, race, class position, family status, and so forth.<sup>7</sup> In addition, it was possible to code a considerable number of batches (and therefore rates) with such information as mean age, months in incarceration, sex, whether the batch consisted primarily of narcotics cases or persons with alcohol problems, and so forth.

PROCEDURE

The procedure adopted was to exhaust the survey data base of all meaningful comparisons between adult offenders released from incarceration to parole supervision and comparable groups of adult offenders not released to parole supervision ("max out"). This was a simple sorting operation with an IBM counter-sorter. From a total pool of 5,804 recidivism rates for batches of adult persons in the U.S. and Canada released under parole supervision, those rates which fell in the category of "arrest" (N=235), "conviction" (N=135), and "return to prison with a new conviction" (N=738) were sorted out. A similar sort for adult max out rates resulted in 44 arrest rates, 26 conviction rates, and 73 return-to-prison-with-new-conviction rates. The total number of rates produced by these initial sorts are found at the bottom of Table 1.

The cards were then sorted on the variables which had been coded in the survey making no distinction between items which were primarily methodological (e.g., time in follow-up) and those which were primarily descriptive of a batch (e.g., mean age, sex, percent property offenders). All code categories for which at least two rates were reported for both parole and max out were located. Mean rates for these code categories were computed, and are presented in Table 1.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>6</sup> The other four categories were: 100 percent minus "success" rate; short of arrest (i.e., AWOL, absconding, suspension, and similar); return to prison for technical violation; and return to prison for technical plus new conviction. Three of these categories were eliminated because they cannot happen to max out groups. The fourth—100 percent minus "success" rate—was eliminated because of possible problems in interpreting the meaning of the measure.

<sup>7</sup> The proportion in which an attribute was present in a batch was coded as follows: 1=0-24.9%; 2=25-48.9%; 3=50-74.9%; and 4=75-100%.

<sup>8</sup> Multiplying the total number of coding categories (97) by the three definitions gives a total of 291 possible comparisons if sufficient data has been present. Eliminating 39 cases where data was reported as "unknown," 38 cases in which there were less than two rates in a category of either parole or max out, and 134 cases in which no data was reported, leaves the 80 comparisons reported in Table 1.

DISCUSSION

Item 1 can be used to illustrate how the table should be read. For parole, there were 84 recidivism rates where "arrest" was the measurement of recidivism and for which the batch size fell between 100 and 499. The mean of these 84 rates was 26.9. For this same batch size (100-499), there was 12 max out rates, and the mean of these rates was 32.8. The difference between these two means is 5.9.

Reading across the table, for the "conviction" definition the mean rates for parole and max out were 20.5 and 25.9, respectively. For the "return to prison with new conviction" definition these means were 11.0 and 14.7. Turning to a different batch size of 50-99 (Item 24), one notes that comparisons could only be made for two of the three definitions. For some variables comparisons were possible for only one definition.

This table presents data in a manner which is similar to the procedure of simultaneously controlling for adulthood, definition of recidivism, place in the criminal justice system (i.e., parole vs. max out), and at least one additional variable. Given the number of rates available, it would have been possible to have controlled for one (or even more) variables in addition to the four specified above. For reasons of time, these additional controls were not attempted.

It is interesting to note that in seventy-four of the eighty comparisons contained in Table 1, the mean of the recidivism rates for parole is lower than max out. This is the case whether the final variable controlled is methodological or socio-demographic. For the arrest definition, the difference in favor of parole range from a low of 0.2 (Item 22) to a high of 43.6 (Item 24). For conviction, the differences in favor of parole range from 0.2 (Item 20) to 16.9 (Item 15). For new prison sentence, the differences in favor of parole range from 0.2 (Item 10) to 11.3 (Item 43).

In six of the eighty comparisons, the mean of the rates for max out is equal to or lower than the mean for parole. These six cases are unsystematically distributed throughout the table. In three instances the final control variable is methodological; in three it is socio-demographic. Two cases fall under the arrest definition; two under conviction; and two under return to prison. These six exceptions do not suggest to us any particular set of conditions which might be further explored to discover sub-groups of offenders, or contexts, for which max out would be a superior policy for criminal justice.

Data contained in our Preliminary Report provided a starting point for this analysis. This initial data (based on 3,005 rates coded at that time) indicated that the mean of the rates for parole (25.4) was somewhat lower than the mean of rates for max out (31.6). This six percentage point difference resulted from a comparison which did not further control for the definition of recidivism, for adults vs. juvenile, or for any of the other variables utilized in Table 1. Increasing the total number of rates, and simultaneously controlling for four additional variables has led to the discovery of larger mean differences between parole and max out.<sup>9</sup>

SUMMARY

Those who propose the abolition of parole supervision in this country often speak of "fairness to the offender." It is difficult to detect in Table 1 evidence of such fairness. On the contrary. The evidence seems to indicate that the abolition of parole supervision would result in substantial increases in arrest, conviction, and return to prison. Those who wish to eliminate the unfairness of Parole Board decision-making might well concentrate on finding a specific remedy for this problem, a remedy which would not increase the very "unfairness" they deplore.

At the very least, the data in Table 1 should give pause to those policy makers and legislators who have been operating on the unexamined assumption that parole supervision makes no difference. In face of the evidence in Table 1 such an assumption is unlikely.

<sup>9</sup>This method is an application of standard research procedures. See, for example, P. F. Lazarsfeld, "Interpretation of Statistical Relations as a Research Operation," in The Language of Social Research (P. F. Lazarsfeld and M. Rosenberg, eds.), Glencoe, Ill.: The Free Press, 1955.

TABLE 1.—MEAN RECIDIVISM RATES

Batch characteristic	Definition: Arrest						Conviction						New prison sentence
	Parole		Max out		D <sup>2</sup>		Parole		Max out		D		Parole		Max out		X		N		D
	X	N <sup>1</sup>	X	N	X	N	X	N	X	N	X	N	X	N	X	N	X	N	X	N	X	N
1. Batch N equals 100 to 499	26.9	84	32.8	12	5.9	20.5	68	25.9	22	5.4	11.0	227	14.7	44	3.7
2. Male	25.2	174	39.5	32	14.3	19.1	85	29.6	21	10.5	11.3	393	14.3	58	3.0
3. Percent white equals 1 to 24.9	20.8	38	31.0	17	10.2	12.8	18	22.8	6	10.0	13.3	24	22.8	6	9.5
4. Total population	20.8	62	37.7	22	16.9	13.9	31	28.1	25	14.2	9.7	593	14.5	67	4.8
5. Termination sets	24.4	206	42.1	25	17.7	21.3	79	35.7	17	15.4	10.9	603	14.9	71	4.0
6. After-only research design	25.2	96	42.3	27	17.1	21.8	60	28.9	25	7.1	10.9	581	14.8	73	3.9
7. Research done in 1970's	24.0	178	43.6	42	19.6	18.1	66	28.9	25	10.8	9.8	543	14.8	73	5.0
8. Standard treatment	27.4	129	43.0	39	15.6	19.3	96	29.9	26	10.6	10.3	584	14.9	72	4.6
9. 7 to 12 mo followup	24.6	85	43.7	12	19.1	15.6	66	22.8	6	7.2	8.7	250	5.2	15	-3.5
10. 19 to 24 mo followup	28.4	41	57.5	10	29.1	20.9	11	32.5	5	11.6	11.0	170	11.2	15	3.2
11. 25 to 36 mo followup	28.9	25	49.5	4	20.6	17.8	15	27.5	10	9.7	15.5	79	18.9	16	3.2
12. Measured only after treatment	28.3	8	43.4	36	15.1	46.3	11	33.2	15	-13.1	14.9	48	13.9	62	-1.0
13. Percent properly offenders, 50 to 74.9	16.6	39	34.5	6	17.9	13.0	70	22.8	6	9.8
14. Percent 1st offenders, 1 to 24.9	29.5	32	37.5	10	8.0	13.8	14	22.8	6	9.0
15. Not primarily narcotic users	32.5	5	32.5	5	0	5.9	7	22.8	6	16.9
16. Not primarily alcohol problems	43.2	9	36.2	6	-7.2	13.7	12	22.8	6	9.1
17. Percent white, 25 to 49.9	27.8	39	51.2	9	23.4	44.5	7	30.7	13	-13.8
18. Mean age, 25 to 34.9	22.2	51	40.5	25	18.3	20.9	28	23.1	7	2.2
19. Percent high school graduates, 1 to 24.9	25.5	67	41.2	9	15.7	19.8	17	22.8	6	3.0
20. Measured over same time at risk	22.6	36	44.0	19	21.4	18.7	55	18.9	9	2
21. Months incarcerated equals 12 to 17	17.3	26	40.8	8	23.5	17.5	10	28.2	19	10.7
22. Percent from broken families, 50 to 74.9	32.3	9	32.5	5	2.2	19.3	23	22.8	6	2.5
23. Comparison group	28.3	79	42.5	15	14.2
24. Batch N equals 50 to 99	20.9	53	64.5	4	43.6
											9.9	126	14.5	9	4.6
											12.6	62	15.5	10	2.9

See footnotes at end of table.

TABLE 1.—MEAN RECIDIVISM RATES—Continued

Batch characteristic	Definition Arrest						Conviction						New prison sentence
	Parole		Max out		D <sup>2</sup>		Parole		Max out		D		Parole		Max out		D
	X	N <sup>1</sup>	X	N	X	N	X	N	X	N	X	N	X	N	X	N	X	N	D
25. Sample.....	25.9	62	48.1	22	22.2
26. "E" group.....	23.7	84	42.5	5	18.8
27. Percent property offenders, 25 to 49.9.....	21.1	29	48.5	10	27.4
28. Batch N equals 10 to 49.....	22.8	72	44.1	28	21.3
29. Primarily narcotics users.....	29.0	20	29.5	6	5
30. Mixed sex batch.....	28.6	39	51.7	9	23.1
31. Percent from broken families, 1 to 24.9.....	29.3	31	51.2	3	21.9
32. Percent high school graduates 25 to 49.9.....	33.5	10	37.0	4	3.5
33. Lowest class.....	34.1	22	45.8	8	11.7
34. Non-random-research design.....	24.4	93	43.9	17	19.5
35. 1 to 6 mo followup.....	15.5	61	29.5	12	14.0
36. 13 to 18 mo followup.....	30.1	16	32.5	5	2.4
37. Months incarcerated equals 24 to 29.....	29.5	32	31.2	3	1.7
38. Months incarcerated equals 30 to 36.....	36.2	6	59.5	6	23.3
39. Percent property offenders, 1 to 24.9.....						20.5	15	30.5	10	10.0
40. Highest class.....						20.8	19	22.8	6	2.0
41. Batch N equals 500-plus.....
42. 37 to 60 mo followup.....
43. 60-plus mo followup.....
Total.....	24.5	235	42.9	44	18.4	19.7	135	29.9	26	10.2	10.5	738	14.8	73	4.3

<sup>1</sup> N equals number of rates.

<sup>2</sup> D equals max out mean minus parole mean.

ALBANY, N.Y.

Senator JOHN L. McCLELLAN,
Senate Subcommittee on Criminal Law, U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR McCLELLAN: I regret that I have not been able to study the above because of absence from the country. However, I am informed that it is proposed to abolish the United States Parole Commission.

I do not regard supervision or surveillance on parole to be of any value, but the decision-making function of the Commission through its Hearing Representatives is a piece of judicial machinery which, I think, should be retained.

I do not think that it could be replaced adequately by any other body charged with a wider range of determinations of disposition of offenders. Judges have considerable experience of selecting between incarcerative and non-incarcerative penalties, while Parole Boards have experience in setting time once a decision to incarcerate has been made.

It seems to me to be most advantageous to separate the selection of time to be served from the initial decision to incarcerate and to ensure that there is a feedback of information to the decision-making body. The "guideline" system in use by the United States Parole Commissioners is, in my view, most suited to this purpose.

I hope that the decision to abolish the decision-making function of the Parole Commissioners will be carefully re-considered.

Yours truly,

LESLIE T. WILKINS,
Professor of Criminal Justice, State University of New York, Albany.

---

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 15, 1977.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senator,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: I have enclosed for your consideration, and for inclusion in the record regarding your bill, S-1437, a copy of the comments of the Freedom of Information Clearinghouse on two provisions of that bill which we believe unnecessarily threaten to undermine the open government provisions of the Freedom of Information Act. In view of the exceptional work which you have done to reduce government secrecy, we hope that you will either eliminate the two provisions to which we refer or, at least, amend them to reduce their anti-openness effects.

We thank you for your consideration of these matters.

Respectfully yours,

LARRY P. ELLSWORTH

---

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION CLEARINGHOUSE,
Washington, D.C.

MEMORANDUM REGARDING PROVISIONS OF S. 1437 WHICH ADVERSELY AFFECT THE OPEN GOVERNMENT PROVISIONS OF THE FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT

S. 1437 is intended to be a comprehensive recodification and reform of the criminal provisions of Title 18 of the United States Code. However, two of the intended reforms would, perhaps inadvertently, have severe adverse effects on the disclosure provisions of the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552. Section 1525 would subject former and present Government employees to criminal liability for disclosing, "in violation of a specific duty," virtually any information received from outside the Government. Section 3825 would exempt the Bureau of Prisons, when making certain imprisonment, transfer and release decisions, from the Administrative Procedure Act, including the FOIA and the Federal Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a. This memorandum discusses the public access problems created by these provisions and suggests solution to these problems.

SECTION 1525

Section 1525 is apparently intended to replace 18 U.S.C. § 1905, the so-called Trade Secrets Act. This latter Act punishes any disclosure by Federal employees, which is "not authorized by law," of any information that "relates to trade secrets, processes, operations, style of work, or apparatus, or to the identity, confidential statistical data, amount or source of any income, profits, losses, or expenditures of any person . . . ."

Interestingly the broad prohibitory language of Section 1905 was itself created by a 1948 codification of three much narrower non-disclosure statutes, even though the legislative explanation denied any intent to expand the prohibitions of precodification law.<sup>1</sup> These pre-existing statutes punished only disclosures of certain income tax return, Tariff Commission and Commerce Department information.<sup>2</sup> The expanded 18 U.S.C. § 1905 has apparently never been used to prosecute anyone criminally, but in recent years it has been the subject of an ever-expanding amount of civil litigation. Typical cases include those where companies have attempted to use it to prevent civil rights groups from obtaining information concerning employment discrimination and to prevent state agencies from securing financial information needed for state law enforcement efforts.<sup>3</sup> Courts have generally held that commercial and financial information is protected by section 1905 only if its disclosure would be likely to cause substantial competitive injury.<sup>4</sup> They have split widely on such questions as whether an agency may by regulation "authorize" disclosure where the public interest will thereby be advanced.<sup>5</sup>

Just as section 1905 expanded the criminal prohibitions contained in pre-1948 law, proposed section 1525 would expand upon the criminal prohibitions of section 1905. No longer will criminal sanctions be limited to disclosures of competitively sensitive commercial information. Instead, subject to the not altogether clear qualifying phrase—"in violation of a specific duty"—any disclosure of any information, whose submission is required by the Government or is necessary in order to receive a benefit, will subject Government employees to the threat of criminal prosecution. While disclosures required by the FOIA would apparently not violate this duty of secrecy, the threat of criminal sanctions for mistakes could have a significant chilling effect on the willingness of employees to disclose and also might significantly reduce the number of legitimate discretionary disclosures of technically exempt information which is necessary for informed public debate of political, health, or other important issues. Section 1525 thus threatens important First Amendment interests which the FOIA, and similar laws, were intended to foster.

The sweeping nature of section 1525, which subjects to possible criminal sanction disclosures of most information received from private parties, is overbroad. As the history of non-enforcement under 18 U.S.C. § 1905 reveals, overbroad criminal statutes are often unused statutes. Moreover, the criminal law cannot, and should not, be used in an attempt to cure all possible ills. Indeed, use of Civil Service sanctions or imposition of civil damages for injuries inflicted would probably be a far more effective deterrent to wrongful disclosures, if any additional deterrent is needed.

Assuming, however, that criminal penalties for disclosures of some types of private information will be maintained, the scope of this criminal statute should be narrowly confined to the most sensitive of information. Our society has historically chosen not to criminalize all disclosures that might harm Government functions, but instead only disclosures of a narrow class of very sensitive national security information where the intent of the disclosures was to aid a foreign power. Similarly, in dealing with private information in the hands of the Government, we should single out only the most sensitive information for the protections afforded by criminal sanctions. This does not mean that because there are no criminal penalties for disclosures of other types of information, it must or will generally be disclosed. Rather, this is merely a recognition that not all private information, and not all business or personal information, is of equal sensitivity. More flexibility than a criminal statute provides is needed to deal with less sensitive information. Indeed, experience teaches that claims that everything must be kept secret generally result in nothing being kept secret. The narrowing of Section 1525 to only the most sensitive of private information is therefore essential.

<sup>1</sup> See S. Rep. No. 1620, 80th Cong., 2d Sess. 1(1948); H.R. Rep. No. 304, 80th Cong., 1st Sess. 8, A 127-28 (1947); 94 Cong. Rec. 8721 (1948) (Remarks of Senator Wiley).

<sup>2</sup> 18 U.S.C. § 216 (1940); 19 U.S.C. § 1335 (1940); 15 U.S.C. § 176b (1940).

<sup>3</sup> See, e.g., Westinghouse Electric Corp. v. Schlesinger, 542 F.2d 1190 (4th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 45 U.S.L.W. 3749 (May 16, 1977) (No. 76-1192) (civil rights); Charles River Park 'A', Inc. v. HUD, 519 F.2d 935 (D.C. Cir. 1975) (law enforcement).

<sup>4</sup> E.g., Westinghouse Electric Corp. v. Schlesinger, supra.

<sup>5</sup> Compare Westinghouse Electric Corp. v. Schlesinger, supra, with Westinghouse Electric Corp. v. Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n., No. 76-1611 (3d Cir., March 22, 1977).

This objective can be accomplished by amending Section 1525 by adding the phrase "trade secrets or intimate personal" just before the words "information". Amended Section 1525 will then read in pertinent part that: "A person is guilty of an offense if . . . he discloses trade secrets or intimate personal information . . ."

Another aspect of Section 1525 which deserves attention is the "state of mind" that must be proved as an element of the crime. Since Section 1525 does not specify the required state of mind, one must look at Section 303(b), which provides the required state of mind in any instance where it is not otherwise specified. However, it is unclear whether the required state of mind under Section 1525 is "knowing" (§ 303(b)(1)) or "reckless" (§ 303(b)(3)). In neither case, however, are the protections against possibly unwarranted prosecutions sufficient. As presently written, disclosure of personal information may be punishable under Section 1525, even though it would not be an offense under the criminal provisions of the Federal Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. § 552a(i)(1), which punishes only those disclosures that were both knowingly and willfully made. Moreover, the penalties under proposed Section 1525 are much greater: up to a year in prison and a ten thousand dollar fine as opposed to a fine of no more than five thousand dollars, and no prison term, under the Privacy Act. There is no reasonable justification for such unequal treatment, unless Section 1525 is going to punish only more significant offenses. Government employees should not be subjected to the threat of criminal sanctions for disclosures of information to the American people, unless the employee intended the disclosure to injure the source or subject of the information, or the employee intended to gain personal pecuniary advantage from the disclosure. Section 1525 should be amended accordingly.

Finally, the language of Section 1525 should be revised simply to make it clearer. The present single, run-on sentence should be divided into at least two separate sentences. With such a division, and the addition of the aforementioned amendments, Section 1525(a) will read as follows:

"(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, in violation of a specific duty imposed upon him as a public servant or former public servant by a statute, or regulation, rule, or order issued pursuant thereto, he discloses trade secrets or intimate personal information, to which he has or had access only in his capacity as a public servant, where the intent of the disclosure was to cause injury to the source or subject of the information or to benefit financially the person making such disclosure. This section applies only to information that had been provided to the government: (1) by a person, other than a public servant acting in his official capacity; and (2) solely in order to comply with:

"(A) a requirement of an application for a patent, copyright, license, employment, or benefit; or

"(B) a specific duty imposed by law upon such other person."

SECTION 3825

Subchapter C of Chapter 38 concerns post-sentencing imprisonment and release, excluding parole. For a convicted person, the decisions of the Bureau of Prisons under this Subchapter probably affect his or her life more than any others made during the period of incarceration. Certainly the public has a significant stake in assuring that such decisions are made on rational and nondiscriminatory grounds. In the past, there have been many instances, for example, of transfers from one prison facility to another less desirable facility in retaliation for the exercise of First Amendment rights.

In view of the overriding importance of sentencing decisions to an inmate and to society, the advisability of exempting these decisions from the procedural protections of the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), 5 U.S.C. §§ 551-59, 701-06, as Section 3825 would do, is very doubtful. Be that as it may, the determination totally to exempt the Bureau of Prison's records of decisions from public scrutiny under the FOIA and the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 552 and 552a, is indefensible. Inmates who have access to records explaining the basis of transfers and other sentencing decisions are more apt to accept those decisions and are more apt to react favorably to rehabilitation programs. Just as important, citizens are more apt to put their trust in, and to give their support to, our correctional system if they have access to the documentation of its workings. Thus, even if the exemption in Section 3825 from the APA's procedural is retained, the exemption from our open Government laws should be stricken. This can easily be accomplished by amending Section 3825 to read as follows (additional matter is italic): "The provisions of 5 U.S.C. 551, 553 through 559, and 701 through 706.

do not apply to the making of any determination, decision, or order under this subchapter."

NEW YORK COUNTY LAWYERS' ASSOCIATION.
New York, N.Y., June 13, 1977.

KENNETH FEINBERG, Esq.,
Committee on the Judiciary,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. FEINBERG: In response to your request for areas for possible further consideration with respect to the conforming amendments to titles other than Title 18 in connection with the new federal criminal code, I would like to mention the following questions (which have not been, however, the subject of any specific position by our Committee):

S. 1, 8/15/75 version, p. 435-36, sec. 9115: should there be an exception for:

Communication of information to a member of Congress or a Congressional Committee? This might be important to protect someone who "blows the whistle" with regard to a matter of public concern and who might otherwise be threatened with the spectre of actual or possible prosecution.

Communications requested by a member of Congress or Congressional committee? This might be important to protect full congressional access to ideas and recommendations from those with the most information. Limiting access to ideas flowing through approved channels would prevent consideration of many alternatives other than a bureaucratically sanctioned "party line".

The section as drafted is obviously not intended to cover the kinds of situations mentioned, but its existence and possible misinterpretation might exert an in terroram effect absent clarification by amendment or Committee Report language.

S. 1, 8/15/75 version, p. 512, sec. 386 covers the "Denture Crimes Act," making it a crime to transport in commerce or with the use of the mails any dentures made by one lacking a license to practice dentistry under the laws of the state into which the dentures are brought, where required by such state law. This is a mercantilist provision preventing even licensed personnel in State X from competing with those in State Y. The analogy would be a federal law penalizing legal advice by a California lawyer to a New York resident. Further, licensing is not always in the public interest, as frequently noted in recent days. The federal interest in a criminal provision of this type reinforcing state licensing laws is questionable at best.

S. 1, 8/15/75 version, p. 760-707, sec. 6008, 6009 continue criminal penalties for private carriage of mail. The need for a statutory monopoly in this field supported by criminal sanctions today may well be questioned. Further, many types of private delivery systems in fact compete with the Postal Service, making the theoretical prohibitions somewhat obsolete and perhaps making any prosecution today even unfair to one singled out. The federal interest in providing postal service does not necessarily extend to punishing citizens who, not satisfied with the service, might wish to "do it yourself" within limited areas. The argument to the contrary—that private delivery services would simply "skim the cream" and leave the unprofitable work to the Postal Service—is similar to the CAB controversy over limiting competition on prime runs as a way of subsidizing socially desirable unprofitable ones. It may be better to give subsidies to unprofitable but necessary postal or personal transportation directly rather than via Crown monopolies.

As noted, these are questions merely, in response to your request, and not Committee positions.

Respectfully,

RICHARD A. GIVENS,
Chairman, Committee on Federal Legislation.

GEORGIA DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
EMPLOYMENT SECURITY AGENCY,
Atlanta, Ga., May 13, 1977

HON. EDWARD KENNEDY,
Member, U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: This letter is in regard to S. 1437 authored by you and Senator McClellan now pending in the Committee on the Judiciary providing for codification, revision and reform of the Federal Criminal Code. This Bill is immeasurably superior to previous versions. The staff work on it has been excellent.

There is one matter which I would like to present to you for your attention and for your consideration. That has to do with the language of Section 1516 on pages 92 and 93 of S. 1437.

My first comment on these sections right along in here is that we have done considerable research on existing laws relating to these same subject matters and find that the codification in S. 1437 clearly states what Congress from the beginning has intended these laws to be notwithstanding the sometimes vague language in the present laws, intermittent changes over the years and conflicting interpretations by various Federal Courts.

We agree with the proposed codification in S. 1437 and particularly with the language of the other sections in subchapter B on pages 90, 91, 92, 93 and 94.

While we understand what is meant by Section 1516, we think for the purposes of clarity, a new subparagraph (c) should be added on page 93 in lieu of the present subparagraph (c), the new paragraph to read as follows:

"(c) The provisions of this section shall not apply to officers, officials and employees of State governments or any of their political subdivisions or entities nor to buildings or facilities owned, rented, occupied or operated by them."

We suggested further that subparagraph (c) as it appears in S. 1437 be redesignated as subparagraph (d) and that it be added after the above paragraph to read as follows:

"(c) Grading—An offense described in this section is a Class A misdemeanor."

Please let me compliment you and Senator McClellan and others for the good work which you have done trying to bring some order out of a very chaotic condition as regards Federal Criminal Statutes. Under S. 1437 it will be possible for a person to read the same and know what is prohibited and what is not.

With the expression of my highest esteem for you and with warmest regards,

Always sincerely,

WALTER O. BROOKS,
Director.

---

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO LAW SCHOOL,
Chicago, Ill., June 20, 1977.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: To my deep regret, earlier made and firm obligations preclude my accepting the invitation to appear before the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. I was advised, however, that a letter to you on certain aspects of the testimony I had planned to offer may be appropriate and of some use. I do hope so.

Let me open by expressing the satisfaction that all who care about the shape, content and operation of the federal criminal justice system must feel in your initiative and that of your colleagues in the Senate, expressed in S. 1437. It is surely time that order and principle are brought to the federal statute book of crime and punishment; S. 1437 is a secure foundation for such an effort.

In this letter I shall confine myself to a few comments on the sentencing provisions in the proposed Federal Criminal Code.

Responsible students of the federal criminal justice system have come to appreciate that present legislative provisions on criminal sentences are so scattered and uneven, and present judicial sentences are so characterized by arbitrary and unjust disparities that it is impossible to fashion a fair, just and community protective criminal justice system around them. Charge and plea bargaining, at one end of the process, and parole discretion at the other compound and vary the mixture. A responsible balance between legislative, judicial and administrative sentencing functions remains elusive. The sentencing provisions of the proposed Code provide a rational system of checks and balances which should in time lead the federal system to fair and just sentencing of criminal offenders.

Of course I have quibbles and disagreements. They merely slightly cloud my enthusiasm for the broad approach to sentencing in the proposed Code.

As a quibble, section 2003(a)(2)(d): Is it really appropriate in deciding on what sentence to impose to consider rehabilitative purposes? For example, federal prisons should provide more vocational and educational training than they now do, but it seems to me an abuse of power to send a convicted criminal to prison for such training who, lacking that need, would not have been imprisoned. On this point, I respectfully agree with the testimony already presented to your subcommittee by Norman Carlson, Director of the Bureau of Prisons. Some re-fashioning of the language of section 2003 and comparable sections on sentencing purposes could easily put rehabilitative processes into proper sentencing perspective.

As a disagreement: I doubt the wisdom of those mandatory minimum sentences and those provisions for parole ineligibility which are to be found in the Code. They tend to be largely nullified in practice: they shift discretion from judge to prosecutor, or from parole board to the judiciary, in an unsatisfactory and unprincipled way. They are politically attractive, it is true, but seems to me out of phase with the broad and balanced approach of the other sentencing provisions of the proposed Code.

Let me put aside quibbles and disagreements and come to areas of enthusiastic support. The U.S. Sentencing Commission, an idea first suggested, I believe, by Judge Marvin Frankel in his excellent Criminal Sentences: Law Without Order, will be a mechanism to bring justice to the present disparity of federal sentencing. The Commission can, over time, produce guidelines and policy statements, within, and sometimes overlapping, legislative categories of criminal sanctions, which will contribute to rational and fair sentencing based on our best present knowledge, on feedback from how sentences operate in practice, on the continuing controls of Congress and the decisions on sentencing from the newly-established judicial appellate procedures. A sound process may be fashioned by which a common law of sentencing may evolve. It is an enormously important development in the jurisprudence of punishment.

Enoyed by the hope of passage of this Federal Criminal Code, a group of scholars who have written on problems of sentencing are planning to start this summer drafting a series of "guidelines" and "policy statements" under the terms of the Code. We may thus be of some assistance to the Sentencing Commission when, as I hope, they take up this difficult task.

The Sentencing Commission is the linchpin of the punishment system of the proposed Code: For this reason, I wonder whether the provisions in Part E are the best that could be devised. Should membership of the United States Sentencing Commission be designated only by the Judicial Conference of the United States? May that appointment procedure not overload the Commission with judges? The Commission's role is to acquire knowledge of sentencing and its efficacy and to shape the evolution of fair sentencing principles. This complex task requires, I believe, also some of the knowledge of other actors in and students of the criminal justice system. The insight and experience of a member of a parole board may well be appropriate to membership of the Sentencing Commission: there may even be room for an academic or scholar in that the insights of research feedback on sentencing must be incorporated into the Commission's work: and there are several other appropriate professional paths, in my view, to membership on the Commission. Would it not be appropriate to reduce the appointive power of the Judicial Conference and give some of it, perhaps the bulk, to the Executive? It seems so to me, being likely to provide a more roundly informed Commission, better able to harmonize legislative, judicial and administrative sentencing discretions contemplated under the proposed Code.

May I comment on two more points of importance in the proposed Code: the question of parole and the Parole Board, and the question of appellate review?

I note that some witnesses have advocated the abolition of parole with the establishment of legislative sentencing criteria and the creation of the Sentencing Commission. Norman Carlson has gone further and advocated the abolition of "good time." Both recommendations are congenial to my view of what the sentencing of criminals will be like in the future, assuming the gradual perfectability of men and women and their institutions. But at this stage of our efforts to reshape our jurisprudence and practice of crime control it seems to me that there is a great deal to be said for the preservation of the parole discretion and of "good time" (provided it be applied with due process) to assist in the gradual evolution of principled sentencing. For the time being I think we need the safety valves they provide. And further, the proposed Code would bring pressure to bear on the Parole Board to pursue its present plans for earlier fixation of presumptive parole dates under firm and predictable criteria. The proposed Code makes the Parole Board subject to the guidelines of the Sentencing Commission;

indeed, it may go too far toward restricting parole release discretion; but certainly a wise use over time by the Sentencing Commission of its powers could lead to a better informed judgment than can now be made on the proper role of a parole board. The abolition of parole boards may prove desirable; the bill allows for movement in that direction and, if appropriate, for a gradual reduction of the Parole Board's discretion and a consequential expansion of that of the Sentencing Commission.

Appellate Review: The proposed Code does not, in my opinion, go far enough. Respectfully, I would concur with the testimony offered to the Subcommittee by Judge Frankel. Building on the Sentencing Commission's guidelines and policy statements, it should be possible under the Code to use appellate review as a means of further developing guidelines and policy statements and of fashioning a common law of sentencing. Principled sentencing is central to a fair criminal justice system. I appreciate the present pressure of business on the federal courts but a proposed Code should not let expediency preclude a design that can in time achieve a fair criminal justice system. Ample appellate review is essential to the interlocking sentencing relationships in the proposed Code between congressional control, the influence of the Sentencing Commission, and the work of trial judges.

Sincerely,

NORVAL MORRIS, Dean.

---

ARKANSAS WOMEN'S CLUB,
Eureka Springs, Ark., May 20, 1977.

GENERAL FEDERATION CLUBWOMEN NEWS,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR EDITOR AND STAFF MEMBERS: We, the Womans Club of Eureka Springs, Arkansas, want to go on record as supporting the General Federation of Club Woman News in its "Justice for Citizens" campaign.

We share your views concerning the tendency of our courts to protect the rights of criminals rather than the rights of victims and we are hopeful that the combined efforts of our women throughout the nation may be a compelling factor which will bring about much needed change.

Below is our statement of commitment as you requested:

"Whereas, compassion for the criminal at the expense of the victim is at the root of our rising crime problem; and

"Whereas, too often court interpretations mock justice and affront the victim and release, suspend sentence, or parole offenders who return to the streets to commit more crimes; and

"Whereas, we need to approach the problem at the beginning point, in the sentencing, to insure that lawbreakers will be punished and will not be encouraged to contribute to the suffering and terror of the law-abiding; therefore

"Resolved, that the Womans Club of Eureka Springs, Arkansas go on record supporting General Federation CLUBWOMAN NEWS' JUSTICE FOR CITIZENS campaign which calls for a mandatory minimum sentence, without parole, suspension or probation, for violent crimes, in an effort to promote community welfare and the security and wellbeing of the general citizenry.

Sincerely,

Mrs. C. J. TYSON,
Corresponding Secretary.

---

STATEMENT OF JAMES V. BENNETT, FORMER DIRECTOR OF U.S. BUREAU OF PRISONS

As the former Director of the U.S. Bureau of Prisons and a much chastened advocate of sentencing reform, I appear before you to suggest a word of caution about the pending proposals on sentencing lest the admirable efforts of a decade to revamp and modernize the criminal code are frustrated.

Praiseworthy as may be the goal to structure and guide judicial discretion in the imposition of sentences, its achievement along the lines suggested in the pending bill will require so much research, so much debate, and so much controversy that the impressive progress so far made by the Brown Commission, the Committees of the Congress, and a host of scholars may be stymied for years.

The proposal to delay the effective date of the Act for two years in order to give the suggested Sentencing Commission time to obtain funds, organize, select its staff, prepare its guidelines and policies, and obtain the approval of the Congress of its findings is, I suggest, much too optimistic. It would be far better to split off Part E of the bill and go forward with immediate approval of the revision of Title 18 of the U.S. Code. Its sentencing proposal can be taken up later.

FORMULATION OF SENTENCING GUIDELINES MIND BOGLING

The proposal to establish a nine-person Sentencing Commission of judges, lawyers, laymen, and perhaps ex-prisoners to draft really meaningful and definite guidelines to channel the concepts of upwards of 500 judges in their disposition of hundreds of different crimes is an overwhelming, not to say chimerical, task.

I have read much of the literature on sentencing, listened to much rhetoric about the lawlessness of our methods of imposing sentences—indeed contributed to some of it myself—but have yet to learn of any precise definition of the factors that a court should take into consideration in disposing of particular cases.

SELF-EVIDENT GUIDELINES

To be sure, a court can be urged to take into account the seriousness or gravity of the offense, the prior record of the defendant, his age, his emotional problems and handicaps, his work history, the extent of harm done to others or to society, public attitudes about the crime, deterrent values and so on and so on. But these are mostly admonitions which will be impossible to scale or quantify, even with the help of computer science. Inevitably, guidelines for sentencing many offenders will be articulated in such vague and ambiguous terms as to be of little help to the conscientious and experienced judge. Moreover, recent pre-sentence reports have become so lacking in depth and analysis that the court is severely handicapped in making judgments.

And if some genius could be found to verbalize a set of really definite and useful guidelines for robbery, or auto theft, or counterfeiting, how can he define the factors that must be taken into account in disposing of an anti-trust violation, an income tax case including many with implications of social significance, a charge of perjury, bank embezzlement, or any of the myriad types of drug-law violation? And, the Commission must spell out factors and guidelines that Congress must approve!

DIFFICULTIES OF LEGISLATIVELY MANDATED GUIDELINES

If, in all deference, we suggest Congress has great difficulty agreeing on the penalty for a marijuana smoker or the disposition of a military deserter, how can it possibly be expected to approve definitive guidelines for sentencing a Jimmy Hoffa, an Alger Hiss, a Patty Hearst, a John Dean, a John Mitchell, or a Dave Dellinger—the draft evader and militant leader of the war-protesters.

The American Bar Association spent much time, money, and effort to develop a set of standards for the administration of Criminal Justice. Among them was one volume dealing with sentencing. The entire thrust of the standards on sentencing was to minimize the role of the legislature in determining precise sentences. It urged legislatures not to specify mandatory sentences and that the court be provided with a wide range of alternative dispositions so that a sentence appropriate to each individual case, the times, the potentialities of the offender, the correctional facilities available, and the purposes of the criminal justice system.

In view of this standard, I should think the Bar Association could not accept a plan which required that a detailed formulation of sentencing criteria be subject to approval by Congress with its many faceted attitudes with respect to crime control.

BROAD SCOPE OF SENTENCING COMMISSION

The proposal (Sec. 994(a)2) that the Sentencing Commission may, from time to time, promulgate "general policy statements regarding application of the guidelines or any other aspect of sentencing that in the view of the Commission would further the purposes set forth in Section 101b of Title 18" seems bound to raise serious practical and constitutional problems since the general purpose of this section, among other things, is to "prescribe appropriate sanctions" for engaging in conduct that causes or threatens harm to those individual or public interests for which federal protection is appropriate.

I cite this chiefly to call further attention to the many aspects of the proposed sentencing procedure that are bound to be controversial. The ultimate abolition of the Parole Board without providing any alternative system of aftercare or supervision or any means to ameliorate a sentence other than by Presidential intervention is another. The virtual abandonment of the "good time" system without providing any other system of incentives for good conduct is, in my judgment, a fatal flaw that forebodes institutional violence.

PLEA BARGAINING THE CRUX OF THE DISPARITY PROBLEM

The crux of the disparity of the sentencing problem, however, is not alone to bring more even-handed justice to the fifteen percent of those who stand trial but to the 85 percent of the approximately 59,000 defendants whose sentence was set, to all practical intents and purposes, by the prosecutor in a plea negotiation. It is the 94 U.S. Attorneys and their hundreds of assistants who determine the charges, make recommendations as to sentences, and largely determine the disposition of the offenders who do not stand trial. Spelling out sentencing guidelines, incidentally, would give the prosecutor another bargaining chip and, in all likelihood, further exacerbate the sentencing dilemma. The speedy trial law, on the other hand, is an incentive for the prosecutor to accept a negotiated plea and sentence that may further contribute to disparity.

AN ALTERNATE PROPOSAL

The effort to bring about a more consistent, a more rational, a more effective system of sentencing surely should not be abandoned. A number of alternatives to the sentencing guideline plan have been proposed: (a) flat sentences; (b) presumptive sentences; (c) sentencing councils; (d) mandatory minimum sentencing; (e) review boards; (f) sentencing seminars; and (g) development of a system of judicially promulgated case law on sentencing stemming from appellate overview of the reasons stated by the district judge for the sentence.

It would seem the part of wisdom for the Federal Government with its heavy responsibility for law enforcement to delay venturing into so baffling a field until it had commissioned a group to draft specific sentencing guidelines and subjected them to study by knowledgeable groups. It might indeed be possible to find several courts that would voluntarily undertake to implement them. The results could be studied and improvements made, or the plan abandoned, and one of the other proposals tried.

Meanwhile, the substantive code with its enormous promise of important improvements in existing law can be enacted. To delay its enactment until a highly controversial sentencing scheme is developed and wins the approval of the Congress would be "throwing out the baby with the bath water."

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT,
Olympia, Wash., July 8, 1977.

SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE ON CRIMINAL LAWS AND PROCEDURES,
New Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.
(Attention: Mr. Paul C. Summit.)

GENTLEMEN: I appreciate the opportunity to comment on the provisions of SB 1437. My first comment is a rather minor one and regards the definitions found at the end of a particular subchapter which apply only to that section. It might be more convenient to place these at the beginning of the section where they are not easily overlooked.

CHAPTER 3.—CULPABLE STATES MIND

Rather than commenting on the chapter specifically, my comments will be in subsequent chapters whose provisions require substantially less than the intentional or knowing state of mind normally presumed to exist where a particular state of mind is unspecified.

CHAPTER 4.—COMPLICITY

§ 401. Liability of an Accomplice. Section (a) (2) appears to be a method for making one liable as a principal for what is in fact the crime of "solicitation" (§ 1003) which ordinarily carries a penalty one grade lower than that of the crime solicited. (§ 1003(d)). If this is in fact true, I question whether this is an appropriate degree of prosecutorial discretion, given the ability to charge two or more different crimes with the same elements but different penalties.

Section (b) Liability as Coconspirator. There appears to be an inconsistency with the general conspiracy statute, § 1002, which provides one is liable as a conspirator for the same grade of crime as the most serious crime which was an objective of the conspiracy (the agreement to engage in criminal conduct). Section 401(b) renders a coconspirator liable as a principal for any conduct of another party to the conspiracy which is not a part of the agreement or, arguably, the "objective" but is simply "reasonably foreseeable."

CHAPTER 10.—OFFENSES OF GENERAL APPLICABILITY

§ 1002. Criminal Conspiracy. Our recently drafted criminal code for Washington State, RCW 9A.28.040(1), sought a compromise between the "any objective" language used in § 1002 and the "unequivocal step" language employed in the Model Penal Code and original recommendations to our State legislature. Our statute adopted the "substantial step" requirement which seemed to me to be a more reasonable middle ground. I am also concerned about section (c) (Defense Precluded). Section 1002 would seem to allow conviction of one who agreed, but performed no act, even if the individual who conspired with him was agent or informer and therefore immune from prosecution and the latter individual was responsible for all significant overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy.

§ 1003. Criminal Solicitation. This provision seems a bit overbroad to me. It could be argued every drug enforcement agent who assisted in arranging a sale would be guilty of this crime as the statute is presently worded. The statute also appears to require nothing more than speech as actus reus. In our recently revised criminal code, RCW 9A.28.030, criminal solicitation is defined as "(1) A person is guilty of criminal solicitation when, with intent to promote or facilitate the commission of a crime, he offers to give or gives money or other thing of value to another to engage in specific conduct which would constitute such crime or which would establish complicity of such other person in its commission or attempted commission had such crime been attempted or committed."

CHAPTER 11.—OFFENSES INVOLVING NATIONAL DEFENSE

§ 1102. Armed Rebellion or Insurrection. It seems to me this statute needs more concise definition. The terms "armed rebellion" or "armed insurrection" appears to provide possible void for vagueness issues.

§ 1103. Engaging in Para-Military Activity. I have some problems with this provision which relates back to the chapter 3 definitions of culpable states of mind. The purpose of an organization training one in use of weapons would be "an existing circumstance." Guilt under this section would only require a showing that the defendant was aware of a "risk" that the purpose of the organization was the unauthorized assumption, by threat of force, of a government agency, rather than proof he knew that to be its purpose. Moreover, this provision does not require a showing that the training or caching of weapons was in furtherance of the unlawful purpose. For instance, the Black Panthers cache weapons in fear of assaults by a rightist para-military group. This would be enough, arguably, to establish guilt since the purpose to assume control of government activity by threat of force has at various times been an expressed purpose of that organization.

§ 1115. Obstructing Military Recruitment or Induction; and § 1116. Inciting or Aiding Mutiny, Insubordination, or Desertion. I agree with the legitimate aims of these sections, but I am concerned about overbreadth. I would hope these statutes could be altered so as to include more than speech as a sufficient actus reus and also be more specific as to the extent of the incitement or obstruction required in order to survive an overbreadth challenge. As presently constituted, they seem to have a potential chilling effect on peace and disarmament movements traditionally thought to be protected by the First Amendment.

CHAPTER 13.—OFFENSES INVOLVING GOVERNMENT PROCESSES

§ 1302. Obstructing a Government Function by Physical Interference. I am uncertain of the specific situations this subsection was meant to encompass. It does seem the possibility of a one-year jail sentence against one who staged a sitdown strike or sit-in at a federal office building may be a bit overbroad and further grading as to various types of obstruction which might be committed would be appropriate.

CHAPTER 14.—OFFENSES INVOLVING TAXATION

§ 1411. Smuggling. The culpable state of mind as to section (a) (1) (B) ought to be "knowing" rather than the "reckless" standard which is applied in the absence of a specific section to the contrary. With the proliferation of regulations there could always be the risk that formal conditions had not been complied with and the severity of the potential sentence seems to make a "knowing" standard more appropriate.

§ 1412. Trafficking in Smuggled Property; and § 1413. Receiving Smuggled Property. I believe these sections have the same deficiencies as section 1411.

CHAPTER 15.—OFFENSES INVOLVING INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS

§§ 1501–06. It seems ironic that the grading of these offenses are listed as misdemeanors while nearly all the offenses against the government carry more severe sanctions. It seems that the danger to constitutional government is identical whether in an act of defiance against the government or an act violating the civil rights of its citizens. An example of this is the comparison of the "strikebreaking" provision in section 1506, which requires the use or threat of force, with section 1302 (obstructing government function), which requires only a physical interference.

§ 1511 (a) (2). I am concerned about the phrase "something of value" applicable to this provision. Is it the same as "anything of value" (p. 14, line 32) which means "any direct or indirect gain or advantages, or anything that might reasonably be regarded by the beneficiary as a direct or indirect gain or advantage, including a direct or indirect gain or advantage to any other person." If this in fact is similar, it would seem to include any innocuous campaign promise and be overboard. If another definition is intended it should be spelled out in the definition section at the end of the chapter.

§ 1513 (a) (3). This provision also seems overbroad and places a penalty on what could be simply an administrative oversight. If the present grading is to be maintained it should be tightened to punish only intentional misrepresentation by the responsible organization.

§ 1516. Soliciting a Political Contribution as a Federal Public Servant or in a Federal Building. With the exemption noted in section (b) (affirmative defense), would it not be better to control this through civil service sanctions and fines, rather than making this a criminal offense.

§ 1521. Eavesdropping. The defense for "quality control" checks should be limited to preclude it in instances where the information obtained is transferred to anyone not employed by the common carrier or used for a purpose other than quality control. The same would apply to section 1524 and the defense should protect only in innocent interception or one necessary to monitor service by the carrier. It should not protect subsequent disclosure for any other purpose.

CHAPTER 16.—OFFENSES INVOLVING THE PERSON

§ 1601. Murder. I am convinced by the "loss of self-control" defense, section (b). It appears to be a substitute for the traditional protection of the person rationale for self-defense and greatly reduces an individual's responsibility for control of emotions. I would urge a limitation of the felony-murder provision (section (3)) to instances in which the conduct during the course of the specified crime which in fact causes the death must itself demonstrate a reckless regard for human life. Such a provision would dispense with many of the problems inherent in felony murder statutes, particularly when coupled with a merger rule which the federal act has adopted. By limiting application of felony murder to instances in which death is caused by reckless conduct, focus is placed on the felon's willingness to employ dangerous means to perpetrate a felony. This is the only sort of conduct which a felony murder rule can logically be designed to deter.

§ 1621. Kidnapping. The grading of this crime seems to encourage the kidnapper to persevere. It is only a Grade A crime if the actor fails to voluntarily release the victim unharmed prior to trial. On the basis of this reasoning, one who succeeds in collecting ransom and then releases his victim is no more culpable than one who gives up sooner.

§ 1624. This affirmative defense should also extend to parents or guardians of adult incompetents.

§ 1641. Rape. This section takes needed steps toward reform but could go further. The definition of "spouse", section 1646(a)(3), could be limited additionally so as not to include persons living separate and apart even if there is no judicial decree of separation. This definition is related to the "not a spouse" exception contained in the definition of the substantive offense.

§ 1641(a)(2). I am concerned that the grading of a forcible rape may be too lenient. It is in harmony with the gradation of other violent crimes against a person, Maiming, § 1611 (class C); Aggravated Battery, § 1612 (class D), but no more severe than most of the crimes against property. It seems to me the violent crimes against persons should be more severe than the sanction for a simple burglary and that, for example, aggravated battery which is a class D felony, should be at least as severe as simple burglary, a class C felony and arguably more severe.

The rape statutes could be more clear on the nature of consent which is sufficient to exculpate. Our state statute, RCW 9A.04.010(6) defines "consent" to mean that at the time of the act of sexual intercourse there are actual words or conduct indicating freely given agreement to have sexual intercourse.

CHAPTER 18.—OFFENSES INVOLVING PUBLIC ORDER, SAFETY, HEALTH, AND WELFARE

§§ 1811-15. I have not been a trial court judge for seven years and do not have current experience with sentencing problems involving drug offenders. My general feeling at that time regarding dealers at all levels was one of outrage and the temptation was to impose punitive sentences. In retrospect I question the effectiveness of such a policy. While I can and do justify this attitude toward those involved in the narcotics trade at a commercial level, most of those arrested and brought before me were addicts themselves. Incarceration for some time for addicts may be justifiable, but the majority of those I observed did not have access to effective help for addiction while incarcerated. They also had better or equal access to drugs in prison compared to their availability on the street and on release were in no better position to remain away from drugs than they were before they were incarcerated. I am enclosing copies of two opinions I wrote in Bresolin v. Morris which set forth some of my concerns about handling of drug offenders in institutions. The only effective programs I have observed dealing with addicts are those for addicts who want help and are supervised by ex-addicts, where close supervision and positive peer pressure is combined with effective post-release job placement and close personal supervision is provided after release. My candid observation is that, while the public is very supportive of punitive sentences for anyone involved in drug offenses, with the exception of those possessing minor amounts of marijuana, the effectiveness of such programs, as evidenced by the recent New York legislation, has been minimal.

§ 1821. Explosives Offenses. In section 1821(a)(1) the second phrase in the provision seems a bit broad, and I would suggest it be amended to read "with knowledge it is intended to be used by its ultimate recipients to commit a felony."

§ 1823. Using a Weapon in the Course of a Crime. This provision is an excellent one, eliminating some of the problems of definition and enforcement we have encountered in our state.

§§ 1831-34. Riot Offenses. Although I appreciate these provisions have been changed since the original proposals in S. 1, I still believe the proposed provisions have problems. The most serious is the failure to grade the offense in a manner which distinguishes a barroom brawl or minor disturbance which can easily be controlled by local law enforcement efforts, from a civil insurrection. The provisions originally put forth by the Brown Commission Report at pp. 241-45 offer the flexibility needed.

SENTENCING

My comments on the new sentencing provisions of the Senate Bill would generally echo the testimony of Judge Marvin Frankel, who has already appeared before your committee. The presence of guidelines with a requirement for statement of reason for deviating from them is a positive step. My experience with sentencing and other judges, however, has been that the greatest damage to the public and unfairness to the offender comes from judges who have an unjustifiable bias in sentencing a particular offender. Many judges recognize what these biases are but are able to articulate reasons to justify them, sufficient to pass any appellate review of a sentence. I have been intrigued with the concept of a panel of two or three judges who would initially impose a sentence. This would seem to me to largely eliminate the element of individual bias and force judges to articulate, at least to each other, the reason for their views in a given case at a time when they could be modified by a group discussion. The time demands on a judge to be involved in a small panel for sentencing would not greatly exceed those now required for individual sentencing. The added number of cases to be decided would be offset by sharing the time spent agonizing over the proper decision with someone else. Such a system would seem to me to greatly reduce the chances of the occasional unjustifiable grant of probation to those involved in organized crime or anti-trust violations, and on the other hand furnish an additional person to be a bulwark in cases where public passion is unreasonably strong.

I have grave concern about the workability of appellate review of sentences. Delay is a great curse in the appellate system and criminal justice process and is inherent in appellate review. What appellate review produces is a panel decision on sentencing by judges removed from the individual offender and the victim or victims. These persons are essential ingredients to reaching a proper sentence and their presence is often helpful. Additional factors considered by every judge in sentencing are the availability of alternative resources to incarceration and their effectiveness. I believe personal evaluation of these, whether job opportunities, half-way houses or work release programs, is essential. This is impractical at the appellate level.

§3611. Determination of Mental Competency to Stand Trial. The proposed statute limits the authority to raise this issue to the defendant or the state. Although the trial judge can be viewed as possessing inherent power to raise the issue, this power should be articulated in the statute. The burden to establish incompetency is by a preponderance of the evidence. Presumably this burden falls upon the moving party, or if raised by the court, upon the government. The statute, however, does not specify who must carry it and it should.

§ 3613. Hospitalization of a Person Acquitted by Reason of Insanity. Section 3613(d) and (e) places an insurmountable barrier before a defendant who is committed following a verdict of not guilty by reason of insanity. The standard for initial commitment following such a verdict is "clear and convincing evidence that release would create a substantial risk of serious injury to another person or serious damage to the property of another." The release provisions, while somewhat ambiguous, appear to place the burden upon the defendant to establish that he no longer possesses a substantial danger by a preponderance of the evidence. The standards for release of one subjected to a criminal mental commitment should be the same as those released as civilly committed mental patients. Such identity in standards may be mandated by the equal protection clause. Jackson v. Indiana, 406 U.S. 715 (1972); Baxstrom v. Herold, 383 U.S. 107 (1966).

§ 3835. Revocation of Parole. Section (e) does not specify the burden of proof to establish a parole violation. The committee should consider the use of a clear and convincing standard. The current Washington statute requires proof of a parole violation by a preponderance of the evidence. See RCW 9.95.125.

I hope you find these comments helpful. If I can be of further assistance, please advise.

Very truly yours,

ROBERT F. UTTER.

Enclosure.

Dec. 1975]

BRESOLIN v. MORRIS

241

86 Wn.2d 241, 543 P.2d 325

[No. 43846. Department One. December 11, 1975.]

BRADLEY LAVE BRESOLIN, Petitioner, v. CHARLES MORRIS,
as Secretary of the Department of Social and Health Services, Respondent.

- [1] Judgment — Vacation — Collateral Proceeding — Void Judgment. A final judgment may be vacated during a collateral proceeding only by demonstrating that it is void, i.e., entered without jurisdiction over the parties or the subject matter or without the inherent power to enter the decree involved.
- [2] Controlled Substances — Convicts — Isolated Facilities — Necessity. Under the terms of RCW 69.32.090 the State is required to provide facilities within prisons wherein health authorities may treat convicts suffering from narcotics addiction. Such facilities must include isolation areas if they are deemed necessary to such treatment.
- [3] Contempt—Officers—Convicts—Condition of Imprisonment—Failure To Comply. Failure of responsible officers to comply with an order concerning certain conditions of imprisonment of convicts may be treated as criminal or civil contempt by the courts or may result in the release or transfer of convicts whose conditions are the object of the order.
- [4] Constitutional Law—Statutes—Construction—Source of Relief. When judicial relief is available within the terms of existing statutes, relief on constitutional grounds will not be afforded.

Application filed in the Supreme Court August 13, 1975, to compel admission of a convict to a drug treatment program. Granted in part.

Richard Emery, Steven G. Scott, John G. Ziegler, and Allen Ressler, for petitioner.

Slade Gorton, Attorney General, and William C. Collins, Assistant, for respondent.

UTTER, J.—Petitioner seeks a writ of mandamus ordering his transfer to the drug treatment program at Western State Hospital. Alternatively, if this motion is denied, he asks for an order adjudging respondent Charles Morris, as Secretary of the Department of Social and Health Services, in contempt of this court for failure to abide by our order entered December 2, 1974. That order directed respondent to "make available to health authorities portions of correctional institutions under his jurisdiction for the isolation and treatment, at public expense, of petitioner" for narcotic addiction. The primary questions presented by this writ are the extent of petitioner's rights under the December 2, 1974 order and the nature of the proper remedy for this court to enter in enforcement of that order.

The proceedings leading to the entry of the order for isolation and treatment began with a petition filed by Bresolin on August 28, 1973, seeking his discharge from custody and alleging that he had been consistently and arbitrarily denied treatment for his narcotic addiction. Petitioner claimed this treatment was directed by RCW 69.32.090 and the eighth and fourteenth amendments to the United States Constitution. Hearings were held on the merits of the petition and this court referred to the Superior Court for Walla Walla County a series of questions upon which we desired to have evidence taken. Findings of fact were entered by the Superior Court on September 23, 1974. These findings indicated petitioner, who is now 31, is psychologically addicted to use of narcotic drugs and has been since he was 18, and that he was both physically and psychologically addicted at the times he committed the crimes for which he was imprisoned. His current incarceration resulted from the armed robbery of a narcotics dealer to obtain drugs. He is continuing to take drugs on a weekly to bi-weekly basis while at the penitentiary and these drugs include, occasionally, heroin. Although the diminished dosage he receives has cured his physical dependence, his psychological dependence on drugs remains. At the time the trial court heard testimony, there was no drug counseling available at the penitentiary, nor was there any form of therapy available at the institution to cure or rehabilitate narcotic addicts. The court found the State had the power and duty to provide petitioner treatment under RCW 69.32.090, which should be administered to him in light of his psychological addiction to drugs.

In response to the court's order, petitioner received a letter on March 13, 1975, from respondent's legal counsel informing him that three alternatives were available: (1) transfer to the Washington State Reformatory to be screened for entry into the drug treatment program there which did not include an isolated treatment program; (2) remain at the Washington State Penitentiary and continue to participate in the social therapy program which was not a drug-oriented treatment program and did not include an isolated treatment program; or (3) wait for establishment of a drug treatment program at the Washington State Penitentiary which was then in the process of being funded for two counselors.

Petitioner, after receipt of this letter, moved to hold respondent in contempt or to have the court order him transferred to an existing drug treatment program at Western State Hospital. Petitioner's motion was withdrawn on May 29, 1975, as he believed he was then eligible for the program at Western State. Following respondent's refusal to transfer him there, petitioner again moved for a writ of mandamus ordering his transfer to the Western State Hospital program, or, if this was denied, an order finding respondent in contempt. It is this last motion that is before us at this time.

Respondent first contends that the court's order of December 2, 1974, focused too closely on certain language of RCW 69.32.090 and that when this statute is considered in the total context of RCW 69.32 and respondent's overall responsibility in administering this state's prisons, it does not require isolation for treatment. Respondent argues he has therefore adequately complied with the order of December 2, 1974, by making available the alternatives set forth in the March 13, 1975, letter.

The applicable statutes provide:

69.32.070 Suspected addicts — Treatment — Isolation. State, county and municipal health officers, or their authorized deputies, who are licensed physicians, within their respective jurisdictions are hereby directed and empowered, when in their judgment it is necessary to protect the public safety, health and morals, to make examinations of persons reasonably suspected of being habitual users of any narcotic drug and to require persons whom they have reason to suspect to be habitual users of any narcotic drug to report for treatment to an approved physician, and continue treatment at his own expense until cured, or to submit to treatment, provided at public expense, until cured, and also to isolate or quarantine habitual users of such narcotic drugs or their derivatives. Such officer, deputy or physician shall make a written finding that such person is an habitual user of a narcotic drug, which finding shall be filed in his office: Provided, That such habitual users shall not be isolated or quarantined until the state board of health shall first, by general regulation, determine that the quarantine or isolation of all habitual users is necessary: Provided, further, That any persons suspected as herein set forth may have present at the time of his examination, a physician of his or her own choosing: And provided further, That the suspected person shall be informed by the health officer of his or her rights under this chapter.

69.32.090 Examination and treatment of convicted persons. Any person convicted under the provisions of RCW 69.32.080 or any person who shall be confined or imprisoned in any state, county, or city prison in the state and who may be reasonably suspected by the health officer of being a narcotic addict shall be examined for and if found to be an habitual user of said drugs, or any of them, shall be treated therefor at public expense by the health officers or their deputies who are licensed physicians. The prison authorities of any state, county, or city prison are directed to make available to the health authorities, such portion of any state, county, or city prison as may be necessary for a clinic or hospital wherein all persons who may be confined or imprisoned in any such prison, and who are habitual users of said drugs or their derivatives, may be isolated and treated at public expense until cured, or, in lieu of such isolation any such person may, in the discretion of the board of health, be required to report for treatment to a licensed physician, or submit to treatment provided at public expense, as provided in RCW 69.32.070. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to interfere with the service of any sentence imposed by a court as a punishment for the commission of crime: Provided, That licensed physicians treating any narcotic addict shall, upon beginning said treatment, immediately report the same to the health officer in charge in that jurisdiction, such report to be on forms prescribed by the state board of health, and such report shall give the name of the person receiving such treatment and such other information as shall be deemed necessary by the state board of health.

[1] The order of December 2, 1974, was a final order entered in a different cause, Supreme Court No. 42966. Respondent may only attack that order in a collateral proceeding if it is absolutely void, not merely erroneous. State ex rel. Ewing v. Morris, 120 Wash. 146, 207 P. 18 (1922); State v. Lew, 25 Wn.2d 854, 172 P.2d 289 (1946); State ex rel. Superior Court v. Sperry, 79 Wn.2d 69, 483 P.2d 608 (1971). A judgment is void only where the court lacks jurisdiction of the parties or the subject matter or lacks the inherent power to enter the particular order involved. Dike v. Dike, 75 Wn.2d 1, 448 P.2d 490 (1968); see State v. Alter, 67 Wn.2d 111, 406 P.2d 765 (1965); cf. Bergren v. Adams County, 8 Wn. App. 853, 509 P.2d 661 (1973); Lange v. Johnson, 295 Minn. 320, 204 N.W.2d 205 (1973). There is no such defect here and respondent's challenge to the order must fail for that reason.

The large number of persons affected by the issues raised here, however, makes it imperative for this court to dispose of this case on the merits of the arguments as well. Testimony of respondent's expert witness established that, in his opinion, 45 to 50 percent of the prison population at the Washington State Penitentiary were convicted of crimes where drugs were either a primary or secondary factor.

[2] At the outset we take particular note of the legislative command in RCW 72.08.101 that "[t]he director of institutions shall provide for the establishment of programs and procedures for convicted persons at the state penitentiary, which are designed to be corrective, rehabilitative and reformatory of the undesirable behavior problems of such persons, as distinguished from programs and procedures essentially penal in nature." This directive reinforces the specific statutory provisions governing the treatment of addicted inmates. RCW 69.32.090 does not require the isolation of all persons addicted to narcotic drugs. The health authorities are given responsibility under RCW 69.32.070 and .090 to require narcotic addicts to report for treatment at public expense, both within and without the prison system. Narcotic addicts not already incarcerated may not be isolated until the board of health, by general regulation, determines isolation of all habitual users is necessary. The vital distinction, however, is that for those addicts who are confined in prison, the board of health need not determine by general regulation that isolation of all narcotic users is necessary before isolating and treating confined addicts. Prison authorities must provide health authorities with facilities where imprisoned addicts may be isolated, if needed, and treated. While under RCW 69.32.090 health authorities may require treatment of imprisoned addicts in the same manner as those outside prison are treated, the option of isolation must be provided. The current prison programs do not comply with the plain language of the statute, its spirit or the order of the court.

Testimony at the fact-finding hearing provided some insight into the need for the two different modes of treatment set out in the statute. At that hearing, Lyle Quasim, mental health administrator for the Department of Social and Health Services, Office of Mental Health, in charge of drug abuse programs in adult corrections, testified as one of the witnesses. Quasim stressed the need for two types of treatment: first, isolated therapeutic communities both inside and outside the penitentiary serving 35 to 40 people who have an extensive drug history; second, some program that is applicable to the penitentiary population similarly afflicted with drug problems. When asked why such programs were not available, Quasim stated the only reason was that the money was not provided. He indicated, "[t]here were herculean efforts made to encumber money at the levels that I exist at. We put in a supplemental budget request. We dealt with federal funding sources . . . I was not successful in developing additional funding."

Quasim estimated the amount of funding needed to support the two-level program at the Washington State Penitentiary in 1974 was $195,000 a year; $125,000 for the isolated therapeutic community and $70,000 for the general program.

Both staff and residents of the Washington State Penitentiary expressed concern that if the programs instituted were superficial, people would be sent to the penitentiary and other institutions for programs that provided the illusion of help, but could not in fact help. Quasim saw the institutional programs as no panacea, but necessary to the care of addiction, in the same sense as kindergarten is a necessary first step for a college graduate. He stressed the need for continuing programs after release into the community.

Affidavits on file by the two counselors now employed in the Washington State Penitentiary drug program instituted since the 1974 hearing, indicate that although the program consists of educational, individual and group counseling and placement service for those on parole, it is not effective. The reason they gave for its ineffectiveness was that residents who participated in it had to return to the general prison population where the availability of drugs and the existence of a drug subculture nullify any gains. The residents of the penitentiary voted not to endorse the existing drug program because they would "rather have a real drug program than an educational program."

Petitioner is an adopted child who adjusted well to school and community and had no history of law enforcement contacts until after the death of his adoptive father in an industrial accident when Bresolin was 15. At age 16, he began drinking cough syrup containing codeine and later experimented with marijuana, heroin and amphetamines. He became addicted to drugs by age 18 and at 20 was convicted of burglary in the second degree in December 1963 after participation in the burglary of a drugstore to obtain narcotics. His presentence report at that time indicated a poor prognosis for future adjustment due to his drug addiction. There were, however, no drug treatment programs available, either inside or outside the institution, and he was placed on probation. During this time he continued his involvement with use and sale of narcotics in both the Tacoma and Portland areas.

Bresolin was again convicted and sentenced in Portland in 1964 for attempting to obtain narcotics by forged prescription. By that time he was using heroin regularly and when it could not be obtained, he consumed as many as 20 bottles a day of cough medicine containing codeine. His deferred sentence on the Washington burglary conviction was revoked in 1965 and petitioner was initially sent to the Washington State Reformatory, but was transferred later to the Washington State Penitentiary because of his extensive drug involvement. There his counselor reported he was skeptical Bresolin would have the willpower to overcome his drug habit when released. Once again, however, there was no drug counseling or treatment program to help him overcome his addiction at any institution where petitioner had been confined.

He was released on June 15, 1971, and for a period of time was active on a methadone maintenance program. He was dropped in April 1972 for passing marijuana to another participant. He then became actively involved in the sale and use of heroin and shortly afterward was charged with grand larceny in King County and arrested on federal charges for sale of heroin as well as a state charge for robbery of a drug dealer. Bresolin was sentenced to the Washington State Penitentiary on the state drug charges and received a deferred federal sentence as well. On his return to the Washington State Penitentiary, his adjustment potential was evaluated. The penitentiary staff noted, "he has the potential to become a productive member of our society if and only when he can stay off drugs. It is evident that Bradley can't accomplish this alone."

The State of Washington, by its failure to fund and establish legislatively mandated drug treatment programs in the state's prisons, has constructed a maze for Bresolin from which there is no escape. He is psychologically and has been physiologically addicted to drugs. All his crimes have been committed either to obtain drugs or money with which to purchase drugs. Due to lack of funding, no programs have been provided to help him cure this addiction, although the people of this state over 50 years ago, in Laws of 1923, ch. 47, § 7 (now RCW 69.32.090), expressed a mandate that such programs were necessary and must be provided. Use of drugs has resulted in confinement in institutions where his addiction is encouraged by the availability of narcotics. He is unable to escape either their physical presence or the prison drug subculture that encourages their use. On his release at the end of his term, nothing will have been accomplished by confinement except to confirm the physical and psychological needs which guarantee, once more, his involvement in criminal acts, followed by more confinement.

The Washington prison system has been the object of care and attention by successive Governors, legislatures, and the people of this state. Many innovative programs have been instituted to alleviate improper conditions in our prisons. And yet, even with our history of concern for prison conditions, there still exist in this state's prison system conditions which destroy the ability of drug-addicted inmates to prevent a repetition of the offenses which led to their incarceration. It may not be possible to effectuate rehabilitation for a particular inmate within a prison setting. The key to rehabilitation is as often found in the particular personality of the offender as it is in the availability of affirmative rehabilitative programs. On the other hand, there can be no justification for failure to follow the statutory mandate to provide the inmate the opportunity to participate in a rehabilitative program, focused on his drug addiction.

[3] The Secretary has failed to comply with his statutory duties as well as the order of this court. Petitioner asks that the Secretary be held in contempt for this failure. Many alternatives are available to enforce our order. If the Secretary's failure is willful, he could be found guilty of criminal contempt with its attendant sanctions. RCW 9.23.010(4) and (5). He could be held guilty of civil contempt and a fine imposed for failure to comply, regardless of good faith. RCW 7.20.010(5), 7.20.020. Landman v. Royster, 354 F. Supp. 1292 (E.D. Va. 1973). Alternatively, we could release or transfer petitioner. In Inmates of Suffolk County Jail v. Eisenstadt, 494 F.2d 1196, 1198 (1st Cir. 1974), the court upheld a district court order requiring that the State Commissioner of Corrections transfer jail inmates from facilities which were deficient. The court noted that the commissioner, in resisting the transfer order, "underestimates his own statutory duties respecting the Jail and its inmates . . ." See Commonwealth ex rel. Bryant v. Hendrick, 444 Pa. 83, 280 A.2d 110 (1971); Rhem v. Malcolm, 507 F.2d 333, 340-42 (2d Cir. 1974). In Hamilton v. Love, 328 F. Supp. 1182, 1194 (E.D. Ark. 1971), the court said "[i]f the state cannot obtain the resources to detain persons awaiting trial in accordance with minimum constitutional standards, then the state simply will not be permitted to detain such persons."

[4] At this time we decline to order the transfer of petitioner to the drug treatment program at Western State Hospital. That program is designed only for persons who will be released into society within a short time after commencing treatment, and, as respondent notes, is not designed to treat an individual and then return him to an institution. Under the terms of petitioner's sentence, the length of his incarceration is subject to adjustment only by the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles. He likely will not be available for release within the short time contemplated by the Western State program. However, at the time when it appears to the administrative officials that petitioner satisfies all the criteria for admission into the Western State treatment program, he may be transferred there. We also do not rule on petitioner's constitutional claims inasmuch as the relief he seeks is available under existing statutes. Kirkland v. Steen, 68 Wn.2d 804, 416 P.2d 80 (1966).

Faced with similar problems of even greater magnitude than ours, the court in Holt v. Sarver, 309 F. Supp. 362, 383 (E.D. Ark. 1970), noted “[i]t is obvious that money will be required to meet the . . . deficiencies of the institution, and there is no reason to believe that, subject to the overall financial needs and requirements of the State, the Legislature will be unwilling to appropriate necessary funds.” We share this optimism despite earlier legislative refusals to fund these programs and believe respondent should use the expertise available to him to tell this court, and through it the people of this state, how he plans to remedy the existing failure to abide by legislative mandates. To comply with our order we assume additional funding will be required and that requests for such funds will be directed to the legislature. Reports shall be made to this court monthly following the issuance of this order/opinion, describing respondent’s progress, his plans, his efforts to secure funding, and the implementation of his plans. Petitioner’s request to hold respondent in contempt will be continued pending our examination of his efforts to comply with this order and the order of December 2, 1974.

STAFFORD, C.J., and FINLEY, BRACHTENBACH, and HOROWITZ, JJ., concur.

construction deprives them of half their efficacy, and leads to gradual depreciation of the right, as if it consisted more in sound than in substance. It is the duty of courts to be watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizen, and against any stealthy encroachments thereon.

Since the search and seizure were without valid warrant, and do not come within a recognized exception, the motion to suppress should have been granted. Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 6 L. Ed. 2d 1081, 81 S. Ct. 1684, 84 A.L.R.2d 933 (1961); Weeks v. United States, 232 U.S. 383, 58 L. Ed. 652, 34 S. Ct. 341 (1914).

The judgment should be reversed and a new trial granted.

ROSELLINI and UTTER, JJ., concur with HOROWITZ, J.

---

[No. 43846. En Banc. January 7, 1977.]

BRADLEY LAVE BRESOLIN, Petitioner, v. CHARLES MORRIS, as Secretary of the Department of Social and Health Services, Respondent.

- [1] Appeal and Error—Decisions Reviewable—Moot Questions—Issues of Public Concern. An otherwise moot case will be determined by the Supreme Court when the constitutional issues involved are of great public concern and will continue to recur in subsequent cases, and the issues and arguments have been adequately presented to the court.
- [2] Prisons—Rehabilitation—Right of Prisoners. Rehabilitation of convicted persons is a legitimate governmental interest and institutional goal but it is not an enforceable right of institutionalized prisoners.
- [3] Prisons—Medical Treatment—Duty To Provide—Burden of Proof. A prisoner seeking medical treatment or care in a penal institution has the burden of showing that his condition is amenable to treatment and that the appropriate treatment is available to prison officials.

[4] Prisons—Medical Treatment—Drug Rehabilitation. In the absence of a showing that there exists and is available to prison officials an accepted method of treating drug addiction in a prison environment, there is no violation of prisoners' constitutional rights in the failure of the state penitentiary to provide more extended drug rehabilitation programs within the institution.

UTTER, HUNTER, and HOROWITZ, JJ., dissent by separate opinions.

Supreme Court: Original action to compel the Secretary of the Department of Social and Health Services to establish and maintain a drug rehabilitation program at the state penitentiary. Mandamus is denied on the basis that there is no enforceable right of a prisoner to be rehabilitated and that the present record shows no available method for medical treatment of drug addiction within a prison environment.

Allen Ressler and John G. Ziegler, for petitioner.

Slade Gorton, Attorney General, and William C. Collins, Assistant, for respondent.

ROSELLINI, J.—An inmate of the state's correctional institution at Walla Walla brought this action seeking mandamus to compel the Secretary of the Department of Social and Health Services to establish and maintain a drug rehabilitation program at the institution. In a previous hearing, we ordered the secretary to take steps to secure financing for isolated facilities for drug addicts, which were required under RCW 69.32.090, and to report to the court. Bresolin v. Morris, 86 Wn.2d 241, 543 P.2d 325 (1975).

After three reports had been rendered, the legislature enacted Laws of 1975, 2d Ex. Sess., ch. 103, which repealed RCW 69.32.090, and made the establishment of a drug treatment and rehabilitation program discretionary rather than mandatory.

[1] In the meantime, we are advised that the petitioner has, in spite of his ineligibility, been transferred to Western State Hospital where he is enrolled in that institution's drug offender program. Since this was one of the alternative forms of relief which he sought in the original action, the case would appear to be moot. However, we are asked to consider the constitutional questions which were passed in the original opinion. The question of the constitutional duty of prison officials with respect to drug rehabilitation, we are told, is one of great public concern which will continue to recur in similar suits until the court answers the contentions raised.

Being assured by the parties that this case is as well prepared and argued as any that is likely to come before the court in the near future, we will dispose of these questions.

The petitioner contends that a prisoner has a right to treatment of his psychological dependence on drugs, for rehabilitative purposes, and that the denial of this right constitutes cruel and unusual punishment (forbidden by the eighth amendment to the United States Constitution and article 1, section 14, of the Washington State Constitution) as well as a deprivation of his liberty without due process of law and a denial of equal protection of the law.

The authorities cited do not establish these contentions. None of them holds that a prisoner in a penal institution has a right to rehabilitation, and none holds that the failure to rehabilitate amounts to cruel and unusual punishment.

It is established that prisoners do not lose all of their constitutional rights and that the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment follow them into prison and protect them there. Washington v. Lee, 263 F. Supp. 327, 331 (M.D. Ala. 1966), aff'd and approved, 390 U.S. 333, 19 L. Ed. 2d 1212, 88 S. Ct. 994 (1968); accord, Smith v. Schneckloth, 414 F.2d 680 (9th Cir. 1969).

As the federal district court in the latter case said, however, it is also settled that correctional authorities have wide discretion in matters of internal administration and that reasonable action within the scope of this discretion does not violate a prisoner's constitutional rights.

[2] The petitioner cites Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 404-06, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224, 94 S. Ct. 1800 (1974), for the proposition that rehabilitation is a basic penal goal, and reasons that because it is a goal, punishment is cruel and unusual if it fails to substantially further such rehabilitation. The United States Supreme Court in Martinez was concerned with the censorship of prisoners' mail in a state institution. Before deciding that such prisoners have a right of free speech and a right of access to the courts, both of which are subject to reasonable restrictions in furtherance of legitimate governmental interests, the court summarized the role of courts in solving prison administration problems. While the language was directed primarily to the question of the intervention of federal courts in state penal matters, its import is equally valid with respect to the role of state courts in such matters, if it is borne in mind that such courts have also the duty of protecting statutory rights of prisoners.<sup>1</sup>

The United States Supreme Court said:

Traditionally, federal courts have adopted a broad hands-off attitude toward problems of prison administration. In part this policy is the product of various limitations on the scope of federal review of conditions in state penal institutions. More fundamentally, this attitude springs from complementary perceptions about the nature of the problems and the efficacy of judicial intervention. Prison administrators are responsible for maintaining internal order and discipline, for securing their institutions against unauthorized access or escape, and for rehabilitating, to the extent that human nature and inadequate resources allow, the inmates placed in their custody. The Herculean obstacles to effective discharge of these duties are too apparent to warrant explication. Suffice it to say that the problems of prisons in America are complex and intractable, and, more to the point, they are not readily susceptible of resolution by decree. Most require expertise, comprehensive planning, and the commitment of resources, all of which are peculiarly within the province of the legislative and executive branches of government. For all of those reasons, courts are ill equipped to deal with the increasingly urgent problems of prison administration and reform. Judicial recognition of that fact reflects no more than a healthy sense of realism. Moreover, where state penal institutions are involved, federal courts have a further reason for deference to the appropriate prison authorities.

---

<sup>1</sup>See Bresolin v. Morris, 86 Wn.2d 241, 543 P.2d 325 (1975).

But a policy of judicial restraint cannot encompass any failure to take cognizance of valid constitutional claims whether arising in a federal or state institution. When a prison regulation or practice offends a fundamental constitutional guarantee, federal courts will discharge their duty to protect constitutional rights.

(Footnotes omitted.)

The court in Martinez recognized that rehabilitation is a governmental interest. Procurier v. Martinez, supra at 412. It did not characterize it as a prisoner's right. The legislature in this state has also adopted rehabilitation as a penal goal. RCW 72.08.101.<sup>2</sup> But to say that the government has an interest in rehabilitation and that this is a legitimate institutional goal is one thing. To say that a prisoner has an enforceable right to such rehabilitation is another. The United States Supreme Court has spoken to that subject in a case not cited by the parties to this action but which we find to be directly in point and controlling.

That court, in Marshall v. United States, 414 U.S. 417, 421, 38 L. Ed. 2d 618, 94 S. Ct. 700 (1974), affirmed a holding of the Court of Appeals (Marshall v. Parker, 470 F.2d 34 (9th Cir. 1972)) that "there is no 'fundamental right' to rehabilitation . . . at public expense after conviction of a crime". In that case, the petitioner claimed that the Narcotic Addict Rehabilitation Act of 1966, 18 U.S.C. §§ 4251-

---

<sup>2</sup>"The director of institutions shall provide for the establishment of programs and procedures for convicted persons at the state penitentiary, which are designed to be corrective, rehabilitative and reformatory of the undesirable behavior problems of such persons, as distinguished from programs and procedures essentially penal in nature." RCW 72.08.101.

4255, denied him due process and equal protection of the laws because it excluded persons in his situation from its benefits. Noting that no suspect classification was involved, the high court said that the correct standard to be applied was whether the statutory classification bore some relevance to the purpose for which the classification was made. The Congress, the court said, could reasonably find that some types of offenders were more likely to be susceptible and suitable to treatment than others, and could justifiably make classifications upon this basis.

There is no contention here that the drug treatment program at the state correctional institution discriminates among prisoners; rather, the factual allegation of the petitioner is that it is inadequate. Certainly, if a legislative body may enact a statute which discriminates among prisoners (upon a nonsuspect basis) in providing drug treatment, and may deny such treatment to some prisoners, it may constitutionally decide that no drug rehabilitation program shall be required at all.<sup>3</sup>

[3, 4] The petitioner relies upon federal cases which have held that a prisoner is entitled to essential or reasonable medical care. We have no quarrel with this concept; however, the cases generally recognize that the burden is on the complainant to show that his disease or condition is amenable to medical treatment. For example, in Smith v. Schneckloth, supra, it was held that under the federal Civil Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. 1983, a complaint can be maintained in federal court if it alleges that a state prisoner suffering an acute physical condition and having urgent need for medical care was refused such care and suffered tangible injury thereby. But as that court pointed out, implicit in the formulation is the requirement of proof that medical treatment in fact exists and is available to state officials, before their refusal to provide it can be said to violate the Fourteenth Amendment.

---

<sup>3</sup>Our recent cases of State v. Starrish, 86 Wn.2d 200, 544 P.2d 1 (1975)(observing in a footnote that the problem of treatment of alcohol problems of offenders is one for legislative resolution), and Robinson v. Peterson, 87 Wn.2d 665, 555 P.2d 1348 (1976)(holding that jail officials do not have a constitutional duty to provide rehabilitation programs) are in accord.

It should be emphasized that the petitioner is not contending that the institution withholds needed medication and medical treatment.<sup>4</sup> He makes no showing that there is an accepted method of treating psychological addiction, either within the confines of prison or without. At the same time, the respondent's authorities and affidavits stress the uncertainties which exist with respect to the efficacy of attempts to rehabilitate drug addicts, and particularly within the prison setting. That the entire concept of rehabilitation as a practical goal of confinement is under question can be appreciated by examining the current literature upon this subject. See, e.g., L. Pierce, Rehabilitation in Corrections: A Reassessment, 38 Fed. Prob. No. 2, p. 14 (1974); J. Wilks & R. Martinson, Is the Treatment of Criminal Offenders Really Necessary?, 40 Fed. Prob. No. 1, p. 3 (1976); N. Morris & G. Hawkins, Rehabilitation Rhetoric and Reality, 34 Fed. Prob. No. 4, p. 9 (1970).<sup>5</sup>

Thus, the petitioner has not shown that there exists and is available to prison officials an accepted method of treating drug addiction in the prison environment. The respondent, on the other hand, has demonstrated that the department is not indifferent to the problems of drug addiction. In addition to its other rehabilitative programs,

---

<sup>4</sup>A law review article relied upon by the petitioner, in support of his claim that drug rehabilitation programs should be judicially required, goes no further than to advocate protection of the right to receive methadone for withdrawal symptoms and treatment of physical dependence, while at the same time recognizing that even this treatment is controversial. Comment, The Rights of Prisoners to Medical Care and the Implications For Drug-Dependent Prisoners and Pre-trial Detainees, 42 U. Chi. L. Rev. 705 (1975).

<sup>5</sup>An article by P. Dwyer & M. Botein, The Right to Rehabilitation for Prisoners—Judicial Reform of the Correctional Process, 20 N.Y.L.F. 273 (1974), cited by the petitioner, takes the view that the courts should intervene in prison management and order the establishment of maintenance of rehabilitation programs. The authors assume, without citation of evidence, that rehabilitation is an achievable prison goal. They do not address the specific problem of rehabilitation of drug addicts.

the institution at Walla Walla (which is the institution here under attack) offers drug counseling to those who are willing to accept it. While this program may be termed minimal, the consensus of opinion appears to be that, as a practical matter, drug rehabilitative programs within the prison environment are nonproductive. Psychological assistance to motivated prisoners who are shortly to be released or paroled offers some hope of success, and to this end the program at Western State Hospital, to which the petitioner has been prematurely transferred, has been established.

In the meantime, the Secretary and those charged with the responsibility of administering the prison system are constantly reexamining their programs and policies and the available and evolving alternatives, with a view to fulfilling to the best of their capacity the statutory goal of rehabilitation. The petitioner makes no showing that these efforts are pursued with less than good faith or that any superior alternatives to the existing programs and methods presently exist and are available to the respondent. We need not decide whether, if such a showing were made, judicial intervention would be appropriate. As the record stands, there is nothing here to indicate that the low incidence of drug rehabilitation is occasioned by any breach of duty on the part of the respondent.

We find no constitutional violation in the failure to provide a more extended drug rehabilitation program within the institution.

The writ is denied.

STAFFORD, C.J., and HAMILTON, WRIGHT, BRACHTENBACH, and DOLLIVER, JJ., concur.

UTTER, J. (dissenting)—The majority contends this court is helpless to act in the face of the failure of the State to provide meaningful assistance to the petitioner, a narcotic addict who has demonstrated a willingness and desire to cure his addiction, when State action exacerbates his addictive personality by placing him in a closed setting where the sale and use of drugs apparently cannot be effectively controlled.

This is not, should not, and cannot be the law. For this court to hold that it is assures the continued explosive degeneration of the addicts confined to our institutions and creates a great likelihood that such individuals will do further injury to society when they are eventually released. The United States Supreme Court in Estelle v. Gamble, ___ U.S. ___, ___, ___ L. Ed. 2d ___, 97 S. Ct. 285 (1976), has recognized as repugnant to the Eighth Amendment "punishments which are incompatible with 'the evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society'," and that infliction of unnecessary suffering is "inconsistent with contemporary standards of decency as manifested in modern legislation codifying the common-law view that '[i]t is but just that the public be required to care for the prisoner, who cannot, by reason of the deprivation of his liberty, care for himself.'" (Footnote omitted.)

The relief here requested does not require, as the majority insists, the recognition by this court of a constitutionally based broad right of rehabilitation. In its present factual framework this case presents a narrow, albeit important, issue concerning the constitutional rights of inmates confined to state institutions: Does a prisoner who is psychologically addicted to narcotics have the right to demand some protection from the demonstrable physical and mental harm which he suffers as a result of being confined to an institution in which he is unavoidably exposed to unlawful trade in and use of hard narcotics, which prison officials are unable to prevent? I conclude that the state is constitutionally compelled to provide protection from harm of this nature and therefore dissent.

The record establishes that, prior to his recent and more than coincidental transfer to Western State Hospital, the petitioner was incarcerated at Walla Walla State Penitentiary where there is extensive unlawful use of hard drugs, including heroin, amphetamines, and hallucinogens. This drug culture allegedly involves not only prisoners, but staff and visitors as well. Prison personnel have, under existing conditions, been unable to do anything to significantly curtail this activity, nor have they provided a means by which prisoners who wish to do so, may seek sanctuary from its adverse effects. Such a situation not only results in the creation of an environment in which it is extremely difficult for most inmates who have the desire to rehabilitate themselves, but in the case of the petitioner and others like him, makes debilitation inevitable. As we stated in our prior opinion in this case, the petitioner is psychologically and has been physiologically addicted to drugs. All his crimes have been committed either to obtain drugs or money with which to purchase drugs. Due to lack of funding, no programs have been provided to help him cure this addiction . . . Use of drugs has resulted in confinement in institutions where his addiction is encouraged by the availability of narcotics. He is unable to escape either their physical presence or the prison drug subculture that encourages their use. On his release at the end of his term, nothing will have been accomplished by confinement except to confirm the physical and psychological needs which guarantee, once more, his involvement in criminal acts, followed by more confinement.

Bresolin v. Morris, 86 Wn.2d 241, 249, 543 P.2d 325 (1975).

Faced with this situation, the petitioner has made great efforts to secure placement in a drug treatment program. As the majority points out, the petitioner has recently been transferred to the drug treatment program at Western State Hospital. That placement is unusual, to say the least. In the long history of this case, the petitioner first sought treatment under RCW 69.32.090. This court then ordered, in the words of the statute, that respondent "make available to health authorities portions of correctional institutions under his jurisdiction for the isolation and treatment, at public expense, of petitioner." Respondent failed to do so and petitioner sought placement in the Western State

Hospital drug treatment program. Respondent resisted that placement, stating in the Brief of Respondent at pages 1-2:

[I]t is used primarily as a stepping stone back to the streets and is not designed to treat an individual and then return him to an institution . . . The treatment program at the hospital is of limited duration (about 18 months) and the program is of limited size (30 people). Because of the physical layout of the hospital, it is not considered a "secure" facility. It has no walls, fences or guards, limiting the types of persons it can take and clearly indicating it was not established to provide immediate drug treatment for all prison inmates who might be found to be narcotics addicts.

Petitioner has not been transferred to Western State Hospital because of his long sentence. He is presently serving the first of three five-year mandatory minimum terms based upon deadly weapon findings, State v. Bresolin, 13 Wn. App. 386 (1975), and in fact has no tentative release date yet established because of his consecutive sentence structure. He also has a federal detainer, based on a federal conviction, lodged against him which prevents his parole, except to federal custody, . . .

The court has been informed by counsel for the respondent, at the time of the most recent hearings in this case, that these underlying facts have not significantly changed. Respondent has not contended Bresolin now fits the established criteria for the Western State program.

It is difficult to view Bresolin's recent transfer to the Western State program, in view of respondent's past position, as little more than an effort by the respondent to render moot the important issues raised by this case. Bresolin's placement at Western State does not, however, moot these issues as to other inmate/addicts who, as the undisputed evidence indicates, desire and would benefit from placement in a drug treatment program. These inmates are still incarcerated in the state penitentiary under conditions and with resulting harm identical to that of the named petitioner here.

The legislature has expressly repealed RCW 69.32.090 (see Laws of 1975, 2d Ex. Sess., ch. 103), the statute which we found controlling in our prior opinion in this case. While the present statutory scheme clearly allows the establishment of drug treatment programs, and I feel in a factual setting such as this requires them (RCW 72.08.101), the record is devoid of any indication that the respondent intends to implement an adequate program at the state penitentiary at any time in the near future.<sup>6</sup>

As the majority suggests, courts have shown reluctance to become involved in the inner workings of our penal institutions. The power of the courts to intervene to protect inmates from conditions which threaten their health or safety, or which are violative of a basic constitutional right is clearly established. See, e.g., Estelle v. Gamble, supra; Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224, 94 S. Ct. 1800 (1974)(prison mail censorship regulations held violative of inmates' First and Fourteenth Amendment rights); Gates v. Collier, 501 F.2d 1291 (5th Cir. 1974)(confinement under conditions which threaten physical health and safety and deprive inmates of basic hygiene and medical treatment constitutes "cruel and unusual punishment"); Riley v. Rhay, 407 F.2d 496 (9th Cir. 1969)(claim by inmate of Washington State Penitentiary that failure to provide medical care violated his constitutional rights states cause of action under the Civil Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981, 1983, 1985); Pugh v. Locke, 406 F. Supp. 318 (M.D. Ala. 1976)(failure to protect inmates from the constant threat of physical harm constitutes cruel and unusual punishment).

Where deprivation of needed medical care is added to the imprisonment imposed as punishment for commission of a crime, the additional suffering imposed thereby constitutes cruel and unusual punishment and provides justification for our intervention to alleviate that additional suffering. Estelle v. Gamble, supra; Ramsey v. Ciccone, 310 F. Supp. 600 (W.D. Mo. 1970). Moreover, due process requires additional proceedings to justify failure of the state to protect an inmate from any harm greater than that contemplated by his incarceration. New York Ass'n for Retarded Children, Inc. v. Rockefeller, 357 F. Supp. 752 (E.D.N.Y. 1973); Baxstrom v. Herold, 383 U.S. 107, 15 L. Ed. 2d 620, 86 S. Ct. 760 (1966).

---

<sup>6</sup>The trial court, in its hearing on this matter, expressly found that "[t]here is no form of therapy available to the Petitioner at the Penitentiary which has any probability of curing his condition." In an affidavit submitted in this case dated June 16, 1976, Harold Bradley, Director of Adult Corrections Division of the Department of Social and Health Services, stated the existing drug treatment program at Walla Walla would continue at "essentially the same level as it has been in the past . . ."

The trial court found, pursuant to our order of referral, that:

The Petitioner is psychologically addicted to the use of narcotic drugs. Psychological addiction is the primary cause of drug usage. Drug treatment programs have as their primary focus the cure of psychological addiction. . . .

. . . [The petitioner's] psychological addiction leads him to obtain and use narcotic drugs when he is able to do so.

. . . There is no form of therapy available to the Petitioner at the Penitentiary which has any probability of curing his condition.

The evidence presented at this fact-finding hearing further establishes that the petitioner has actively sought aid in dealing with his drug problems while not in prison. No such programs are available to him, or other inmates, at the penitentiary. Yet, because of his confinement and the failure of prison officials to control illegal drug activity within the walls of the institution, it is impossible, at the present time, for an addicted inmate to avoid continued involvement with drugs, no matter how determined he might be to forsake them. This would not be the case but for the inability of the institution staff to adequately control the prison environment, coupled with the failure to provide addicts who affirmatively seek help an environment in which to begin to rebuild their lives. Confinement under the present conditions only intensifies such an individual's psychological addiction, with the result that when he is thrust once again into society's mainstream, it will be even more difficult for him to avoid further involvement with drugs and additional confinement.

Contrary to the assertion of the majority, the uncontroverted testimony of expert witnesses in the superior court fact-finding hearing established that the petitioner and others like him are indeed treatable and that such treatment is a necessity.<sup>7</sup> While there is considerable conflict among experts as to which of a number of techniques would be most beneficial to addicts, most authorities seem now to assume that effective treatment can be provided. See S. Levine, Narcotics and Drug Abuse 311 (1973); R. Bonnie & M. Sonnenreich, Legal Aspects of Drug Dependence 171-80 (1975); Drug Addiction and Treatment in the District of Columbia, Hearing Before the Subcomm. on Public Health, Education, Welfare, and Safety of the Comm. on the District of Columbia United States Senate, 92nd Cong., 1st Sess. (1971); G. Swanson, Law Enforcement and Drug Rehabilitation: Is a Bridge of Trust Possible? 4 Contemporary Drug Problems 493 (1975).<sup>8</sup>

---

<sup>7</sup>Lyle Quasim, a qualified expert, testified as follows: "Q. [by Mr. Emery]: Can you treat the psychological addiction in prison? A. Yes, you can treat psychological addiction in prison. . . . I think that we can make some significant inroads into dealing with the psychological process in the penitentiary." Gene Chontos, another expert, testified as follows: "Q. [by Mr. Emery]: Do you conclude that drug treatment in prison is an absolute necessity as a grounding for successful treatment of an addict who is in prison and who will be released later on? A. I think, yes, it's necessary. It's definitely necessary just to build trust that you can transfer outside. . . . Q. [by the Court]: In other words, and assuming the law is that you can't interfere with his prison sentence while you are treating him, there are available to the State forms of medical or psychological therapy which could be administered to this petitioner at the penitentiary beneficially in the light of his present physical and mental condition? A. If the funds were free enough to do that. If there were money available, I would say yes." The record is replete with similar statements.

<sup>8</sup>Expert testimony at the fact-finding hearing was to the effect that the most effective drug treatment program would involve isolated therapeutic communities

The record in this case clearly establishes that the failure to make such treatment available to the inmate/addict who affirmatively seeks it does substantial harm to that individual, as well as society as a whole. See Bresolin v. Morris, supra at 247-49. Though it may be true that the Supreme Court has not recognized the existence of a "'fundamental right' to rehabilitation from narcotics addiction . . ." (Marshall v. United States, 414 U.S. 417, 421, 38 L. Ed. 2d 618, 94 S. Ct. 700 (1974)),<sup>9</sup> it is clear that a person may not be punished simply for being an addict, Robinson v. California, 370 U.S. 660, 8 L. Ed. 2d 758, 82 S. Ct. 1417 (1962), and has a constitutional right to protection from direct harm caused by the failure of prison officials to keep order. Gates v. Collier, supra; Pugh v. Locke, supra.

In a situation such as that before us, the right to be free of official indifference to the need for medical treatment and protection from harm, which is constitutionally required, forms the basis for petitioner's claim. An accepted part of medical treatment is often the healing of the mind. See, e.g., Howard R. & Martha E. Lewis, Psychosomatics (1972); L. Keiser, The Traumatic Neurosis (1968). Such healing of the mind is necessary to treat psychological addiction for the purpose of providing the inmate with the defense mechanisms necessary to survive as a nonaddict in the drug culture existing inside the prison. The trial court of approximately 35 to 40 members each. These groups would include those addicts who had affirmatively and sincerely sought help in curing their drug addiction. In addition, some apparently less intensive program was indicated to be desirable to serve the approximately 300 members of the prison population who are primarily or secondarily involved with the drug culture but do not seem to be prime candidates for successful isolated treatment.

---

<sup>9</sup>I disagree with the majority's conclusion that the Supreme Court's decision in Marshall controls our disposition of this case. The Supreme Court affirmed the determination of the Court of Appeals that the eligibility classifications contained in the federal statute there at issue, which rendered the particular addict there considered ineligible for discretionary rehabilitative commitment, did not violate the petitioner's right to equal protection. The court was not considering the right of an inmate to be protected from the specific harm caused him by the inability of the state to keep order within its institutions. It is that issue which is before us here.

found on the basis of expert testimony that the primary means of treating addiction is to combat the psychological roots of this "disease." Robinson v. California, supra at 667 n.8. It is entirely inappropriate to deny the addict protection from the harm which the prison environment causes him, simply because the appropriate means of implementing those constitutional rights requires treating his mind.

I therefore conclude the established right of the petitioner and others similarly situated to be free of cruel and unusual punishment (U.S. Const. amend. 8; Const. art. 1, § 14) and the due process right to be free from direct harm not contemplated by the sentencing court, create in these circumstances a concomitant obligation on the part of the State to provide adequate treatment to ameliorate the harm caused those addicts who affirmatively seek help with their drug problems. Such a result is required because it is the failure of the State, (presumably due to inadequate facilities and staffing), to bring under control unlawful activity within the penitentiary which creates the particular harm suffered by this petitioner and others like him.

I would deny respondent's motion to dismiss and order the respondent to take appropriate action to provide meaningful drug treatment programs for individuals whose circumstances are similar to the petitioner's, and further order that the respondent report to this court on a monthly basis as to his progress in this endeavor.<sup>10</sup> We must assume that the respondent, like all citizens of this state, will obey the commands of this court and therefore see no need at this time to consider what further remedies may prove appropriate or necessary.

---

<sup>10</sup>The power of the courts to enforce such obligations is well established. In recent years the courts of this nation have utilized various remedies in an effort to protect the constitutional rights of persons confined to prisons. Traditionally, the courts have allowed relief in the form of contempt citations, injunctive relief, or, particularly in section 1983 actions, damages. More recently, the courts have found it appropriate to utilize remedies which are quite broad in scope, including: enjoining institutions from accepting new prisoners until populations within the institutions are reduced; ordering specific institutional changes; and, appointing special masters or committees to enforce orders of the court requiring specific reforms. See Comment, Cruel But Not So Unusual Punishment: The Role of the Federal Judiciary in State Prison Reform, 7 Cumberland L. Rev. 31 (1976), and cases cited therein.

HOROWITZ, J., concurs with UTTER, J.

HUNTER, J. (dissenting)—I concur with the dissent except for the mandate requiring the respondent to make monthly reports to this court regarding the success of the treatments, in which respect, I dissent to the dissent.

BOARD OF PAROLE,
Salem, Oreg., July 7, 1977.

HON. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: I am writing you regarding parole decision-making and the sentencing commission that you are advocating. You may recall that we have met on several occasions in Oregon regarding national health insurance and Senator Robert Kennedy's campaign for president. Currently I am the Chairman of the Board of Parole in Oregon.

Oregon has recently passed progressive legislation. HB 2013 is attached relating to the Board of Parole. I believe that you will find it of interest and may possibly find ideas and concepts relevant to your legislative undertaking. This bill will become law in the State of Oregon on October 4, 1977.

I have worked, along with my colleagues on the Board of Parole, on development and passage of this legislation for over two years. We have consulted with or utilized concepts developed by the United States Parole Commission (especially Peter Hoffman), Leslie Wilkins, Don Gottfredson, Norval Morris, and Andrew von Hirsch. Because of this experience, I presume to offer some comments.

I believe the guideline approach to parole board decision-making undertaken by the United States Parole Commission and the Oregon State Board of Parole is progressive and enhances the quality of justice. It has been argued by some that since the guidelines have been developed, it is no longer necessary to have a parole board or a commission. Since the guidelines have been developed, the argument runs, simply give the sentencing responsibility to the judiciary and adopt a presumptive sentencing approach. This approach is not as fair or equitable as a two-tiered approach to sentencing.

The vast number of judges cannot be expected to apply guidelines and standards with the precision that a smaller, collegial body such as the parole board or commission can.

Additionally judges are not dealing with real time in terms of incarceration. They have in the past dealt with symbolic sentences and mythological time. When it comes to imprisonment, we have tended to bark louder than we wanted to bite. The parole decision makers are more aware of the reality of prison time. For these reasons a two-step process is to be favored, I submit, over a one-stage determination of time to be spent behind bars.

In Oregon we will develop, as you will see from the enclosed legislation, a commission on prison terms. This commission will be composed of the five voting members of the board, five who are appointed by the Governor, and five circuit judges appointed by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. This body is charged with the responsibility to develop and recommend parole standards regarding length of incarceration, offense severity assessments, and aggravating and mitigating circumstances for typical offenses encountered by the parole board. Additionally some kind of scaling device (quantifiable measure) to determine criminal history/risk will be developed. This is in effect a sentencing commission at the state level.

Another criticism of parole that has been leveled is that the offender must serve time waiting, perhaps years, for the parole board to make a decision about his release. In point of fact, a parole system does not depend upon deferring a release decision. A parole board operating under a modified "just deserts" system can establish a parole release date early in the man's term. This is a suggestion that has been advanced by Norval Morris in his book The Future of Imprisonment. There is no reason why this cannot be done.

The United States Parole Commission is moving toward establishing parole hearing/release dates early in a man's term. It is current Oregon practice. In Oregon we meet with each offender within the first four months of his incarceration. We establish a parole hearing date at that time. Approximately 80% of those who come before the board on that parole hearing date are paroled. The only resets or parole deferrals are because of serious institutional misconduct or present severe emotional disorder. In addition, a prisoner's release may be deferred because of a poor parole plan. However, this deferral is limited to 90 days.

I believe that this system eliminates or meets the criticism that parole subjects prisoners to nerve-racking uncertainty about the time of their release. In a few cases the parole board advances a release date (a shorter period of incarceration) because of an offender's altered circumstances, outstanding conduct, or because new information is presented to the board. Because release criteria are explicit, the decisions of the parole board can be subjected first to administrative review by the board itself and ultimately by the courts.

This procedure (a two-tiered decision-making system) offers a more efficient application by a collegial body of explicit release standards, enhances equity, can eliminate indeterminacy, and provides for more realistic review of parole decisions.

Finally, I read and enjoyed your recent article in Judicature: and I have had occasion to quote from it. I hope your legislative efforts regarding sentencing are successful. Perhaps our experience in Oregon will provide you with something useful. We have certainly benefited from our knowledge of the federal experience.

Sincerely,

---

IRA BLALOCK, Chairman.

EQUAL JUSTICE UNDER LAW
U.S. Department of Justice
Bicentennial Lecture Series

VOL. 7

PUNISHMENT, DESERT AND REHABILITATION

Norval Morris
Dean, University of Chicago Law School

THE BICENTENNIAL LECTURE SERIES
SPONSORED BY
THE UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
“PUNISHMENT, DESERT AND REHABILITATION” PRESENTED BY
NORVAL MORRIS
AT THE
UNIVERSITY OF DENVER COLLEGE OF LAW
DENVER, COLORADO
4:30 P.M.
FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1976

Let me open with a summation of my submissions to you this afternoon so that you may have a glimpse of the intellectual terrain I wish to cross and may, if you wish, by swift departure avoid what may well be a somewhat ghastly journey. I shall be making a case against equality, a case on its face less than congenial to the American ethic. I will argue that equality in punishment is not an absolute principle; that equality in punishment is a value to be weighed and considered among other values, no more; and that there can be just sentences in which like criminals are not treated alike, as to either who goes to prison or for how long. If I am right, conclusions follow of substantial importance to sentencing principles and practice, and to prison administration; if I am wrong, many of my colleagues will be pleased and little harm will have been done.

No apology is needed for seeking to attract your attention to problems of crime control in this series of Bicentennial lectures. Crime has long been a serious blight on the social stability of this country and a great impediment to the sense of security of generations of Americans. And the crime problem grows more intractable, matching in severity the persistence of poverty amongst plenty and of racial discrimination in a constitutional democracy dedicated to equality of opportunity. In particular, the past decade of claimed efforts at more effective crime prevention and control, with substantially increased resources allocated to those tasks, has proved deeply disappointing. Crime continues to influence where Americans live, how they live, where they work, their patterns of recreation and of social intercourse; crime touches all aspects of life. Nor will this lecture offer any cures for this scourge. And for that deficiency an apology may be thought to be appropriate.

With crime rates high and increasing, with the police, jails, and prisons overburdened, it seems almost perverse or picayune to devote a lecture to jurisprudential issues in sentencing and prison administration, when the pressing problems are so practical. Even in relation to sentencing the immediate needs are obvious enough: higher detection rates of serious crime, better control of plea bargaining, more adequate resources to prosecute and to defend those charged with serious crimes, and so on. Why then bother with questions that are so unlikely to have any imminent impact as whether like cases should be treated alike? But it has been my experience that it is often questions of pure theory that turn out to have the most lasting influence.

There is another reason that seems to me to justify my trying to turn your attention to jurisprudential issues in crime control. Current recognition of the gravity of the threat of crime to the quality of life in this country, particularly in our urban areas, and the threat of the further disruption of the patterns of our lives by crime and the fear of crime, is attracting recommendations for repressive measures, swift and draconic cures, which are not only illusory protections but, more importantly, are likely to erode values of freedom and justice which are of fundamental importance—values properly celebrated in this Bicentennial year.

The title of this lecture, however, does demand an apology. It is pretentious; it promises too much. It was settled months ago when ambition over-reached judgment, when the trivia of decanal duties seemed no impediment to scholarly productivity. What has emerged is much less than an analysis of "Punishment, Desert, and Rehabilitation"—very much less. What has emerged are notes towards a jurisprudence of imprisoning.

Oscar Wilde wrote of promising careers being ruined by the vice of attending to one's correspondence. It is an occupational vice of law school deans from which I hope to be cured before the capacity for any sustained thought is quite removed.

Sustained thought about the jurisprudence of imprisoning is, of course, complicated enormously by the extraordinary diversity of crime and criminals to which that jurisprudence must apply. Nevertheless, relatively few principles may suffice, with different mixes of those principles being capable of embracing the diversities of behavior and personality of crime and criminals respectively—that, certainly, is my belief. Acting on that belief, in a chapter of a book entitled, The Future of Imprisonment,<sup>1</sup> I tried to answer the question “Who should go to prison?”. I now hope to carry that analysis a few steps further by considering the interrelationship between a few of the principles that seem to me to bear on that critical question and also on the proper role of prison programs in the jurisprudence of criminal sanctions.

Here are the three principles I wish to relate to the general presumption in favor of equality in punishment:

Parsimony: The least afflictive (punitive) sanction necessary to achieve defined social purposes should be imposed.<sup>2</sup>

Rehabilitation or Reform: Power over a criminal's life should not be taken in excess of that which would be taken were his reform not considered as one of our purposes. Rehabilitative programs in prison must not define either the duration or the conditions of incarceration; prison programs must be entirely facilitative, never coercive.<sup>3</sup>

Desert: No sanction should be imposed greater than that which is “deserved” by the last crime, or series of crimes, for which the offender is being sentenced. Nor should a sanction be imposed which is so lenient that it unduly depreciates the seriousness of the crime.<sup>4</sup>

These three principles are not, of course, sufficient in themselves to support a jurisprudence of imprisonment. There are other purposes and principles to be considered of greater or less validity and justice—deterrent purposes; incarceration while time passes and the fires of criminality abate; imprisoning because of repeated failure of other lesser sanctions; the community educative effect of condign punishments; the segregation of the dangerous; and so on. But in this lecture I wish to confine myself to the relationship between the above three principles—parsimony, reform, and desert—and to discuss ways in which they relate to another principle, the allegedly over-arching principle of equality, ingrained both in our Constitution and in our systems of justice and ethics.

The central question I address is this: In seeking to facilitate the prisoners’ reform and in seeking to impose deserved punishment on the criminal, to what extent is it necessary that like cases should be treated alike? To what extent does the value of equality preclude differentiation between prisoners in facilitating their self-reform; must they all be given equal self-developmental opportunities? To what extent does the value of equality preclude differentiation between prisoners in imposing deserved punishments; must the equally undeserving be equally punished?

To offer answers to these questions, I need the following distinctions which I do not take from the literature but which I find helpful in my own thinking. I wish to distinguish between three types of principles of justice: Those which are defining, those which are limiting, and those which are guiding.

If we knew enough, deterrent purposes could be defining. If we knew enough, it would be possible to graph the precisely appropriate deterrent punishment for a given crime committed by a given type of criminal. We would have to know a great deal more than we do now, but if we did the graph could be drawn and the hedonistic utilitarian precise punishment found. We would have to know for each community all about the relationships between certainty, celerity and severity of punishments and the incidence of the crime we are to punish. We would have to make value judgments relating the criminal's pain to the pain of future victims, say, fifteen hedonistic units to one. But if we knew all this, and more besides, the precise point on the graph of punishment could be determined where any additional punishment of the criminal was not worth the margin of increased crime prevention it would produce.

(I set aside possible questions of the disutility of increased sanctions achieving lesser enforceability. I assume, for this argument, that the co-relationship between increased punishment and reduced incidence of crime is linear.) Thus, given sufficient knowledge, on utilitarian grounds we could determine the precisely appropriate deterrent punishment. There may be other reasons why we would not wish to impose the punishment so defined, for example, it may exceed what we think is just, but nevertheless deterrent utilitarian values could precisely determine the punishment. Deterrence could be a defining principle of punishment, achieving fine tuning of punishment to its precise utilitarian purpose.

By a limiting principle of punishment I mean a principle that, though it would rarely tell us the exact sanction to be imposed, as deterrence might, would nevertheless give us the outer limits of leniency and severity which should not be exceeded. Desert, I will submit, is such a limiting principle.

By a guiding principle, I mean only a general value which should be respected unless other values sufficiently strongly justify its rejection in any given case. Equality, I will submit, is such a guiding principle.

Equipped with these distinctions between defining, limiting and guiding principles, let us start by considering the relationship between rehabilitation and equality; later we shall consider the relationship between desert and equality.

Rehabilitation and Equality

The proper role of rehabilitation in sentencing and corrections is, I am glad to say, receiving increasing support both in the literature and the practice of punishment. In U.S. v. Bergman, Judge Marvin E. Frankel of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York put the point with his usual grace and precision:

The court agrees that this defendant should not be sent to prison for "rehabilitation." Apart from the patent inappositeness of the concept to this individual, this court shares the growing understanding that no one should ever be sent to prison for rehabilitation. That is to say, nobody who would not otherwise be locked up should suffer that fate on the incongruous premise that it will be good for him or her. Imprisonment is punishment. Facing that simple reality should help us to be civilized. It is less agreeable to confine someone when we deem it an affliction rather than a benefaction. If someone must be imprisoned—for other, valid reasons—we should seek to make rehabilitative resources available to him or her. But the goal of rehabilitation cannot fairly serve in itself as grounds for the sentence to confinement.<sup>5</sup>

This position does not, of course, argue for any reduction of treatment programs within prison, quite the contrary. But it does require that such programs should be voluntary and that success or failure in them by the prisoner should in no way determine either the duration or the conditions of his imprisonment.

Does the principle of equality require that all prisoners have equal access to such self-developmental rehabilitative programs—educational, vocational and psychological—as are available within the prison? The problem troubles me in relation to a new federal prison in which I have a close personal interest.

The new federal prison at Butner, North Carolina, is currently testing ideas on prison programs which I offered in The Future of Imprisonment. Butner is designed to hold 140 psychiatrically ill prisoners and 200 dangerous prisoners, that is to say, men aged 18 to 30 who have been convicted of at least two separate serious crimes during their last three years at large and who have between one to three years to serve before their parole release date. This is the deep end of the pool of prisoners, not the shallow end of criminality usually chosen by penal reformers; the dangerous, not the amenable. Butner is a “voluntary” prison in the sense that after the prisoner has been there a few weeks, long enough to understand something of the prison and its treatment program, he may return if he so wishes to the prison from whence he came or to any other federal prison to which he may properly be transferred. Soon after his arrival in Butner he will be told his release date and that date will be adhered to subject only to his obedience to the disciplinary requirements of the prison; the date will be entirely independent of his involvement either at all or with success or failure in prison training programs. If he decides to leave Butner he can take his release date with him and suffer no adverse consequences thereby. There is much else that I would like to say about this prison, since I have a paternal affection for it, but for present purposes all I really need add is that it will, it is hoped, provide more educational, vocational training and self-developmental opportunities to prisoners than any other prison in this country. Selected for these opportunities is a group of repetitive criminals whose final selection is made by a computer, so that there will be available a perfectly matched control group of similar prisoners to facilitate measurement of the Butner experiment. The equality issue bursts out: Is it fair, is it just, to give these unusual opportunities to a few serious offenders when they are not available to the broad spectrum of federal prisoners, many of whom must be in more need of these excellent self-development opportunities and who have also inflicted much less harm on society than the Butner group?

Have the prisoners who are excluded from Butner a valid complaint? I think not. The argument will be more fully developed in relation to equality and desert; it will suffice here to note only the outline of my justification of that conclusion.

The shortage of treatment resources; the need for critical testing of what programs prove of assistance to which prisoners; the wisdom of allocating scarce resources where they are likely to be of more value

these and other properly discriminating values adequately justify the breach of any rigid application of a principle of equality to rehabilitative programs in prisons. Here, as in relation to sentencing, equality is only a guiding principle; it neither limits nor defines what may justly be done. Ideally, of course, in a Utopia in which there was no shortage of treatment resources, the case for inequality would rest only on the need for experimentation with a view to the acquisition of knowledge. In the interim, and it looks like a long interim, lacking both adequate resources and knowledge, there is clear propriety in our allocating those scarce treatment resources unevenly.

There is another aspect of equality that has borne heavily on prison conditions which cannot be so lightly brushed aside. May prison programs provide more and better self-developmental opportunities than are available to citizens who have not been convicted of crime? This is the question of "less eligibility" which is supposed to call forth the answer that prison conditions must always be less desirable than the conditions available to any (and therefore every) more worthy group in the community whose members have not been convicted of crime. This miserable principle of "less eligibility" has helped to impose idleness and brutality on our prisons; it has been used by the unthinking to justify overcrowded cages, fortress prisons of fear in which we are unable to protect the weak from the predatory strong, in which coerced homosexuality flourishes, in which drug habits are supported, institutions run by the prisoners rather than by representatives of the society who have imprisoned them.

Must racial discrimination be eliminated from society at large before we can provide a decent integration within the walls? Must meaningless and insufficient make-work, idleness and inefficiency, characterize prison labor until full employment exists in society generally and poverty has been eliminated? Will there be a rush to the prisons, a diminution of the deterrent threat of imprisonment, if we give reasonable productive opportunities to prisoners and give them a chance to earn money to pay for their keep, to compensate their victims where that is appropriate, to support their families where that is within their competence, and possibly even to save something to tide them over the difficulties of re-integration into the economic life of the community? Protracted observation of the widest diversity of prisons in many parts of the world has convinced me that the last thing we need worry about is that prisoners will not dislike their cages. The pervading aim of prisoners in Butner, as well as every other prison I have visited in the world, is to get out of prison, and it is unlikely indeed that any variation of opportunities for self development within the walls will make any difference whatsoever to that overwhelming motivation.

No one of any sensitivity can visit any of our prisons without recognizing that they contain, as in all countries, populations which are disproportionately illiterate, unemployed, vocationally untrained, undereducated, psychologically disturbed and socially isolated. It is both in the prisoner's and the community's best interests to help them to remedy these deficiencies: We should not inhibit ourselves from doing so by any presumed principle of equality by which they must not have greater opportunities than those who have not been convicted of crime. To do so is self-defeating. Nor will denial of these opportunities to prisoners have the slightest effect upon the more important and larger efforts at social equality outside the walls.

It thus appears to me that the principle of equality, both as between one group of prisoners and another, and between prisoners and those who have not been convicted of crime, must not be allowed to inhibit such hesitant steps toward the minimization of brutality and cruelty within our overcrowded prisons as the federal and state governments are now taking. There is no categorical imperative to treat like prisoners alike nor to treat prisoners, other than by virtue of their imprisonment, worse than the next most eligible group in the community.

Desert and Equality

One defect frequently alleged to exist in sentencing practice is that of unjust disparities between sentences. By "unjust disparities" I mean that the chance of which judge hears a case, or which parole board member the prisoner comes before, or even the point in time at which the case is heard, will be powerfully and irrationally determinative both of the likelihood and of the duration of his imprisonment.

There is a mass of compelling data on this question, culminating in the recent important sentencing study in the Second Circuit,<sup>6</sup> and there is no need for me to belabor them here. I ask you to accept that the case is proved, that there are unjust and irrational sentences pervasively imposed in adult and juvenile courts, and by parole boards throughout this country. I ask you further to accept what is less generally recognized but is, I believe, also quite clear, that the inequitable disparities achieved by charge and plea bargaining processes are even greater than those that have been demonstrated in the literature of judicial sentencing.

Let me try to summarize briefly the paths of reform that are being advocated at present to bring order to this jungle of unjust, disparate sentences. Let me set aside charge and plea bargaining for the time being and concentrate on judicial sentences and the sentences shaped by parole boards. First, there is the attack on the indeterminate sentence and on parole. Elsewhere I have argued that the parole board is no more capable than the judge of predicting the later criminal conduct of the offender and that there is no principled case that can be made for the continuance of parole board sentencing.<sup>7</sup> Certainly, if parole boards are to continue to exist their roles will change as the federal parole board's role is currently changing. They will increasingly set the prisoner's release date, with more or less precision, quite early in his sentence. Base expectancy recidivism rate can be determined as well early in the prisoner's term as later. Present parole practice has, as Hans W. Mattick phrased it, turned our prisons into great schools of dramatic art; it is time we abandoned this hypocritical pretense. There will, in other words, be a gradual movement away from the false proposition that by observing the prisoner's behavior in prison it is possible to make predictions about his likely criminal behavior in the community. That is the cure suggested for the unprincipled randomness of parole board "sentencing."

Let us turn now to the cures for unjust sentencing disparities recommended at the legislative level. One group of reformers, of whom David Fogel is a principal spokesman, advocate fixed-term sentences, the legislature prescribing precisely what sentence the judge must impose for any given offense proved before him, allowing him only a relatively small margin for the variation of the sentence because of mitigating or aggravating circumstances of the offense or of the offender.<sup>8</sup> Somewhat similar recommendations are offered by Andrew von Hirsch in his book Doing Justice<sup>9</sup> and a more sophisticated plan is developed in the report of the Twentieth Century Fund, "Fair and Certain Punishment," in which Professor Dershowitz has been influential.<sup>10</sup> Their recommendations have similar thrusts, seeking to control judicial discretion by precise legislative statements of the appropriate or "presumptive" sentence. I regard all these recommended reforms as steps in the right direction, but in my view they fail sufficiently to address the complexity of the subject. They are shortcuts to rational sentencing, having the defect of most shortcuts—they quickly get you into rough terrain best avoided. For my own part, I believe we should continue on the path set in the mid-1950's by the American Law Institute in its Model Penal Code. The legislature should bring some order to sentences provided in the criminal codes, federal and state, by reducing the categories of offenses in relation to their punishment and by defining the criteria that judges should take into account in imposing sentences. Then we must move steadily toward a common law of sentencing, in the same way that the common law has developed elsewhere. The judge must give reasons for the sentence he imposes and the sentence must be subject to appellate review, so that the usual pattern of the emergence of wisdom through precedent may apply here as it applies in many less important areas of juridical practice.

A recently announced plan,<sup>11</sup> currently under discussion in the Department of Justice, may prove a useful step in that direction. The proposal calls for the abolition of the Federal Parole Board and the creation of a Commission on Sentencing, composed of nine commissioners whose task it would be to promulgate guidelines to sentencing in the federal system. When any federal judge imposed a sentence outside the guidelines he would be required to set out his reasons for doing so. Such sentences outside the guidelines would be subject to appellate review, at the motion of the defense if they exceeded the severity prescribed in the guidelines, at the instance of the prosecution if they were more lenient than the guidelines indicated. This plan is politically sophisticated and practical; its broad thrust, gradually bringing defined criteria and appellate review to sentencing, is to be welcomed.

One other reformist recommendation that has a current fashion can be cursorily dismissed. I refer to the advocacy of mandatory minimum sentences for given offenses. This is a wholly illusory path to rational sentencing. It is not even clear whether mandatory minimum sentences achieve the increased severity which their protagonists seek. In some cases, certainly, and probably in the case of the mandatory minimum sentences experimented with in New York for dealing in drugs, they have achieved leniency rather than severity. People who advocate mandatory minimum sentences seem to forget that discretion, rather like matter, cannot be destroyed; it can be shifted, it can be controlled and possibly modulated, but not destroyed. Mandatory minimum sentences tend merely to shift discretion from judges to prosecutors. Charge bargaining increases; plea bargaining and judicial sentencing decrease. There is little reason to believe that prosecutors and defense counsel, in their intricate negotiating gavottes, influenced by the widest range of pressures, proper and improper, not the least by the business of the jurisdiction in which they practice, can achieve more just sentencing than prosecutors, defense counsel and judges do at present. A shift of discretion from the judge to the prosecutor by no means guarantees a reduction of unjust sentencing disparities.

But there is an important element in the recommendations of von Hirsch, of Dershowitz and (to add another commentator) of Ernest van den Haag in his book, Punishing Criminals,<sup>12</sup> which cannot be as cursorily dismissed as can the argument for mandatory minimum sentences. Their recommendations lead to an issue of principle central to the relationship between equality and desert. They all favor, as do I, a system of sentences which is primarily retributive, which does not pretend to a personal curative effect on the criminal, and in which the proper sentence to be imposed is strongly influenced by what the criminal has done. Thus, concepts of just desert are of overwhelming importance. Indeed, von Hirsch and the Committee for the Study of Incarceration, whose report his book encapsulates, build their entire sentencing system on a defining relationship between the deserved and the imposed punishment. Alan Dershowitz' presumptive sentencing recommendation somewhat weakens the link between the deserved and the appropriate sentence, but desert still remains a defining principle. My view is different: It is that desert is not a defining principle, but is rather a limiting principle; that the concept of a just desert properly limits the maximum and the minimum of the sentence that may be imposed, but does not give us any more fine tuning to the appropriate sentence than that.

Is this only a quibble, or does it push to issues of principle concerning just sentencing? I think the latter, of course, and hope to prove that conclusion to you today. Let me offer some examples where it seems to be accepted, and is in my view proper and just, not to treat like cases alike. The exemplary sentence is such a case. As Professor Nigel Walker put it, judges "will sometimes impose sentences which are markedly more severe than the norm for the express purpose of increasing their deterrent effect."<sup>13</sup> He gives as an example the imposition of a sentence of four years imprisonment on each of nine young white men who were involved in attacks on blacks in the Nottinghill District of London in 1958. This sentence was at least double the sentence normally imposed for their offenses, and was stated by the sentencing judge to be in excess of his normal sentence for such offenses, but it was within the legislatively prescribed maximum for those offenses. It was imposed expressly as an exemplary punishment, to capture public attention and to deter such behavior by a dramatic punishment. It needs no refined analysis to demonstrate that these nine offenders were selected for unequal treatment before the law. Please do not misunderstand me, I am not opposing such sentences, quite the contrary. Rather, I am arguing that if the increased penalty is within the legislatively prescribed range then any supposed principle of equality does not prevent such a sentence from being in the appropriate case a just punishment. There are many such examples, they occur in all countries and are generally accepted. Let me give you just one more example. Annually, in Chicago, there is what is called a "crackdown on drunken driving." It occurs in the latter weeks of November and the early weeks of December. It is designed expressly to reduce the carnage from drunken driving in Chicago over the Christmas period. Often, those selected for punishment during this crackdown commit their offenses in the summer or autumnal months, when the thought of the allegedly jolly penury of Christmas is far from their minds; but such are the delays in the courts that an opportunity to serve their country as recipients of exemplary punishment is vouchsafed them—in this instance, a jail term for what would at other times be punished by lesser sanctions. My excellent colleague, Franklin Zimring has done a close study of this practice and has concluded, cautious fellow that he is, addicted as he is to methodological niceties, that it is not disproved that the "crackdown" may have reduced the Yuletide devastation in Chicago from the combination of the ingestion of alcohol and the activation of the internal combustion engine.

Exemplary punishment is surely discordant to the principle that like cases should be treated alike, if that principle is regarded as either a limiting or defining principle of just punishment.

At the other end of the punishment process another example is to be found of general acceptance of not treating like criminal cases alike. The pardon and amnesty power is exercised in dramatically different ways in different jurisdictions, but it exists in all, at home and abroad. Pressures outside the prisoner and his crime, factors plainly extrinsic to the deserved punishment, the birth of a prince, the inauguration of a new government, the cessation of a foreign war, and political processes far removed from whatever makes criminal cases alike, except differences of date of the commission of the crime or imposition of the sentence, will lead to clemency to one prisoner which was denied to another. The pardon and amnesty power is difficult to reconcile with the equality principle if that principle is regarded as either defining or limiting just punishment.

Let us consider another hard case for that principle, this time a law teacher's hypothetical, which, however, I shall later argue is realistic, presenting some empirical data to that end.

Let us suppose what is, no doubt, wildly unlikely, that six medical practitioners in Denver are discovered to have a preference for patients who pay them in cash and who do not require receipts. Let us suppose that on full investigation we discover that all six doctors have understated their income last year by, say, $20,000 each. For some time we have been doubtful of the precision of tax returns by medical practitioners in this city and, as advisers to the Internal Revenue Service, we discuss what should be done about the six doctors. Well, to start with, it is quite clear that all six must pay tax on the income they have failed to declare, interest at appropriately high rates on that tax, and substantial financial penalties for their criminality. All this can, of course, be arranged without the need for their prosecution before a federal district court. Most of the six and their tax advisers will be happy indeed to arrange such settlements with IRS agents or, if necessary in relation to disputed issues of fact, through the tax court. Do we need to prosecute all six in the federal district court and do we need to send all six to prison? I submit not. Our purposes are utilitarian, deterrent. We wish, as Voltaire said of the English practice of killing an occasional admiral to encourage the others to bravery, publicly to punish by sending to prison an occasional medical practitioner "to encourage the others" to integrity in their tax returns. We do not need to send all six to prison. The extra increment of deterrence would be bought at too high a cost. It would be wasteful of our own resources, wasteful of the court's time and, what is perhaps also in point, it would inflict unnecessary suffering on those doctors whose punishment did not substantially increase the deterrent impact we would gain by the imprisonment of, say, two of their number. The principle of parsimony overcomes the principle of equality.

How should we select those to be imprisoned? Perhaps we should struggle for some distinguishing characteristic of deserved severity or some opportunity of extra deterrent utility in the punishment of some amongst the six; but what is important to recognize is that we are involved in a conscious breach of a principle that like cases should be equally punished. It may be that we would select those doctors whose lives had achieved the larger contribution to social welfare and who, as a consequence, were the better known of the six; their punishment would thus achieve the larger deterrent impact. That can hardly be a reason of equality for selecting them for the larger punishment.

This principle of parsimony in the imposition of punishment is, I think, of great importance, and is too often neglected. Let me offer some figures to demonstrate the frugality with which the Internal Revenue Service in practice applies its massive punitive powers. In 1975, throughout this vast country, only 1391 defendants were indicted for federal income tax violations, of whom 1158 were convicted and sentenced, and of whom only 367 were sent to prison or jail. In 1976, the number of indictments declined to 1331 and, of course, the number of convictions and prison sentences are not yet determined. This is an astonishingly selective and cautious use of the sanction of imprisonment for deterrent purposes. Is it unjust? It cannot be treating like cases alike if any reasonable concepts of the quality of guilt and deserved suffering are to be applied. In my view, on the data that have been published about the implication of the prison term in federal district courts, the system is both unequal and just, and it is precisely that apparent paradox I am seeking to defend.

When I put this type of case to many people, academic and civilian (if the distinction will be accepted), they tend to reply that this discriminatory selective invocation of the prison sentence by prosecutorial agencies, by administrators, is to be approved, provided it is properly controlled by K. C. Davis-like criteria that can be announced and tested as to their validity; but that it would be grossly unjust for a judge to act in this fashion in exercising his sentencing discretion. This distinction puzzles me. You will note that it is not made about exemplary punishment, where there seems to be general acceptance of the judge as the selector of the individual for the exemplary punishment. Why should the judge not be equally capable of being the selector of the four of my six doctors not to receive the more severe punishment? It can hardly be that the sentence of two of the six to prison, if only two are taken by the prosecutor to trial and four are handled administratively, is a just sentence, but that it would not be a just sentence if the selection were made by a judge. Equality in that case would serve only to protect the judicial role, to protect the oracle, the black robe—although that too is an important value which cannot be dismissed out of hand.

As you will gather, I have difficulty with these problems and by no means pretend to their solution; but I do strenuously argue that I have demonstrated situations in which justice and the principle of equality are not coterminous.

Our entire present criminal justice system is infested with discretion in the exercise of the punishment power, and much of this discretion must continue to be exercised, guided but not determined by principles of equality in punishment. At present, the shortage of police, prosecutorial, defense, judicial and punishment resources compels the discretionary selection of cases to be prosecuted; but the constraint that the principle of parsimony in punishment properly imposes on the principle of equality in just punishment would remain were such resources unlimited. Equality would still remain only a guiding principle; even with adequate resources in the criminal justice system, equality would neither define nor limit just punishment. By contrast, the principle of a deserved punishment is and should remain a limiting principle of just punishment. Let me try to unpack that blunt affirmation.

Let me propose that the death penalty be the mandatory sentence for anyone convicted of abortion. I am not talking only about an abortion in which the mother dies but the run-of-the-mill legally unjustified abortion in which the life of the well-grown, third-trimester foetus is terminated. Well, why do you not leap to accept such a proposition? Why does no one, so far as I know, advocate that punishment? Not even the most perfervid advocates of the right-to-life position seem to take themselves that seriously in relation to abortion being murder. On deterrent utilitarian grounds there would be a great deal to be said for such a penalty if you are a true believer in the right to life. It would certainly push the price of the backyard abortion up to a very high figure; it would greatly reduce the number of foetuses whose existence was terminated; it would greatly increase the number of tickets that were purchased on international airlines and I would, for my own part, immediately reinvest in TWA. Well, why not? The answer must surely be that no one would see such a punishment as an appropriately deserved punishment, even those who are both in favor of protecting the foetus and in favor of capital punishment for convicted murderers. The limiting principle is the principle of desert. As elsewhere, it is hard to quantify this principle, but it clearly operates in this case to hold that such a punishment would be undeserved.

Desert thus operates categorically to limit the maximum of punishment. Sometimes it operates to limit the minimum, when it is argued that a too lenient punishment would unduly depreciate the seriousness of the offense that the accused has committed. An example of this was the sentencing of Spiro Agnew which, in my view, was entirely correct, for utilitarian and governmental practical reasons, but which certainly strained at the lower level of the deserved punishment.

By contrast, I am suggesting that the principle of equality, that like cases should be treated alike, is not a limiting principle at all, but is only a guiding principle which will enjoin equality of punishment unless there are other substantial utilitarian reasons to the contrary; such as those that favor exemplary punishment or the parsimonious punishment of some of my six doctors, or in situations where there are inadequate resources for or high costs attached to the application of equal punishments. The equality principle neither restricts nor limits; it merely guides. The principle of desert is not much of a guide, but it does restrict and limit.

When we say a punishment is deserved we rarely mean that it is precisely appropriate in the sense that a deterrent punishment could in principle be. Rather we mean it is not undeserved; that it is neither too lenient nor too severe; that it neither sentimentally understates the wickedness or harmfulness of the crime nor inflicts excessive pain or deprivation on the criminal in relation to the wickedness or harmfulness of his crime. It is not part of a utilitarian calculus, in the properly restricted Rawlsian sense of utilitarianism. The concept of desert defines relationships between crimes and punishments on a continuum between the unduly lenient and the excessively punitive within which the just sentence may on other grounds be determined.

It is not my concern today to try to explain how complexities of social relationships and the dialectic of human thoughts and actions determine over time the values that set these minima and maxima of deserved punishments for diverse crimes. What is determinative is that these values exist and underlie concepts of "just desert" which set the limits of acceptable intervals on a spectrum of just punishment.

To summarize: Desert is not a defining principle; it is a limiting principle. The concept of "just desert" sets the maximum and minimum of the sentence that may be imposed for any offense and helps to define the punishment relationships between offenses; it does not give any more fine tuning to the appropriate sentence than that. The fine tuning is to be done on utilitarian principles.

Some immediate quibbles you may have concerning this analysis had better be brushed aside. What of the Talionic Law, you say? An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, a life for a life? Well, that does not help much with our present punishment currency of fines, probation and prison where the desert exchange rates are harder to calculate. And even the most atavistic punisher does not advocate capital punishment for every criminal killer; he will favor the death penalty for only some murderers, indeed a few, which supports rather than conflicts with my argument. And, in any event, the Talionic Law properly understood means not a life for a life, an eye for an eye, but rather no more than a life for a life, not torture and then death, and a life only for a life, not a life for larceny or embezzlement. It, too, was and is a limiting not a defining principle.

No. The Mikado's aim of letting the punishment fit the crime belongs to Gilbert and Sullivan, not to the real world of criminal justice nor to a jurisprudence of imprisonment.

As you will have gathered, I come to these problems by worrying about practice and then I try to look at the philosophic authorities to see how they address them. This second step is always more burdensome, but we had better take it.

In the Protagoras, Plato suggests that "He who undertakes to punish with reason does not avenge himself for past offense, since he cannot make what was done as though it had not come to pass; he looks rather to the future, and aims at preventing that particular person and others who see him punished from doing wrong again . . . . He punishes to deter."<sup>14</sup> Seneca put it more curtly, "Nemo prudens punit quia peccatum est, sed ne peccetur" (No reasonable man punishes because there has been a wrongdoing, but in order that there should be no wrongdoing). That is the purely utilitarian statement, the extreme contrast to which is that of Kant: "The Law concerning punishment is a categorical imperative, and woe to him who rummages around in the winding paths of a theory of happiness looking for some advantage to be gained by releasing the criminal from punishment or by reducing the amount of it—in keeping with the Pharisaic motto: 'It is better that one man should die than that the whole people should perish'. If legal justice perishes, then it is no longer worthwhile for men to remain alive on this earth."<sup>15</sup>

Thus the issue has been drawn in philosophic discourse between relativist, utilitarian guides to punishment and categoric, non-utilitarian absolutist principles. The argument survives the centuries, but throughout these centuries of uncertainty there has been what H. L. A. Hart describes as the "somewhat hazy requirement"<sup>16</sup> of justice that like cases be treated alike. Professor Hart further suggests that "there is, for modern minds, something obscure and difficult in the idea that we should think in choosing punishment of some intrinsic relationship which it must bear to the wickedness of the criminal's act, rather than the effect of the punishment on society and on him."<sup>17</sup>

Much of the literature of philosophy on this topic deals with what factors make like cases alike and once it is decided what factors bear upon desert and deterrence, it tends to be assumed that the equally guilty should be equally punished. As you see, it is a severance I am seeking to make and to suggest that these two principles operate quite differently.

How does all this square with the views of John Rawls? It is true, of course, that Rawls was writing in A Theory of Justice<sup>18</sup> of strict compliance theories of justice and not of the problems of punishment with which we are concerned, but it seems to me that his principles are applicable and in conformity with the argument that I am trying to offer. He writes that "all social values . . . are to be distributed equally unless an unequal distribution of any, or all, of these values is to everyone's advantage. Injustice, then, is simply inequalities that are not to the benefit of all."<sup>19</sup> It seems to me that the type of parsimony and inequality in the use of punishment which I suggest works to the benefit of all and does not offend sound principles of justice as Rawls defines them.

Let me put aside the philosophic implications of the argument and turn to some more lighthearted psychological reflections.

"It isn't fair," the prisoner tells me. "Here am I, serving two years for that bank robbery when others who have done just as bad, have ripped off even more, have not been caught or have not been convicted or are serving lesser terms." My usual reply is to wish that they were in there with him, but to ask him if he thinks that for what he actually did, as distinct from that for which he was convicted, he deserved the punishment he has received. The general answer, I find, is an enthusiastic reassurance that he certainly has done enough to deserve this punishment and that his only complaint is that others haven't been treated likewise. Well, is it a good complaint? In terms of utilitarian analysis it may well be. We might well have a much safer society if we were capable of catching, convicting and rationally sentencing more of our predatory and violent criminals. But in terms of justice, I am not at all sure. I am prepared to allow that he has been treated unfairly, if fairness presupposes equality of punishment, but I always argue to prisoners, and usually without too great animosity on their part, that principles of justice do not require an equality of punishment. You would be surprised how much more sensible prisoners are about matters of punishment than are my colleagues at the University of Chicago Law School.

I used to hear the same argument interminably in my family. "Here you go," said my second son, "imposing these cruel deprivations on me. This brutal temporary denial of use of the car, whereas my elder brother, as usual, gets away with much worse without even detection, and that younger brother, who is discovered in his wickedness, is treated with maudlin, senile sentimentality, and not punished at all." I used to find these confrontations with my second son more difficult than those with the prisoners—I miss them now.

There is little doubt that principles of equality bulk large in psychological concepts of the fair punishment. The question is whether concepts of fairness and of justice are identical. I think it not at all imprecise to argue that a punishment is both unfair and just. Principles of fairness, psychologically and in terms of the growth of the individual psyche, antedate the development of a sense of justice. The sense of justice is a social concept in which the necessities and practicabilities of social organization must in some cases take precedence to the pressures towards identity of treatment in relation to desert.<sup>20</sup>

Let me now, and I am sure you will be deeply grateful for the promised cessation of punishment, try to draw this lecture to a close by suggesting some of the implications of the argument I have offered concerning the relationship between equality and desert.

First, though my view of the equality principle is neutral in its relationship to the indeterminacy of sentencing and to the survival or the proper role of parole boards, it argues strongly against legislatively fixed, flat-time sentences. The legislature is in no possible position to handle the fine tuning of just sentencing required by the relationship I have suggested between the principles of desert and equality. Flat-time sentences, judicially fixed terms subject to time off for good behavior, are entirely acceptable; but not legislatively fixed sentencing, even if some discretion be given to the judge to vary sentences for statutorily defined aggravating and mitigating circumstances. Such are the diversities of human criminal behavior and such the complex relationships between justice and fairness, that the legislature should properly define only the maximum and minimum terms that the judge should impose. In other words, concepts of "just desert" should properly guide the legislature in fixing the range in which the judge should struggle for larger justice than can be achieved by the desert principle alone.

Secondly, mandatory minimum sentences offend the principles of parsimony and of equality as here inter-related. Further, they are either ingenuous or unwise, being a shift of discretion from judge to prosecutor, which is unwise. They are political ploys, not principled sentencing reforms.

Thirdly, recommendations like those of the Committee for the Study of Incarceration and the Task Force on Criminal Sentencing of the Twentieth Century Fund, with their support of "presumptive sentences," do not lay out the path we should follow. If accepted, they would be clear advances on our present sentencing anarchy and inequity, but they are a less principled course for us to follow than the path laid out by the American Law Institute's Model Penal Code commissioners, which would better guide us to a Common Law of Sentencing. The several proposals for a federal criminal code, the American Bar Association's Committee on Sentencing in its Standards Project, and a number of recently proposed and legislatively accepted state criminal codes are building on the American Law Institute's initiative and can increasingly give a rational frame of reference to the judge in his difficult task of punishing the convicted criminal. They reduce the number of categories of felonies and misdemeanors in relation to the maxima and minima of punishment applicable to each and they guide the judge in the criteria that he is to apply in the exercise of his sentencing discretion to fix the proper term of imprisonment, if imprisonment is to be ordered, within the discretion statutorily given to him. To continue this evolution toward a Common Law of Sentencing it should increasingly be required that the judge should give reasons for his choice of sentence and that his sentences and thus his reasons should be subject, as in other countries, to appellate review. Principled sentencing lies at the heart of an effective criminal justice system; it is obvious that it deserves our best intelligence and that means reasons given, critical appellate review of those reasons, critical public consideration of those reasons, a system of precedent leading to principled justice under law.

It should be added that the proposals of the Department of Justice for the establishment of a Commission on Sentencing, promulgating guidelines to sentencing, requiring the statement of reasons for sentences outside those guidelines and subjecting such sentences to appellate review is a most encouraging step towards rational and just sentencing.

Finally, everything I have said and the work of others that I have tried to build upon, all presuppose that we take seriously the moral imperative critically to measure the consequences of our penal sanctions. So much that could be known about punishment is unknown and unstudied. Deterrent studies are in their infancy, studies of reformatory efforts, in and out of institutions, are unsophisticated and largely unhelpful. It is a sin against the light to have to base such serious penal sanctions as imprisonment and now, God help us all, possibly the death penalty, on our present insecure, empirically unsophisticated guesses about the social consequences and effects of what we do. I hope my speculations have interested you; how much better if they could have been buttressed by more knowledge of the social consequences of imprisonment.

---

<sup>1</sup>University of Chicago Press, 1974.

<sup>2</sup>Id. pp. 60-62.

<sup>3</sup>Studies in Criminal Law, Norval Morris and Colin Howard, (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1964), pp. 175-177; The Future of Imprisonment, Norval Morris, Chapter 2.

<sup>4</sup>The Future of Imprisonment, pp. 73-77.

<sup>5</sup>Sentencing Memorandum 75 Cr. 785, delivered in the United States District Court, Southern District of New York, June 17, 1976.

<sup>6</sup>"The Second Circuit Sentencing Study: A Report to the Judges of the Second Circuit," by Anthony Partridge and William B. Eldridge, Federal Judicial Center, August, 1974.

<sup>7</sup>The Future of Imprisonment, pp. 31-57.

<sup>8</sup>We Are the Living Proof: The Justice Model of Corrections, David Fogel (W. H. Anderson, 1975).

<sup>9</sup>Doing Justice - The Choice of Punishments, Report of the Committee for the Study of Incarceration (Hill & Wang, 1976).

<sup>10</sup>Task Force on Criminal Sentencing, Fair and Certain Punishment - Report of the Twentieth Century Fund (McGraw-Hill, 1976).

<sup>11</sup>"Sentencing Reform and Its Impact on Parole Practices," Karen Skrivseth and Harry A. Scarr, a paper presented before the American Society of Criminology on November 3, 1976. See too Senate Bill 2699 presented on January 20, 1976, in the first session of the 95th Congress by Senators Kennedy, Abourezk, Bayh and McClellan.

<sup>12</sup>Basic Books, 1975.

<sup>13</sup>Sentencing in a Rational Society, Nigel Walker (London: Penguin Press, 1969), p. 69.

<sup>14</sup>Protagoras, trans. W. R. M. Lamb (London: Heinemann, 1952), p. 139.

<sup>15</sup>The Metaphysical Elements of Justice. Part I of The Metaphysics of Morals, trans. John Ladd (Indianapolis, 1965), p. 100.

<sup>16</sup>Punishment and Responsibility: Essays in the Philosophy of Law (Oxford, 1968), p. 24.

<sup>17</sup>Id. at 163.

<sup>18</sup>A Theory of Justice, John Rawls (Harvard, 1971).

---

<sup>19</sup>Id. at 62.

<sup>20</sup>"On the Development of a Sense of Justice," Bernard Rubin, a paper presented at the Judges Seminar, Annual Judicial Conference, Chicago, Illinois, April 1, 1976.

UNITED STATES CATHOLIC CONFERENCE,
DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT AND WORLD PEACE,
Washington, D.C., July 13, 1977.

Hon. JOHN L. McCLELLAN,
*Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures, Judiciary Committee, U.S.
Senate, Washington, D.C.*

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Department of Social Development and World Peace, the United States Catholic Conference, welcomes this opportunity to comment on S. 1437, the Criminal Code Act of 1977. We recognize that reform of the federal criminal code is both technically and politically a difficult task. Crime and punishment are, however, preeminently moral issues. As religious leaders, our primary concern is with the moral and human dimensions of criminal justice policy and reform rather than specific technical and administrative aspects of the criminal justice system. At this time, we wish to address only those provisions of S. 1437 which focus on corrections, sentencing, parole, handgun control, victim compensation and unlawful discrimination.

On several occasions the Catholic Bishops of the United States have formally addressed critical justice issues, including prison reform, capital punishment and handgun control. In 1973, the bishops issued the statement, The Reform of Correctional Institutions in the 1970s, which focused on the need for and problems of prison reform. They publicly stated their opposition to capital punishment in November 1974 and in 1976, the President of the United States Catholic Conference, Archbishop Joseph L. Bernardin, issued a statement opposing the reinstatement of the death penalty in this country. In 1975, the bishops' Committee on Social Development and World Peace issued a document supporting a federal ban on handguns. Copies of these statements are enclosed for your information.

These statements embody certain basic principles which we believe are relevant to federal criminal code reform. We will evaluate S. 1437 according to the following norms.

I. Punishment in order to fulfill its proper purpose must fit the nature of the crime; it must be considerate of the offender's human dignity; and it must be tempered by mercy and constantly aimed at reconciliation.

II. Dealing with all except the dangerous offenders outside of penal institutions is a challenging concept which society should allow to prove itself. Individual and community acceptance of ex-offenders with love and understanding is absolutely necessary for their complete integration into normal community living. Community correctional efforts, therefore, should be high on the list of priorities.

III. Society has a right to protect itself against lawbreakers and even to exact just and measured retribution, but the limits of what is reasonable and just are far exceeded in too many penal institutions. Abuses cannot be justified on the basis of their effectiveness as deterrents to crime. It is necessary to raise serious moral objection to tormenting one man unjustly in order to instruct or caution another. Correctional institutions should be institutions of rehabilitation. They should help men and women rebuild their lives in order that, with few exceptions, they can return to society as considerate, free and law-abiding citizens.

IV. A resident should be free to refuse treatments aimed at social rehabilitation, whose appropriateness can be called into question by reasonable persons in and outside the institution. No penalties of any kind should result from such refusal.

V. The work to which a resident is assigned should be—and appear to be—worthwhile and compatible with the dignity of a human being. National standards should be adopted and promulgated regarding compensation for work. Much greater emphasis is needed on practical job training and post-release employment opportunity.

VI. A resident should be informed of the date beyond which further detention demands another intervention of the court.

VII. Parole is a vital function both for the offender and for society. Consideration should be given to shifting the "burden of proof" by making a parole automatic after a definitely determined period of confinement unless there is sound reason against it.

VIII. No resident should be detained simply because employment is not available. If employment is a condition for release and no private employment is available, federal, state or local government should make every effort to assist the resistent. Career counseling, testing, guidance and bonding—where applicable—should be offered all who are preparing to be released.

IX. The United States Catholic Conference opposes the use of capital punishment.

X. Society must share at least some of the responsibility for compensating innocent victims of crime. When a way is found to pay offenders a fair rate for the work they do in confinement, provisions should be made for regular court-determined payments or at least a partial recompense to the victims, or the survivors of victims of their crimes.

XI. We believe that effective action must be taken to reverse the rising tide of violence. For this reason, we call for effective and courageous action to control handguns, leading to their eventual elimination from our society. Of course, reasonable exceptions ought to be made for the police, military, security guards, and pistol clubs where guns would be kept on the premises under secure conditions.

In light of these criteria, we have reservations about certain provisions of S. 1437. We recognize that some of these provisions are current law. As moral teachers, we believe that the primary basis for reform should be the development of a fair and equitable criminal justice system. The fact that a provision is current law does not mean that it is necessarily just, and therefore even current law should be carefully scrutinized in the context of criminal justice reform.

SENTENCING PART III, CHAPTER 20

We are concerned about the provisions on sentencing as they relate to imprisonment, the rehabilitation of the offender, the definiteness of the length of the sentence, and the quality of time served. Based on the principles articulated above, we agree that the primary basis for determining a sentence should be the nature of the crime. The characteristics of the offender, however, are factors relating to the quality of treatment needed rather than determinants for the length of sentence. Factors such as the educational, medical or correctional treatment of the offender should clearly be stated as the basis for the consideration of placement of the offender and not the length of sentence or even incarceration. An individual should not be imprisoned for an offense or receive a longer sentence because of educational needs. These services should be provided but not be the basis for the length of sentence.

Since the decision to incarcerate is the major sentencing decision, we believe that the legislation should include a statement on this matter. In light of the proven destructiveness of prisons, we would recommend that S. 1437 be amended to provide a presumption against incarceration or a requirement that a Judge consider "whether less restrictive sanctions have been applied to the defendant frequently or recently," as found in S. 181.

Adequate deterrence against crime is a legitimate concern of society, however, it should not be considered as a primary basis for the sentence imposed. Too often the concern for deterrence has led to abusive treatment in correctional facilities. We would, therefore, recommend a clearer statement of this provision, and a warning against abuse.

IMPRISONMENT AND PAROLE PART II, CHAPTER 23

In general, parole and imprisonment are related functions. This fact was recognized by the Catholic bishops in their 1973 statement on correctional reform. In S. 1437, these functions are particularly well-linked because of the interrelationship of the tasks of the Parole Commission and the proposed Sentencing Commission.

In their 1973 document, the Catholic Bishops criticized the practice of indeterminate sentencing and the frequent arbitrary decisions of overburdened parole boards by which an offender's confinement can be unjustly and inhumanly extended beyond any reasonable criterion of retribution for the offense. They then state that "consideration should be given to shifting the 'burden of proof' for parole by making parole automatic after a definitely determined period of confinement unless there is sound reason against it. We, therefore, support the efforts in S. 1437 to provide for a more automatic system of parole.

In the same statement, however, the bishops also state that correctional institutions are fundamentally places of custody and strongholds for the removal of certain citizens where rehabilitation remains largely an abstract ideal rather than a concrete achievement. We are, therefore, concerned that the effects of Part II, Chapter 23 of S. 1437 may result in increased sentences served by most offenders in facilities that are non-rehabilitative and often harmful. We would encourage the Subcommittee to review this section in order to ascertain the impact of these provisions.

Our difficulties with this section also relates to Title II, Part E of the bill, which describe the functions of the Sentencing Commission. This is discussed below.

With respect to parole services we believe that greater emphasis on practical job training and post-release employment opportunity is needed. If community-based alternatives become the primary recourse of the corrections system, then these concerns should be well-integrated with that approach. For those who are incarcerated, we believe that this function of the parole system is essential and should remain a clear and distinct function within the criminal justice system.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT, PROPOSED CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

It is our understanding that the provision of current law authorizing capital punishment in cases of hijacking where a death occurs, will be incorporated into the new criminal code through the proposed conforming amendments to S. 1437. We recognize that this provision is current law. Recently, we opposed S. 1382, the bill which proposes to establish a rational criteria for the imposition of the death penalty under federal law. We do not believe that capital punishment should be used under any circumstances.

SENTENCING COMMISSION, TITLE II, PART E

The United States Catholic Conference does not have a position at this time as to whether or not sentences and sentencing guidelines should be determined by a sentencing commission or who should be represented on such a commission. In light of the influence that the proposed Commission will have over sentencing and our concern that the punishment of offenders fit the crime, be considerate of human dignity and be tempered by mercy and constantly aimed at reconciliation we believe that a clear rationale to guide the Commission should be included in the text of the bill rather than the hodgepodge of competing factors articulated in the present bill.

As presently worded, there is no basis in S. 1437 from which one may determine the importance that the particular factors enumerated will have in the guidelines to be established since there is no overall statement of purpose of sentencing. We believe such a statement is essential to the development of a fair code.

VICTIM COMPENSATION, CHAPTER 41, SUBCHAPTER A

We were pleased to see that some recognition of the victims of crime has been incorporated into this bill. The inclusion of victims of federal crimes against person is a first step toward society's acceptance of its responsibility to provide for the victims of crime.

We would also encourage efforts to involve the offender in providing restitution to the victim and not simply repayment to the victim's fund. Restitution should be made part of the rehabilitative process, as has been done successfully in a number of states.

HANDGUNS, TITLE II, PART A, SECTION 202

We recognize that handgun control is a controversial issue. In 1975 the Committee on Social Development and World Peace of the United States Catholic Conference issued a statement supporting strong handgun control legislation. As initial steps toward comprehensive control, they endorsed the following measures: a several day cooling off period, a ban on "Saturday Night Specials," registration of handguns, licensing of handgun owners, and more effective controls and better enforcement of existing laws regulating the manufacture, importation, and sale of handguns.

S. 1437 essentially transfers existing statutes to the new criminal code. We would support the inclusion of more stringent handgun control measures. At minimum, we would recommend the amendment of section 922, of title 18, United States Code and referred to in Title II, Section 202 b(2) of the Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977 (50 U.S.C.) so as to ban the importation of any part intended to be used in the production of a firearm. This would thereby strengthen an obvious loophole in the Gun Control Act of 1968.

We are also concerned that this bill be consistent with previous civil rights legislation on the subject of discrimination.

UNLAWFUL DISCRIMINATION, SECTION 1504

This section makes it a crime for a person, by force or threat of force, to intentionally injure, intimidate, or interfere with another person's civil rights because of that person's race, color, sex, religion or national origin. It is essentially a recodification of 18 U.S.C. 245(b) (2), (4), and (5), and 42 U.S.C. 3631 with the addition of sex as a prohibited ground for discrimination.

The above-stated statutes were part of the Civil Rights Act of 1968. Apparently, at that time, religion was included with race, color and national origin as a prohibited ground for discrimination in certain parts of the Act. Although we have no record of any difficulty being experienced with those provisions and no evidence that they have been abused, since Congress is reviewing the law we believe it is the proper time to stress our opposition to the inclusion of religion in Section 1504 without some qualifying statement, specifically as it is contained in Section 1054 (H) and (I).

Although Section 1504 in many ways parallels the Civil Rights Acts of 1964 and 1968, making discrimination a crime where before it only subjected one to a civil penalty, the section does not have any of the exceptions or exclusions for religion that those laws have. For example, Title VI, Section 601 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 states that: "No person in the United States shall on the ground of race, color or national origin be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance."

Religion was not included as one of the prohibited grounds. By excluding religion Congress was recognizing the distinction between legitimate religious preference and invidious discrimination based on inherent characteristics such as race, color or national origin.

Congress also granted an exemption to religion in Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 in Section 702, as amended:

"This title shall not apply to an employer with respect to . . . a religious corporation, association, educational institution or society with respect to the employment of individuals of a particular religion to perform work connected with the carrying on by such corporation, association, educational institution or society of its activities." And Section 703 "it shall not be an unlawful employment practice for a school, college, university, or other educational institution or institution of higher learning to hire and employ employees of a particular religion, if such school, college, university or other educational institution of higher learning is in whole or in substantial part owned, supported, controlled or managed by a particular religious corporation, association or society, or if the curriculum of such school, college, university or other educational institution or institution of higher learning is directed toward the propagation of a particular religion."

Section 1504(H) of S. 1437, however, makes it a crime to intentionally injure, intimidate or interfere by force or threat of force with another person on the ground of religion in applying for or enjoying employment by a private employer.

While religious and religious organizations are free from the requirements of Title VII for their legitimate operations, they are included in the jurisdiction of Section 1504. It is not unreasonable to imagine that the officials of religious institutions may be subject to criminal sanctions for activities which are exempted under other Civil Rights laws.

This is also true regarding Section 1504(I), which refers to the selling, purchasing, renting, financing or occupying a dwelling; contracting or negotiating for the sale, purchase, rental, financing or occupation of a dwelling; or applying for or participating in a service of renting dwellings. Section 807 of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, allowed an exemption for religious organizations, associations or societies of any nonprofit institution operated, supervised or controlled by or in conjunction with a religious organization, or society, from limiting the sale, rental or occupancy of dwellings which it owns or operates for other than a commercial purpose to persons of the same religion, or from giving preference to such persons, unless membership in such religion is restricted on account of race, color, or national origin.

From the above it is clear that Section 1504 of S. 1437 will be inconsistent with these earlier Civil Rights laws. Although we do not foresee any instances of church officials using force or threats of force to intentionally injure or intimidate the civil rights of any person, we can foresee situations where unjust charges may be made. If they are upheld we wonder what effect this will have on the previous exemptions and exclusion in the Civil Rights laws.

We believe that this is an opportunity for Congress to eliminate this inconsistency in the law. This could be done either by removing the word religion from Section 1504 or by adding in Section 1504 a provision which would state that:

"Provided: that the above prohibitions are not to be interpreted as to modify or change in any way or manner the religious exemptions included in the Civil Rights Acts of 1964 and 1968 and that these exemptions remain in full force and effect."

The failure to provide this clarification may make it possible to charge persons with crimes for religious discrimination where they would not be subject to civil penalties. The inclusion of Section 1504 in S. 1437 without qualification may also create doubt in the minds of some courts whether these exemptions are meant to continue to exist since criminal penalties are more severe than civil ones. If criminal penalties are permitted, it may seem logical to some that civil penalties are also allowed.

In the Civil Rights Acts of 1964 and 1968, Congress recognized the differences between religion and inherent characteristics such as race, color and national origin. We believe that Congress should strive to maintain this position by making Section 1504 of S. 1437 consistent with those laws. Failure to do so will only result in confusion. It is important that the language in this area of law be clear as to rights and responsibilities.

CONCLUSION

We wish to thank the Subcommittee for including these remarks in the hearing record on S. 1437. While acknowledging that much time and effort has already been devoted to this bill, we believe that the issues raised in this letter are critical to the development of a just and effective criminal code and criminal justice system. Your careful consideration of these concerns is appreciated.

Sincerely,

(Msgr.) FRANCIS J. LALLY,
Secretary, Department of Social Development and World Peace.

---

Mailgram

HACKENSACK, N.J.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON CRIMINAL LAWS AND PROCEDURES,
SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE,
*U.S. Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.*

Please record the National Council on Crime and Delinquency as opposed to the enactment of S. 1437.

A Federal criminal code is needed and should enunciate a major change in national criminal justice policy which could serve as a model for State criminal codes and justice systems. We recommend that the new Federal code: Reduce Federal jurisdiction for crimes which are State crimes; decriminalize victimless-type crimes; eliminate the use of imprisonment as punishment except for dangerous defenders; expand the range of non-imprisonment sentences; establish a policy of short sentences or consistent with those of other industrial nations; guarantee a helping service to persons discharged from prison; provide for serving of Federal prison sentence in State prisons near the residence of the prisoner.

A full statement in support of the above principles will be submitted at a later date.

MILTON G. RECTOR,
President, National Council on Crime and and Delinquency.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF THE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN PUBLISHERS, INC.

The Association of American Publishers (AAP), whose more than 300 members include most of the leading book publishers in the United States, submits this statement to the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, to record its opposition to Section 1842—the proposed obscenity provisions—of S. 1437.

Section 1842 was among the "controversial" provisions of S. 1, but, unlike other sections of S. 1437 that appear to modify or eliminate many of the disputed provisions of the earlier bill, the current Section 1842 duplicates its predecessor provision, almost verbatim. It thus fails to resolve the troubling constitutional issues presented in S. 1.

As drafted, Section 1842 retains the worst features of current federal laws and introduces significant new provisions that will compound the vagueness and overbreadth of current federal law. Yet it will do nothing to eliminate or reduce the "chilling" effect on the exercise of constitutional freedoms that, unfortunately, has been a hallmark of obscenity law for the past one hundred years.

For these reasons and other stated below, this ill-conceived provision should be eliminated from S. 1437 or, at least, should be substantially revised.

Federal laws dealing with obscenity date back more than one hundred years to Anthony Comstock's crusades against sexual immorality, coarse language and corrupt opinion. But since the 1870's this country has experienced several revolutions in sexual, legal and constitutional values. And the American people have granted a progressively higher priority to First Amendment guarantees of freedom of speech and the press. Despite these fundamental changes, the Comstock laws have remained on the books virtually intact, their constitutionality sustained only by virtue of constant reinterpretation in the United States Supreme Court.

The obscenity issue has sharply divided the Supreme Court for the past two decades. During that time a substantial number of the Justices sitting on the Court have come to the conclusion that criminal obscenity laws—including the Comstock laws—are inherently at odds with constitutional protections. Even the bare majority of Justices who have voted to sustain criminal obscenity laws have expressed concern over the difficulty of fairly defining and even-handedly enforcing such laws.

In sum, while it is true that a bare majority of the present Supreme Court continues to affirm the power of the federal government to prohibit the commercial dissemination of "obscenity", within strict constitutional limits, it would be a serious error to interpret the Court's divided and troubled posture on obscenity as representing a judicial mandate for, or as affirming the wisdom of, federal criminal laws proscribing obscenity. In these circumstances, the Supreme Court's reluctant and constantly-shifting judicial construction of the constitutional limits of obscenity is neither an appropriate nor sufficiently stable basis for legislative action to reform or codify the federal law of obscenity. We believe that the recommendations of the 1970 Congressional Commission on Obscenity and Pornography do constitute the proper basis for establishing a sound legislative and constitutional policy. That Commission's basic recommendation was that no legislation should be adopted which operates to prevent the dissemination of sexually-related materials to adults who wish to read or view them.

If, however, the Subcommittee is committed to including in S. 1437 federal criminal legislation regulating such materials, we believe that the bill must be substantially revised in order to eliminate the many constitutional and technical defects that inhere in Section 1842 as drafted.

Without attempting to create an exhaustive catalogue, we list a number of possible amendments that would, in the AAP's view, help to improve Section 1842.

I. Precedence for State Laws. As new, free-standing federal law, potentially inconsistent with state or local standards of obscenity, Section 1842 could be used by federal prosecutors to invoke stricter standards than those which a state may have adopted. The section should therefore be amended to limit any federal offense to the dissemination of sexually-oriented materials in violation of the laws of the state in which they are disseminated.

II. Attorney General's Prior Approval to Prosecute. To reduce inconsistency and confusion in the application of a federal obscenity law, Section 1842 should provide for prior approval of any federal obscenity prosecution by the Attorney General. Publishers and distributors would thus be assured of uniform application of federal law in different federal jurisdictions, and there would be less likelihood of the federal statute being used to circumvent application of more permissive state or local procedures.

III. Enforceable Bars to "Venue-Shopping". Many recent federal prosecutions of allegedly obscene materials have been brought against nationally-distributed material, not in its place of origin or where it is predominantly sold, but in some community having no substantial connection to the act of publication or distribution. Section 1842 (or other pertinent provisions of S. 1437) should be amended to provide a strict and enforceable rule against such "venue-shopping". Prosecutions should be limited to the district in which the material was created or from which it was disseminated. Multiple prosecutions, which invite similar abuses, should also be outlawed—once specific materials have been acquitted in any proceeding, there should be no further federal prosecution.

IV. A Single Statutory Framework. It is essential that federal law relating to obscenity be limited to one statutory framework. Provisions contained in other titles—for example, the postal act provisions in Title 39—should conform to those enacted elsewhere in the statute. Similarly, to insure consistent enforcement, all federal proceedings against sexually-oriented materials, whether civil or criminal in nature, should be subject to approval by the Attorney General.

V. Prior Civil Determination of Obscenity. Because the definition of obscenity is inherently vague, and a publisher or distributor risks criminal prosecution if it is ultimately determined that materials he disseminates are obscene, a number of states have adopted procedural safeguards to assure greater clarity, uniformity and fairness in the application of their obscenity laws. To this end, the Congress should consider amending Section 1842 to provide for a civil proceeding to make initial determination of the obscenity or non-obscenity of sexually-oriented materials, prior to the commencement of any criminal action. Any such civil proceeding should provide for a speedy jury trial and expedited appeals, and should permit introduction of expert testimony and other evidence bearing upon the constitutional test of obscenity.

VI. Clarified Provisions Concerning Minors and "Thrusting". There is logic in according separate statutory considerations, as Section 1842 does, to distribution of sexually-explicit materials to willing adults as distinct from their dissemination to minors or their exposure to unwilling adults ("thrusting"). Indeed, the AAP has not opposed appropriate state or local legislation dealing with either of the two latter activities. However, such legislation is new to federal law and, so far as we are aware, the proper role, if any, for federal legislation regarding minors has never been considered by the Congress. It is not surprising, therefore, that the two provisions of Section 1842 purporting to deal with these two aspects of the obscenity question present substantial questions of propriety and enforceability. Their lack of specificity stands in stark contrast to the detailed provisions of the many state and local laws in these areas. If Congress wishes to legislate on thrusting, Section 1842 must, at least, be amended to specify the kinds of public displays or premises to which it is applicable. If Congress wishes to legislate regarding dissemination to minors, Section 1842 should, at least, be amended to provide as an affirmative defense that the minor has parental permission, is emancipated or has provided convincing evidence that he or she is of age. Again, any enforcement of the minors and thrusting provisions should, we believe, commence with a prior civil determination of obscenity.

VII. Sexual Abuse of Minors. The shocking phenomenon of the sexual abuse of minors in creation of pornography is another issue which the AAP believes can be an appropriate subject of federal legislation, if properly defined. While we have some reservations concerning the constitutionality of bills dealing with the use of minors in pornography that are currently before the Congress, we believe consideration could be given to the probable relationship between such pending federal child abuse legislation and the proposed Section 1842, provided that any legislation is drafted with careful concern for the constitutionally-mandated protection of materials of potential scientific and educational value.

Finally, it should be made clear that our opposition to Section 1842 does not represent an attack on S. 1437 as a whole. On the contrary, we recognize and commend the seriousness of purpose and spirit of compromise that have gone into this revision of S. 1. Many groups, including ours, that vigorously opposed S. 1, now substantially support S. 1437 as a substantial improvement. However, as Senators Kennedy and McClellan have both recognized, the bill can be further improved. It is in this spirit that we urge this Subcommittee—and the Congress—to recognize that very serious defects are still present in Section 1842 and to delete or amend this provision accordingly.

SUPERIOR COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D.C., July 12, 1977.

HON. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. SENATE,
HON. JOHN L. MCCLELLAN,
U.S. SENATE,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATORS KENNEDY AND MCCLELLAN: In reviewing the provisions of S. 1437, it occurs to me that a series of potential problems exist for which no clear resolution presents itself in the bill. As you know, in the District of Columbia there are two court systems which are intended to be independent, but which, in actuality, overlap in some certain areas. Most particularly, both the Superior Court of the District of Columbia and the United States Court for the District of Columbia have the responsibility for sentencing offenders convicted of offenses listed in the D.C. Code. Of concern in the present context is Section 11-502(3) of the D.C. Code which provides that the United States District Court has jurisdiction of the following: "Any offense under any law applicable exclusively to the District of Columbia which offense is joined in the same information or indictment with any Federal offense."

It is not uncommon for such a mixed indictment, containing Federal and D.C. Code offenses, to be resolved by a plea of guilty to a D.C. Code offense only, thereby putting the United States District Court in a position to sentence the offender under a criminal statute applicable exclusively in the District of Columbia. In other cases, the Federal Court may have to sentence for both a Federal and a D.C. Code violation.

Another difficulty is also present. I enclose herewith a copy of two related opinions which I wrote in the case of United States v. Mary Williams, Criminal No. 35771-73. My decision in this case was never appealed by any government party to the litigation. While this case deals with the issue of an unconstitutional discrimination against female felons convicted and sentenced to more than one year's confinement in the District of Columbia, the case also discloses the source of a potential problem lurking, but not addressed, in S. 1437.

Section 103(a) of S. 1437 exempts prosecutions under any Act of Congress applicable exclusively in the District of Columbia from the provisions of S. 1437. However, in light of certain unique aspects of sentencing, imprisonment and parole which apply in the District of Columbia, it seems to me that certain provisions of S. 1437 will apply to criminal cases under exclusively local criminal provisions of the D.C. Code which are applicable exclusively in the District of Columbia.

As the Mary Williams opinion points out, Sec. 24-425 of the D.C. Code provides that all persons convicted in the District of Columbia of a criminal offense, either under Federal law or provisions of the D.C. Code, shall be committed to the custody of the Attorney General of the United States. Thereafter, D.C. Code offenders may be incarcerated either in institutions maintained by the D.C. Department of Corrections or the Federal Bureau of Prisons. When such offenders are confined in Federal prisons they are then subject to parole consideration by the U.S. Board of Parole. In that circumstance it appears to me that Sections 3821 through 3837 of S. 1437 will indeed apply to offenders who have been convicted under an Act of Congress applicable exclusively in the District of Columbia, in contravention of what is apparently intended by Section 103(a).

Furthermore, in cases where the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, pursuant to the provisions of D.C. Code Sec. 11-502(3), is called upon to sentence an offender for a D.C. Code violation, it appears that the provisions of Chapter 20 of S. 1437 may come into play. And if they do not, then there will be the anomalous situation of a Federal District Court sentencing a criminal defendant under some system other than that made applicable to such Federal Courts by Chapter 20.

Also, there may well be created by the system here to be established a serious problem of a violation of the Constitutional right to equal protection of the law. My opinion in Mary Williams addressed that very problem in the context of the treatment of women only, but the vast disparity between the sentencing and parole treatment of convicted offenders which will arise if some District of Columbia offenders are treated under local sentence and parole systems while others are treated by the provisions of S. 1437, may well give rise to extensive litigation over that very constitutional issue. It seems to me that such matters should be considered and resolved in the drafting, amending and enacting stages of S. 1437 so as to forestall just such problems.

May I respectfully suggest two possible means of removing these potential problem areas. First, the District Court for the District of Columbia should have removed from its jurisdiction all purely local offenses in the District of Columbia. Indictments or informations filed in the Federal Court should only contain counts setting forth violations of Federal laws. This would require an amendment to D.C. Code Sec. 11-502(3). Second, although it is probably imperative for the Attorney General to have the authority to be able to transfer certain individuals to more secure Federal prisons, or to transfer them for their own or others' safety, I suggest that no matter where a D.C. Code violator who is sentenced in Superior Court of the District of Columbia is incarcerated, all such prisoners shall be considered by the D.C. Board of Parole. By removing all such D.C. prisons from the ambit of the U.S. Board of Parole, two incipient problems will be solved. One, all such prisoners will be afforded equal treatment, thereby curing the constitutional infirmities delineated in my Mary Williams opinion. Two, there will be no possibility that strictly D.C. Code offenders, who are sentenced by Superior Court, and not under the provisions of Chapter 20 of S. 1437, will thereafter have to be dealt with by the U.S. Parole Board under the provisions of Section 3821-3827 of S. 1437. Indeed, if those sections of S. 1437 had to apply, it is doubtful if they could be made to work in the case of a sentence imposed by a Superior Court judge under the applicable sentencing scheme now in use pursuant to the D.C. Code, rather than being imposed under Chapter 20 of S. 1437.

I would be happy to meet with either you or members of your staff to discuss further the matters discussed above, in the event you feel that I can be of any further help.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES W. HALLECK,
Judge.

Enclosure.

In the Superior Court of the District of Columbia
(Criminal No. 35771-73; Civil Action No. SP 792-76)

UNITED STATES

v.

MARY A. WILLIAMS

MARY A. WILLIAMS

v.

EDWARD LEVI, ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES; DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BOARD OF PAROLE; AND DELBERT JACKSON, DIRECTOR, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS

OPINION AND ORDER

Mary A. Williams is before the sentencing court seeking post-conviction relief from a denial of equal protection of the law arising solely from a classification by sex which resulted in a discrimination in her consideration for parole. This court hereby finds that Mary Williams, having come under the authority and power of the United States Board of Parole pursuant to D.C. Code Sec. 24-209 due solely to her designation and placement in a federal correctional facility, was a victim of a discriminatory application of different parole standards than would have been applicable to her if she had appeared before the District of Columbia Board of Parole. This court finds that she came under the authority of the U.S. Board of Parole solely as a result of classification by sex, and that the resulting different treatment is a violation of her rights to equal protection of the law guaranteed by the United States Constitution. The appropriate remedy, declaratory and injunctive relief, is granted herein.

I.

On May 8, 1974, the defendant Mary Williams pleaded guilty to a charge of assault with a dangerous weapon in violation of D.C. Code Sec. 22-502, which carries a maximum possible penalty of ten years imprisonment. On May 31, 1974, this court sentenced her to ninety (90) days to three (3) years imprisonment. It was this court's intention and belief that she would receive some treatment for alcoholism, and that she would receive meaningful parole consideration ninety days after commencing her sentence and that the Parole Board would make an individualized determination of her progress toward rehabilitation.

Like all persons sentenced by the District of Columbia Superior Court, pursuant to D.C. Code Sec. 24-425, Mary Williams was committed to the custody of the Attorney General for imprisonment in such facility as he or his authorized representative would designate. The Federal Bureau of Prisons designated her to serve that sentence at the Federal Women's Reformatory at Alderson, West Virginia, and she was accordingly transferred there from the Women's Detention Center in Washington, D.C. Pursuant to D.C. Code Sec. 24-209, the United States Board of Parole had jurisdiction over the parole status of Mary Williams. That section provides:

"The Board of Parole created by section 723a of title 18, U.S. Code, shall have and exercise the same power and authority over prisoners convicted in the District of Columbia of crimes against the United States and now or hereafter confined in any United States penitentiary or prison (other than the penal institutions of the District of Columbia) as is vested in the Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole over prisoners confined in the penal institutions of the District of Columbia."

On November 6, 1974, Mary Williams was interviewed by a hearing examiner from the United States Board of Parole. On November 20, 1974, she was notified that she would be required to continue to serve to expiration the sentence imposed by this court. The November 20 notice introduced at the November 17, 1975, hearing as defendant's exhibit #2 gives the reasons for the continuance to expiration as follows:

"Your offense behavior has been rated as greatest severity. You have a salient factor score of 5. You have been in custody a total of 8 months. Guidelines established by the Board for adult cases which consider the above factors indicate a range of unlimited months to be served before release for cases with good institutional program performance and adjustment. After careful consideration of all relevant factors and information presented, it is found that a decision outside the guidelines at this consideration does not appear warranted. You need additional institutional treatment, specifically, alcohol therapy to enhance your capacity to lead a law abiding life."<sup>1</sup>

The guidelines which dictate this result are applicable only to the United States Board of Parole and not to the District of Columbia Board of Parole.

Thereafter, Mary Williams, through court-appointed counsel, moved this court to vacate or modify her sentence pursuant to Superior Court Criminal Rule 35, D.C. Code Sec. 16-1901, et. seq., or D.C. Code Sec. 23-110. On November 17, 1975, this court heard testimony from Mr. Peter Hoffman, Research Director of the United States Board of Parole, concerning that Board's adult guidelines for length of time to be served prior to parole as well as the procedures of that Board, and from Mr. Edward Keightley, Program Analyst of the District of Columbia Board of Parole concerning the procedures and standards of that Board. On February 9, 1976, Mr. Delbert Jackson, Director of the D.C. Department of Corrections, testified concerning the reasons for and methods of transferring sentenced women felons to federal institutions.

This court determined by order of May 3, 1976, for reasons set forth therein, that this court has jurisdiction to consider Mary Williams' motion under D.C. Superior Court Rule 35 to correct an illegal sentence, her motion under 23 D.C. Code Sec. 110 to vacate or correct the sentence as one subject to collateral attack, and her petition for habeas corpus under 16 D.C. Code Sec. 1901. Mindful that the mandate of 23 D.C. Code Sec. 110(e) that "[t]he court shall not be required to entertain a second or successive motion for similar relief on behalf of the same prisoner" was intended not only to prevent repetitions demands by the same prisoner for relief on the same grounds, but also to require the assertion in one motion of all the existing grounds which the prisoner has for questioning the validity of his or her sentence, see Bistram v. United States, 283 F.2d 1 (8th Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 366 U.S. 921 (1960), and especially mindful of the interests of judicial economy, efficiency, and convenience to the parties and witnesses, as well as the court, this court by order of May 3, 1976, consolidated the civil and criminal motions above-mentioned into a single case for unitary disposition. That order is appended hereto. The question before the court, to be resolved upon careful consideration of the testimony taken at two hearings, as well as the numerous extensive written pleadings submitted by the parties and by a court-appointed amicus curiae, is as follows: Was Mary Williams discriminated against in her parole treatment solely on account of sex, and if so, does that discrimination constitute a violation of her right to equal protection of the laws? This court concludes as a matter of fact, and of law, that the answer to that question is yes.

<sup>1</sup> There was no indication of what "treatment, specifically, alcohol therapy" had been afforded her, the degree of her progress, or more importantly, what kind of additional treatment other than incarceration was contemplated.

II

Before examining the question of discrimination in parole treatment, the court must first consider why Mary Williams appeared before the United States Parole Board rather than the District of Columbia Board of Parole. On February 9, 1976, Mr. Delbert Jackson, the Director of the District of Columbia Department of Corrections testified in this matter. He explained that at one time sentenced female felons were incarcerated in a facility operated by the D.C. Department of Corrections and located in Occoquan, Virginia, but that the facility was subsequently converted to what is now Youth Center Number Two for male youths. (Transcript, pp. 8-9). Mr. Jackson testified that despite the "dramatic" increase in female offenders in D.C. (Tr., p. 9), "there are no facilities for sentenced female felons in the District of Columbia at present." (Tr., p. 8, also p. 23). On cross-examination, he explained that there is no possibility of using the present Women's Detention Center, located in Washington, D.C., to house sentenced felons; it was designed simply as a holding facility and "most certainly is not" a reformatory. It was never designed to house convicted defendants (Tr., p. 15) and Mr. Jackson asserted, "It's not a facility that I personally recommend for the maintenance of human beings over a prolonged period of time." (Tr. p. 14).

Mr. Jackson testified that although bringing the sentenced women back from federal facilities is a high priority in his mind, it would require a minimum allocation of twenty million dollars ($20,000,000.00) (Tr., p. 38). The D.C. Department of Corrections' projected facility for women is part of a $55 million Lorton Improvement Plan, extant since 1972, and to date with no prospects of being funded.

However, the District of Columbia does provide extensive facilities to house male sentenced felons and youth offenders at its buildings in Lorton, Virginia.

As a consequence of this lack of facilities sentenced female felons from Superior Court must serve their sentences in federal correctional facilities.

D.C. Code Sec. 24-425 provides that all prisoners sentenced in the District of Columbia are committed to the custody of the Attorney General of the United States or his authorized representative, "who shall designate the places of confinement where the sentences of all such persons shall be served." Likewise persons convicted and sentenced in federal courts across the country are committed to the custody of the Attorney General. Persons convicted in federal courts, both for offense in violation of the U.S. Code and for lesser included D.C. Code offenses, are designated to serve their sentences in federal prisons. (Tr., p. 6). Theoretically, a reading of D.C. Code Sec. 24-425 would produce the impression that persons sentenced by the District of Columbia Superior Court would receive from the Federal Bureau of Prisons the same individualized designation treatment as do federal court prisoners; that is, an examination of available relevant information to determine whether maximum-, medium-, or minimum-security setting is appropriate, whether informants need to be separated from other persons, and similar factors.

However, this individualized evaluation and designation does not occur for D.C. Code offenders sentenced by D.C. Superior Court. Mr. Jackson testified about, and subsequently submitted to this Court, as part of the record of this case, an exchange of correspondence between then Chief Judge John Sirica of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia and then Attorney General Richard Kleindienst, dated in October, 1972, concerning designation of sentenced prisoners. Chief Judge Sirica, in his letter of October 13, 1972, to Attorney General Kleindienst, requested that because "the prison facilities of the District of Columbia Department of Corrections are overcrowded, * * * discipline is lax or non-existent", "prisoners entrusted to the care of the District of Columbia Department of Corrections are not protected from sexual assault and bodily harm at the hands of other prisoners and * * * there are frequent escapes and release from the Department's custody of prisoners deemed to be highly dangerous", and because "the services, facilities, personnel and programs are totally inadequate" the Judges of the United States District Court after consideration at an Executive Session on October 12, 1972, urgently requested the Attorney General to "designate institutions other than the facilities under the supervision or control of the District of Columbia Department of Corrections for incarceration of all defendants" thereafter convicted in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. By letter of October 16, 1972, Attorney General Kleindienst agreed to the request and informed Judge Sirica that the Director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons had been so instructed.

The trade-off for all prisoners from federal court being designated to federal facilities is that persons convicted in the District of Columbia court system are all automatically, pursuant to a categorical agreement, designated to serve their sentences in District of Columbia Department of Correction facilities. (Tr., p. 5) The exception, for persons sentenced by the D.C. Courts, are twofold. First are those "special cases" (Tr., p. 22) who for individual reasons of safety or security are in danger from other inmates in D.C. facilities; examples include persons who have informed police or assisted prosecutors such that their lives may be endangered. Each of these cases is handled on an individual basis and a decision is made on the facts of each case. The second exception is a class one rather than an individual one: women, solely on account of their sex, are routinely sent to federal institutions, as Mr. Jackson testified, "simply because at present, there are no facilities in the District of Columbia for sentenced incarcerated women." (Tr., p. 23).

Indeed, so routine is the designation of D.C. Superior Court sentenced males to D.C. Department of Corrections facilities that the Attorney General has delegated the designation of such persons to the Mayor of the District of Columbia, who in turn has further delegated that authority to the D.C. Department of Corrections.

At the hearing on February 9, 1976, Mr. Jackson was presented with the hypothetical question of a male, John Smith, who was found guilty of assault with a dangerous weapon and sentenced by a D.C. Superior Court judge to a sentence of three months to three years. The court inquired of Mr. Jackson how such a person would be designated:

THE COURT. Well, if I give this man, John Smith, for assault with a dangerous weapon felony, and if I give him a sentence of three months to three years. Then, the first thing that happens is that there has to be a designation by the Federal Bureau of Prisons?

THE WITNESS. No.

THE COURT. No?

THE WITNESS. No.

THE COURT. Does he go straight to Lorton?

THE WITNESS. Yes.

THE COURT. Who decides that?

THE WITNESS. I do.

THE COURT. Now, would you send him to a Federal Institution?

THE WITNESS. No.

THE COURT. So, he would have to go to Lorton?

THE WITNESS. That's correct.

(Tr., pp. 10-11).

Then Mr. Jackson was asked the identical hypothetical for a female who committed the same offense and received the same sentence. She would be routinely sent to a federal institution, probably Alderson for an adult and Morgantown for a person with a youth sentence.

This explains why Mary Williams was sent to Alderson. The District of Columbia has facilities for female felons. Although theoretically the Attorney General designates the place of sentence of every person sentenced by D.C. Superior Court, he has en-masse designated the males to facilities run by the D.C. Department of Corrections and female go en-masse to federal institutions.<sup>2</sup> The designation is made by class on the basis of sex. The court must then evaluate the applicability of D.C. Code Sec. 24-209 in light of these facts found by the court.

<sup>2</sup> The court also notes that the "Plaintiffs' and Defendant U.S. Attorney General's Stipulation of Fact Concerning Designation and Return" in Garnes v. Taylor, Civil Action No. 159-72, now pending before Judge Bryant in U.S. District Court to litigate claims of sex discrimination against women prisoners, contains this stipulation: "¶10. Since 1972, the Bureau of Prisons had designated a federal facility for service of sentence for D.C. female offenders with sentences greater than one year as a matter of course."

III

As set forth above, D.C. Code Sec. 24-209 provides that the Federal Board of Parole has the same power and authority over persons convicted of crimes in this court and confined in federal prisons as does the D.C. Board of Parole over persons in D.C. penal institutions.

The respondents here argue that Mary Williams' placement under the authority of the U.S. Board of Parole cannot be a discrimination because some males sentenced in D.C. Superior Court also are designated to federal prisons and they too are subject to the authority of the U.S. Parole Board. The crux of the matter is not that all D.C. sentenced prisoners designated to federal prisons equally appear before the U.S. Parole Board, but rather that it is discrimination in the designation process which results in the federal parole authority. Part II of this opinion, supra, contains findings of fact that a discrimination exists in the designation process.

The next question to consider is whether the standards and rules of the District of Columbia Board of Parole and the United States Board of Parole are different, so that a woman appearing before the federal board would be treated differently than if she appeared before the D.C. Board.

The United States Board of Parole uses "Guidelines for Decision Making", first published in the Federal Register in November, 1973,<sup>3</sup> which outline the length of time persons under the jurisdiction of that Board will be required to serve. The guidelines have been described in a number of court opinions on parole and in scholarly articles, and were also explained by Mr. Peter Hoffman, Research Director of the U.S. Board of Parole in his testimony in this matter on November 17, 1975.

"The Guideline Table consists of two basic indices on which inmates are scored: an 'Offense Severity' index and a risk prediction or 'Salient Faction' index. These two indices form the axes of a matrix: on the vertical axis inmates are placed into one of six severity groups according to the 'offense behavior,' while along the horizontal axis they are divided into four risk groups according to their Salient Factor Score. At the intersection of each severity and risk category, a range of months is listed. This range represents the amount of actual time to be served prior to the first release of an inmate with those offense and risk characteristics. By scoring and rating an inmate on the two indices, the hearing examiners determine the inmate's expected incarceration period. They will normally recommend a decision—parole, a continuance to a later hearing or report (a set-off), or imprisonment until the expiration of the sentence (continue to expiration, or CTE)—such that the total time actually served by the inmate at release will be within that expected range.

The Offense Severity Scale was derived by averaging the evaluations of Parole Board members and examiners of the seriousness, on a scale of one through six, of typical offense behaviors. The Offense Severity Rating reflects the Parole Board's independent, subjective evaluation of the gravity of the inmate's past criminal behavior. Classification on the severity scale is not based on the legal "offense of commitment" or on sentence length; rather, the Board makes its own determination of the inmate's offense behavior, which it then rates relative to 'offense behaviors . . . commonly seen by the parole board.'

The Salient Factor Score is designed to predict the likelihood that an inmate will succeed on parole. This score is measured by an 11-point Salient Factor Scale, which consists of nine weighted personal characteristics that were statistically determined to have high predictive power in discriminating between past groups of releases who 'succeeded' and 'failed' after their release. All but two of the nine items are part of the inmate's past criminal record and behavior; they are 'static' and generally known to the judge at the time of sentencing. The items scored cannot reflect rehabilitative progress, because they bear little or no relation to the commitment offense, the amount of time the inmate has served, or the programs in which he or she has participated at the institution." Parole Release Decisionmaking and the Sentencing Process, 84 Yale L. J. 810, 823-824.

Neither the Offense Severity nor the Salient Factor Score measures the person's institutional behavior or rehabilitative progress. The Board gives each person a rating along each axis of its chart, using a different chart for adult, youth, and narcotics addiction sentences, and then sees the "customary total time served before release."

<sup>3</sup> Federal judges were first notified of these guidelines in August, 1974. See Parole Release Decisionmaking and the Sentencing Process, 84 Yale L. J. 810, 822, note 59. Judges of this court have never been directly notified of these guidelines.

In his testimony of November 17, 1975, in this case Mr. Peter Hoffman testified that "within the last six months approximately 84 percent of the initial decisions have been within the guidelines." (Tr. p. 23), or perhaps 82 percent (Tr. p. 46), with half of the remainder above and half below the guidelines figure. Mr. Hoffman testified that in May, 1975, the guidelines were applied 90 percent of the time at initial hearings in the Northeast region, with another 5 percent serving longer than the guidelines and 5 percent serving shorter times. (Tr. p. 44). He referred to a written report giving a figure of 91.7 percent adherence to the guidelines, (id.)<sup>4</sup> In the case of Grasso v. Norton, 376 F. Supp. 116, 119 (D.Conn. 1974), Mr. Hoffman testified that the Board follows its guidelines between 92 and 94 percent of the time. Mr. Hoffman explained that these figures derived from different time periods, that from October, 1973, to March, 1974, at initial parole board hearings the guidelines were applied in 91.7 percent of the cases. (Tr. p. 47), that since then the percentage of decisions within the guidelines has gone down somewhat so that the figure has "leveled off" at about 85% compliance with the guidelines, 7 and 1/2 percent above, and 7 and 1/2 percent below the guidelines (Tr. p. 48). This court finds as a fact the United States Board of Parole follows its "Guidelines for Decisionmaking" charts in making parole release decisions in the vast majority of cases, from 84 to 92 percent of the time.

Mary Williams' conviction for assault with a dangerous weapon was considered to be in the "greatest severity" category, along with such other crimes as aircraft hijacking, espionage, kidnapping, and willful homicide. Her salient factor score was calculated as 5, in the "fair" range. A person with a 5 salient factor score and the next lesser severity category (very high) would be required to serve 45 to 55 months, and a person with a 5 salient factor score in the greatest severity category is to serve a time "greater than above"; thus the U.S. Board of Parole told her that the time for her to serve was "a range of unlimited months to be served before release", (Def't. exhibit #2), and that a decision outside these guidelines was not warranted in her case. It is an inescapable fact that her parole decision, to continue her to the expiration of her sentence, was premised on these guideline charts.

The District of Columbia Board of Parole does not use this chart-based decision method of the federal board. The compilation of rules and regulations of the D.C. Board of Parole, tendered by Mr. Edward J. Keightley, Program Analyst of the D.C. Board of Parole at his November 17, 1975, testimony in this case, sets forth the factors to be considered in making a parole determination. Sec. 105 of the D.C. Rules and Regulations, Title 9, notes that the statutory criteria are "that there is a reasonable probability that a prisoner will live and remain at liberty without violating the law, that his release is not incompatible with the welfare of society, and that he has served the minimum sentence imposed or the prescribed portion of his sentence as the case may be." Sec. 105.1 sets forth the specific factors considered by the D.C. Board as follows:

(a) The offense, noting the nature of the violation, mitigating or aggravating circumstances and the activities and adjustment of the offender following arrest if on bond or in the community under any pre-sentence type arrangement.

(b) Prior history of criminality noting the nature and pattern of any prior offense as they may relate to the current circumstances.

(c) Personal and social history of the offender, including such factors as his family situation, educational development, socialization, marital history, employment history, use of leisure time and prior military experience, if any.

<sup>4</sup> The Yale Law Journal study reported figures based on a written report by Mr. Hoffman, as follows:

"Between October 1973, and March 1974, 91.7 percent of all decisions at initial parole hearings were within the Guidelines, while 4.5 percent were decisions above the Guidelines and 3.8 percent were decisions below the Guidelines. P. Hoffman & L. DeGostin, Parole Decision-Making: Structuring Discretion, June 1974, at 10. (U.S. Bd. of Parole Res. Unit: Rep. 5) [hereinafter cited as Structuring Discretion]. There is some dispute as to the meaning of these figures. If all cases are excluded that involve either minimum sentences greater than the Guideline range or maximum sentences or mandatory release dates below the Guideline range (cf. note 80 infra), then the percentage of decisions at initial hearings within the Guidelines is 88.4 percent with 5.3 percent below and 6.3 percent above." Id.

Parole Release Decisionmaking and the Sentencing Process, supra, at 825, note 75.

(d) Physical and emotional health and/or problems which may have played a role in the individual's socialization process, and efforts made to overcome any such problems.

(e) Institutional experience, including information as to the offender's overall general adjustment, his ability to handle interpersonal relationships, his behavior responses, his planning for himself, setting meaningful goals in areas of academic schooling, vocational education or training, involvements in self-improvement activity and therapy and his utilization of available resources to overcome recognized problems. Achievements in accomplishing goals and efforts put forth in any involvements in established programs to overcome problems are carefully evaluated.

(f) Community resources available to assist the offender with regard to his needs and problems, which will supplement treatment and training programs begun in the institution, and be available to assist the offender to further serve in his efforts to reintegrate himself back into the community and within his family unit as a productive useful individual." D.C. Register, Special Edition, D.C. Rules and Regulations, Title 9, Board of Parole, July 24, 1972, at pp. 19-21.

See also testimony of Mr. Keightley, November 17, 1975, Tr., pp. 106-108.

The court takes note that institutional experience and behavior is a factor considered by the D.C. Board of Parole which is not considered by the U.S. Board of Parole.

Mr. Keightley testified at the November 17, 1975, hearing that the D.C. Board of Parole has no guidelines or mechanical computations for parole, the only applicable calculation being the minimum sentence imposed by the judge (Tr., p. 104), and that prisoners under their jurisdiction are generally given parole consideration on or shortly after the expiration of their minimum sentence (Tr., p. 105) or after one-third of their sentence (Tr., p. 112). He testified that the D.C. Board of Parole looks "at each individual as an individual and the length of his sentence, minimum sentence" and that "the maximum sentence doesn't come into play at all in making that determination as to whether they are going to . . . grant parole." (Id. also Tr., p. 15). Mr. Keightley explicitly stated on cross-examination that the D.C. Board does not use the federal guideline charts or any analogous schedules (Tr., pp. 109-110).

Mr. Keightley testified that the D.C. parole rate is about 69 percent; that between 57 to 59 percent of the persons under their jurisdiction are granted parole at their first eligibility date, and an additional 12 percent are granted at a rehearing. (Tr., pp. 105, 114). The Washington Post reported more recently, on March 14, 1976, that of 1,025 inmates considered for parole for the first time in 1975, 667 were paroled, or two-thirds at the initial hearing and that of the 1,330 persons heard altogether in 1975, 948 or 71.2 percent were granted parole. In 1974, the total percentage granted was 72.9 percent. D.C. Parole Rate of 66 percent Tops Area. Washington Post, Sunday, March 14, 1976, p. A1-A5. By contrast the Post reported that "according to statistics on file in the Senate Judiciary Committee, the federal board paroles about 35 percent of those considered for parole annually." Id., at A5, col. 8.

Indeed, some judges of this court have criticized the D.C. Board of Parole for Parole for presuming that every prisoner who completes the minimum sentence is ready to be paroled, absent some deficiency in prison behavior, so that "the vast majority of prisoners make parole at the initial hearing." See United States v. Michael Samuels, Crim. No. 2331-73, Memorandum and Order dated January 14, 1975, at p. 4, and that the Board does not make an affirmative finding of rehabilitation but presumes such a state. (Id.) See also Washington Post article, supra.

This court finds as a fact that Mary Williams' consideration by the United States Board of Parole resulted in the application of different and harsher standards of parole than would have been applied by the District of Columbia Board of Parole had they had jurisdiction of her case. This does not constitute a finding of fact concerning whether or not she would have been released. This court's findings herein related only to the application of a different set of standards to Mary Williams simply by virtue of her status as a convicted, sentenced female felon from Superior Court of the District of Columbia.

IV

Having found the above facts, the court must now address the question of whether this application of different and harsher parole standards constituted a denial of equal protection of the laws in violation of Mary Williams' right to due process under the Fifth Amendment.

The United States Supreme Court held in 1954 that equal protection of the law is one element of the due process guarantee which applies to the District of Columbia through the Fifth Amendment, and that an unjustifiable discrimination violates due process. Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497 (1954). Procedures through which persons are granted or denied parole are subject to a standard of due process; the right to consideration for parole is an aspect of liberty to which the protection of the due process clause extends. Childs v. United States Board of Parole, 167 U.S. App. D.C. 268, 275 (1974); United States ex rel. Johnson v. Chairman of New York State Board of Parole, 500 F. 2d 825, 927 (2nd Cir.), vacated as moot, 95 S. Ct. 488 (1974); Bradford v. Weinstein, 519 F. 2d 728, 731 (4th Cir., 1974), certiorari granted, 95 S. Ct. 2394, dismissed as moot after prisoner released from supervision, 96 S. Ct. 347 (1975).

Absent an equal rights amendment, this court must turn to equal protection case law to determine the correct analytical framework.

Differences in treatment based solely on classification by sex violate equal protection of the laws, and therefore due process of law, when there is no "rational relationship" between the classification by sex and the governmental purpose sought to be achieved, or when the distinction between the sexes does not bear a "fair and substantial relation to the subject of the legislation", or when a distinction based on a suspect classification found to be inherently suspect is not justified by a compelling government interest, depending on the constitutional test applied.

In recent years there has been a great deal of litigation over the proper status of women in society, and despite a series of Supreme Court opinions on sex discrimination issues, the exact test to be applied is still not firmly resolved. In 1971, the Supreme Court was confronted with an Idaho statute which required that "males must be preferred to females" among persons otherwise equally entitled to administer the estate of a person who died intestate. The Court concluded that this "arbitrary preference . . . cannot stand in the face of the Fourteenth Amendment's command that no State deny the equal protection of the laws to any person within its jurisdiction." Reed v. Reed, 404 U.S. 71, 74 (1971). The test enunciated by the Court was drawn from Royster Guano Co. v. Virginia, 253 U.S. 412, 415 (1920):

"A classification must be reasonable, not arbitrary, and must rest upon some ground of difference having a fair and substantial relation to the object of the legislation, so that all persons similarly circumstanced shall be treated alike." (404 U.S. at 76.)

This "fair and substantial relation" test is less stringent than the "strict scrutiny" which must be applied to classifications declared inherently suspect, but clearly stronger than the traditional "rational relationship" test.

Then in 1973 the Supreme Court in Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677 (1973), again considered the validity of a sex-based classification scheme. In Frontiero a servicewoman challenged statutes which allowed a serviceman to claim his wife as a "dependent" without regard to whether she was in fact dependent upon him for any part of her support, but required a servicewoman to prove that her husband was in fact dependent upon her for over one-half of his support in order to claim him as a dependent for medical and dental benefits and quarters allowances. The court struck down the statute as a violation of the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment. The plurality opinion, containing the views of Justices Brennan, Douglas, White, and Marshall, found that "classifications based on sex, like classifications based on race, alienage, and national origin, are inherently suspect and must therefore be subjected to close judicial scrutiny." 411 U.S. at 682. The court went on to note that "[t]his departure from 'traditional' rational-basis analysis with respect to sex-based classifications is clearly justified" because of the "unfortunate history of sex discrimination" in our nation. 411 U.S. at 684.

"And what differentiates sex from such nonsuspect statuses as intelligence or physical disability, and aligns it with the recognized suspect criteria, is that the sex characteristic frequently bears no relation to ability to perform or contribute to society." (411 U.S. at 686.)

There was no majority opinion in Frontiero. Justice Stewart concurred in the judgment of the plurality, on the ground that the statutory scheme worked "an invidious discrimination" and cited only Reed v. Reed. Justices Powell, Blackmun, and Chief Justice Burger concurred in the judgment but did not adopt sex as a suspect classification, because they felt it unnecessary to the decision and because the equal rights amendment was then involved in the ratification process in state legislatures. Justice Rehnquist dissented.

In Cleveland Board of Education v. LaFleur, 414 U.S. 632 (1974), the Court struck down rules in Cleveland, Ohio, and Chesterfield County, Virginia, which required public school teachers to take unpaid maternity leaves five and four months, respectively, prior to the expected childbirth, and which in Cleveland prohibited the female teacher from returning to work until her child was at least three months old. The Court's rationale there was based on due process rather than sex discrimination. The mandatory times fixed created irrebuttable presumptions of physical incompetence and the Court noted that "irrebuttable presumptions have long been disfavored under the Due Process Clauses of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments." 414 U.S. at 644.

The Court's next opinion in a sex discrimination case was Kahn v. Shevin, 416 U.S. 351 (1974). In upholding a tax exemption for widows but not for widowers, the Court applied the Reed test and found "some ground of difference having a fair and substantial relation to the object of the legislation." 416 U.S. at 355.

Geduldig v. Aiello, 417 U.S. 484 (1974) upheld the exclusion of certain pregnancy related disabilities from coverage by the California disability insurance system because the heavy expense of covering pregnancy would destroy the economic viability of the social welfare program. Indeed, the Court denied that the case presented a question of sex discrimination.

"[T]his case is . . . a far cry from cases like Reed v. Reed, and Frontiero v. Richardson, involving discrimination based upon gender as such. The California insurance program does not exclude anyone from benefit eligibility because of gender but merely removes one physical condition—pregnancy—from the list of compensable disabilities. While it is true that only women can become pregnant, it does not follow that every legislative classification concerning pregnancy is a sex-based classification like those considered in Reed, supra, and Frontiero, supra. Normal pregnancy is an objectively identifiable physical condition with unique characteristics. Absent a showing that distinctions involving pregnancy are mere pretexts designed to effect an invidious discrimination against the members of one sex or the other, law-makers are constitutionally free to include or exclude pregnancy from the coverage of legislation such as this on any reasonable basis, just as with respect to any other physical condition." (417 U.S. at 496-97, note 20.)

Weinberger v. Wiesenfeld, 420 U.S. 636 (1975) extended to widowers with dependent children the social security benefits formerly available only to widows with dependent children. The Court found the gender-based distinction of the Social Security Act "indistinguishable" from that invalidated in Frontiero v. Richardson, 420 U.S. at 642-43. The Court did not articulate the precise test it was using because the discrimination could not be found constitutional under any test.

"Given the purpose of enabling the surviving parent to remain at home to care for a child, the gender-based distinction of Sec. 402(g) is entirely irrational." (420 U.S. at 651.)

Most recently, the Court found that a difference in sex between children did not warrant a distinction in the Utah statute under which girls attained majority at age 18 but boys did not attain majority until age 21. The challenged statute allowed for support payments to cease when female children reached age 18 and male children reached 21. The Court left open the precise test to be used in sex discrimination cases.

"We find it unnecessary in this case to decide whether a classification based on sex is inherently suspect.

*                      *                      *                      *                      *

"Reed, we feel, is controlling here.

*                      *                      *                      *                      *

"We therefore conclude that under any test—compelling state interest, or rational basis, or something in between—Sec. 15-2-1 in the context of child support, does not survive an equal protection attack. In that context, no valid distinction may be drawn." (Stanton v. Stanton, 95 S. Ct. 1373, 1377-1379 (1975).)

This court believes that the correct and appropriate test to be applied here is that of strict scrutiny for two reasons: First, sex is a suspect classification. Frontiero v. Richardson, supra, United States ex. rel. Robinson v. York, 281 F. Supp. 8, 16 (D.Conn 1968); Sailor Inn, Inc v. Kirby, 5 Cal. 3d 1, 485 P.2d 529

(1971) ; second, the right to non-discriminatory parole consideration is a fundamental one.

There are few interests more substantial than freedom from imprisonment. Chief Justice Burger described the important function of parole in the criminal justice system as follows :

"During the past 60 years, the practice of releasing prisoners on parole before the end of their sentences has become an integral part of the penological system. Note, Parole Revocation in the Federal System, 56 Geo. L. J. 705 (1968). Rather than being an ad hoc exercise of clemency, parole is an established variation on imprisonment of convicted criminals. Its purpose is to help individuals reintegrate into society as constructive individuals as soon as they are able, without being confined for the full term of the sentence imposed. It also serves to alleviate the costs to society of keeping an individual in prison. The essence of parole is release from prison, before the completion of sentence, on the condition that the prisoner abide by certain rules during the balance of the sentence." (Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 477 (1972).)

Just as a parolee has an interest in his continued liberty, so a prisoner has a substantial interest in non-discriminatory consideration for parole and non-discrimination parole eligibility.

"The liberty of a parolee enables him to do a wide range of things open to persons who have never been convicted of any crime. The parolee has been released from prison based on an evaluation that he shows reasonable promise of being able to return to society and function as a responsible, self-reliant person. Subject to the conditions of his parole, he can be gainfully employed and is free to be with family and friends and to form the other enduring attachments of normal life. Though the State properly subjects him to many restrictions not applicable to other citizens, his condition is very different from that of confinement in a prison. He may have been on parole for a number of years and may be living a relatively normal life at the time he is faced with revocation. The parolee has relied on at least an implicit promise that parole will be revoked only if he fails to live up to the parole conditions, in many cases, the parolee faces lengthy incarceration if his parole is revoked.

"We see, therefore, that the liberty of a parolee, although indeterminate, includes many of the core values of unqualified liberty and its termination inflicts a "grievous loss" on the parolee and often on others. It is hardly useful any longer to try to deal with the problem in terms of whether the parolee's liberty is a right' or a 'privilege.' By whatever name, the liberty is valuable and must be seen as within the protection of the Fourteenth Amendment." (Morrissey v. Brewer, id., at 482.)

The federal respondents seem to believe that the correct test is that of a "fair and substantial relationship to the object of the legislation." See Return and Answer to the Order to Show Cause, p. 7.

However, the discrimination against Mary Williams cannot withstand an equal protection attack even if the test to be applied is merely that of a rational relationship between the classification based on sex and the difference in parole treatment. Parole is a fundamental public policy in the District of Columbia. See D.C. Code, Secs. 24-201, et. seq. Parole may mean an opportunity to start anew in society, and may be a determinative step in a person's rehabilitation and adjustment to a law-abiding life.

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania struck down a statute regarding the imposition of minimum sentences for men but not for women, which resulted in different parole eligibility dates solely on the basis of sex. Their approach is worth noting :

"That one person (assuming equality of considerations as, for example, prior criminal record or rehabilitative progress) should be eligible for parole at a different time than another person solely because of his or her sex is discrimination of the most obvious sort. We perceive no basis, let alone a rational basis, for predicating eligibility for parole on a person's sex." (Commonwealth v. Butler, 328 A.2d 851, 856 (Pa., 1974).)

"In other contexts, much has been written about the equal protection clause (especially about its impact on sex discrimination) and many different views of its scope and role propounded. And although at times the equal protection clause can at best be seen through a glass darkly, one aspect is perceived clearly: if a legislative classification bears no reasonable relationship to the purposes of the legislation, the equal protection clause is offended. * * * [W]e have concluded that there is no rational relationship between the sex of a convicted person and the Commonwealth's interest in parole eligibility." (Id. at 858.)

See also State v. Chambers, 63 N.J. 287, 307 A.2d 78 (1973).

This court, too, must conclude that there is no rational relationship between the sex of a convicted person and the District of Columbia's interest in parole eligibility or the application of different parole standards and criteria to male and female prisoners sentenced in District of Columbia Superior Court. No testimony has been introduced to even suggest any theory that men and women should have different parole criteria applied. Indeed, the respondents have only addressed themselves to whether the criteria are indeed different, a factual question.

The plurality in Frontiero v. Richardson wrote about sex discrimination in this country:

"There can be no doubt that our Nation has had a long and unfortunate history of sex discrimination. Traditionally, such discrimination was rationalized by an attitude of a 'romantic paternalism' which, in practical effect, put women not on a pedestal, but in a cage." (411 U.S. 677, 684.)

Mary Williams is here literally in a cage, a federal cage. She may not be entitled to release from her cage, but she is most certainly constitutionally entitled to the same consideration for possible parole as a male would have had before the District of Columbia Board of Parole.

Accordingly, this court finds that the United States Board of Parole having authority and jurisdiction over Mary Williams pursuant to D.C. Code Sec. 24-209 was a result of a discriminatory classification by sex, and the resulting different treatment is therefore a violation of her right to equal protection of the law and due process guaranteed to her by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution.

The court must now address the question of an appropriate remedy.

There is some substantial question whether the rights of women such as Mary Williams are violated when they are not provided prison facilities by the District of Columbia while men prisoners similarly situated are so provided. The United States Supreme Court held in Missouri ex. rel. Gaines v. Canada, 305 U.S. 337 (1938) that if a state furnishes legal education to white students within its borders, it cannot deny that quality legal education to black students in the state; paying for the black students to go to out-of-state schools would not suffice. The fact that there may have been only a limited number of black students seeking such benefits, so that provision of a separate-but-equal school was burdensome, was not relevant. The Court found that the obligation of the State to give the protection of equal laws must be performed where its laws operate; that is within its own jurisdiction.

Similarly, at a time when Congressional intent regarding the education of deaf children in the District of Columbia was that such children should be separated by race, it was the practice that the D.C. Board of Education contracted with a private school within the District for the education of white deaf children, and the black deaf children were sent to a school in Maryland. The United States District Court held in Miller v. Board of Education, 106 F. Supp. 988 (D.C.D.C. 1952) that, although the separation by race was proper, the District may not provide facilities for one race in the District and send the other race outside the jurisdiction; it is the duty of the District to provide equal education facilities within the District for deaf children of both races, if it provides for any within the District.

Although all persons sentenced in District of Columbia Superior Court to terms of incarceration are committed to the custody of the Attorney General, the District of Columbia Government has elected to provide for the confinement of males in its own facilities while it sends the females to federal institutions far from their homes and families.<sup>5</sup>

However, Mary Williams has not here challenged her placement in a federal institution, only her resultant parole treatment. This court can afford her a full equitable remedy without ordering the provision of facilities by the D.C. Department of Corrections.

Mary Williams has sought declaratory and injunctive relief. Pursuant to its equitable powers, D.C. Code 11-946, District of Columbia v. Walters, 319 A. 2d 332 (D.C.C.A., 1974); Spock v. District of Columbia, 283 A. 2d 14 (D.C.C.A., 1971), this court hereby renders a declaratory judgment that D.C. Code Sec. 24-209 is unconstitutional as applied to persons sentenced by the District of Columbia Superior Court who are designated to serve their sentences in federal institutions solely on the basis of sex; that is, females who receive regular sentences. Thus, this judgment will not apply to persons who are in federal institutions serving NARA sentences.

<sup>5</sup> The nearest federal prison for women is at Alderson, West Virginia, some 350 miles from Washington, D.C.

This court on May 14, 1976, ordered respondent District of Columbia Board of Parole to give a hearing to Mary Williams within twenty days. By order of May 14, 1976, this court granted a conditional writ of habeas corpus and ordered that the writ will issue discharging Mary Williams unless within twenty days the District of Columbia Board of Parole grants a hearing to consider whether or not Mary Williams should be paroled.

Dated : June 9, 1976.

Judge CHARLES W. HALLECK.

In the Superior Court of the District of Columbia, Criminal Division

UNITED STATES

v.

MARY A. WILLIAMS

(Criminal No. 35771-73)

ORDER

Mary Williams is before the sentencing court seeking post-conviction remedies to correct what she alleges is a denial of equal protection based solely on classification by sex. Several motions are now pending. By this order, the court finds jurisdiction over this action under Superior Court Criminal Rule 35, under D.C. Code 23-110, and under D.C. Code 16-1901 and grants the Motion for Joinder of Parties to join Mr. Delbert Jackson in his capacity as Director of the District of Columbia Department of Corrections, Mr. Joseph Shore as a representative of the District of Columbia Board of Parole, and Attorney General Edward Levi in his capacity as ultimate custodian of Mary Williams. The joined parties will now have an opportunity to file any pleadings on the merits of the case, if they so desire, prior to any ruling on the equal protection issue and any appropriate remedy.

I

On May 8, 1974, the defendant, Mary Williams, pled guilty to a charge of assault with a dangerous weapon in violation of D.C. Code Sec. 22-502, which carries a maximum possible penalty of ten years imprisonment. On May 31, 1974, this court sentenced her to ninety (90) days to three (3) years imprisonment. She was designated by the Federal Bureau of Prisons to serve that sentence at the Federal Women's Reformatory at Alderson, West Virginia. Testimony introduced in a hearing in this matter was that women sentenced by D.C. Superior Court are routinely sent to federal prisons because of a lack of facilities for females in the D.C. Department of Corrections, whereas males similarly sentenced normally serve their sentences in facilities of the D.C. Department of Corrections.

Pursuant to D.C. Code 24-209, the United States Board of Parole had jurisdiction over the parole status of Mary Williams. On November 6, 1974, Mary Williams was interviewed by a hearing examiner from the United States Board of Parole. On November 20, 1974, she was notified that she would be required to continue to serve to expiration the sentence imposed by this court. The November 20 notice introduced at the November 17, 1975, hearing, as defendant's exhibit No. 2 gives the reasons for the continuance to expiration as follows:

"Your offense behavior has been rated as greatest severity. You have a salient factor score of 5. You have been in custody a total of 8 months. Guidelines established by the Board for adult cases which consider the above factors indicate a range of unlimited months to be served before release for cases with good institutional program performance and adjustment. After careful consideration of all relevant factors and information presented, it is found that a decision outside the guidelines at this consideration does not appear warranted. You need additional institutional treatment, specifically, alcohol therapy to enhance your capacity to lead a law abiding life." <sup>1</sup>

The guidelines which dictate this result are applicable only to the United States Board of Parole and not to the District of Columbia Board of Parole.

Thereafter, Mary Williams, through court-appointed counsel, moved this court to vacate or modify her sentence pursuant to Superior Court Criminal Rule 35, D.C. Code Sec. 16-1901, et seq., or D.C. Code Sec. 23-110. This court has heard testimony from Mr. Peter Hoffman, Research Director of the United States Board of Parole, concerning that Board's adult guidelines for length of time to be served prior to parole and the procedures of that Board on November 17, 1975. Also, Mr. Edward Keightley, Program Analyst of the District of Columbia Board of Parole testified on November 17th concerning the procedures and standards of the Board.

Mary Williams remains incarcerated on this sentence <sup>2</sup> and seeks relief.

II

The relief requested by Mary Williams presently includes a motion to vacate or modify her sentence, filed May 21, 1975, and supplemented on November 7, 1975, by a request for equitable relief through habeas corpus contained in a supplemental memorandum filed December 11, 1975, a motion for declaratory and injunctive relief filed December 19, 1975, and a motion for declaratory and injunctive relief filed April 28, 1976.

She has requested to "be resentenced in such a manner as to be given credit for time served and released from custody" (Dec. 11, 1975, p. 4), "to order the D.C. Board of Parole to consider her for parole" (Id., p. 5), for "an affirmative remedy which would place the petitioner in the same position as a similarly situated male" (Id., p. 6), and for "a declaration that her continued incarceration without parole consideration by the respondents is unlawful and in violation of her right to due process of law under the Fifth Amendment." (Dec. 19, 1975, p. 1 and April 28, 1976, p. 1).

Before addressing these substantive issues of whether Mary Williams has been unconstitutionally denied equal protection of the laws and due process of law by reason of her consideration for parole by the personnel and procedures of the United States Board of Parole rather than by the personnel and procedures of the District of Columbia Board of Parole which she alleges would have been afforded to a similarly-situated male sentenced by this court, and whether her sentence should be vacated or modified by this court, it is first necessary to consider the pending Motions for Joinder of Parties and the preliminary jurisdictional issues.

III

The jurisdictional issues have been well and thoroughly briefed by counsel for Mary Williams, counsel for the United States, and by the amicus curiae appointed by this court. Three theories of jurisdiction have been advanced and require evaluation.

First, defendant moved under Superior Court Criminal Rule 35 for correction of her sentence. This motion is required to be filed before the original sentencing judge. Rule 35(a), identical to Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 35, provides:

"The court may correct an illegal sentence at any time and may correct a sentence imposed in an illegal manner within the time provided herein for the reduction of sentence."

The time provided where, as here, there was no appeal from the conviction, is 120 days. Defendant's Rule 35 motion was filed well after the 120 day limit had expired. The case law is uniform in federal court that Rule 35 motions required to be filed within that time limit cannot be considered after the 120 days. See Kortness v. United States, 514 F.2d 167, 168, note 1 (8th Cir., 1975). The counsel for the United States correctly points out that Superior Court Criminal

<sup>1</sup> There is, however, nothing to indicate that "alcohol therapy" is either available or afforded to prisoners at Alderson.

<sup>2</sup> Mary Williams was initially incarcerated in Alderson, West Virginia. During the course of this litigation she was brought to Washington, D.C. to be a witness in unrelated litigation in U.S. District Court, and has subsequently remained in Washington by May 30, 1975, order of this court. Her presence under that order, modified by consent of both the Assistant U.S. Attorney and defense counsel on February 13, 1976, is not the basis of any finding of jurisdiction herein.

Rule 45(b) explicitly disallows extensions of time for filing Rule 35 motions. Therefore this court cannot and will not now consider any allegations under a Rule 35 motion that the sentence was "imposed in an illegal manner". However, the court can and will consider the allegation made in this Rule 35 motion that the sentence itself is illegal, as that aspect of a Rule 35 motion may be made "at any time".

The appropriateness of entertaining a Rule 35 motion in a situation where the defendant was denied parole consideration due to the U.S. Board of Parole's guidelines is well illustrated in United States v. Manderville, 396 F. Supp. 1244 (D.Conn. 1975). In Manderville, Judge Blumenfeld held that while courts should not function as superparole boards, "they should not be reluctant to modify sentences when assumptions which they entertained at the time of sentencing with regard to parole possibilities have subsequently been invalidated." 396 F. Supp. at 1249. In Manderville, the trial judge had sentenced the defendant to two years imprisonment for possession of stolen bank funds with the expectation that the defendant would serve 12 to 16 months in prison and the remainder on parole, but the U.S. Board of Parole in applying its policy guideline table had determined that the defendant should serve the entire sentence less good time, a period of 19 months. The judge therefore on a Rule 35 motion reduced the sentence to 18 months imprisonment which would allow for release in 14 months.

In United States v. Slutsky, 514 F.2d 1222 (2nd Cir. 1975), the second circuit found that a Rule 35 motion is an appropriate method for reconsideration of a sentence where the trial court was unaware at the time of sentencing of new Board Parole guidelines which had the effect of causing the defendants to serve longer sentences. The appellate court held:

"We are convinced that the parole consideration afforded the Slutskys is likely to depart substantially from what we must assume were the reasonable expectations of the district judge. Accordingly, we think that a remand for resentencing is appropriate in order to allow the district judge an opportunity to reconsider the original sentence in light of these new circumstances." United States v. Slutsky, 514 F.2d 1222, at 1227.

Because new parties are about to be joined, infra, this court does not now rule on the substance of Mary Williams' Rule 35 motion but only decides here that this court does have jurisdiction over the unlimited time "illegal sentence" aspect and will not consider the time-expired "sentence imposed in an illegal manner" aspect of the Rule 35 motion.

The second basis of defendant's requests for relief is a motion under 23 D.C. Code Sec. 110 to vacate or correct the sentence. That section of the D.C. Code, almost identical to 28 U.S. Code Sec. 2255, provides in relevant part:

"Sec. 23-110. Remedies on motion attacking sentence

"(a) A prisoner in custody under sentence of the Superior Court claiming the right to be released upon the ground that (1) the sentence was imposed in violation of the Constitution of the United States or the laws of the District of Columbia, (2) the court was without jurisdiction to impose the sentence, (3) the sentence was in excess of the maximum authorized by law, (4) the sentence is otherwise subject to collateral attack, may move the court to vacate, set aside, or correct the sentence.

"(b) A motion for such relief may be made at any time.

* * * * *

"(e) The court shall not be required to entertain a second or successive motion for similar relief on behalf of the same prisoner.

* * * * *

"(g) An application for a writ of habeas corpus in behalf of a prisoner who is authorized to apply for relief by motion pursuant to this section shall not be entertained by the Superior Court or by any Federal or State court if it appears that the applicant has failed to make a motion for relief under this section or that the Superior Court has denied him relief, unless it also appears that the remedy by motion is inadequate or ineffective to test the legality of his detention."

This motion is timely made and is correctly before the judge who imposed the original sentence. That a motion under 28 U.S.C. Sec. 2255 is an appropriate method of challenging parole board implementation of a sentence is illustrated by Kortness v. United States, 514 F.2d 167 (8th Cir., 1975).

Robert Kortness was sentenced on November 19, 1973, to a three year prison term. On May 2, 1974, the sentencing court denied his Sec. 2255 petition on the grounds that the "court is without authority to direct the Parole Board in the discharge of its responsibility and is without authority to modify the sentence imposed". 514 F.2d at 168. He appealed and the Court of Appeals found that the sentencing court did have the authority to modify the sentence. Kortness had applied for parole, and like Mary Williams, was informed that he would receive no further consideration for parol during the remainder of his prison term. Like Mary Williams, the reason for this determination was that the Parole Board's set of tables, known as their parole policy guidelines, indicated a sentence to be served that equalled or exceeded the maximum sentence imposed. Kortness' sentence under 18 U.S.C. Sec. 4208(a) (2) allowed for immediate parole consideration, yet the board computation of an offense severity rating and salient factor score combined on a matrix to indicate a range of 26 to 32 months to be served in such cases. The Board determined that a decision outside the guidelines was not warranted and continued his case to the expiration of his sentence. The Kortness court noted that in Grasso v. Norton, 376 F. Supp. 116, 119 (D. Conn. 1974), the Director of Research for the Board of Parole testified that the Board follows its guidelines between 92 and 94 percent of the time. The same official of the U.S. Parole Board, Peter Hoffman, testified in this case on November 17, 1975, that from October, 1973, to March, 1974, at initial parole board hearings the guidelines were applied in 91.7% of the cases, and that from January to July of 1975 the Parole Board held 5,993 hearings and in 84% of the intial hearings the guidelines were applied. He also testified that where the Board goes outside the guidelines it must justify that decision with an explanation, whereas decisions within the guidelines required no explanation.

Kortness' sentence was imposed the same day as the initial publication of the guidelines. "Without access to these guidelines, the sentencing judge was entitled to assume that defendant Kortness would receive meaningful consideration for parole at an early date or at least upon completion of one-third of this sentence." 514 F.2d at 170.

When this court sentenced Mary Williams to a sentence of ninety days to three years, the court was unaware of the Parole Board guidelines and their applicability. The court intended that she should undertake alcohol rehabilitation and requested that she be designated to serve her sentnce in a federal facility so that she might receive such therapy. It was the court's intention and belief that she would receive meaningful parole consideration ninety days after commencing her sentence and that the Parole Board would determine her progress toward conquering her alcohol problems. The Government argues that defendant cannot claim relief only because the court had insufficient or erroneous information to enable an accurate prediction of future decisions by the Parole Board. But that argument misses the mark completely. The point is not that the sentencing judge should be able to predict whether or not a defendant will be released but rather that the judge intends that the defendant be given meaningful consideration. Here the sentence and parole treatment combine to effect a three year sentence with no possibility of parole.

The 8th Circuit found in Kortness that under these exact circumstances "a prisoner may utilize 28 U.S.C. Sec. 2255 to attack a sentence apparently legal on its face", that under the "otherwise subject to collateral attack" language of Sec. 225, "[a] critical error made by the sentencing court in fixing the sentence may be corrected through a Sec. 2255 proceeding." 514 F.2d at 170. This court has jurisdiction over Mary Williams' motion under 23 D.C. Code Sec. 110.

The third basis for Mary Williams' request for relief is an application for the Great Writ of Habeas Corpus under 16 D.C. Code Sec. 1901.

"Sec. 16-1901. Petition : issuance of writ.

"(a) A person committed, detained, confined, or restrained from his lawful liberty within the District, under any color or pretense whatever, or a person in his behalf, may apply by petition to the appropriate court, or a judge thereof, for a writ of habeas corpus, to the end that the cause of the commitment, detainer, confinement, or restraint may be inquired into. The court or the judge applied to, if the facts set forth in the petition make a prima facie case, shall forthwith grant the writ, directed to the officer or other person in whose custody or keeping the party so detained is returnable forthwith before the court or judge.

"(b) Petitions for writs directed to Federal offices and employees shall be filed in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

"(c) Petitions for writs directed to any other person shall be filed in the Superior Court of the District of Columbia."

Parole treatment is clearly an appropriate subject matter for habeas corpus treatment. United States, ex. rel Marrero v. Warden, Lewisburg Penitentiary, 483 F.2d 656, 659-60 (3rd Cir., 1973), rev'd on other grounds Warden v. Marrero, 417 U.S. 653 (1974), Grasso v. Norton, 520 F.2d 27 (2nd Cir. 1975), and indeed has been held to be the proper method of challenging denial of parole. Lupo v. Norton, 371 F. Supp. 156 (D.Conn. 1974). See also Garafola v. Benson, 505 F.2d 1212 (7th Cir., 1974).

Mary Williams is "a person committed, detained, confined or restrained from [her] lawful liberty within the District" and may therefore apply to the appropriate court for a writ of habeas corpus.<sup>3</sup> This statute is even more liberal than the federal habeas corpus statute, 28 U.S.C. Sec. 2241, which requires that the prisoner be "in custody". So long as a person subject to the jurisdiction of this court is committed, detained, confined, or restrained from his or her liberty the habeas remedy applies and is to be liberally construed. Jones v. Cunningham, 371 U.S. 236 (1963). The use of the word "or" provides for habeas jurisdiction in any one of those four instances. Mary Williams was obviously "committed" "within the District" since she was sentenced by and committed by this judge of the District of Columbia Superior Court. This provision is doubtless a recognition of the duty of the District to adjudicate matters which initially stem from its own courts. See McCall v. Swain, 166 U.S. App. D.C. 214, 229-31 (1975).

Mary Williams, like all persons sentenced in D.C. Superior Court, was committed to the custody of the Attorney General of the United States pursuant to 24 D.C. Code Sec. 425. Throughout her sentence, the Attorney General has been her custodian. She is "restrained" within the District because that is the place of her custodian, regardless of whether she is physically present in the District. The Supreme Court, in Jones v. Cunningham, supra, found that the Virginia parole authorities were the correct parties for a habeas corpus petition of a parolee under their authority who was being permitted to live with relatives in Georgia.

The facts of Ms. Williams' physical location are that she served the early part of her sentence at Alderson, West Virginia, then was transferred to the Women's Detention Center in Washington, for the purpose of being a witness in another unrelated case, and then was ordered kept in Washington by this court. She is presently in a Half-way house in Washington. There has been some dispute among the parties as to whether her transfer and present location in Washington do or do not provide the basis for habeas jurisdiction. The dispute centers on whether, were she still located at Alderson, this court would have habeas jurisdiction under I.B. v. District of Columbia, 287 A.2d 827 (D.C.C.A., 1972), which found that D.C. Superior Court did not have jurisdiction over persons it committed to institutions located in Maryland, as that decision must now be viewed in light of the Supreme Court's ruling Braden v. 30th Judicial Circuit Court of Kentucky, 410 U.S. 484 (1973). The Braden ruling held that the jurisdiction of a district court considering a habeas corpus petition requires only that the Court issuing the writ have jurisdiction over the custodian of the prisoner.

"So long as the custodian can be reached by service of process, the court can issue a writ 'within its jurisdiction' requiring that the prisoner be brought before the court for a hearing on his claim, or requiring that he be released outright from custody, even if the prisoner himself is confined outside the court's territorial jurisdiction." Braden v. 30th Judicial Circuit Court of Kentucky, 410 U.S. 484, 495 (1973).

The court noted that a number of developments had vitiated Ahrens v. Clark, 335 U.S. 188 (1945), including Congressional enactment of 28 U.S.C. Sec. 2255, requiring collateral attack on a sentence to be brought in the sentencing court and 28 U.S.C. Sec. 2241(d), permitting habeas in either the district of confinement or the district of the sentencing court. Indeed, Justice Rehnquist, dissenting for himself, the Chief Justice, and Justice Powell asserted that Braden overruled Ahren, see 410 U.S. at 502, 509-511, and the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit notes that "that accusation would appear to be well-taken". McCall v. Swain, 166 U.S.App.D.C. 214, 222, note 20 (1975).

The D.C. Court of Appeals has not addressed this jurisdiction question post-Braden, but the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit has. McCall v. Swain,

<sup>3</sup> The exhaustion requirement of 23 D.C. Code 110(g) is addressed below.

166 U.S.App.D.C. 214 (1975), made an exhaustive and careful analysis of this very statute, 16 D.C. Code Sec. 1901, and its jurisdictional ramifications. A unanimous opinion held that the phrase "within the District"

"does not prohibit the court—whether the District Court or the Superior Court—located in the District from entertaining habeas corpus petitions from individuals confined within the District's correctional facilities located outside the District limits." 166 U.S.App.D.C. at 224.

This court is not bound by the opinions of the U.S. Court of Appeals but adopts that analysis of "within the District" contained in 16 D.C. Code Sec. 1901.

Having then found that the District Court and Superior Court may entertain habeas corpus petitions from persons in D.C. correctional facilities that are outside the District of Columbia boundaries, the McCall court went on to hold that the District of Columbia correctional officials at Lorton, to the extent they were holding a person sentenced by federal District Court, took on the cloak of federal officials and thus the petitioner could seek habeas corpus relief in the court that had sentenced him under Sec. 1901(b).

The jailer who has had, or presently has, custody of Mary Williams does so as an "official or employee" of the District of Columbia. This is so whether she is at Alderson or the Women's Detention Center or any other facility and the court need not now discuss any consequences of her moves for this action, as there are none.

Having found that a Sec. 16-1901 action does lie, the question of the appropriate forum arises under 1901 (b) and (c). The person to whom the writ should be directed is Mary Williams' custodian. Traditionally, habeas corpus actions have been brought in the jurisdiction in which the petitioner was confined. In such actions, petitioner's "immediate" custodian, (usually the warden of a prison), is named as the respondent. However, it is now well established that a habeas corpus action is proper in the jurisdiction of a petitioner's "ultimate" custodian, regardless of whether the petitioner is confined within that jurisdiction. Braden v. 30th Judicial Circuit Court of Kentucky, supra, see also Ex Parte Hays, 414 U.S. 1327 (1973). In Braden, the petitioner, who was incarcerated in an Alabama prison, filed in the Western District of Kentucky for a writ of habeas corpus. The Supreme Court held that, notwithstanding the fact that the petitioner was not confined in the Western District of Kentucky, habeas corpus jurisdiction was still proper there since the petitioner's ultimate custodian was within the territorial jurisdiction of that court. In so doing, the Court substantially modified its opinion in Ahrens v. Clark, 335 U.S. 188 (1948), see Braden, supra, 410 U.S. at 501, an opinion which had previously led many courts to take a narrow and overly restrictive view of habeas corpus jurisdiction. See, e.g., I.B. v. D.C. Department of Human Resources, supra.

Fletcher v. Levi, — F. Supp. —, (Criminal Case No. 1421-71, civil action No. 75-2063, D.D.C. January 16, 1976), involved a person sentenced by U.S. District Court in the District of Columbia who challenged her parole treatment. She was then incarcerated in a federal prison in California. Judge June Green consolidated a Motion to Correct Sentence pursuant to 18 U.S.C. Sec. 2255 with a Petition for Habeas Corpus pursuant to 18 U.S.C. Sec. 2241. Judge Green denied the Sec. 2255 motion and granted the habeas corpus, finding both jurisdiction and venue:

"Petitioner was sentenced from this Court to the custody of the Attorney General. Moreover, this Court has jurisdiction over the respondent custodian of petitioner who can be reached by service of process within this Court and therefore, this Court can grant full and complete relief to the petitioner. Accordingly, this Court has jurisdiction over the Petition for Habeas Corpus. Braden v. 30th Judicial Circuit of Ky., 410 U.S. 484 (1973); McCall v. Swain, 166 U.S.App.D.C. 214, 510 F.2d 167 (1975); Starnes v. McGuire, 168 U.S.App.D.C. 4, 512 F.2d 918 (1974); Pickus v. United States Board of Parole, 165 U.S.App.D.C. 284, 507 F.2d 1107 (1974), and statutes and authorities cited therein." Slip opinion at p. 7. District of Columbia courts have repeatedly faced the situation of persons serving sentences in District facilities located in Virginia at the Lorton Complex and have asserted jurisdiction. See, e.g., Fitzgerald v. Sigler, 372 F. Supp. 889 (D.C.D.C., 1974). Habeas petitions routinely come to the Superior Court from the Lorton Complex. To deny jurisdiction over such petitions, especially in light of Braden, would be a totally inappropriate treatment of persons sentenced by this court. Certainly, to require Virginia courts to entertain all such petitions would be an incongruous result. Note that federal jurisdiction in McCall applied because McCall, incarcerated at Lorton had been convicted in federal district court.

As Judge Gesell asserted and the U.S. Court of Appeals confirmed in McCall, a court has an "inherent power" to act with respect to prisoners "committed under its aegis." 166 U.S. App. D.C. at 231.

The Attorney General, as custodian of Mary Williams is acting in his capacity as an officer and agent of the Superior Court, and therefore the habeas corpus petition is properly filed in this court. The habeas corpus statute under which this Petitioner is proceeding, 16 D.C. Section 1901, contains provisions for the petition to be filed in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia or the Superior Court for the District of Columbia. The determination as to which court the petition should be filed in depends upon the capacity of the respondent to whom the petition is directed. If the petition is directed to a Federal officer or employee it is to be filed in District Court. 16 D.C. Code. Sec. 1901(b). If it is directed to a person other than a Federal officer or employee, it is to be filed in Superior Court. 16 D.C. Code Sec. 1901(c). The proper respondent in this Petitioner's action is the Attorney General as she was committed in his custody by the Superior Court and therefore is her custodian. See 24 D.C. Code Sec. 425. Although the Attorney General is nominally a Federal officer, he is not acting in that capacity in his control and custody over this Petitioner. She is in his custody because she was committed there by the Superior Court of the District of Columbia. Consequently, as to this Petitioner, he is acting as an officer and arm of the Superior Court, as he is in the context of this case a person other than a Federal officer. 16 D.C. Code Sec. 1901(c).

The reasoning behind why he is acting as an officer of the Superior Court can be found in the U.S. Court of Appeals decision in McCall v. Swain, 166 U.S. App. D.C. 214, 224-232, 510 F.2d 167 (1975). In that case, a person was convicted of a local District of Columbia offense in Federal court and was thereafter incarcerated in the Lorton Reformatory, a District of Columbia institution. The McCall court considered whether the Superintendent and officers of that institution were District of Columbia officials or Federal officials. The same statute, and the same subsections that are at issue in the present case, Sec. 1901(b)(c), were those at issue in the McCall case. After extensively reviewing the case law, McCall v. Swain, supra, at 224-231, the court held that the Superintendent of Lorton was acting as a Federal officer and the petition was therefore properly filed in the District Court pursuant to Sec. 1901(b). The court so held notwithstanding the fact that the petitioner in that case was incarcerated for a local District of Columbia offense, was incarcerated in a District of Columbia institution, and the issue under consideration concerned the local prison's administrative decision. The court's holding in McCall was based on the fact that the petitioner was convicted and incarcerated by an order of the Federal court. "Appellant was tried, convicted, sentenced, and resented by the District Court. * * * [t]hat Federal court issued the order under which the Attorney General assumed custody of and responsibility for appellee, a responsibility which he subsequently delegated to appellants. In accepting custody of appellee, the Attorney General and appellants were acting as officers of the District Court * * * McCall v. Swain, supra, 166 U.S. App. D.C. at 231.

These same principles, as enunciated in McCall and in the cases on which the court there relied, require and demonstrate why the Petitioner's custodian in the present case, the Attorney General, is acting as an officer of the Superior Court. The Petitioner was tried, convicted and sentenced by the Superior Court, and the Superior Court issued the order under which the Attorney General assumed custody of and responsibility for the petitioner. He must therefore be seen as acting as an officer of the Superior Court. The U.S. Court of Appeals itself in McCall noted, * * * to the extent that he [the Attorney General] acts pursuant to an order of the Superior Court or another local court, he would probably be characterized as 'other than a Federal officer' for purposes of jurisdiction under Section 1901." (emphasis added) McCall v. Swain, supra, 166 U.S. App. D.C. at 227, n. 34.

That the Attorney General is acting as an officer of the Superior Court and that the action must be filed in Superior Court is further supported by the obligation of the Superior Court to adjudicate matters which initially arise out of its own courts. Id. at 221. "It is simply anomalous to suggest that a court, whose duty it is to ensure that the full vitality of the Great Writ is preserved inviolate, could be precluded from exercising continuing oversight of the manner in which individuals it commits to custody are treated, particularly when those executing the court's commitment orders are considered officers of the court with respect to those prisoners. Judge Gesell's assertion is worth repeating: a court has an "inherent power' to act with respect to prisoners 'committed under its aegis.' " Id. at 231 (footnote omitted).

The logic, and indeed the necessity of finding the Attorney General an officer of the Superior Court and the petition properly filed in Superior Court is persuasively demonstrated by considering the implications and results of a contrary holding. All persons convicted and sentenced in Superior Court are committed to the custody of the Attorney General, 24 D.C. Code Sec. 425. If he were to be held a federal official in that capacity, when acting directly pursuant to the orders of the Superior Court, it is difficult to see how habeas corpus would ever be proper in the Superior Court. In addition, such an interpretation would be contrary to the purposes and objectives of the Court Reform Act. See Bland v. Rogers, 332 F. Supp. 989, 991 (D.D.C. 1971); See also McCall v. Swain, supra, 166 U.S. App. D.C. at 232, n. 53, citing S. Rep. No. 405, 91st Cong., 1st Sess. 1 (1970).

IV

Mindful of the interests of judicial economy, efficiency, convenience to the parties and witnesses, and of the admonition that a habeas corpus proceeding "must not be permitted to flounder in a procedural morass", Bland v. Rodgers, 332 F. Supp. 989, 993 (D.C.D.C., 1971), this court hereby consolidates Mary Williams' various motions and actions into a single case covering three elements:

- (1) Her Rule 35 motion to correct an illegal sentence;
- (2) Her Motion under 23 D.C. Code Sec. 110 to vacate or correct the sentence as one subject to collateral attack; and
- (3) Her petition for habeas corpus under 16 D.C. Code Sec. 1901.

Such a consolidation is not only prudent and conservative of the time and resources of all parties, including the court, but is also necessary.

Under 23 D.C. Code Sec. 110(g), an application for a writ of habeas corpus in behalf of a prisoner who is authorized to apply for relief under 23-110 shall not be entertained by the Superior Court or by any Federal or State court if it appears that the applicant failed to make a motion for relief under 23-110, unless a 23-110 motion would be inadequate or ineffective to test the legality of detention.

It was therefore incumbent upon the defendant-petitioner to seek relief under Sec. 23-110 to see whether or not the court deems that an adequate remedy. In Fletcher v. Levi, — F. Supp. —, Criminal Case No. 1421-71, civil actions Nos. 75-2063, 75-2064, D.C.D.C., January 16, 1976) Judge June Green, in a similar situation consolidated a motion under 28 U.S.C. Sec. 2255, and a petition for habeas corpus, and found jurisdiction and venue proper as to both actions.

The court also finds that venue is proper here. Service of process is available here on all parties, the parties and witnesses are all present in this jurisdiction, the Rule 35 motion and 23-110 motion must be assigned to the sentencing judge, and this is the jurisdiction whose Code is in question. This is clearly the most appropriate and convenient forum. See Braden v. 30th Judicial Circuit Court of Kentucky, 410 U.S. 484 (1973); Starnes v. McGuire, 168 U.S. App. D.C. 4 (1974).

The court hereby grants Mary Williams' Motions for joinder of those parties needed for a just and complete adjudication, namely Attorney General Edward Levi in his capacity as the ultimate custodian of Mary Williams, the District of Columbia Board of Parole through its representative Mr. Joseph Shore, and the District of Columbia Department of Corrections through its representative Mr. Delbert Jackson.

VI

Therefore it is this 3rd day of May, 1976,

Ordered That in light of the court's jurisdiction, as delineated above, the causes of action are consolidated, the motions for joinder are granted, and the three newly joined parties have five days in which to file any motions, if they so desire, and the respondents, on or before the fifth day after service of a copy of this order, shall make return to said petition and show cause, if any they have, why the Writ of Habeas Corpus should not issue, and why the Motion to Vacate or Correct the Sentence should not be granted.

It is further ORDERED that the respondents serve on counsel for Mary Williams a copy of any answer to this order that they may file with the court.

Counsel for Mary Williams having certified that he has served each of the respondents with the pleadings filed in this matter, the United States Marshal is directed to serve a copy of this order on each of the respondents forthwith.

JUDGE CHARLES W. HALLECK.

STATEMENT OF DANIEL CRYSTAL, EAST ORANGE, NEW JERSEY

INTRODUCTION

I am an attorney at law and a member of the Bars of New Jersey, the Supreme Court of the United States, and the District of Columbia. I am deeply appreciative to the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures of the Senate Judiciary Committee for this opportunity to include in the record my views as to S. 1437.

I have been deeply concerned about the predecessor bills, including S. 1 of the 94th Congress, and the earlier S. 1400 and S. 1. My concern has led me to write law review articles on various phases of this important proposed legislation, e.g., Crystal, The Proposed Federal Criminal Justice Reform Act of 1975: A Civil Liberties Critique, 6 Seton Hall Law Rev. 591 (Summer 1975); Crystal The Proposed Federal Criminal Justice Act of 1975: Sentencing—Law and Order With a Vengeance, 7 Seton Hall Law Rev. 33 (Fall 1975). In addition I drafted various analyses of S. 1 and H.R. 3907 of the 94th Congress which were inserted into the Congressional Record by Congresswoman Bella S. Abzug, e.g., Dangers of S. 1 and H.R. 3907, Proposed Revisions in the Federal Criminal Code, Cong. Rec., Nov. 4, 1975, Vol. 121, No 163, H10689; The Booby Traps for Labor, Cong. Rec., May 20, 1976, H.R. 4769-4771; S. 1 Compromise Is Unacceptable, Cong. Rec., April 26, 1976, E2082-E2083. My concern in writing these articles and analyses has, at all times, been to foster the protection of the Bill of Rights. I have felt impelled to set forth the many areas in which I felt that the predecessor bills failed to measure up to the requirements of our great charter of liberty.

In my judgment, the redraft of S. 1, now known as S. 1437 in the Senate and H.R. 6869, constituting the proposed Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977, still fails in important respects to give adequate protection both to the Bill of Rights and to the due process rights of the accused and the convicted alike who become enmeshed in the federal penal and correctional system. I welcome the changes which have been made in S. 1. They have substantially lessened the civil liberties horrors of the original bill. However, in my view, those 35 or so changes have simply not yet gone far enough. My analysis in the present statement is limited to the sentencing provisions of S. 1437. Even with this limitation, I find that the new bill, instead of being purged of all the provisions violative of due process requirements, still contains provisions inimical to the Bill of Rights.

It remains true, in my judgment, that what Professors Vern Countryman of Harvard Law School and Thomas I. Emerson of Yale Law School wrote about S. 1 has continuing validity with respect to the sentencing provisions contained in the identical bills, S. 1437 and H.R. 6869:

"S. 1 was designed and drafted upon the basis of philosophical, ethical, and political goals that were repudiated by the American people in the Watergate scandals. The bill is the product of the Nixon Administration, prepared under the aegis of Attorneys General Mitchell and Kleindienst, and put into concrete form by a group of lawyers in Nixon's Department of Justice. The objective of the draftsmen was to incorporate into the criminal code every restriction upon individual liberties, every method and device that the Nixon Administration thought necessary or useful in pursuit of its fearful and corrupt policies. As such, the bill is permeated with assumptions, points of view, and objectives, finding expression in numerous overt or subtle provisions, that run counter to the open and free spirit upon which American liberties are based. This pervasive taint cannot be amended out."

For reasons set forth in detail below, I am impelled to conclude that this trenchant criticism of S. 1 applies with continuing relevance to the provisions of S. 1437 and H.R. 6869 dealing with sentencing, parole, probation, the proposed Sentencing Commission, and all too many other provisions of the bills applicable to penology and correction. The philosophy of the bill continues to be one which turns its back on the objectives and recommendations of experts in penology and criminal law in favor of a harsh approach toward the punishment of crime which can only guarantee recidivism and the use of prisons as cages and storehouses for embittered men and women.

Repeated assurances have been given that some 85 percent or more of S. 1 was non-controversial and that those provisions meriting criticism have been corrected by amendment so that the substitute for S. 1 is now a "clean bill." See, e.g., "Retirement and You," by Theodore Voorhees in the October 1976 issue of the American Bar Association Journal, and the reply thereto by this writer in the January 1977 issue of the ABA Journal (pp. 8, 10). These assurances are illusory. It is a legal myth to urge that 85 to 95 percent of the bill is non-controversial. The sentencing provisions of S. 1437 are highly controversial. Moreover, many of them have been repeatedly opposed by prestigious legal bodies, including the American Bar Association, the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, and a special committee on S. 1 of the California Bar Association. Many of the provisions carried over intact into S. 1437 and H.R. 6869 from S. 1 have been objected to by such leading authorities in penal reform as the National Council on Crime and Delinquency, the American Civil Liberties Union, and the Friends Committee on National Legislation. This memorandum will call attention to some of the testimony and statements, already in this subcommittee's past hearings, which have taken strong exception to provisions applicable to sentencing which are offered in S. 1437 and H.R. 6869 as ostensibly non-controversial.

If the proponents of this legislation have made a policy decision to ignore these objections from prestigious legal groups and other authorities on penology and criminal law, the country should be so advised and made aware. The country should be given an opportunity to make a knowing choice between the harsh retributive approach toward sentencing, probation, and parole exemplified by S. 1437 and H.R. 6869 in precisely the same way as it was exemplified by S. 1, and the enlightened, humane, hopeful view of sentencing exemplified, for example, by the program and reports of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency.

To have the hard-nosed view of "law-and-order" which still permeates all too much of S. 1437 and H.R. 6769 offered in a purported compromise bill makes it necessary to advise this subcommittee of what appears again and again in its past hearings as recommendations from knowledgeable witnesses. Those recommendations are squarely contrary to the proposals for sentencing contained in S. 1437 and H.R. 6869. The startling disparity between those recommendations and what the bill actually contains is all too reminiscent of what Professor Kenneth Clark is quoted in the famous Koerner Report dealing with the civil disorders of 1967. "The same moving picture shown over and over again, the same analysis, the same recommendations, and the same inaction."

The sentencing provisions of S. 1437 and H.R. 6869 will set the penology and correctional standards of these countries for generations to come. When they are analyzed objectively, as the instant memorandum seeks to do, it becomes clear that they constitute a rejection of modern views of penology. Incarceration rather than hope for rehabilitations is to be the national policy. That road will predictably lead to further Attica's and Rahway's. It will solve little except to create the simplistic impression that something meaningful is being done about street crime. The approach is illusory and retrogressive. In this writer's opinion, it will not work.

It may readily be conceded that there is a very real and, indeed, a shocking problem of street crime. There is equally a growing problem of white collar crime—what Ralph Nader aptly described to this subcommittee as "suite crime." The difficulties of achieving meaningful improvements in penology should not lead to rejection of what experts have concluded is the viable method of eventually winning success. It is by now a cliché, but nevertheless remains true, that the baby should not be thrown out with the bathwater.

It should also be noted that the statistics which this subcommittee and proponents of both S. 1 and the present re-draft of S. 1 have apparently relied upon appear to be erroneous and obsolete. There is significant applicability to this subcommittee's present hearings in a new story appearing in Lawscope, in the American Bar Association Journal, April 1977, p. 481 (Vol. 63):

"Corrections

"Recidivism not so bad after all, study finds

"The national crime recidivism rate is much lower than has been believed and is steadily declining, according to a recent analysis. And the study shows, parolees are less likely to return to jail than nonparolees.

"The results could have an impact on the current hard line being taken by many on mandatory sentencing.

"The study, by Robert Martinson and Judith Wilkes of the Center for knowledge in Criminal Justice Planning, produced interim results showing:

"The recidivism rate is about 23 per cent, not the 50-70 per cent cited recently by textbooks, corrections authorities, and the courts.

"Parolees have a lower repeat offense rate than nonparolees—about 25 per cent compared with about 32 per cent.

"Convicts routed through halfway houses on their way out of prison have a lower repeat crime rate than those going to the houses before prison—22 per cent compared with 42 per cent.

"Special in-prison rehabilitative programs do not affect recidivism. About 22.5 per cent of prisoners become repeaters, whether they undergo 'rehabilitation' or not.

"Recidivism has declined from about 33 per cent in the 1960s to about 23 per cent thus far in the 1970s.

"The findings contradict not only current theory, but an earlier study by Martinson and Wilkes as well. Martinson explains that the first analysis was not as sophisticated."

There is accordingly the great probability that the policy judgments as to how to deal with crime and with sentencing incorporated into S. 1437 and H.R. 6869 are based upon incorrect, erroneous statistics, and reflect an equally erroneous view as to how a very real problem should properly be dealt with.

The issues have been, and should be, sharply defined. They are made unmistakably clear by Professor Louis B. Schwartz, formerly Director, National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Law (the Brown Commission). In an article by Professor Schwartz reprinted in this subcommittee record of Hearings on S. 1, Part XII, p. 384 (April 18, 1975), the contrast between the two opposing views of the direction to be taken in sentencing and correction is made in the sharpest possible terms:

"It can be said generally of the contrasts between S. 1 and the Brown Commission proposals that S. 1 expresses the view that the crime problem can and should be solved by extending government's power over individuals. This extension can take the form of wiretapping and other secret surveillance, of giving broad discretion to officials in decisions about punishment, of authorizing exceptionally severe sentences, or of restricting access to critical information about government operations. The other school of thought, represented by the Brown Commission, is skeptical about the gains in law enforcement that can be expected from such measures, and more concerned about impairing the quality of civic life by needful restraints on liberty."

This contrast in views is of paramount importance because in actuality much of the sentencing in the federal courts, as in all courts, is a reflection of disparity in economic opportunity and freedom or lack of freedom from racism. This subcommittee has been advised that "in the Federal District Court in Los Angeles, 75 percent of the defendants in criminal cases are indigent. Indigent defendants in the main commit crimes because of their poverty. Their poverty and the powerlessness that goes along with it, is a central fact in their lives." Statement of John Van De Kamp, Federal Public Defender, Los Angeles, Hearings on S. 1 and S. 1400, Part XI, p. 7805 (July 13, 1974). The proposed federal criminal code must contain safeguards against racism. Whether or not the proposed Sentencing Commission will do so adequately is open to question for reasons set forth below. What is abundantly clear in my view is that it is impossible to achieve a just criminal code unless there is a just economic society. There is no suggestion here to wait for the millenium. All that is being sought is that Bill of Rights protections be adequately included in any omnibus bill offered as a federal criminal code. In my judgment, S. 1437 and its companion bill, H.R. 6869 fail to meet this challenge adequately. On the other hand, H.R. 2311, introduced into the House by Congressman Cohen of Maine, and carrying on last session's Kastenmeier-Mikva-Edwards bill (H.R. 10850 of the 94th Congress), although containing some serious defects, does offer far more civil liberties protections in its sentencing provision than do S. 1437 and H.R. 6869.

The analysis which follows attempts to compare the two bills in important sections applicable to sentencing.

II. THE PRESUMPTION IN FAVOR OF INCARCERATION CONTAINED IN S 1437 AND H.R. 6869

Generally, the sentences proposed by S. 1437 evidence a preoccupation with punitive considerations at the expense of crime prevention and rehabilitation of offenders. This preoccupation is apparent in the length of the proposed authorized prison sentences (S. 2301), the insufficiency of restraints on consecutive sentencing (S. 2304), and particularly in certain proposed criteria required to be evaluated by the federal courts in determining terms of imprisonment, terms of probation, fines, and parole ineligibility. It is abundantly clear that those criteria in actuality establish a totally unacceptable presumption in favor of incarceration, and are squarely opposed to modern views of penology and correction.

S. 1437's "law and order" thrust is plainly reflected in these criteria which the judge is to consider when imposing sentence. Apart from a rearrangement of the order in which these criteria appear, S. 1437 is identical in this respect with its predecessor bill, S. 1. Sec. 2302(a) would require that the court, in considering imposition of a sentence of imprisonment, consider the factors earlier set out in section 2003(a) "to the extent that they are applicable." Sec. 2003(a) in turn requires that the court consider the following:

"(1) The nature and circumstance of the offense and the history and characteristics of the defendant; and

"(2) The need for the sentence imposed:

"(A) To afford adequate deterrence to criminal conduct;

"(B) To protect the public from further crimes of the defendant;

"(C) to reflect the seriousness of the offense, to promote respect for law, and to provide just punishment for the offense; and

"(D) to provide the defendant with needed educational or vocational training, medical care, or other correctional treatment in the most effective manner;

"(3) The sentencing range established for the applicable category of offense committed by the applicable category of defendant as set forth in the guidelines that are issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(a) (1) and that are in effect on the date the defendant committed the offense; and

"(4) Any pertinent policy statement issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(a) (2)."

The provisions relating to the Sentencing Commission did not, of course, appear in S. 1. The approach of the section and the mandate that these criteria be applied remains a constant in both S. 1 and S. 1437.

As this writer noted in a law review article with respect to the comparable provision of S. 1 (Crystal, The Proposed Federal Criminal Justice Act of 1975: Sentencing—Law and Order With A Vengeance, 7 SETON HALL LAW REV. at 41, it is not enough that the sentence "protect the public from further crimes of the defendant" and "afford adequate deterrence to criminal conduct," the sentence must also:

"Reflect the seriousness of the offense,

"Promote respect for law, and

"Provide just punishment for the offense.

The criteria thus imposed would have a judge punish a defendant beyond what is required for his individual wrong, and even beyond that required for deterrence, apparently in a single-minded attempt to set an "example." The burden is put on the defendant to show why he should not be imprisoned; why he should not be denied probation; why he should be granted parole. Incarceration is to be the norm. As noted below, this is squarely at variance with the philosophy of the Brown Commission, of the ABA Standards and Goals, of the recommendations of prestigious legal bodies, including the American Bar Association, the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, and the Special Committee on S. 1 of the State Bar Association of California, of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency, and Program for Prison Reform in the United States, set forth in the Final Report of the Annual Chief Justice Earl Warren Conference on Advocacy, June 9–June 10, 1972, sponsored by the Roscoe Pound-American Trial Lawyers Foundation, Cambridge, Mass.

The country is thus faced at the very outset of S. 1437 with a fundamental choice in sentencing policy. The approach chosen by the draftsmen of S. 1437 is demonstrably out of line with the recommendations of the leading legal and penological authorities of the country. The discrepancy is far too glaring to be papered over by the bland assurances that 85 percent to 95 percent of the bill is non-controversial.

The genesis of the "criteria" set forth in S. 1437, and derived from S. 1 which, in turn, derived it essentially from the Nixon-Mitchell Administration version, S. 1400 of the 93rd Congress, 1st Sess., is clear. It reflects the law and order approach toward crime voiced by former President Richard M. Nixon, who decried the "sense of permissiveness" that characterized America in the 1960's, and who concluded that "the only way to attack crime in America is the way crime attacks our people—without pity." (Sixth in a Series of Presidential Messages to the Congress on the State of the Union, reprinted in this Subcommittee's Hearings, 4819–20 (1973).

This subcommittee has been told repeatedly by the most prestigious legal bodies that the Nixon-Mitchell approach, including its emphasis upon incarceration, is unacceptable. Citation to the testimony and statements appearing in the committee's own hearings makes this abundantly clear.

A. Position of the American Bar Association: In its testimony, and statement. Hearings, Part XII, April 17, 1975, ABA submitted to the subcommittee the following as its position with respect to grant of probation in lieu of incarceration (p. 377) :

"(26) Recommendation as to presumption for probation. ABA Standards for Probation, § 1.3 (a) provides: 'Probation should be the sentence unless the sentencing court finds that: (i) confinement is necessary to protect the public from further criminal activity by the offender; or (ii) the offender is in need of correctional treatment which can most effectively be provided if he is confined; or (iii) it would unduly depreciate the seriousness of the offense if a sentence of probation were imposed.' The Association supports § 3101 (a) of Brown Commission to this effect. Section 2102 of S. 1 does not have any such presumption in favor of probation, and is not supported."

B. Position of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York: This equally prestigious law association similarly vigorously opposed the provisions of S. 1 which are carried forward virtually intact (with the exception of reference to the Sentencing Commission) in S. 1437.

With respect to probation, the Association advised the subcommittee on June 13, 1974:

"2. We approved the [Brown] Commission's statement of preference for probation sentences, and therefore disapprove the failure of S. 1 to state a policy, and even more the presumption favoring imprisonment in S. 1400." Hearings, Part XI, at 7765.

With respect to the closely related problem of parole, the Association stated in the same report: (commenting on the Brown Commission bill, S. 1 of the 93rd Congress, and S. 1400 of the 93rd Congress:

"The difference in the parole provisions of the three bills is closely analogous to that in their probation provisions. The Commission bill mandates earlier release, and expressly favors parole over continued imprisonment. S. 1 takes a middle position on mandatory release, and is silent on priorities. S. 1400 mandates no early release and suggests a stricter parole standard, parallel to that in its probation provisions. (e.g., parole may be granted if the Board ('Commission') is of the opinion that the defendant's release 'would not fail' to afford adequate deterrence).

"We favor the Commission bill's provisions on early release and its expression of priority for parole over continued imprisonment."

C. Position of Special Committee on S. 1 of the California State Bar Association: A Special Committee of the State Bar Association of California prepared a report for submission to the 1976 Conference of State Bar Delegates, Sept. 1976, in Fresno, Calif. The Special Committee reviewed many provisions of S. 1. Its final conclusion was as follows (App. M-18) :

"CONCLUSION

"S. 1 cannot be adequately amended to avoid creating serious voids and retrogressions in existing federal criminal practice, and the Committee recommends that the State Bar make every attempt to defeat this unwise proposed legislation."

After thorough review of both existing law and of the specific proposals of S. 1 as to sentencing, probation, parole, and the like (largely carried into S. 1437 unmodified from S. 1) the Special Committee concluded (App. M-7-App. M-8) :

"D. Opinion and Recommendation :

"The American Bar Association Standards for Sentencing § 3.1(d) provides that 'for most offenses . . . the maximum authorized term ought not to exceed ten years except in unusual cases and normally should not exceed five years,' with sentences of 25 years or longer 'reserved for particularly serious offenses or for certain particular dangerous offenders.' The need for such long term sentences has been seriously questioned, and the sentencing structure proposed by S. 1 is clearly at odds with the sentencing structure proposed by the Brown Commission. The total sentencing scheme presumes potential misconduct, and the uncontrolled and the almost limitless possibility of parole fosters a serious danger for the use of parole as an easier method by which to return a person to the penitentiary rather than by a trial in court for subsequent alleged criminal misconduct. Neither the existing prison system nor our parole system are even capable of adjusting to the new requirements that would be imposed by S. 1. The pattern and procedure of sentence to imprisonment clearly proclaims that confinement is the only effective answer and control of criminal misbehavior, but confinement if necessary to deter, isolate, and finally punish, should be used only as a last resort. Its present failure is obvious, and, unfortunately, our places of confinement are often the breeding places of tomorrow's violent offender. In S. 1—confinement appears to be the first and omnipresent control—a clear case of overkill. The Committee recommends against adoption of the provisions of S. 1."

D. Position of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency: The National Council on Crime and Delinquency, organized in 1907, has long had an interest in improving sentencing and the quality of our penal systems. Its surveys and consultation have been of immeasurable importance in achieving long overdue reform in penology. It has published a number of model legislative acts, those most relevant to the proposed federal criminal code, being the Model Sentencing Act, authored by the Council of Judges of the Council (NCCD) and the Standard Act for State Correctional Association published by NCCD.

On April 17, 1975, Mr. Justus Freimund, Director, Action Service Division, of the NCCD, testified before this subcommittee and presented a prepared statement on behalf of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency. With respect to the issue of the apparent presumption in favor of incarceration rather than release of the defendant to some rehabilitative program in the community, Mr. Freimund presented the following statement on behalf of NCCD:

"Probation Sentence: Section 2102. Another issue of major concern is the legal restraints on probation. We urge the Subcommittee not to support such a statute. It goes against the grain of progressive penology. Probation is recognized as the most effective form on sentence in a great many cases, and yet, Section 2101 requires a prison sentence unless the judge is of the opinion that probation 'will not fail to afford deterrence to criminal conduct and such disposition will not unduly depreciate the seriousness of the defendant's crime, undermine respect for the law, or fail to constitute just punishment for the offense committed.' Although the judge is required to consider the offender's individual circumstances, such provisions implicitly tell the judge that probation is not preferred, but a last resort, to be accorded only the criminal offender who is an extraordinarily good risk. They ignore the fact that prison sentences completely dislocate offenders from the community, cutting off the ties of family and job which alone may provide the incentive to obey the law. Yet since most offenders ultimately do return to the outside world, it in society's best interest—as well as their own—that these offenders have more to go back to than a life of crime." Hearings, Part XII, at 184.

E. Position of American Civil Liberties Union: The ACLU was equally sharp in its rejection of the sentencing scheme of S. 1 (which has been largely carried over intact into S. 1437 and H.R. 6869). Melvin I. Wulf, Legal Director, American Civil Liberties Union, advised this subcommittee in a statement on April 17, 1975:

"S. 1 sets harsh, retributive sentences for many crimes, and provides for the death penalty, which the ACLU has long opposed as cruel and hard punishment in violation of the Constitution. * * *

"The sentencing schemes of S. 1 are skewed in favor of long-term prison sentences, despite the overwhelming recommendation of penologists and lawyers who have studied the correctional system that sentences instead be sharply reduced. See, e.g., President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice, The Challenge of Crime in a Free Society 348-351 (Avon, Ed. 1967); Brown Commission Working Papers, vol. II at 1255-57, 1269; Schwartz, "The Proposed Federal Criminal Code," 13 Crim. L. Rep. 3265, 3266 (1973). Although such sentences may be aimed at the most egregious offenders, the Brown Commission reported:

"They have a psychological tendency to drive sentences up in cases where such a tendency is unwarranted. Long, incapacitating terms can do great damage, if imposed in the wrong cases, both in terms of injustice to the individual and in terms of positive, harmful effects to the public upon release of the prisoner. Long sentences imposed on the wrong people can lead to more offenses rather than less. Working Papers, vol. II at 2257." (Hearings on S. 1, Part XII, pp. 208-209).

* * * * *

"Despite the Brown Commission's finding that 'probation is likely to be the most effective form of sentence in a great many cases', Working Papers, vol. II at 1268. S. 1 creates substantial legal hurdles to the imposition of probation instead of a prison sentence.

"Section 2102 instructs a judge, in granting probation, to consider the need to provide the defendant with educational or vocational training, medical care, or other correctional treatment in the most effective manner. Such factors only reinforce the criminal justice system's discrimination against the poor, the sick, and the uneducated. The constitutional guarantees of due process and equal protection of the law requires courts to weigh evenly the claims of rich and poor, skilled and unskilled. Freedom from imprisonment and the chance to try again should not depend on an absence of past sufferings. 'Effective' provision of job training and medical care in most cases does not require isolation of the offender from the community in which he will ultimately have to learn to live. The Congress should legislate to provide these services outside of prison, instead of incarcerating people just to obtain them. S. 1 similarly stacks the decision-making process against the granting of parole and fails to provide for a preference to parole over continued imprisonment. Yet parole, like probation, can be crucial in encouraging offenders to establish law-abiding lives. See Morrissey v. Brewer, 409 U.S. 471, 484 (1972)." (Hearings on S. 1, Part XII, p. 210).

F. Position of Friends Committee on National Legislation: The approach toward sentencing set forth in S. 1 (much of which is retained in S. 1437 and H.R. 6869) was also opposed in a statement by Ralph Rudd on behalf of the Friends Committee on National Legislation. Mr. Rudd was there testifying with respect to S. 1 and S. 1400 of the 93rd Congress rather than the later composite S. 1 of the 94th Congress. His statement (Hearings, Part XII, pp. 176-181, April 17, 1975) has continuing validity to the present S. 1437. He there stated (Hearings, Part XII, at 177) :

"The other main idea I want to express has to do with the iniquity of our prison system. It is widely said that it takes young delinquents and turns them into hardened criminals. The National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals reported in its 1973 report, A National Strategy to Reduce Crime, page 173 and 183, two studies that seemed to show that recidivism increases with longer terms in prison. This seems attributable to the basic character of prison life, which, at best, reduces drastically the opportunities for practice of freedom and exercise of responsibility. At worst it reduces one from a person to a number, from a citizen to a subject, from self-reliance to dependency, from hope to frustration. It tends even to degrade the jailers. I have read of an experiment in which a sociology class voluntarily simulated a prison situation and the volunteer jailers, chosen by lot, found themselves becoming brutal and tyrannical. Imprisonment as presently practiced, and perhaps inevitably, is totally undemocratic and fundamentally debasing. It is a monument to the strength and resiliency of the human spirit that so many do come out of prison still able to make their way in normal society. It is small wonder that so many come out unable to do so.

"The gist of our message is that every effort should be made to minimize imprisonment, both the number of prison sentences, and the length of time served."

G. Position of Federal Public Defender, Los Angeles, and National Legal Aid and Defenders' Association: The approach still reflected in S. 1437 of so-called "criteria" intended to utilize sentencing so as to make "an example" of a convicted defendant has been vigorously opposed before this subcommittee by the National Legal Aid and Defenders' Association in testimony given and a statement submitted on June 17, 1974, with respect to the predecessor bills, S. 1 and S. 1400 of the 93rd Congress (Hearings, Part XI, pp. 7796-7862). It is urged that the subcommittee members and all members of the Senate Judiciary Committee reread this important testimony and authoritative statement. The views there set forth reflect the expertise of those who come daily into contact with defendants and have first-hand knowledge of how truly illusory are the approaches toward sentencing and dealing with crime that all too much of S. 1437 still reflects. In this writer's belief, this statement constitutes the most creative and significant approach toward a sentencing policy that combines meaningful dealing with the important problem of sentencing and penology consonant with protection of the Bill of Rights freedoms of the accused and the convicted which has been presented to this committee. Of the numerous contributions which this testimony and statement make, the following may be quoted as particularly relevant here.

John K. Van De Kamp, Federal Public Defender in Los Angeles, formerly the U.S. Attorney in Los Angeles, and also formerly the Director of the Executive Office for the U.S. Attorneys in Washington, D.C., from 1967 to 1969, advised this subcommittee (Hearings, Part XI, at 7800) :

"With respect to probation, I think it is important that the code treat probation as a sentence, not as an event, in lieu of sentencing. We support the concept that probation be considered as a proper disposition in each case, unless confinement is necessary to protect the public from further criminal activity by the offender, and/or the need for treatment and supervision relating to an offender's potential for further criminal conduct cannot be provided through available community resources.

"We take some issue with the criteria set up on S. 1, particularly the first standard which the court is to consider, that is, 'the need to maintain respect for law and to reinforce the credibility of the deterrent factors of the law.' [cf. Sec. 2003 (a) of S. 1437]. While warehousing a hardened criminal and potential recidivist may well be justified in a particular case, the fuzzy concept of public deterrence is one which has often been used by trial judges as a justification for a jail sentence, and yet we know that a sanction does not have preventive deterrent capability unless the public is not only aware of the potential sanctions that will be imposed, and knows when it will be imposed. And I can tell you, Senator, that press coverage and public awareness is absent in all but the most extreme, extraordinary or bizarre Federal cases in our district. For this reason I would suggest that the provision be eliminated since it tends to shift the focus of the judge away from the offender to a concept which is rarely applicable."

The statement submitted on behalf of the National Legal Aid and Defenders' Association urged this subcommittee to set forth in the code for the trial courts to consider in sentencing the presumption articulated by the National Commission on Reform of the Federal Criminal Law (Brown Commission) and which were incorporated in proposed legislation :

"The court shall not impose a sentence of imprisonment upon a person unless, having regard to the nature and character of the offender and the circumstances of the offense, the court is satisfied that (a) confinement is necessary to protect the public from further criminal activity by the offender: and/or (b) the offender is in need of treatment and supervision which can only be provided in a correctional institution." (Hearings, Part XI, at 7809).

The National Legal Aid and Defenders' Association further urged this subcommittee to set forth appropriate factors for sentencing, including these suggested by the Brown Commission in Sec. 3101 of its proposed Federal Criminal Code :

"(a) The defendant's criminal conduct neither caused nor threatened serious harm to another person or his property :

"(b) The defendant did not plan or expect that his criminal conduct would cause or threaten serious harm to another person or his property :

"(c) The defendant acted under strong provocation :

"(d) There was substantial grounds which, though insufficient to establish a legal defense, tend to excuse or justify the defendant's conduct.

"(e) The victim of the defendants' conduct induced or facilitated its commission ;

"(f) The defendant has made or will make restitution or reparation to the victim of his conduct for the damage or injury which was sustained ;

"(g) The defendant has no history of prior delinquency or criminal activity, or had led a law-abiding life for a substantial period of time before the commission of the present offense ;

"(h) The defendant's conduct was the result of circumstances unlikely to recur :

"(i) The character, history and attitudes of the defendant indicate that he is unlikely to commit another crime ;

"(j) The defendant is likely to respond affirmatively to supervision and/or treatment in the community :

"(k) The imprisonment of the defendant would entail undue hardship to himself or his dependents."

It appears clear that these standards, criteria, and guidelines suggested by the Brown Commission in Sec. 3101 of its proposed Federal Criminal Code are eminently more practical and consonant with fairness and a just criminal code than are the sweeping, law-and-order motivated criteria reflected, respectively, in Secs. 101 (a) and (b), 2003(a), 2102, 2302, and 3834 of S. 1437.

II. Criteria Urged in Final Report of the Annual Chief Justice Earl Warren Conference on Advocacy Proposing a Program for Prison Reform: The approach toward sentencing reflected in S. 1437 is also dramatically out of line with the program for prison reform set out in the Final Report of the Annual Chief Justice Earl Warren Conference on Advocacy in the United States, held June 9-10, 1972, and sponsored by the Roscoe Pound-American Trial Lawyers Foundation, 20 Garden Street, Cambridge, Mass. 02138. The report sets out as its theme the following trenchant observation by Dostoevski:

"Humane treatment may raise up one in whom the divine image has long been obscured. It is with the unfortunate, above all, that humane conduct is necessary."

It is a lesson the drafters of S. 1437, in common with the drafters of the predecessor bills, S. 1 of the 94th Congress and S. 1 and S. 1490 of the 93rd Congress, appear to have paid all too little heed in their omnibus criteria motivated rather by unworkable and emotion-ridden law-and-order concepts reflecting largely the Nixon-Mitchell view of control of crime and imposition of sentencing.

In a clearly written, yet extremely sensitive, foreword, Jacob D. Fuchsberg, then President, The Roscoe Pound-American Trial Lawyers Foundation 1964-1972 (now Judge of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals) and Theodore I. Koskoff, Chairman of the Annual Chief Justice Earl Warren Conference, 1972, stated:

"America's penal system is a major national chronic blight. Citizen disinterest has too often swept it under the rug of public conscience. But periodic eruptions, of which perhaps the most dramatic in recent years was the violence at Attica State Prison in New York in September 1971, have turned current public attention to it. Further, this waking of concern has occurred during a period of our history when the larger problems of crime and justice are in the forefront of our national issues.

"There are those sensitive and knowledgeable lawyers, law professors, students, criminologists, wardens, law-enforcement officers, psychiatrists, judges, prosecutors, defenders, administrators of penal programs, journalists, ex-prisoners, and others who through periods of public interest and public indifference alike, have worked insistently for solutions in this field. It was such distinguished and experienced people, perhaps as a group the most outstanding ever assembled in our country to deal with such problems, who met to concentrate their combined thinking and ideas at the Law Research Center of the Roscoe Pound-American Trial Lawyers Foundation in Cambridge, Massachusetts, in June of this year [1972.]. There the Foundation's Annual Chief Justice Earl Warren Conference on Advocacy was given over to the subject of prison reform."

The recommendations of this distinguished body, constituting their Final Report, and their Program for Prison Reform, are markedly different from the approach taken in S. 1437. That difference should impel this subcommittee to reconsider, fundamentally and completely, its approach toward the admittedly difficult and complex problem of sentencing, probation, parole, and utilization of prisons in the federal correctional system.

It is urgently recommended that the statement of purposes, constituting a declaration of national policy, contained in Sec. 101, of S. 1437, be rewritten to incorporate the formulations proposed by the Chief Justice Earl Warren Conference on Advocacy in the United States, that the bill be completely and totally redrafted in the spirit there reflected, and that, accordingly, S. 1437 itself be tabled pending such complete redrafting in the spirit of the Conference's recommendations and the imperative mandates of the Bill of Rights.

This is particularly proper and urgently required because of the virtual unanimity that the Conference participants—of widely different views and approaches—reached that it is in these recommendations that the workable approach lies to achieve sentencing and prison reform. In this connection, this further extract from the Foreword to the Conference's Report is appropriate:

"The overriding fact that broad consensus was reached by a highly diverse group—representing such poles as prosecution and defense, prison administrators and ex-prisoners—illustrates that prison reform is not, and must not be a partisan or adversary issue. Everyone in our society—including the potential victims of crime—will benefit from a wise overhaul of our penal system.

"It is the hope of the Foundation that the Report will become a practical blueprint, a living letter helping to give a new sense of direction to penal practices at national, state, and local levels. To that end, many Conferees have volunteered to join in a task force available to legislators, courts and others with power to implement the Report's recommendations. In other words, they are ready to provide the activism that will guarantee that this Report is not 'filed away.'"

Such, however, will unquestionably be the fate of this seminal Report unless this Committee makes use of the opportunity presented by the Report and by the availability of the Conferees to make their expertise available to implement the Report's recommendations. It is accordingly urged that the present hearings on the sentencing provisions of S. 1437 be broadened and that the Conferees to this important Conference on Prison Reform be invited to set forth their views and recommendations at length as to the proper course which the sentencing and correctional philosophy of the federal government should take, and which should be reflected in any omnibus federal criminal code.

For the convenience of the Subcommittee, the Recommendations of the Annual Chief Justice Earl Warren Conference on Advocacy in the United States sponsored by the Roscoe Pound-American Trial Lawyers Foundation (Library of Congress Catalog Card Number 73-75717) are here set forth:

"I

"Criminal sanctions can never be a cure for the ills of society. While at present they are considered necessary, and are regrettably imposed for lack of a constructive alternative, criminal sanctions are essentially negative responses to the failings of human beings, to the failure to correct basic malfunctions and inequalities in society, and to public demands for retribution.

"II

"Prisons must be judged by their actual functioning rather than by their stated objectives. Experience has shown that prisons do not rehabilitate offenders. For all practical purposes, prisons are wholly punitive. Given this reality, they accomplish only three limited functions: Protection of society from a relatively small number of dangerous convicted persons for a limited period of time; possibly some deterrence of a limited segment of society at large; retribution for blameworthy acts. Furthermore, recidivism rates indicate that prison 'caging' maladjusts prisoners, and thus actually exacerbates the crime problem.

"III

"These limitations must be candidly recognized and the employment of imprisonment and other criminal sanctions must accordingly be sharply curtailed. Indeed, the release of the majority of the prison population, coupled with the provision of community programs and services, would not increase the danger to the public, and ultimately would enhance public safety.

"IV

"Imprisonment should be a last resort. The presumption should be against its use. Before any offender is incarcerated, the prosecution should bear the burden of proving in an evidentiary hearing that no acceptable alternative exists. An equal burden should be required for the denial of revocation of 'good time', probation, and parole, which really are only other ways of imposing imprisonment.

"V

"Nearly half the present potential prison and jail population can and should be placed outside the criminal justice system by decriminalizing behavior which does not involve (a) the threat of use of force against another person or persons, (b) fraud, (c) wanton destruction of property, or (d) violent attacks against the government.

"VI

"Among the offenses which should be reviewed for immediate removal from the criminal law are alcoholism, drug addiction, adult-consenting sexual acts, such as homosexuality and prostitution, and gambling, all of which are usually 'complaint-less'. It should also be recognized that further social, psychiatric and medical research may place certain forms of behavior now termed 'criminal' into discernable, and possibly treatable, disease entities.

"VII

"The de-criminalizing of offenses does not apply approval of such behavior or that society should ignore it. It recognizes that the criminal law and its agencies are inappropriate, often even exacerbating, to such behavior, and that what is required instead is a concurrent enlargement of available community resources in medicine, public health, vocational training, education, welfare and family counselling. It is important, however, that such 'therapeutic' programs not be employed either as a guise under which another form of incarceration is imposed, or as a condition for the avoidance of imprisonment, both of which are often now the case.

"VIII

"We should further reduce our extensive reliance on prisons by making extensive use of alternatives to imprisonment, such as fines, restitution, and other probationary methods, which could at least as effectively meet society's need for legal sanctions. However, such alternatives must be made available to all people who have committed similar offenses, so as not to become a means for the more affluent to buy their way out of prison. And, where some kind of confinement seems necessary, half-way houses, community centers, group homes, intermittent sentences, and other methods of keeping offenders within the community should be preferred to prison.

"IX

"Even where imprisonment is warranted, we should not normally resort to long sentences. Experience has proved that, beyond a certain length, they are self-defeating. Therefore, those present statutory maximum sentences which are grossly disproportionate to any legitimate social purpose should be drastically reduced. Correspondingly, the average length of actual time served, which now exceeds that of other western nations, should likewise be greatly shortened.

"X

"The indeterminate sentence has not had the salutary effects predicted. Instead it has resulted in the exercise of a wide discretion, without the guidance of standards, and in longer periods of time served in prison. Those who are least able to mobilize social, economic and legal resources into the sentencing processes thus become the victims of the harshest and most discriminatory sentences. On occasion, even the non-poor may be victimized by an idiosyncratic judge with tendentious prejudices about race or life style. There should, therefore, be strict limitations on the judicial and quasi-judicial exercise of discretion in the fixing of terms, of imprisonment, with firm guidelines based on reasonably definite factors such as past criminal record, maturity, and the mitigated or aggravated nature of the particular criminal act being weighed. By way of contrast, the definite sentence would automatically eliminate administrative parole board procedures which now consist largely of an untrammelled discretion which reduces prisoners to little more than supplicants. The ultimate goal should be no indeterminacy whatsoever in sentencing.

"XI

"The presumption of innocence should pervade our system of criminal justice at all pre-conviction stages. But our present bail and release-on-recognizance systems do violence to that principle and are discriminatory and arbitrary.

"Studies have demonstrate that most bail is unnecessary and merely an unjustifiable impairment of the right of an accused to be free pending bail. Yet under our present practices half or more of accused persons are detained in jail pending trial.

"Some members of the Conference recognized that short and specified pretrial custody may be required for society's protection in a few extreme cases, such as where a person is irrational and dangerous due to severe mental illness or when the state can establish the highly probable imminent occurrence of a specific dangerous crime of personal violence.

"But all agree that bail as a prevailing system should go. An end to it would, of course, also serve to further reduce prison and jail populations.

"XII

"The drastic reduction of our present population would enable us to employ better our resources in the penal institutions which would remain.

"Prison personnel must be adequately trained and compensated, and the racial and ethnic composition of the prison population should be taken into account in the formulation of staff recruitment policies.

"XIII

"We must take immediate steps to ensure respect for the rights which a democratic society must grant even to prisoners. Though he is suffering a punishment, a prisoner is still a citizen and a human being. Therefore, except to the extent absolutely necessary for custodial purposes, he should not be deprived of any of the individual rights recognized in a free society. These include, but are not limited to, such basic dignities as freedom from racial discrimination, freedom from physical and mental brutality, the right to adequate diet, clothing, and health care, the right to furlough or institutional accommodations to maintain social and familial ties, including being located as close to home as practicable, freedom from censorship of mail and other literature including law books, the right to participate in local and national elections, and the right to procedural and substantive due process to guarantee such rights. Judicial, administrative, and legislative action to promote and develop these rights is imperative. The presumption should always be strongly in favor of full enticement to such rights and not against them as is all too prevalent today.

"XIV

"As a further concomitant for the securing of such rights, prisoners should be permitted to organize, without fear of reprisal, for the purpose of effective expression and negotiation of grievances. Even in the absence of grievances, and as a method of avoiding abuses leading to grievances, there should be regular meetings between duly elected prisoners' representatives and prison authorities.

"XV

"Under current practices, the initial sentencing, as well as the later parole hearing that determines the ultimate sentence, is usually conducted absent the right of a prisoner to present open proof, to cross-examine witnesses and probation officers, and to exercise the other elements of due process. The right to full due process should accompany the sentencing procedure through all its stages, including the denial of probation, or to any other decisional stage that substantially affects the term of imprisonment. Until such time as the present parole system is eliminated by short definite prison terms, due process should apply to both the initial granting and revocation of parole or good conduct time. These events are now at least as critical in the sentencing process as is the original judicial decision.

"XVI

"Since most prisoners are without means to engage counsel for the protection of their rights, it is essential to the implementation of such rights that the availability of properly trained and experienced Public Defenders or private counsel, with adequate staff support, be assured to all. Such legal services should be available to challenge the conviction, to aid the prisoner with any civil problems, and to represent the prisoner in grievances against the institution.

"XVII

"Like most other public institutions, prisons must be open to public scrutiny and not be hidden away beyond easy observation. To assure such high visibility, the press and other media, upon request, should have ready access to our prisons, provided that each prisoner's right to refuse interviews or exposure shall be respected.

"XVIII

"The fact that rehabilitation is not a legitimate purpose of imprisonment does not imply that 'helping' programs should be removed from prisons. The state has a duty to provide economic, social, educational and medical services in prisons, as well as in the communities, but since such services bear no relationship to the legitimate purposes of imprisonment, their acceptance by prisoners should be voluntary. Especially since there is no convincing evidence of the effectiveness of rehabilitative programs in prison, they should have no bearing whatsoever on the length of a prisoner's incarceration.

"XIX

"Upon completion of their sentences, prisoners should return to full, lawful membership in society. No discrimination should be permitted against former offenders regarding work, education, voting or other civil and human rights. Legislative reform in this regard should be undertaken, and existing agencies engaged in such functions as job placement and training should coordinate their efforts with those of the prison system. Changes should not have to await judicial intervention.

"XX

"To focus, as we have done in this Conference, on that portion of the criminal justice system which begins with judicial sentencing and terminates with restoration of civil and political rights is not to imply that other areas of our criminal justice system are not also in need of reform. Our entire criminal law should be reviewed periodically and systematically so as to keep it abreast of the contemporary needs of a free society."

This thoughtful Report merits the most detailed study by this Subcommittee. As the Foreword to the Report noted, its reading makes obvious that it is no halting, equivocating document. The Conferees clearly felt that the time for minor, piece-meal "reforms" is long past. Indeed, the Report cut both ways. As the Foreword noted (pp. 6-7):

"Rather the Report challenges the fundamental value of today's prison as an institution. In effect, as we read the findings and as we heard them formulated, their plain-spoken direction is toward the elimination of prisons, now too often just a way to cage society's cast-offs. A similar conclusion is reached on our bail system.

"The report also strips away the protective covering from many shibboleths to which now applies the lip-service label 'progressive.' For instance, the Report minces no words when it tells us that our 'modern' parole system and the indeterminate sentence which is its concomitant, do not in actual practice operate in response to rehabilitative achievement, but instead most often are but a means of adding punishment. Indeed, the value of 'rehabilitation' procedures is almost entirely unproved. And the net effect of the use of these devices is to cause our sentencing structure to bear most heavily on the poor."

These are searching, insightful conclusions squarely applicable to the important issues with which this Subcommittee is now dealing. They provide the basis for a national policy toward sentencing, probation, parole, bail, early release programs, correction, and prisons which will be consonant with both criminal law realities and the Bill of Rights.

Yet it must be stated, regretfully but firmly, that in all too many aspects, S. 1437 takes precisely the opposite approach toward sentencing, correction, probation, and parole. It appears to be motivated by a harsh, even vindictive, approach toward the defendants in the criminal justice system. In all too many instances, it fails to provide even the due process protections set forth in H.R. 2311 now pending in the House, which traces back to the H.R. 10850 of the last Congress and which had much of its provisions drafted in close collaboration with the American Civil Liberties Union. See comparison of S. 1 and H.R. 10850 by Congressman Kastenmeier, Cong. Rec., February 24, 1976, H. 1270-H. 1277.

What the foregoing analysis has clearly shown is that S. 1437, like its predecessor, S. 1, disregards many of the sound recommendations of legal, penological and correctional experts, including those embodied in the Report of the National Commission on Reform of the Federal Criminal Laws (Brown Commission) relating to the structure of criminal sentences.

III. THE CHOICE OF NATIONAL SENTENCING POLICY PRESENTED BY S. 1437

Before analysis is made of the specific provisions relating to sentencing contained in S. 1437, the national choices which this legislation presents to the country should be made crystal-clear. S. 1437, far from being noncontroversial as its proponents fallaciously assert, is in actuality retrogressive and has every probability of proving to be harshly vindictive and punitive in its sentencing philosophy. The purported equalization and end to sentence disparity is the false equality (and will so prove, it may be predicted, in all too many instances) of the fabled Bed of Procrustes.

The fateful choice as to a sentencing policy in criminal law which this country is being asked to make was set forth in two diametrically opposed speeches given recently to the Convocation of the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions, held in Chicago, Illinois, on April 2, 1977.

Senator Edward M. Kennedy (D. Mass.), one of the sponsors of S. 1437, stated in part:

"What lessons have we learned? Is there anything we can do now? How much progress can we make?"

"The first step is to change the terms of the debate on crime. We must end the foolish argument over whether crime can be attacked more effectively by correcting social injustices or by locking up offenders and throwing away the key.

* * * * *

"But let us no longer confuse social progress with progress in the war against crime. We must eliminate ghetto slums, reduce teenage unemployment and improve health care, because such steps in and of themselves, are necessary and right. To the extent that steps like these have a beneficial impact on our soaring crime rate, that would be a welcome side effect.

"But to argue 'no crime reform until society is reformed' is to direct attention away from the significant steps government can take now to fight crime. The demand for causal solutions to the nation's crime problem is, whether intended or not, a way of deferring specific action.

* * * * *

"The chaos of the substantive offenses in the code is bad enough. But when we talk about how the current laws promote injustice how they mean different things to the rich and the poor, one flaw stands out above the rest. That is federal sentencing policy. Sentencing in America is a national scandal. Every day the system breeds massive injustice. There are no guidelines to aid judges in the exercise of their discretion. There is no appellate review of sentences. Judges are free to roam at will, dispensing ad hoc justice in ways that defy both reason and fairness. Different judges hand out widely differing sentences to similar offenders convicted of similar crimes. Some offenders, including many repeat offenders, escape jail altogether while others—convicted of the very same crime—go to jail for excessive periods.

"The impact of such sentencing disparity on our criminal justice system is devastating. Certainty of punishment is a joke. To all who come in contact with it, the system is seen for what it is—a game of chance in which offenders play the odds and gamble on avoiding punishment. Because one thief went to jail doesn't mean the next will go. Hire the well-connected lawyer; play assignment calendar roulette by adjourning your case again and again until you get a lenient judge; in every other way, learn the ropes and beat the rap.

"Sentencing disparity also tilts the process against the young and poor and nurtures a growing public cynicism about our institutions. The youth who goes for a joyride or commits petty larceny is sentenced to a year in jail. Too often, the evader, the price fixer, the polluter or the corrupt public official receive suspended sentences on the unthinking ground that the stigma of their convictions is punishment enough.

"The judges are not to blame. The problem cannot be traced to 'weak' judges who 'coddle' criminals. The great majority of our federal judges try to perform their sentencing duties in a responsible, diligent manner. But they must act without guidelines or review, because there are no standards or review procedures. The law invites injustice by conferring unlimited discretion to impose sentences within vast statutory limits. A convicted bank robber can be sentenced anywhere from a term of probation to twenty-five years in prison, a rapist anywhere from probation to life imprisonment. This discretion has been provided for in the name of benevolence, in the name of doing good. The original purpose of the law was to promote rehabilitation by tailoring the sentencing to fit the personal needs of the offender.

"But this purpose has too seldom been achieved. Our good intentions are not enough. The use of broad discretion has backfired; there has been notorious lack of rehabilitation and an equally notorious increase in arbitrariness and injustice."

There is truth in some of Senator Kennedy's comments, but equally, there are fallacies, half-truths, and a glossing over of a retreat toward a mechanical method of sentencing which will be brought about if the proposed Sentencing Commission establishes guidelines in the light of the criteria which, if S. 1437 becomes law, will be made mandatory by Sec. 101(a) (the General Purpose section), Sec. 2003(a) (dealing with factors to be considered in imposition of a sentence), Sec. 2102 (dealing with factors to be considered in imposition of a sentence of probation), Sec. 2201 (and Sec. 2202(a) (dealing with imposition of a sentence of fine), and Sec. 3831(c) (dealing with criteria for release of a prisoner on parole).

Issue is effectively and authoritatively joined with the views expressed by Senator Kennedy (which in large part are incorporated into S. 1437 just as are also those of the Nixon-Mitchell administration) in the remarks given at the same Conference on Crime and What We Can Do About It held in Chicago on April 22, 1977, and sponsored by the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions, such rebuttal remarks being given by David L. Bazelon, Chief Judge, United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Judge Bazelon's remarks appear in the Congressional Record, May 2, 1977, E. 2674-E. 2676. In inserting Judge Bazelon's address into the Congressional Record, Congressman Don Edwards of California observed, "I was deeply moved by the insight and wisdom in the speech, and commend its study to my colleagues." (E. 2674).

In this important speech, Judge Bazelon cut through much of the self-serving rhetoric that has been offered in justification, respectively, for the hard-line view of sentencing that has appeared, respectively and successively, in S. 1 and S. 1400 of the 93rd Congress, S. 1 of the 94th Congress, and now in S. 1437 of the 95th Congress, 1st Sess. Congressman Edwards was eminently correct in commending its study to the members of Congress.

Judge Bazelon there said in part (Cong. Rec. May 2, 1977, at E. 2675) :

"On the other end of the spectrum from the abolitionists [of prisons], there are growing numbers of criminologists and politicians who are promising society great victories in the war on crime by changing our sentencing policies. They speak of flat sentences, uniform sentences, mandatory sentences, presumptive sentences. Under one proposal, a new sentencing commission would set standards, and appellate courts would review sentencing decisions to insure that those standards are implemented.

"Some of these proposals come from those who have given up on rehabilitation, and indeterminate sentencing, which uses the unfixed release date to induce prisoners to reform themselves. Since prisons now seem to serve no purpose but punishment and isolation, they say, there is no reason that like crimes should not receive like sentences. These people rest their case for uniform sentences on fairness for prisoners themselves, who are too often kept ignorant of their release date or subjected to unequal treatment.

"Perhaps it is true that 'we have not achieved either the individual love and understanding or the social distribution of power and property that is essential if discretion is to serve justice.' Yet I still cling to the ideal of individualized justice. As others have recognized, 'In abandoning individuation here, we make it progressively easier to abandon it elsewhere. I fear that if we shift from concern for the individual to mechanical principles of fairness we may cease trying to learn as much as possible about the circumstances of life that may have brought the particular offender to the bar of justice.

"At present, sentencing discretion is shared by prosecutors, judges, parole boards, and others. Uniform and mandatory sentences would merely transfer most of this discretion to prosecutors, who would in effect set sentences by their decisions about whom to charge with what crime and whether to plea bargain. Since prosecutors need not reveal their reasons, their exercise of discretion is not reviewable.

"Of course, keeping discretion in judges' hands is preferable only if judges explain their decisions and make themselves accountable to the public. Sentencing discretion cannot appear fair or serve justice or teach anyone anything unless its exercise is fully explained. Unfortunately, most judges now give only boilerplate reasons for that sentencing, if that. I would guess that some judges—those who are moved by retribution and vengeance—would be ashamed to say no forthrightly. Others suppose there must be right and wrong sentences, so they are embarrassed to reveal their understandable dilemma in not knowing one from the other. And finally there are those who can't be troubled; if they bothered to probe their own minds, who knows what useful insights or disturbing biases they would find?

"All the proposals for sentencing reform are worthless unless trial judges clearly and honestly reveal in writing the reasons for the sentences imposed. Without such reasons, no review—judicial or otherwise—would have any basis for determining whether the judge abused his sentencing discretion. And without reasons, we would be denied the experience which would be essential for fixing sentencing standards and guidelines by any court, commission, or legislature.

"I am also disturbed by the movement for mandatory and uniform sentencing because some people advertise it as a way of reducing crime. Led by Harvard's James Wilson and NYU's Ernest van den Haag, this group argues that increasing the certainty of a prison sentence will decrease the crime rate either by removing the more prolific criminals from the streets or by deterring others from yielding to temptation. Some politicians have told me that they are highly impressed with the theory, which they attribute to Wilson, that the current surge in crime is caused by the post-war baby boom. Apparently, the idea is that as this generation enters its crime-prone years, all that is required is essentially a holding action—put these people away until the population bulge passes, and eventually the problem of unacceptable crime statistics will largely solve itself.

"What can society really expect from these proposals? Of course, all these proposals are almost certain to increase the number of prisoners, even if sentences are shortened. Most state systems are already overcrowded; many are operating at 130% or more of capacity. In one state the Department of Corrections has stopped issuing a capacity figure 'because we keep passing it.' One survey puts our national prison population at 276,000. In the last year, this country experienced the largest one-year increase on record. Billions of dollars in new prison construction is scheduled for the next few years; yet at a cost of $35,000 to $50,000 per cell, we can safely assume that overcrowding will get worse before it gets better.

"Can society expect harsher sentences to deter crime? The white-collar offender may weigh the risks of punishment, but the street offender—the one who is the cause of our alarm—most probably does not. With no job, no opportunity, no close family ties, he may well believe he has more to gain than he has to lose. More than 3% of this nation's non-white male population between the ages of 18 and 34 was imprisoned in 1970. This is six times the percentage for whites. Can anyone doubt the connection between these out-of-proportion figures and the out-of-proportion unemployment rates and lack of opportunity facing this country's non-white slum dwellers?

"Also, even if it is true that we can reduce crime simply by locking up enough lawbreakers, we must ask—for how long and at what cost to them and ourselves? Is the plan to keep them behind bars for life? Even if it succeeds, will this approach make our society more just, or merely more repressive?

"Most disturbing, all these proposals fail to consider the social injustices that breed crime. Can it be true that this nation would rather build a new prison cell for every slum dweller who turns to crime than try to alleviate the causes of his lawlessness. I do not understand how academicians and politicians can have a clear conscience preaching repression as the solution to crime, unless of course they believe that despite the accident of birth everyone in this country is equally endowed, mentally and physically, and has the same opportunities they have had to get ahead.

"If the present debates in corrections are aimed at making prisons less brutal and sentencing more fair, then the effort is worthwhile. But if they are aimed at reducing crime, they are dangerously off-target. They are dangerous because they risk repression and greater suffering. They are off-target because they encourage society to expect magic cures rather than facing the real causes of crime."

And Judge Bazelon concluded his incisive criticism of the fallacious and probably self-defeating approach toward crime which is exemplified by S. 1437 with these wise words (Cong. Rec., May 2, 1977, at E 2676) :

"Prison reform and tougher sentencing seem like hollow promises when we realize that it is this kind of crime with these causes that we are really talking about. At worst, the present attacks on crime are repressive. At best, they are mere nibbling.

"Of the more humane reforms that I call 'nibbling', Norval Morris argues that 'it is a serious mistake to oppose any reform until all can be reformed.' Of course I agree. Making sentences more fair and relieving over-crowding in prisons need not wait for the elimination of poverty in this country. Surely review of the sentencing judge's discretion—accompanied by a requirement that he give his reasons—could eliminate wide disparities in sentencing without ignoring differences in individual offenders that justify different treatment.

“But what I reject is the notion we should strive to achieve only those changes in the criminal justice system. Instead, we must try to hold in mind the full picture. We must not forget that the people I have been speaking about in the criminal justice system are merely the end-product of our failing social justice system.

“What ultimately is at issue in the debate over alternative responses to the crime problem is a question of the goal to be pursued: repressive order or moral order. To choose to eliminate social injustice is to choose a long, painful, and costly process. The only option I can imagine that is less appealing is not to choose. Creating order through repression will not be easy, and maintaining it, as the frustrations of the deprived grow, will be more and more difficult. As the poet Langston Hughes warned:

“What happens to a dream deferred?
 Does it dry up
     like a raisin in the sun
 Or fester like a sore—
 And then run?
 Does it stink like rotten meat?
 Or crust and sugar over—
     Like a syrupy sweet?
 Maybe it just sags
     Like it just sags
     like a heavy load.
 Or does it explode?”

“Everything I've said this morning you've heard somewhere, sometime before. I've given you no new data or new theories. My purpose in coming here was to deliver a simple message: In the growing debate about corrections and the rising hysteria about crime, we have lost sight of old truths and old priorities. I believe there is a desperate need to inform the nation that there are no nostrums for street crime apart from social reform, and that to put social order ahead of social justice is repressive.

“The crux of the dilemma is this: It is easy to concede the inevitability of social injustice and find the serenity to accept it. The far harder task is to feel its intolerability and seek the strength to change it.”

It is against this wise perspective by Judge David L. Bazelon that the analysis of the Sentencing Commission and the sentencing provisions to be established by S. 1437 if it becomes law, which follows, must be weighed. The bias of this writer is one in favor of the Bill of Rights and against the tough, law-and-order concepts which infest S. 1437, just as they infested S. 1437's predecessor bill, S. 1 of the 94th Congress. It was precisely those supposedly “tough” approaches that led inevitably to Attica and to a host of other incidents that tore the lid off the myth that we have true criminal justice in our sentencing and correctional system of law enforcement and crime prevention. Judge Bazelon's warnings take on even more urgency when it is seen, as the next section demonstrates, that the choice of a national policy is to be made in actuality not by Congress, but instead in secret by a non-legislative body, the Judicial Conference. The reality is that, in being asked to enact S. 1437 into law, Congress is being asked to abdicate its constitutional obligation to make policy and legislate. The true national policy for sentencing, probation, parole, dangerous offenders, and other aspects of the correctional aspects of criminal law will not be made by Congress but instead by a self-perpetuating body of ranking jurists heavily influenced by the strict constructionist views of former President Richard M. Nixon's appointees to the United States Supreme Court. As noted in the next section of this analysis, this is both undemocratic and unwise.

IV. CONGRESS SHOULD NOT ENACT S. 1437 PRIOR TO HAVING BEFORE IT THE SENTENCING GUIDELINES PROPOSED TO BE ESTABLISHED BY THE SENTENCING COMMISSION

It is abundantly clear that the proponents of S. 1437 regard the proposed Sentencing Commission as the keystone of their arch for federal criminal law codification. Yet those guidelines to be established have every probability of being formulated in a harsh, repressive manner that will inevitably have the effect of further crowding of already over-crowded prisons and in which unworkable "law-and-order" concepts will have priority over intelligent, expert use of probation, parole, halfway houses, release to the community, and other methods of correction offering hope of rehabilitation and reform for the person who has run afoul of the law, and will do so again unless recidivism is avoided by his own motivation to "go straight".

Viewed in this sense, Congress is clearly being invited to "buy a pig in a poke." Momentous issues of national policy should not, and must not, be delegated to a non-legislative body, as is the formulation adopted with respect to the proposed Sentencing Commission (Chapter 5S of Part E, pp. 301-307, Secs. 991-998).

In a Statement issued on April 4, 1977, the American Civil Liberties Union, appraising the Kennedy-McClellan Proposed Revision of S. 1, noted that the Kennedy guidelines proposal has been incorporated into the bill. Under this system, a nine-member commission is to be established, appointed by the Judicial Conference of the United States, to draft "guidelines" to direct the trial judge in making his sentencing decision. Failure to sentence within the guidelines creates a presumption of error when the sentence is reviewed by the appellate court.

On this important provision of S. 1437, ACLU recommended:

Recommendation: The ACLU, of course, cannot properly evaluate this proposal without seeing the guidelines themselves. Furthermore, we question whether a non-legislative commission should be delegated the authority to make essentially legislative decisions, that is the severity of punishment to be accorded particular categories of crime and criminals.

"We propose that a sentencing guidelines commission should be given a fixed time, perhaps one year, to draft and submit to Congress its proposed sentencing guidelines system. Enactment of any criminal codification bill should be deferred until the sentencing commission has made its report and until Congress has had an opportunity to review the proposal."

Such recommendation by ACLU is both practical and cogent. It closely parallels criticism made by the National Council on Crime and Delinquency with respect to Senator Gary Hart's draft of the Federal Sentencing Standards Act of 1977 (S. 204). Included in the National Council's (hereinafter NCCD) comments on Senator Hart's draft were the following observations, inter alia:

"The operative sections of the draft bill (S. 204) are sections 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10. Section 6 calls for a new commission (1) to establish a number of categories of offenses, placing each criminal offense in a category; and (2) to assign a presumptive sentence for each category.

"With respect to the first task, the draft bill would set up a complex procedure without establishing the classifications, or placing the different crimes in the categories. It is hard to see that anything is gained by this procedure, and something is lost by it: the first hand legislative consideration of the vital ingredients of its bill. It should be a legislative task to determine what classification accords with its view of sentencing, and to set it forth. Pushing the problem aside does not promise anything superior.

"A sponsor of a bill of this kind has choices among the models. The choice involves such decisions as whether the classifications will be more punitive than the existing law, less punitive, or much the same. The suggestion that the commission may establish subclasses for any criminal offense is a seemingly neutral guideline, but the question is a vital policy matter that should be answered by the Congress."

As noted below, the proposed Sentencing Commission provided by S. 1437 would establish guidelines which would take into account a series of mitigating and aggravating circumstances. If anything, the provisions of S. 1437 in this regard are even more speculative and conjectural than the parallel provisions of Senator Hart's S. 204, the "Federal Sentencing Standards Act of 1977." We do not know, and cannot know, at this time what these guidelines will be. No one can evaluate either the effectiveness or the fairness of the guidelines to be eventually established by the Sentencing Commission to be set up pursuant to S. 1437 until they have actually been promulgated and the country finally will know what they provide.

Accordingly, it is strongly advocated that action on criminal code legislation be deferred and tabled for the present session of Congress at the very least. Legislation in this area should be confined to establishment of such a Sentencing Commission (the members to be appointed by the President rather than by the Judicial Conference). That Commission in turn would have the duty to formulate its proposed guidelines and make them public and available for analysis and public debate, including the extent to which they deal fairly with the poor, the minorities, and other categories which thus far have never truly known either fairness and basic justice in sentencing, as groups, or that federal criminal law could seriously be termed a just criminal code. Only after Congress and the Executive Department are truly satisfied, following extensive hearings with full opportunity for all interested groups to make their views known on the fairness and justice of these guidelines, including the availability of probation, parole, Half-Way Houses, release to the community, work release, and other creative programs affording a real hope for rehabilitation and avoidance of recidivism, should Congress consider passage of the complex criminal code reform bill exemplified by S. 1437.

This recommendation is eminently reasonable in view of the great importance which the sponsors and proponents of S. 1437 place upon the Sentencing Commission and the sentencing guidelines it will be given the power to promulgate, if S. 1437 becomes law. This is made strikingly clear by the statements offered, respectively, by Senator John McClellan and Senator Edward M. Kennedy in introducing S. 1437 (Cong. Rec., May 2, 1977, S. 6833-S. 6841).

Senator Kennedy, for example, stated (Id., at S. 6839) :

"Mr. President, although these new [sentencing] features in the bill basically result from our effort to codify current law, the proposed bill goes well beyond mere codification. It is a reform effort as well.

"First and foremost, the new bill overhauls the entire Federal sentencing process by adopting many of the sentencing reforms I suggested in S. 181, 'the sentencing guidelines bill,' introduced with broad, bipartisan support, including the cosponsorship of Senator McClellan, on January 10, [1977]. I view the sentencing provisions as the key reform of the entire bill. The bill sets forth four generally recognized purposes of sentencing—deterrence, protection of the public, assurance of just punishment, and rehabilitation. A sentencing commission is created and directed to establish guidelines to govern the imposition of sentences for all Federal offenses, taking into consideration factors relating to the purposes of sentencing, the characteristics of the offender, and the aggravating and mitigating circumstances of the offense.

"In sentencing offenders, a judge will be expected to sentence within the range specified in the guidelines, although if he considers the guideline range inappropriate for a particular case he is free to sentence above or below the guideline range as long as he explains his reasons for doing so. If an offender is sentenced below the range specified in the guidelines, the Government may obtain appellate review of the sentence. If an offender is sentenced above the range specified in the guidelines, the offender may appeal. This system is designed to promote greater uniformity and fairness, while retaining necessary judicial flexibility. Under this new approach, the gross disparities in sentencing found in current law should be significantly reduced." (Emphasis supplied).

Similar stress upon the importance of the Sentencing Commission and the guidelines it is to formulate appears in the analysis of S. 1437 inserted into the Congressional Record on May 2, 1977, by Senator McClellan. Cong., Rec., May 2, 1977, at S. 6838).

It is eminently fair accordingly that Congress defer enactment of this complex proposed legislation until means can be assured that it is Congress, not some self-perpetuating group of judges, appointed by the Judicial Conference, which will make national policy with respect to sentencing, probation, parole, fines, prisoner release, and all the other important social-policy issues involved here, and which S. 1437 proposes should be effectively delegated to a body not answerable to the people, but instead to the Judicial Conference, and which, as demonstrated in the next section of this analysis, has every probability of being undemocratic and unresponsive to progressive views of sentencing in determining these guidelines.

Just as it is eternally true that questions of war and peace are too important to be left to generals, it is equally true that questions of national policy as to sentencing are too important to be left to judges or other appointees of the Judicial Conference. Democratic controls over sentencing policy are absolute, indispensable requirements for a just criminal code. The input, expertise, and advice of judges are urgently needed, just as is the comparable authoritative input of others who deal with those who come into conflict with the law—attorneys, correctional officers, Public Defenders, social workers, psychiatrists, penologists. There is, however, an enormous distinction to be made between utilizing the expertise of the resources and personnel available to the Judicial Conference and having Congress abdicate its legislative responsibilities so as to delegate decision making as to sentencing to appointees of the Judicial Conference.

We are dealing here with issues where legislative decisions between choices must be made. Those legislative decisions should not be delegated to a commission. Congress will be flagrantly remiss in measuring up to its constitutional duties if it surrenders the power to make these decisions to a non-legislative body, the proposed Sentencing Commission.

V. APPOINTMENT OF THE MEMBERS OF THE SENTENCING COMMISSION BY THE JUDICIAL CONFERENCE IS BOTH UNDEMOCRATIC AND UNWISE

Both S. 1437 and its legislative sibling, S. 181 (a bill to establish certain guidelines for sentencing, introduced by Senator Kennedy) provide that there is established as an independent Commission in the judicial branch a United States Sentencing Commission which shall consist of nine members designated by the Judicial Conference of the United States. A member of the Commission may be removed by the Judicial Conference only for cause. (S. 1437, Ch. 58, Sect. 991, p. 301).

The Federal Sentencing Standards Act of 1977 (S. 204, introduced by Senator Gary Hart) takes the democratic approach with respect to the Federal Sentencing Commission which it would establish. Sec. 4 of S. 204 provides for the establishment of a commission to be known as the Federal Sentencing Commission. This commission is to be composed of five members appointed by the President of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate. This is entirely consonant with our democratic form of government. It permits full opportunity to have public participation in the choice of the membership of this body. It does not leave such choice to a group (the Judicial Conference) entirely separated from the democratic process and which is demonstrably part of a closed universe of judicial elitism largely dominated by the influence of Chief Justice Warren Burger.

Little has been publicly revealed about the activities and decisions of the Judicial Conference. Some of the secrecy in which this powerful, but little known, judicial agency operates has been stripped away by an article by John P. MacKenzie, former Supreme Court reporter, Dark Doings Among the Judges, appearing in Saturday Review, May 28, 1977 (pp. 18-19). A copy of this revealing article is annexed as an appendix to this statement.

Mr. MacKenzie's enlightening article makes clear that, far from delegating to designees of the Judicial Conference unprecedented power to determine the policy of the federal government over sentencing, fines, probation, parole, and the other broad powers which S. 1437 seeks to confer upon the Sentencing Commission, the time is overdue for Congress to investigate the powers the Judicial Conference already has, the secrecy in which it operates, and the extent to which it is an arm for lobbying and execution of the narrow, rigid views of the Bill of Rights and constitutional liberties typified by the Burger Court majority of the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. MacKenzie states initially in his article:

"Sunlight," said Justice Louis D. Brandeis, "is the best of all disinfectants." Yet one enormously influential body of high-level jurists, the Judicial Conference of the United States, has been meeting in the dark for so many decades that by now one almost hesitates to throw its proceedings open to the cleansing sunlight and fresh air."

His article makes clear that the public interest is deeply involved in understanding the use of power in secret by this small body of leading federal judges. He states (p. 18):

"But why should the public care about this secret society of a few dozen eminent judges? Why not just let the judicial 'beetles' doze away on their perches, safe from the glare of publicity?"

"The answer is that, whatever its original intended functions, this conference of respected jurists, chaired and guided by Chief Justice Warren Burger has slowly become a secret lobby, a powerful policy-shaping instrument that is in no way accountable for its often questionable actions.

"Not content with lobbying for higher salaries for judges (a perhaps understandable preoccupation), the group has lately gone on to influencing congressional deliberations on wiretap legislation and similar key policy matters. As things stand, the Judicial Conference is fast becoming a secret government force to be reckoned with."

The Saturday Review article emphasizes the way in which the Judicial Conference is dominated by its chairman, Chief Justice Warren Burger. Mr. MacKenzie explains (p. 18):

"Chief Justices have many collateral duties thrust upon them, but Burger, who has sought and gained more renown as a judicial administrator than as a jurist, has accepted the conference chairmanship with gusto and spends long hours on its work. The members (11 chief judges of the regional U.S. courts of appeals, 11 federal district judges elected by their peers from those same regions, and representatives from claims and patents courts) often are no match for a well-prepared presiding officer, even if the judges were inclined to resist his leadership.

"What does the conference actually do? An attempt to help outsiders find out was quietly launched a few years ago—and just as quietly buried last year. James E. Doyle, a U.S. district judge in Madison, Wisconsin, advanced the modest proposal that the conference meetings be thrown open to the public. He told his colleagues that after attending a number of these meetings as a conference member, he couldn't think of any discussion he had heard that couldn't have been held in the open. His proposal was drowned in apathy and opposition led by Burger. The subject itself became classified. Burger refused to discuss the details. Terrified staff members, taking that cue, were struck dumb when questioned. Judge Doyle himself found the topic too hot to talk about. 'No comment,' he replied to inquiries. Was he the initiator of such a proposal? 'No comment on that either,' he answered."

Moreover, it has become clear that, under the domination of Chief Justice Burger, the Judicial Conference has been utilizing its prestige in favor of proposed legislation which is demonstrably violative of civil liberties and constitutional protections. That record of attempting to influence legislation in a manner supportive of the type of proposed legislation which public outrage forced deletion from S. 1 is highly disturbing. It poses sharply the questions whether the hardline, rigid views of the Nixon appointees on the Supreme Court are to be the ultimate guidelines promulgated by the Sentencing Commission so that what we are dealing with here is an indefensible species of legislative legerdemain in which Congress and the Carter Administration abdicate their mutual responsibilities to formulate national policy over sentencing in favor of delegating that choice of national policy to Chief Justice Warren Burger, dominant force, it is clear, in the Judicial Conference, a body of top jurists, responsible and answerable to no one, meeting in secret, and reflecting views of the Bill of Rights which are increasingly arousing alarm among those who regard the constitution and the Bill of Rights as a precious charter of freedom not to be eroded even by a temporary majority on the Supreme Court representing Justices carefully chosen by Richard M. Nixon to reflect his views of strict constructionism and a "tough" attitude toward lawbreakers and constitutional freedoms.

And Mr. MacKenzie concluded (p. 19) :

"Whether or not the press can be likened to government, there's little doubt that the Judicial Conference performs important governmental tasks—judicial, legislative, and executive. It has come a long way since 1922, when Congress heeded [Chief Justice] Taft's call for a body to cope with case-load arrears and possibly to something about the disparity among courts in their sentencing of convicted criminals. Those two problems remain as baffling as ever, but the conference has branched out into other fields. One is lobbying, and not just for higher federal-court payrolls. One recalcitrant congressman predicted early that the conference would become 'a legally constituted and publicly financed propaganda organization on behalf of the federal judiciary.' His predictions have been borne out several times.

"One notable instance occurred in 1967, when the conference, then led by the late Chief Justice Earl Warren, voted to volunteer its views to Congress on the wisdom of the pending wiretap bills. It was an odd stance, one that came to light only in the fine print of the conference's report and the satisfied reactions of wiretap advocates. The conference, with its roster of senior and prominent jurists, could be expected to properly comment on the practicality of specific provisions in a bill, but this body went beyond that: it chose a pro-tap bill in preference to a bill banning all wiretapping, and it favored a bill that was clearly unconstitutional under existing Supreme Court precedents. Activists and advocates of judicial restraint alike let the resolution pass, since there was no recorded dissent. Subsequent inquiries by several members of the Judicial Conference as to what had happened yielded the inescapable conclusion that many of them had no idea of what they had done.

"Chief Justice Warren and Chief Justice Burger have inspired many studies in contrast, but they are alike in their passion for conference secrecy. Congress could cool that passion by bringing the conference under the lash of disclosure and public access now required of government advisory committees and agencies by the Freedom of Information Act. The judicial branch is not covered by the information law—needed, the alarming fact is that these same secretive jurists are the ones with power to say what that law means—but there is little reason to exempt the conference, especially when it is not performing strictly judicial work.

“That was the view of former senator Sam J. Ervin, Jr. (D-N.C.). Like many other lawmakers, Ervin found other fields to conquer than the Judicial Conference. But he said this in 1970 :

“They certainly do not act as judges when they vote to approve or disapprove of pending legislation, or adopt rules of financial disclosure for their colleagues. Why, then, should the conference meet in secret? I believe that when judges act as policy makers and lobbyists, it follows that their discussions should be public. If the conference supports or opposes a bill, the Congress and the public should have free access to the conference’s debate on that proposal. The Congress should know how carefully the Judicial Conference researches its positions so that it can attach relative weights to them.”

There can be no more important domestic issue for the citizenry of the country to confront than whether Congress is to abdicate its legislative responsibilities and surrender legislative decision making to an unresponsive body dominated by Chief Justice Warren Burger, so that the sentencing policy of this country is to be formulated, not by Congress responsive to the democratic wishes of the electorate, but instead by the judiciary, and particularly, by the narrow, retrogressive views of the Burger Court majority of the United States Supreme Court, and its titular head, the Chief Justice.

What that will mean for sentencing may be seen in a disturbing article, Has the Supreme Court Abandoned the Constitution? written by Laughlin McDonald, director of the southern regional office of the ACLU Foundation in Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. McDonald states initially (Saturday Review, May 28, 1977, at 10) :

“The Supreme Court has lost its sense of direction. It seems almost to have forgotten what its job is—to interpret and defend the Constitution. Under Chief Justice Warren Burger it is systematically restricting its own jurisdiction, and that of the lower federal courts, to hear and decide cases involving the denial of constitutional rights. It is nailing up its doors. As a result, people with legitimate complaints are left without remedy or redress. But paradoxically, it is often better to be ignored by the Supreme Court these days, for with increasing frequency the Court turns the cases that it does hear into constitutional disasters.”

And he concluded (Saturday Review, May 28, 1977, at p. 14) :

“On the whole, the decisions of the Burger Court unmistakably suggest an underlying ideology similar to that of Richard Nixon, who placed Chief Justice Burger and Justices Powell, Rehnquist, and Blackmun on the Supreme Court. Nixon said he was a ‘strict constructionist.’ Later, Nixon proved he loathed the Constitution.* * *

* * * * *

“As things are now developing, Burger Court decisions will mean a reduction in constitutional protection, and in freedom, for all of us. There will be less protection from police abuse and less free speech, less protection from consumer fraud and less fairness in the administration of the criminal laws. There will be more repression in the administration of archaic sex laws, more invasion of privacy, and more discrimination against the poor and other minorities.

“All of our freedoms will be diminished, and as the Constitution begins to atrophy through lack of enforcement, increased constitutional violations will be encouraged and will occur. Our institutions of government will become more and more prone to abuse and less and less reliable. There will be an ever increasing, palpable deterioration in the quality of American democracy and in American life.” (Emphasis supplied.)

Is then the ultimate victor in determining the country’s national policy toward sentencing and correction to be Richard M. Nixon through the lasting influence of his handpicked Chief Justice Warren Burger, chosen to reflect the then President’s law-and-order views of dealing with crime? Is a hardnosed approach toward crime, offering little or no hope of rehabilitation and providing merely storage, retribution, and claimed “deterrence” to mark this country’s policy toward sentencing for generations to come, and thereby to reflect Nixon’s ultimate victory in this important area? Whether or not the proponents of S. 1437, and its Sentencing Commission recognize that this will be the outcome if S. 1437 becomes law in its present form, such will indeed be the predictable, and disturbing, effect of enactment of this provision.

To recapitulate, S. 1437 presents the country with the following little-realized phenomenon of national importance: (1) the bill is replete with hard-nosed guidelines for so-called "law-and-order" treatment of defendants (euphemistically called "certainty of punishment" even though realistically our already overcrowded courts and prisons will be flooded far beyond capacity if this increased imprisonment called for by S. 1437 and its proposed Sentencing Commission becomes law); (2) the national policy as to sentencing is to be made by a Sentencing Commission to be appointed by the Judicial Conference with the result that Congress is being required to abdicate its constitutional obligation to legislate national policy in this important area of the law in favor of a non-legislative body (totally unresponsive to the will of the people) which has not yet even been appointed; (3) the Judicial Conference is responsible to no other group, represents only the elite hierarchy of the federal judiciary and meets and conducts its business completely in secret; and (4) the Judicial Conference is totally dominated by its chairman, Chief Justice Burger, who in turn speaks for the Burger Court majority of the Supreme Court which has issued opinion after opinion taking a narrow, retrogressive view of the Constitution and its Bill of Rights.

From this emerges the inescapable conclusion that S. 1437 leaves determination of the country's national policy about sentencing, parole, probation, early release of prisoners, and the like to a totally unresponsive group, dominated by Chief Justice Burger. Accordingly, what is in actuality involved in the provision that the Sentencing Commission is to be appointed by the Judicial Conference is that effective control of the country's policy about how to deal with crime and correction is being surrendered to Chief Justice Burger and the narrow, law-and-order view he typifies which has led those concerned about the Bill of Rights to conclude that its greatest danger is no longer some demagogue of the type of Senator Joseph McCarthy, but instead the present majority of the United States Supreme Court. The attempt to gloss over this important fact by claiming judicial impartiality or whatever other euphemistic defense is to be given to this demand for abdication by Congress of its legislative responsibilities cannot conceal the fact that, if S. 1437 becomes law, the country will have surrendered any effective control over sentencing; capitulated as to making work probation, parole, diversion of the offender to the community, and other creative and hope-inspiring correctional techniques; and delegated full control in this area of the criminal law to a secret body in the judiciary dominated by the retrogressive views of Chief Justice Burger and his colleagues who form the Burger Court majority.

There is no criticism here of the concept of a Sentencing Commission per se. The danger to constitutional freedoms and to a fair sentencing policy for the country arises in one important aspect from the indefensible provision that the members of the Sentencing Commission are to be appointed by the Judicial Council. That danger can readily be remedied—and must—by the simple process of amending the provision to replace it with the approach taken in S. 204, the Federal Sentencing Standards Act of 1977, introduced by Senator Gary Hart, provided, as previously noted, that the members of the Commission must be appointed by the President of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

This one change will by no means tame all the dangers which the Sentencing Commission, as formulated in S. 1437, presents to justice in America. It is, however, an indispensable initial requirement.

It is possible to legislate a Sentencing Commission which has some reasonable likelihood of evolving fair and just sentencing guidelines within the framework of a just criminal code. But S. 1437 is not a just criminal code, and the Sentencing Commission provisions of S. 1437 do not establish a commission which will bring into being just, equitable, and fair sentencing guidelines. Most certainly, it will not do so long as S. 1437 continues to set forth harsh, vindictive standards of its own which look toward punitive treatment of the offender, rather than rehabilitation and return to society with a motivation to abide by the law. Both the sentencing guidelines of S. 1437 itself, and the undemocratic and unresponsive nature of the proposed Sentencing Commission, will inevitably interlink to produce a tough, inflexible set of Sentencing Commission guidelines which will equally inevitably exacerbate, rather than alleviate, the existing problem of dealing effectively with crime and those convicted of crime. It is to this area of the proposed Sentencing Commission that the instant analysis now turns.

VI. THE GUIDELINES SET FORTH IN S. 1437 AND TO BE REFLECTED IN THE SENTENCING COMMISSION GUIDELINES ARE UNACCEPTABLY HARSH AND PUNITIVE

This analysis has earlier noted (Point II) that there is a presumption in favor of incarceration contained in S. 1437 and its companion bill in the House, H.R. 6869. That point quoted the factors set forth in Section 2003(a) required to be considered by the trial court in sentencing the convicted defendant. In addition to the factors there quoted, the court is required to consider the sentencing range established for the applicable category of offense committed by the applicable category or defendant as set forth in the Sentencing Commission's guidelines and, further, any pertinent policy statement issued by the Commission.

Section 2003(a) of S. 1437 (Ch. 20, p. 169) directs the federal district court to consider all these factors in determining sentences of probation, fines, or imprisonment. There has been a modification from the old S. 1. That predecessor bill established different criteria to be considered by the court in sentencing a defendant to any of the listed sanctions.

However, S. 1437 does establish additional factors for the court to consider in levying a fine and for the parole commission in granting parole.

Section 2202 (Ch. 22, p. 175) of S. 1437 mandates that, in levying a fine, the court must consider the defendant's "income, earning capacity, and financial resources; the nature of the burden that payment of the fine will impose on the defendant or his dependents; and any requirement that the defendant make restitution to the victim of the offense."

The Parole Commission must be "of the opinion that: there is no undue risk that a prisoner will fail to conform to his conditions of parole * * * and his release at that time, in light of his conduct at the institution, would not have a substantially adverse effect on institutional discipline" in order to grant parole. (Sec. 3831, p. 266).

The purposes of S. 181, the bill to establish certain guidelines for sentencing introduced by Senator Kennedy, are understandably very similar to those in S. 1437.

In contrast, the purposes of S. 204, the "Federal Sentencing Standards Act of 1977," introduced by Senator Gary Hart, differ from those in S. 1437 and S. 181. The objective of S. 204 is stated to be the establishment of standards "that will help to deter crime and punish convicted criminal offenders fairly and equally." Senator Hart has declared that this bill is based on a "just deserts" rationale for sentencing. "The severity of a sentence must be commensurate with the seriousness of the offender's crime, rather than being based on his supposed need for treatment or his likelihood of recidivism. Accordingly, S. 204 is markedly different in important commendable respects from S. 1437. It is not based on the "need * * * to provide the defendant with needed educational or vocational training . . . or other correctional treatment," and thus recognizes that true treatment cannot be coercively imposed by the courts and the prison system. This requirement penalizes blacks, Hispanics, and members of other minority groups, as well as the poor, and adds to the results of discrimination previously suffered by them the opportunity to correction officers to keep them in prison on the claim that somehow this will provide them with "needed educational or vocational training"—training which is desirable, but which should be provided in the community instead of in prison, as part of the alternatives to sentencing which S. 1437 minimizes as correctional approaches to be taken by the sentencing judge.

S. 204 is further preferable because it does not (as S. 1437 does) aim to "protect the public from further crimes of the defendant." There is here a recognition of the unfairness of basing a penalty on supposed further activity of the defendant, rather than actual past practices. The same objection also applies to the provision included in S. 1437's provision that parole not be granted where there is "undue risk that a prisoner will fail to conform to his conditions of parole."

Specific analysis will be made below as to what S. 1437 provides with respect to probation, parole, and other alternative sanctions to imprisonment. At this point, a general over-all comment on the bill's approach is that it clearly demonstrates a preference, and indeed a bias, in favor of incarceration and imprisonment rather than in place of alternative sanctions to imprisonment. Concededly, it does permit the use of traditional alternatives to imprisonment, including probation, parole, and fines, subject to the guidelines and policy statements of the proposed U.S. Sentencing Commission. However, it does not mandate the use of alternative sanctions for any crime (an exception is possession of 10 to 100 grams of marijuana, for which only a $500 fine is authorized). Probation is statutorily prohibited for offenders convicted of Class A felonies, or who are convicted of "Trafficking in an Opiate" or "Using a Weapon in the Course of a Crime," offenses which are required to be punished by imposition of a two-year mandatory minimum sentence except under sharply limited circumstances (the defendant was less than eighteen years of age, had significantly impaired mental capacity, was under unusual duress, or was an accomplice with a minor role). Fines can be assessed against any defendant found guilty of an offense, subject to the purposes of sentences mentioned above, the Sentencing Commission's guidelines, and the defendant's financial capabilities.

S. 204 is significantly more in line with progressive and creative concepts of penology and correction. Under S. 204, alternatives to imprisonment are required for criminal offenses which are not "serious." Serious offenses are defined as those which involve a "substantial degree of harm or risk and a high degree of culpability on the part of the person who commits such criminal offense." These offenses "involve (1) the infliction, risk, or threat of substantial bodily injury; or (2) involves the infliction of risk of substantial abuse of a public office, a public or private trust, or of government processes, or the deprivation of a substantial portion of the livelihood of a victim of such criminal offense."

S. 204 illustrates the correctional path that S. 1437 should (but does not) take. S. 204 would establish a number of alternatives to imprisonment, both old and new. These include: (1) intermittent confinement for days, evenings, or weekends, or portions thereof; (2) supervision in the community; (3) a fine or forfeiture; (4) a curfew or travel restrictions; or (5) community service. S. 204 further provides that the Attorney General, after consulting with the Sentencing Commission provided by that bill, is to establish or designate an office within the Department of Justice that shall be responsible for implementing and carrying out any alternative sanctions.

It is in proposals for alternative sentencing and diversion of offenders, particularly to community-based correctional programs, that the real hope for alleviating crime through the correctional system is found. What S. 1437 exemplifies is a swing of a pendulum away from modern and progressive concepts of penology. There are a number of reasons for this swing, not all by any means justifiable. It should be stated bluntly that the emphasis in S. 1437 upon determinate sentencing, mandatory imprisonment, incarceration to "reflect the seriousness of the offense, to promote respect for law, and to provide just punishment for the offense" (Sec. 2003(a)) offers little hope for alleviating crime, although unquestionably it will be of service to politicians in giving them an opportunity to tell the voters back home that they have "done something about crime."

Here, as ever, Judge David L. Bazelon, has written wise words:

"Mandatory incarceration, determinate sentencing, and other similar ideas are thus the first steps in a thousand-mile journey, but in precisely the wrong direction—towards repression. Mandatory incarceration means nothing more than locking up those who manifest symptoms of the underlying ill. If it reduces crime, it will do so only because repression and fear can be effective. Mandatory incarceration, however, will not cure—or even address the roots of the disease. Determinate sentencing is also an ostrich-like response; it expressly eliminates from the sentencing process any effort to learn about the circumstances that foster the behavior of a particular offender. As a result, we forfeit an opportunity to learn what must be done to prevent him—and others like him—from committing future offenses." (Civil Liberties—Protecting Old Values in the New Century, 51 New York University Law Review 505, at 510, 1976.)

Unquestionably, for the hardened criminal, imprisonment is proper. S. 1437 leans, however, despite lip service given toward alternatives to imprisonment, toward an infatuation with incarceration for most defendants. It evades recognition of the simple truth that there cannot be a just criminal code, or a just program for sentencing, without there being a just economic system. It is no mystery that there is a link between continuing unemployment, particularly of the youth, and more specifically of black and other minority youth, and continuing street crime. Fewer jobs unquestionably result in more crime. The rather simplistic approach taken by the emphasis upon incarceration in S. 1437 cannot escape that truism. It is probable that a one percent increase in the rate of unemployment will wipe out any deterrent effect that the certainty of imprisonment exemplified by S. 1437 could conceivably bring about. Enthusiasm for determinate sentencing and mandatory incarceration is strongly suggestive of leaping on a bandwagon. In this case, however, that bandwagon appears to be located on S.S. Titanic.

The prestigious journal, Crime and Delinquency, Vol. 21, July 1975, (No. 3), p. 295, quoted the following from an article by Tom Wicker, "Jobs and Crime," New York Times, April 4, 1975:

"Crime was sharply up in 1974, according to Federal Bureau of Investigation statistics, and Attorney General Edward Levi thinks that bears out his prediction that rising unemployment would cause more crime. With unemployment generally above 8 percent and as high as 41 per cent for black teen-agers, there is little reason to doubt Mr. Levi's analysis. . . .

"As reported by the Los Angeles Times, the FBI statistics show the incidence of crime to have risen by 17 per cent in 1974, compared to only 6 per cent in 1973. Violent crimes—murder, rape, robbery, and assault—more than doubled to 11 from 5 per cent; property crimes tripled, from 6 to 17 per cent in 1974. Crime statistics are not entirely reliable for many reasons, but these FBI figures seem to reflect a definite upward trend.

"That these increases at least to some extent are the product of rising unemployment can hardly be doubted. For one thing, the crime increases were sharpest in the last three months of 1974, when the economic recession was gathering speed and producing large-scale layoffs and business failures.

"For another, cities where unemployment was at its worst suffered the biggest increases in the incidence of crime. . . .

"These figures were entirely predictable. As Mr. Levi suggested in his confirmation hearings, when jobs are not available, when layoffs are widespread, and when the first-fired are likely to be those least skilled and least educated, hence least able to get and keep whatever work may be available—particularly when prices are also rising—an increase in crime is almost bound to result, as the jobless seek some way to maintain themselves, or their families, or their drug habits, or their installment payments, or their loan shark, or all of these. . . .

"High unemployment. . . is likely to result—as the FBI figures suggest—in precisely the most-feared forms of crime. Since layoffs disproportionately affect the poor, the unskilled, and the disadvantaged, they stimulate muggings, robbery and assault, which are predominantly crimes of the poor, often against other poor people. And one high-risk class of potential offenders—ex-convicts—are particularly affected by hard economic times. It is difficult enough for ex-cons to find work during periods of prosperity, and all but impossible in a recession—which is one good reason why recidivism rates are estimated as high as 70 per cent. . . .

"Maybe full employment and reduced economic disparities would do more to make the streets safe than any number of policemen."

Reference to the link between rising unemployment and rising crime is not made here in any spirit of vaguely idealist exculpation of the street criminal. Clearly, violent crime must be curbed. No sensible person disagrees with that truism. The problem, which in this writer's judgment, S. 1437 fudges is how to deal with it meaningfully and effectively.

As this writer has elsewhere written (Crystal, The Proposed Federal Criminal Justice Act of 1975: Sentencing—Law and Order With a Vengeance, 7 Seton Hall Law Rev. at 41-42 (1975): the major flaw with a "law and order" approach, which looks to increased penalties as a solution to crime is that it ignores the reality that, sooner or later, most prisoners will return to society; and unless they are adequately rehabilitated, the prison will simply have proved to have been a training school for further crime. Moreover, the very factors that inevitably produce plea bargaining—the inadequacy both of the law-enforcement system which processes those accused of crime and of the penal system which houses and maintains those convicted of crime—make it clear that a program which emphasizes the imposition of increased terms of imprisonment for enlarged classes of offenders threatens to break down the penal system itself.

The question of variability of sentencing to which the Sentencing Commission provisions of S. 1437 address themselves is clearly an important one. However, it must be viewed in the context of what S. 1437 itself provides as to length of sentencing, severity of fine, and availability of probation, parole, and alternative methods of imposing sanctions and penalties upon the convicted offender. Attention is now turned to these specific aspects of S. 1437's sentencing provisions.

VII. THE SENTENCING MAXIMA IN S. 1437 ARE STILL UNACCEPTABLY OVERLONG

The harsh sentencing provisions and extended prison terms mandated by S. 1 were sharply criticized by authoritative commentators. Reviewing these heavy imprisonment maxima, the National Council on Crime and Delinquency observed, for example, that, "Unless one takes pride in a swollen, expensive, wasteful prison system. Chapter 23 [of S. 1 of the 94th Congress] requires serious reconsideration." Senate Judiciary Subcommittee Hearings on S. 1, Part XII, at 182. ACLU noted that, "S. 1 sets harsh, retributive sentences for many crimes," and that, further "The sentencing schemes of S. 1 are skewed in favor of long-term prison sentences, despite the overwhelming recommendation of penologists and lawyers who have studied the correctional system that sentences instead be sharply reduced." Hearings, Part XII, at 208.

The American Friends Service Committee, New York Metropolitan Region, declared in an analysis of S. 1 that:

"The sentencing provisions run directly counter to every reform proposal of recent years, including several federal commissions and the American Bar Association, calling for lower sentences and reduced discretion. S. 1 combines high maximum sentences with mandatory or optional add-on sentences. As Struggle for Justice points out, long sentences do not deter or rehabilitate; they embitter human beings and destroy their lives. This is known to anyone who has been imprisoned and to most corrections officials."

The alarming ferocity of the sentencing provisions of the last Congress' S. 1 have been somewhat modified by changes made as a result of compromise. There has been some lowering of mandatory minimum sentences and the maximum sentences for lesser felonies. This is made clear by the following tabular comparison between S. 1, S. 1437, and H.R. 2311.

SENTENCING PROVISIONS—AUTHORIZED TERMS (MAXIMUM)

	S. 1	S. 1437	H.R. 2311
Felony:
Class A.....	Life or any part.....	Life or any period of time.....	15 yr.
Class B.....	30 yr.....	25 yr.....	7yr.
Class C.....	15 yr.....	12 yr.....	4 yr.
Class D.....	7 yr.....	6 yr.....	2 yr.
Class E.....	3 yr.....	3 yr.....	No corresponding felony classification.
Misdemeanor:
Class A.....	1 yr.....	1 yr.....	1 yr.
Class B.....	6 mo.....	6 mo.....	6 mo.
Class C.....	30 days.....	30 days.....	30 days.
Infraction.....	5 days.....	5 days.....	No corresponding infraction classification.

Some examples of maximum sentences provided by S. 1437 are the following: Class A felonies: Treason, murder, sabotage, and kidnapping.

Class B felonies: Armed rebellion, aircraft hijacking, racketeering, and trafficking in an opiate.

Class C felonies: Impairing military effectiveness, bribery, manslaughter, rape, burglary, robbery, and counterfeiting.

Class D felonies: Perjury, sexual assault, using a weapon in the course of a crime, gambling, and attacking a foreign power.

Class E felonies: Obscenity, graft, obstructing an election, impersonating an official and entering a foreign armed force.

In sharp contrast, under S. 204, no period of imprisonment may be imposed in excess of five years, except for the offenses of murder, manslaughter, forcible rape, aircraft hijacking, kidnapping or treason, or any attempt or aiding or abetting of such offenses.

It should be noted that in all other Western countries, the period of incarceration is much shorter, with no increase in the public danger. Cf. Justus Freimund, Director, Action Service Division, National Council on Crime and Delinquency, Hearings, Part XII, at 185.

The ABA Standards for Sentencing, §3.1(d) provide that "for most offenses . . . the maximum authorized prison term ought not to exceed ten years except in unusual cases and normally should not exceed five years", with sentences of twenty-five years or longer "reserved for particularly serious offenses or . . . for certain particularly dangerous offenders."

Even as revised, the sentencing maxima provided in Sec. 2301(b) of S. 1437 clearly exceed the ABA Standards for Sentencing so far as Felony Classes A, B, and C are concerned, and exceed those same standards with respect to Class D felonies insofar as the ABA Standards provide that authorized prison terms "normally should not exceed five years." S. 204 has been drafted in conformance with the ABA Sentencing Standards. S. 1437 has not been so drafted, even though the original savagery of S. 1 has been somewhat alleviated. Accordingly, it still fails to correct the valid criticisms made of S. 1 by the ABA (Hearings, Part XI, p. 377), by the Association of the Bar of the City of New York (Hearings, Part XI, at 7765, by the Special Committee on S. 1 of the California State Bar Association, and by other prestigious national groups which were quoted in Point II of this memorandum.

The sentencing maxima in S. 1437 are still unreasonably and unacceptably long, and violate the ABA Standards for Sentencing.

VIII. THE FINES PROVIDED BY S. 1437 ARE EXCESSIVELY HEAVY AND HARSH

A. Existing law

Existing federal criminal laws tend to have fines between $500 and $1,000 for misdemeanors and $10,000 to $25,000 for felonies.

B. Fine provisions of S. 1437

S. 1437 would provide fines for the individual of $100,000 for a felony, $10,000 for a misdemeanor and $1,000 for an infraction, and in the case of an organization defendant, for a felony $500,000, for a misdemeanor $100,000, and for an infraction $10,000 (Sec. 2201(b)). S. 1 had identical fines. H.R. 2311 would impose upon an individual defendant fines as follows: For a felony $100,000, for a misdemeanor $10,000, for an infraction $500; and in the case of an organization, for a felony $500,000, for a misdemeanor, $10,000, and for an infraction, $5,000. Sec. 2201(b) of H.R. 2311.

In addition, S. 1437 provides that fine may be set not to exceed twice the gain obtained or loss imposed. Sec. 2201(c). H.R. 2311 similarly provides. Sec. 2201(c) of H.R. 2311.

The Special Committee of the California State Bar Association recommended against the adoptions of the fine provisions in S. 1. Since those provisions have been retained in S. 1437 intact, its disapproval continues to have validity.

This authoritative committee of the California State Bar Association analyzed the Fine provisions of S. 1 (and therefore of S. 1437) as follows (App. M-9—M-10 of Committee Report):

"Although the financial sanction is a positive one, it does give the appearance that criminal conduct can be 'bought off.' Although a large financial fine may appear to be a heavy burden for an individual, it may not in fact be a serious burden for a corporate financial organization. The fine could be a serious economic threat to the positive efforts at rehabilitation of a defendant on probation. The statute does not, but should clearly, spell out that a person financially unable to pay the fine at the time of sentence should not be subject to a fine, for this economic burden would seriously tax future livelihood of the defendant when he may need to make a new start in life. Such sanction is far less important than the positive re-integration of the defendant into society as a productive member. The principles set forth in Williams v. Illinois, 339 U.S. 235 (1970), and Tate v. Short, 401 U.S. 395 (1971), that an indigent cannot be confined because of his impecunious status should be clearly articulated in this proposed legislation. Also, the creation of a lien for an unpaid fine will create an unnecessary burden that would probably injure the credit of someone seeking to enter into or continue in legitimate business. The cost of maintaining the accountability of the lien system (§ 3813) might exceed the total of the fines recouped, especially in cases involving small fines. The lien unnecessarily burdens transfer of property and unfairly impugnes the credit standing of defendants and those that may be dependent upon them."

In addition the fine itself may clearly have a chilling effect upon the exercise of constitutionally guaranteed freedoms, particularly with respect to such purportedly Contempt offenses, as Sec. 1331, Criminal Contempt, Sec. 1332, Failing to Appear as a Witness, Sec. 1333, Refusing to Testify or to Produce Information, Sec. 1334, Obstructing a Proceeding by Disorderly Conduct, and Sec. 1335, Disobeying a Judicial Order. Imposition of a fine against an individual of $100,000 for a felony, and $10,000 for a misdemeanor is a potent legal weapon to coerce compliance with an order not having legal validity. There is a potentiality of a similar chilling effect upon the exercise of the right to strike, contained in the modification of the Hobbs Act (Extortion, Sec. 1722) if an ambitious United States Attorney can successfully claim that violence in a labor dispute ("threatened or feared", p. 118 of S. 1437) was not "minor" or can be claimed not to be "incidental to peaceful picketing or other concerted activity in the course of a bona fide labor dispute." A similar chilling effect results from the imposition of a heavy fine against labor unions and their members from a charge that a labor dispute violated Sec. 1723, the blackmail section, where there was a dispute over a closed shop, cf. Sec. 1723(a)(3), or put an employer in fear that his property would be subjected to "economic loss or injury to his business or profession" (precisely what all strikes and labor disputes are all about, as the sanction interposed by labor).

A specific instance of how the bill, S. 1437, carries forward intact a surreptitious attack upon civil liberties is provided by Sec. 1333, dealing with Refusing to Testify or to Produce Information, inter alia "in an official proceeding that is conducted under the authority of Congress or of either House of Congress." This is penalized as a Class E felony (Sec. 1333, (f), p. 72 of S. 1437). Thereby, the penalty for refusal to cooperate with congressional committees, e.g., the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, is increased from one year in prison and a thousand-dollar fine as provided by present law to three years and/or one hundred thousand dollars fine.

This one example (and others could readily be cited) puts into proper focus the euphemistic claim made by Senator McClellan in introducing S. 1437 that "95 per cent of the bill has been noncontroversial and * * * it contains many provisions which are universally recognized to be clear and substantial improvements." Cong. Rec., May 2, 1977, S 6834, 3rd column.

IX. S. 1437 CLEARLY DISFAVORS PROBATION

A. Existing law

Under existing law, the district judge may grant probation if the ends of justice will be satisfied and the best interest of the public as well as the defendant will be served thereby. The defendant may be placed on probation on such terms and conditions as the court deems best. For any offense for which the maximum imprisonment is more than six months, other than death or life imprisonment, the court may impose the sentence and provide that up to six months be spent in a jail-type facility (i.e., the so-called "split sentence") and suspend the remainder of the sentence and place the defendant on probation or place the defendant on probation subject to certain conditions. The period of probation is limited to five years. 18 U.S.C. § 3651.

B. Corresponding provisions of S. 1437, § 2101-2106, 3016, 3801-3810.

Under S. 1437, the period of probation for a felony would not be less than one and not more than five years. For a misdemeanor it would not be more than two years, and for an infraction not more than one year. Probation is denied where (1) the offense is a Class A felony, (2) the offense is one for which probation has been expressly precluded; or (3) the defendant is sentenced at the same time to a term of imprisonment for the same or a different offense. Sec. 2101 (a) and (b).

Sec. 2102(a) dealing with factors to be considered in imposing a term of probation provides that, "The court, in determining whether to impose a term of probation, and, if a term of probation is to be imposed, in determining the length of the term and the conditions of probation shall consider the factors set forth in section 2003(a) to the extent that they are applicable." (Emphasis supplied). This clearly gives no preferential consideration to probation. Conditions of probation are spelled out in great detail. Sec. 2103 (pp. 172-173). S. 1437 has the term of probation run concurrently with parole or other term of probation (Sec. 2104(b)), except that it does not run during any period in which the defendant is imprisoned in connection with a conviction for a federal, state or local crime. Sec. 2104(b). A felony probation must spend at least one year on probation. Sec. 204(c).

The provisions contained in Sec. 2102(a) that, in determining whether probation is to be granted and if so, its terms, the district court "shall consider the factors set forth in section 2003(a) to the extent that they are applicable" is in actuality a caution to the court that probation should be the exception rather than the rule. This is in keeping with the law-and-order approach which S. 1437 carries on virtually intact from S. 1. Clearly, probation is not favored in S. 1437, any more than it was in the predecessor bill, S. 1. It appears almost as "a second choice. "The Special Committee on S. 1 of the California State Bar Association recommended against the probation provisions of S. 1 "because serious aspects of probation have not been properly dealt with. "Committee Report, App. M-11. The criticism remains valid, and the probation provisions of S. 1437 should similarly be rejected by the Congress.

These provisions are flatly inconsistent with the ABA Standards for Probation. Standard § 1.3(a) provides: "Probation should be the sentence unless the sentencing court finds that: (1) confinement is necessary to protect the public from further criminal activity by the offender; or (ii) the offender is in need of correctional treatment which can most effectively be provided if he is confined; or (iii) it would unduly depreciate the seriousness of the offense if a sentence of probation were imposed." Section 3101(a) of the Brown Commission so provided. The American Bar Association approved this provision of the Brown Commission. It rejected Section 2102 of S. 1 because it "does not have any such presumption in favor of probation." Hearings, Part XII, at 377. Here again we are afforded a startling confirmation as to how euphemistic is the claim that "95 percent of the bill has been noncontroversial." See McClellan, Cong. Rec. May 2, 1977, S. 6834, 3d Column.

In the sharpest possible contrast with S. 1437, H.R. 2311 provides the essential presumption in favor of probation. Sec. 2302 of H.R. 2311 thus provides: "A term of imprisonment shall not be imposed unless the court finds that a sentence of probation is inappropriate under section 2101(b)."

S. 1437 thus deliberately turns its back upon the recommendations of prestigious bar associations and the best thinking of penologists a virtual presumption against the grant of probation rather than in favor of such grant. This is done despite the Brown Commission's finding that "probation is likely to be the most effective form of sentence in a great many cases." Working Papers, (of Brown Commission), vol. II at 1268. For the patent bias of S. 1437 in favor of a law-and-order approach toward probation, see this writer's expression of views elsewhere. Crystal, The Proposed Federal Criminal Justice Act of 1975: Sentencing—Law and Order With a Vengeance, 7 Seton Hall Law Rev. at 42-49. This writer there concluded (p. 49) in words which have continuing applicability to S. 1437:

"S. 1 [read S. 1437] disregards the progressive and enlightened approach recommended by the Brown Commission, the American Bar Association, and the American Law Institute. Nowhere does it place suitable emphasis on the positive qualities of probation. It does not require federal sentencing judges to consider the propriety of probation before imposing a harsher sentence. * * * The S. 1 approach does little more than encourage the storage of human beings. Penological experience has demonstrated the unlikelihood that imprisonment serves any sort of rehabilitative purpose. Since the rehabilitative value of imprisonment has yet to be demonstrated, the 'storage of offenders' approach to corrections embodied in S. 1 [and still embodied in S. 1437] is without justification. This policy can only result in persistently high crime rates and excessive penal system costs."

A particularly indefensible provision applicable to probation is that subsection of Sec. 2003(a) (2) which requires the court, in considering the particular sentence to be imposed, to weigh the need for the sentence imposed "(D) to provide the defendant with needed educational or vocational training, medical care, or other correctional treatment in the most effective manner." This is a profoundly unfair and even racist provision carried into S. 1437 from the predecessor bill, S. 1. This Subcommittee has previously been advised of the inequity and gross unfairness of this provision. A statement of Melvin L. Wulf, Legal Director, American Civil Liberties Union, on behalf of ACLU, stated (Hearings, Part XII, at 210):

"Section 2102 instructs a judge, in granting probation, to consider the need" to provide the defendant with educational or vocational training, medical care, or other correctional treatment in the most effective manner.' Such factors only reinforce the criminal justice system's discrimination against the poor, the sick, and the uneducated. The constitutional guarantees of due process and equal protection of the law require courts to weigh evenly the claims of rich and poor, skilled and unskilled. Freedom from imprisonment and the chance to try again should not depend on an absence of past suffering. 'Effective' provision of job training and medical care in most cases does not require isolation of the offender from the community in which he will ultimately have to learn to live. The Congress should legislate to provide these services outside of prison, instead of incarcerating people just to obtain them. S. 1 [read S. 1437] similarly stacks the decision-making process against the granting of parole and fails to provide for a preference to parole over continued imprisonment. Yet parole, like probation, can be crucial in encouraging offenders to establish law-abiding lives. See Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 484 (1972)."

The tilting of the scales against probation in S. 1437 is completely indefensible in the light of what has been learned about community programs and diversion to the community representing the most encouraging approach toward achieving rehabilitation. The probation provisions of S. 1437 accordingly merit rejection by the Congress, as the authoritative national organizations heretofore cited, make plain beyond dispute.

X. S. 1437 VIRTUALLY ABOLISHES PAROLE

With respect to parole ineligibility, the revision of S. 1 to convert it into S. 1437 has resulted in substantially weakened provisions relating to a defendant's entitlement to parole.

S. 1 provided in Sec. 2301(d) :

"(d) Authorized terms of parole ineligibility.—The authorized terms of imprisonment for felonies that may be required to be served prior to eligibility for parole are not more than one-fourth the term of imprisonment authorized by subsection (b) [of section 2301 of S. 1], or by subsection (c) if an extended term is imposed, or ten years, whichever is less. For a misdemeanor or an infraction, no term of parole ineligibility may be required to be served." (Emphasis supplied).

S. 1437 goes far beyond S. 1 in this regard and virtually abolishes parole by providing that a term of parole ineligibility may be set at  $\frac{1}{10}$  of the sentence imposed. This is achieved by Sec. 2301(c) of S. 1437, providing :

"(c) Authorized terms of parole ineligibility.—The authorized terms of imprisonment that may be required to be served prior to eligibility for parole is any term found appropriate by the court in light of the provisions of section 2302(b), but no term of parole ineligibility may extend into the last one-tenth of the sentence imposed."

Thus, where in S. 1, the prisoner was eligible for parole after having served one-fourth of his sentence, he may now be barred from eligibility for parole until he has served  $\frac{1}{10}$  of his sentence. This converts sentencing into actuality into mandatory minimum sentencing at  $\frac{1}{10}$  of the full sentence, and is a startling worsening of the already too harsh sentencing provisions of S. 1. Once again one is compelled to question the accuracy of the claim that 95 percent of S. 1437 is non-controversial. McClellan, Cong. Rec., May 2, 1977, at S. 6834 (3d column).

By contrast, H.R. 2311 authorizes a minimum term of imprisonment, without entitlement to parole, for Class A or B felonies only, of up to one-third of the prison term actually imposed. (Sec. 2301(c) of H.R. 2311).

The same striking differences exist between S. 1437 and H.R. 2311 with respect to the criteria to be applied by the Parole Commission in granting parole.

Under S. 1437 (Sec. 2302(b)), the court is mandated to consider the factors set forth in section 2003(a) to the extent that they are applicable. As earlier noted in consideration of these criteria, parole is permissible if the court does not provide for parole ineligibility. A prisoner may be released from imprisonment on parole by the Parole Commission if "having regard for the guidelines and any pertinent policy statements concerning parole issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(f), the [Parole] Commission is of the opinion that :

"(1) his release at that time is consistent with the applicable factors that led to the imposition of his particular sentence under the provisions of part III of this title;

"(2) there is no undue risk that he will fail to conform to such conditions of parole as would be warranted under the circumstances; and

"(3) his release at that time, in light of his conduct at the institution, would not have a substantially adverse effect on institutional discipline." (Sec. 3831(e)).

Reference in Sec. 3831(e) dealing with criteria for release to the guidelines (contained in Sec. 2003(a)) requires that the Parole Commission consider whether the prisoner's release on parole complies with the statutory need for such release not to interfere with or impede (1) adequate deterrence to criminal conduct, (2) protection of the public from further crimes of the defendant, (3) reflection of the seriousness of the offense, promotion of respect for law, and provision of just punishment for the offense, and (4) provision for the defendant of needed educational or vocational training, medical care, or other correctional treatment in the most effective manner. The prior discussion of the invalidity of these law-and-order criteria with respect to probation and its denial applies equally here. Moreover, these are the criteria as they are set forth in the main body of S. 1437.

The Sentencing Commission which is to be established by Chapter 58 of S. 1437 is mandated to establish in its term guidelines applicable to both the district court's determination of whether to consider parole ineligibility and for how long a period (Sec. 994, pp. 302-303) and for controlling the exercise of discretion by the Parole Commission (which already exists in law) (Sec. 994(f)) (p. 304). This power given to the Sentencing Commission provides:

"(f) The Commission, by vote of a majority of the members, and pursuant to its rules and regulations and consistent with all pertinent provisions of this title and title 18, United States Code, shall promulgate and distribute to the United States Parole Commission:

"(1) guidelines consistent with those promulgated pursuant to section (a) (1) of this section for use of the United States Parole Commission in determining whether to parole a prisoner and in determining the length of the term and conditions of parole; and

"(2) general policy statements regarding application of the guidelines or any other aspect of parole that in the view of the Commission would further the purposes set forth in section 101(b) of title 18, United States Code [i.e., Section 101(b) of S. 1437, p. 12]."

The analysis previously made of the Sentencing Commission and of the manner it is to be appointed (by the Judicial Conference) has made it clear that this is a surreptitious way of turning effective control of all sentencing policy, including that relating both to parole and to probation, to a secret, unresponsive group of top federal judges dominated by Chief Justice Warren Burger. As there indicated, it is gross abdication of constitutional responsibility for Congress to delegate to a group of judges, dominated by the titular head of a Supreme Court majority that has severely eroded constitutional protections through its rigid, repressive decisions, power to make binding national policy on parole, probation, and sentencing. When this vast grant of power to the Judicial Conference and its chairman, Chief Justice Burger, is contemplated in the light of the already retrogressive guidelines set forth in the main body of S. 1437, it becomes clear that S. 1437 presents this country with a grave constitutional problem. The seemingly innocuous power to appoint the membership of the Sentencing Commission granted to the Judicial Conference by Sec. 991 of Chapter 58 (p. 301) is in actuality a grant of power to make national policy on virtually all of sentencing, and thereby makes the Judicial Conference the ultimate determinant of the sentencing policy of this country, even though that power constitutionally rests in Congress and the executive department, including the President.

There are other serious criticisms to be made of the parole provisions of S. 1437. Parole is automatically added to the sentence, rather than included in it, as now (Sec. 2303). If parole is revoked, the parolee can be returned to prison and ordered to serve the term of his original sentence minus the portion of the original sentence served in confinement prior to the parole. Sec. 3835(e) (p. 272). It should be noted that violating a condition of parole (Sec. 3835 (a) and (b)) can be a non-criminal act such as failing to stay away from an old hangout, quitting school or discontinuing medical treatment.

A sentence to imprisonment for a felony or a Class A misdemeanor under S. 1437 automatically includes a separate term of parole. This term shall be set by the Parole Commission, having regard for the guidelines and policy statements of the Sentencing Commission. For a Class A or Class B felony, the term shall be not less than one year nor more than five years; for Class C, not less than one year nor more than five years; for Class C, not less than one year nor more than three; for Class D, not less than one year nor more than two for Class E, not less than six months nor more than one year; and for a Class A misdemeanor, not less than three months nor more than six months. Sec. 3834(b) of S. 1437.

A sentence to imprisonment also automatically includes a separate contingent term of imprisonment of ninety days in the case of a felony, or thirty days in the case of a felony, or thirty days in the case of a Class A misdemeanor, which must be served in the event of a recommitment for violation of a condition of parole and the remaining unserved portion of the offender's sentence is less than ninety days. Sec. 2303 (p. 178).

If a term of parole ineligibility is not set by the court, the Parole Commission shall consider the parole of a prisoner sixty days before he will complete the service of one-fourth of the term of imprisonment or the first year of the term of imprisonment, whichever is earlier (and provided that he is serving a prison term greater than a year). If parole is denied, the Parole Commission shall reconsider in one or two years. The parole criteria have already been set out in this statement.

The limitation of parole exemplified by S. 1437 is in actuality a means of surreptitiously achieving mandatory, minimum, "presumptive" sentences the length of which are to be effectively set, not by Congress but instead by operation of the guidelines to be established by the Sentencing Commission composed of designees of the Judicial Conference. We are dealing here basically with a system of automatic, mandatory sentences. This needlessly eliminates exercise of discretion and individualization of sentencing by the district judge. Once a defendant is committed, it needlessly eliminates Parole Commission discretion. Parole (and probation, as well as other non-imprisonment sentences) should be available for almost all crimes, according to the nature of the defendant as revealed by a competent presentence report.

What is being sought here is equality of sentences. However, there is a false equality being sought here. Sameness and uniformity are totally different from equality. Identical sentences imposed on two quite different, disparate defendants do not achieve equality: they ignore important differences.

One may properly inquire: What is the purpose of restricting parole to the vanishing point, as S. 1437 does? (S. 204, Section 11 completely abolishes parole).

Concededly, investigation of prison conditions has resulted in fault having been found with parole systems. However, obviously, abolition of parole does not cure its defects, and equally clearly prevents use of its sound advantages. The main defect of parole, as utilized, has been failure to give due attention to the suitability of prisoners for release. Restricting grant of parole to the vanishing point, or doing away with it altogether, does not cure illiberality: it does not permit liberality at all. The principal victims here are the prisoners.

Congress has a non-delegable responsibility to make policy in this important field. The impatient attempt to achieve determinate sentencing exemplified by S. 1437 takes exactly the wrong course. As noted in the next section, there should be more release of prisoners to the community, not less. No harm is done, and useful individualization is maintained. If an effective correctional apparatus exists for early conditional release. This can properly be done by the Parole Commission, and by parole boards. They should be strengthened rather than being eliminated.

The United States Supreme Court has recognized that "the practice of releasing prisoners on parole before the end of their sentences has become an integral part of the penological system." Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 477 (1972). The purpose of parole is to serve as an intermediate step in the reintegration of convicted offenders into society without requiring that sentences of imprisonment be fully served. S. 1437 goes far beyond even S. 1 in unduly extending the period of time for which the Government may impose its domination and control over offenders by providing that a term of parole shall be an automatic add-on to a term of imprisonment in certain cases, by permitting denial of parole until 9/10 of the sentence has been served, and by giving the proposed Sentencing Commission power to impose unduly restrictive standards on the discretion of the Parole Commission to release a prisoner on parole prior to the expiration of his sentence. See Crystal, The Proposed Federal Criminal Justice Act of 1975: Sentencing—Law and Order With a Vengeance, 7 Seton Hall Law Rev. at 63-70. As noted there for S. 1 (and S. 1437 is even worse in important respects than S. 1) the net effect of this proposed federal criminal code so far as parole is concerned is to limit unreasonably the opportunity of a nondangerous offender to obtain parole prior to the expiration of his prisoner term, thereby limiting his ability to reintegrate into the community. This is flatly at odds with the wise and sensible provision of the Brown Commission that "release should be favored unless some public purpose was, in the opinion of the Parole Board, served by detention." See Schwartz, The Proposed Federal Criminal Code, 17 Crim. L. Rep. 3203, 3204 (1975).

XI. S. 1437 UNWISELY TURNS ITS BACK UPON HOPEFUL INNOVATIONS IN PENOLOGY, INCLUDING PROBATION AND EARLY RELEASE TO OR DIVERSION OF THE OFFENDER TO THE COMMUNITY UNDER SKILLED SUPERVISION

The approach taken toward sentencing in S. 1437 is simplistic and probably unworkable. It abandons hope for motivating the convicted offender to rehabilitate himself, and settles for the primitive tactic of incarceration for a fixed, determinate term, the illusory concept of "deterrence" and use of the sentence for the supposed fear-creating values of (Sec. 2003 (a) (2) (C)) "to reflect the seriousness of the offense, to promote respect for law, and to provide just punishment for the offense." In so doing, it reflects a disillusioned view reflected to some extent in the literature dealing with sentencing, probation, and parole, but which nevertheless minimizes the creative types of sentencing that do offer hope for rehabilitation and a lessening of recidivism for a significant number of those convicted of breaking the law.

The concepts of determinate sentencing, lessening or ending of parole, and the other "tough" views of sentencing exemplified by S. 1437 did not, of course, come from nowhere. One important source for these views is the book by Judge Marvin E. Frankel, Criminal sentences: Law Without Order, Hill and Wang, New York, 1973). These views have been summarized in two important articles by Richard A. McGee, president of the American Justice Institute, Sacramento, California: A New Look At Sentencing, Part I 38 Federal Probation, No. 2, June 1974, pp. 3-8; A New Look at Sentencing, Part II, 38 Federal Probation, No. 3, September 1974, pp. 3-11.

Nevertheless, despite these views (which must be regarded as minority views), penological experts do not have the hopeless, vindictive point of view toward offenders which is exemplified in actuality by S. 1437 (even though some of its proponents, including Senator Kennedy will disclaim any such intention).

Thus, Judge Lawrence W. Pierce, U.S. District Judge, Southern District of New York, in a keynote address delivered August 12, 1973, at the Annual Meeting of the American Correctional Association, Seattle, Washington (38 Federal Probation, June 1974, No. 2, pp. 14-23) expressed hope and confidence that rehabilitation and lessening of recidivism is possible, albeit not in prison. He told his audience:

"I propose that we consider shorter prison sentences for offenders who are convicted of crimes which do not involve violence or acts of moral turpitude: I proposed that we consider yet another use for the isolated rural prisons that dot the landscape in most of our states: and I propose that we consider an implementation of the community-based center concept structured on a truly noncoercive basis."

Speaking from his vast expertise as a distinguished federal district judge, and addressing himself without illusions to the problem of the dangerous offender (a problem fully recognized by this writer), Judge Pierce, after having urged expanded use of the community-based center concept of correction, stated (38 Federal Probation at 18):

"Now, clearly there are serious questions to be raised with respect to such an approach:

"(1) The most glaring problem is the dangerous offender. Any person who has demonstrated through his prior acts that he is a danger to others has to be incapacitated. Accurate identification of such persons is the core of the problem * * * Suffice it to say as I have indicated that the greater number of persons sentenced to prison in a given year are convicted of nonviolent crimes—as many as 90 percent of our Federal offenders sent to prison and 63 percent of those sent to State prison. It is from among these offenders that one would expect to find prime candidates for this approach.

"(2) A major problem would be gaining community acceptance of community-based centers. This will not come easily, I am one of a handful of administrators who can make that statement from firsthand knowledge, having presided over the setting up of one of the first major community-based center networks in the country. A great deal will depend upon a judicious selection of sites, skillful community organization work to promote understanding of the purposes of the centers, and careful screening out of those offenders who would be likely to fulfill the dire predictions which are certain to be made. And it must be acknowledged that even with the best of screening, mere assignment to such a program is certainly in and of itself not going to convert convicted offenders into model citizens any more than present correctional efforts do."

Other experts have expressed similar views. The President's Commission on Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice conducted in 1972 one of the most comprehensive studies ever made on the American correctional system. Community-based programs, the Commission concluded, were by-and-large less costly than institutional incarceration and usually at least as effective in reducing recidivism and in some cases significantly more so. See Claude Pepper, Chairman, Select Committee on Crime, U.S. House of Representatives, 36 Federal Probation, December 1972, No. 4, 34. Congressman Pepper called for probation in lieu of incarceration (p. 5), for parole supervision (p. 6), for halfway house use (p. 7), work release (p. 7), and for other innovative and creative methods of motivating the offender to be law-abiding.

For other explanations of the vital role which diversion of offenders to community-based programs will have, see, e.g., Robert M. Carter, Director, Center of the Administration of Justice, University of Southern California, Los Angeles, The Diversion of Offenders, 36 Federal Probation, December 1972, No. 4, pp. 31-36; John M. Pettibone, Director, Division of Parole and Probation, Maryland Department of Public Safety and Correctional Services, Community-Based Programs, Catching Up With Yesterday and Planning for Tomorrow, 37 Federal Probation, September 1973, No. 3, pp. 3-6.

In an important policy statement, the Board of Directors, National Council on Crime and Delinquency, strongly recommended that the nondangerous offender should not be imprisoned. 21 Crime & Delinquency 315-322 (October 1975, No. 4). The NCCD there urged diversion of the nondangerous offender to community-based programs (pp. 318-319). For other helpful articles, see Sol Rubin, Probation or Prison: Applying the Principle of the Least Restrictive Alternative, 21 Crime & Delinquency, pp. 331-336 (1975); David Gilman, Counsel, National Council on Crime and Delinquency, The Sanction of Improvement: For Whom, for What, and How, pp. 337-347 (1975).

These hopeful, innovative programs offer the way out of the nation's dilemma about what to do about crime. They should be resorted to. It is here that hope for curbing crime through use of sentencing and the correctional apparatus truly lies.

The mandatory minimum sentences imposed in accordance with guidelines to be established by a Sentencing Commission reflecting the views ultimately of the Judicial Conference and the conference's chairman, Chief Justice Warren Burger, offers at most a temporary stop-gap. Certain offenders, admittedly, will be taken out of circulation in the community for a certain period of time. Economic conditions will inevitably create other troubled human beings in the same pool of sociological problems. And meanwhile, those who are incarcerated and subjected to the only "solution" offered by S. 1—simply "storage" in prisons—will be subjected to the lessons to be learned in those prisons described in 1967 in this conclusion by the President's Commission of Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice:

"Life in many institutions is at best barren and futile, at worst unspeakably brutal and degrading. To be sure, the offenders in such institutions are incapacitated from committing further crimes while serving their sentences, but the conditions in which they live are the poorest possible preparation for their successful reentry into society, and often merely reinforce in them a pattern of manipulation or destructiveness." (President's Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice, The Challenge of Crime in a Free Society, Washington, U.S. Government Printing Office, 1978, 1967, p. 159; quoted in Pepper, Prisons in Turmoil, 36 Federal Probation 3 (Dec. 1972, No. 4).

It is futile and illusory to expect that a prison sentence, even one of determinate length, or one pursuant to a mandatory minimum sentence in accordance with Sentencing Commission guidelines and directives, will change the susceptibility toward criminal conduct by one exposed to these brutalizing conditions.

XII. THERE IS DENIAL OF PROCEDURAL DUE PROCESS OF LAW AND VIOLATION OF OTHER RIGHTS OF DEFENDANTS IN PERMITTING THE GOVERNMENT TO APPEAL THE LENGTH OF SENTENCES

Section 3725, p. 257, gives either the defendant or the government the right to file an appeal challenging the final sentence imposed for a sentence. This is a commendable improvement over existing law so far as the right of the defendant to appeal a sentence is concerned. It is quite otherwise where the new right given the government is concerned. The government has this right under Sec. 3725(b) "if the sentence includes a fine or a term of imprisonment or a term of parole ineligibility lower than the minimum established in the guidelines that are issued by the Sentencing Commission.

H.R. 2311 properly permits only an appeal by the defendant of a sentence (Sec. 3725). The defendant may so appeal regardless of the fractional amount of the maximum authorized sentence which has been imposed. Further, under H.R. 2311 an appellate court may not increase the sentence. The standard of review under Sec. 3725(c) is whether the sentence is "excessive, having regard for (1) the nature and circumstances of the offense and the history and characteristics of the defendant; (2) the purposes of sentencing required to be considered * * * and (3) the opportunity of the district court to observe the defendant."

The writer has elsewhere reviewed the constitutional problems raised by this right to be given the government to appeal the length of sentence. These include questions of double jeopardy, see, e.g., Ex parte Lange, 85 U.S. (18 Wall.) 163 (1874), as well as the potentiality for retaliatory cross-appeal by the government, made as a matter of course, whenever convicts seek review of their sentences. This clearly constitutes a deprivation of due process by chilling a convict's exercise of his right to appeal. See, Crystal, The Proposed Federal Criminal Justice Act of 1975: Sentencing—Law and Order With A Vengeance, 7 Seton Hall Law Rev. at 70-80.

XIII. SENTENCING DISPARITY MAY BE REMEDIED WITHOUT ABANDONING CREATIVE METHODS OF SENTENCING AFFORDING HOPE FOR REHABILITATION

There is no challenge made here that disparity in sentencing calls for significant changes to be made in our sentencing procedures. That unmistakable fact does not justify, however, the regressive approach taken in S. 1437 which would abandon virtually all innovative, creative methods of sentencing (albeit lip service is paid to these methods, e.g., Sec. 991(b)(1)(C) directing the Sentencing Commission to establish sentencing policies and practices which will, inter alia, "reflect, to the extent practicable, advancement in knowledge of human behavior as it relates to the criminal justice process."

There is clearly room for modifying the elements in existing sentencing practice which make for disparity in sentencing:

"There is a so-called 'indefinite' sentence with a maximum fixed by the judge and an automatic one-third of that maximum for parole eligibility. Or, there is a so-called 'indeterminate' sentence, the judge fixing both minimum and maximum. Third choice—the judge may fix the maximum and provide that there shall be no minimum. Fourth—commitment for the maximum allowable by law, subject to a study and return to court for possible reduction of the term. Then if the defendant is under 26 years of age there are several more choices. There are few if any states with such a variety of forms of commitment." (Sol Rubin, "Federal Sentencing Problems and the Medel Sentencing Act", 41 Federal Rules Decisions 506, at 507, 1967).

Unquestionably, there is value in establishing a Sentencing Commission (provided its members are appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, thereby assuring democratic control over the Commission rather than being made part of the judiciary and designated by the Judicial Conference as is unwisely provided in S. 1437). Such a democratically appointed and established Commission could establish a uniform system of sentences to eliminate the contending varieties now existing in the federal system. However, it should and must lessen sentence variability without going to the other extreme so as to achieve an illusory and false uniformity. Each defendant has a different background to be evaluated by the district court's expertise aided by efficient pre-sentencing reports. Individualization of sentencing must be permitted to continue. The ABA Standards make clear that the norm should not be imprisonment. There should be full utilization of community-release and other hopeful programs where the defendant is nondangerous. The bias which S. 1437 shows in favor of determinate sentencing required to be served without probation, parole, release to a community-based program, or other correctional alternative to imprisonment is unwise and should be rejected.

S. 1437 plainly and unmistakably exhibits excessive zeal to reject hopeful concepts of creative and innovative sentencing. The concept of imprisonment which is basic to the sentencing structure of S. 1437 is in actuality a retreat to the mistakes of the past. Conceding readily that the dangerous offender requires imprisonment, one must demand explanation why community-based programs which do offer a hope for rehabilitation of the non-violent offender are so completely minimized in the sentencing philosophy that permeates S. 1437. When the specific sentencing provisions of S. 1437 are analyzed, they come down to no more than determinate sentencing, mandatory minimum sentences, and severe (and unjustified) restrictions upon the grant of probation and parole. Just as the child in Hans Christian Anderson's tale of the Emperor's New Clothes saw with clear vision (and said so publicly) that the emperor was naked, so it must be stated with candor that S. 1437 offers little in its sentencing scheme other than incarceration of offenders under guidelines to be established by appointees of a Judicial Conference dominated by Chief Justice Warren Burger. The decisions of the Burger Court majority which have virtually raped the Constitution and have precipitously retreated from the decisions of the Warren Court protecting the legal rights of defendants in criminal trials stand as ominous omens of the hardnosed guidelines for sentencing which may reasonably be expected to be promulgated by a Sentencing Commission appointed and created in Warren Burger's image.

Admittedly, the claims made for the Sentencing Commission and the emotional impact upon a populace fearful of street crime to be assured that criminal offenders will go to prison for determinate sentences will have political advantage. That is hardly a valid reason for justification of a federal criminal code that demonstrably turns its back on virtually all advances made in penology and correction. It appears clear that a legitimate concern about disparity in sentencing is being skillfully manipulated to minimize or reject hard-won lessons that diversion of the offender to carefully supervised community programs offers real hope for winning the offender away from a life of crime and recidivism.

The innumerable fallacies inherent in the sentencing scheme of S. 1437 become readily apparent when the correct questions are asked. What happens to unclogging the already overcrowded courts, particularly the appellate courts in the federal judiciary, if there is to be appeal of any sentence exceeding the Sentencing Commission guidelines? Either the courts will be flooded with appeals and further clogged, or the district courts will be coerced into abandoning individual sentencing and appraising the likelihood of rehabilitation of the particular defendant, and imposing instead the sentence coming within the Sentencing Commission standards. That will of necessity mean that the Sentencing Commission becomes the ultimate arbiter of sentencing in the federal system, and that it will be the Sentencing Commission, not Congress, which makes policy in this important area of criminal law. Can there be economy in prison costs if incarceration (another term for simple storage of human beings) is to be the norm for non-violent as well as violent offenders? Are we to engage in an ever-increasing program of building prisons to house the inmates sent to prison to meet the S. 1437 and Sentencing Commission guidelines of Sec. 2003(a)(2)(C)—the claimed need of the sentence "to reflect the seriousness of the offense, to promote respect for law, and to provide just punishment for the offense"?

Is this not simply the law and order approach voiced by former President Richard M. Nixon, who decried the "sense of permissiveness" that characterized America in the 1960's and who contended that "the only way to attack crime in America is the way crime attacks our people—without pity."?

And is effective control of the sentencing policies of this country to be delegated to the appointees of a secret, all-powerful group of jurists chaired and dominated by a chief justice who has presided over a Supreme Court majority which has steadily dismantled the constitutional protections laboriously erected by the Warren Court?

It appears clear that, despite the overwhelming public opposition that blocked enactment of Senate Bill No. 1 in the last Congress, there is now an attempt being made to form a wholly improbable alliance between liberals and conservatives (under the claim of compromise of opposing positions) that will in actuality effectively surrender meaningful power over sentencing policies to Chief Justice Burger and a Supreme Court majority whose restrictive views of constitutional rights have by now been made shockingly plain to those who value constitutional freedoms.

Professor Carole E. Goldberg of UCLA's Law School, Co-Chairperson of Southern California ACLU's National Legislation Committee, has warned that S. 1437 is "fraught with serious omissions, uncertainties, deferrals, lost opportunities, and reductions in civil liberties." Those same defects permeate the sentencing provisions of the bill.

XIV. THE PROVISIONS FOR MULTIPLE SENTENCES OF IMPRISONMENT

Sec. 2304, dealing with multiple sentences of imprisonment, provides that where multiple terms of imprisonment are imposed on a defendant at the same time, or where a term of imprisonment is imposed on a defendant who is already subject to an undischarged term of imprisonment, the terms may run concurrently or consecutively, except that the terms may not run consecutively (1) if the offense consists of a Chapter 10 offense (criminal contempt, criminal conspiracy, or criminal solicitation, and another offense that was the sole objective of the attempt, conspiracy or solicitation, and (2) for an offense involving a violation of a general prohibition and for an offense involving a violation of a specific prohibition encompassed within the general prohibition.

Multiple terms of imprisonment run concurrently unless the court affirmatively orders otherwise. If multiple terms of imprisonment are ordered to run consecutively, and included terms of parole ineligibility also run concurrently. If the terms are ordered to run consecutively, the maximum aggregate term may not exceed the maximum authorized term for an offense one class higher than that of the most serious offense of which the defendant was convicted. (Sec. 2304(e)).

Sec. 2304 of H.R. 2311 while closely paralleling Sec. 2304 of S. 1347, does nevertheless vary in important respects, most notably the fact that it does not in every instance permit aggregation of all offenses to create a maximum term one class higher than the most serious offense for which the defendant was convicted. As explained by Congressman Kastenmeier, setting forth the terms of the predecessor House bill, H.R. 10850, a person found guilty of two or more Class C felonies may be sentenced to the maximum authorized for a Class B felony if each offense was committed as part of a different course of conduct or if each involved a substantially different criminal objective. Class D felonies may be similarly aggregated to the maximum authorized for a Class C felony, and Class A misdemeanors may be aggregated to the maximum authorized for a Class D felony. No other offenses are subject to aggregation beyond the maximum authorized for the most serious offense involved. This approach was recommended by the Brown Commission. See, Kastenmeier, Cong. Record, February 24, 1976, H 1275; H.R. 2304(e).

The criteria imposed by S. 1438 on courts in determining whether consecutive or concurrent sentences should be imposed are the same harsh criteria used in determining the lengths of sentences and the appropriateness of probation, i.e., Sec. 2304(b) dealing with factors to be considered mandates the district court to consider the factors set forth in Section 2003(a). Here again, the court is referred to criteria, which include the "need . . . to reflect the seriousness of the offense," and to "promote respect for law" (Sec. 2003(a)(2)(C)). These fail sufficiently to restrain federal courts from aggregating sentences to the point of injustice. See Crystal, The Proposed Federal Criminal Justice Act of 1975: Sentencing—Law and Order With a Vengeance, 7 Seton Hall Law Rev. at 49-52.

It is the ABA's position that "[c]onsecutive sentences are rarely appropriate. (ABA Project on Minimum Standards for Criminal Justice, Standards Relating to Sentencing Alternatives and Procedures. §3.4(b) (Approved Draft 1968).

Such sentences can ordinarily only be justified in cases involving habitual offenders because of the risk such offenders pose to the public.

It should also be noted that, in addition, Section 1823(b) of S. 1437 overrides the discretion-granting provisions of Section 2304 by compelling the imposition of consecutive sentences for any other term of imprisonment imposed upon the defendant, unless the defendant meets specified criteria, i.e., that at the time of the offense he was under eighteen years of age; his mental capacity was significantly impaired although not sufficiently to constitute a defense to prosecution; he was under unusual or substantial duress, although not sufficient duress to constitute a defense to prosecution or he was an accomplice, the conduct constituting the offense was principally the conduct of another person; and his participation was relatively minor (Sec. 1823(a), p. 157).

S. 1437 is wholly remiss in its failure to limit by statute cumulative sentencing to only those truly exceptional cases where the protection of the public requires the long-term sequestration of an offender. Under no circumstances should the sentencing be mandatory, viz., Sec. 1823(a). S. 1437 is deficient in this important aspect of sentencing.

XV. SURREPTITIOUS OVERRIDING OF FEDERAL YOUTH CORRECTIONS ACT BY S. 1437

One of the far from obvious booby-traps of S. 1437 is that it effectively overrides the Federal Youth Corrections Act of 1950 (18 U.S.C. 5005-5026). The Sentencing Commission is given power to make guidelines, including consideration of the age of the offender. Sec. 994(d)(1) et seq. of Chapter 58 of S. 1437. The bill does not include the Federal Youth Corrections Act, so that it appears clear that the Sentencing Commission provisions will preempt the earlier Federal Youth Corrections Act.

The latter act, adopted in 1950, was one of the great experiments in federal sentencing. It was initiated to provide "treatment and supervision" rather than imprisonment for youthful offenders committed to the Attorney General. 18 U.S.C. 5005-5026. See also, Dorszynski v. United States, 418 U.S. 424 (1974). The Great experiment has not worked as well as was hoped, but it nevertheless does permit some specialized consideration and even possible treatment for youthful offenders, a person under the age of 22 years at the time of conviction (18 U.S.C. 5005(e)), and such treatment can even be extended to persons who have not yet obtained their 26th birthday at the time of conviction (18 U.S.C. 4209). This is of particular importance since the unemployment of youth, particularly of minority youth in the Inner Cities, is a disturbing cause of crime. A youthful offender may be granted probation or sentenced to an indefinite term of confinement not to exceed four years' custody followed by two years' special parole which could in effect be a total of six years' confinement. The average sentence now spent by a person under the Federal Youth Corrections Act is approximately 18 to 24 months in confinement. The Special Committee on S. 1 of the California State Bar Association observed that because of the inadequate Bureau of Prisons' facilities, these youths are not isolated and are handled with the general adult prison population. (It may be noted that since homosexual abuse of young prisoners is a problem in a prison community this presents a serious threat). The committee further noted that one very serious defect of this legislation is that it can be applied to a misdemeanor offense as well as a felony. United States v. Leming, — F. 2d — (9th Cir. 1975): United States v. LaRue, — F.2d — (9th Cir. 1975). The committee found the principal asset of this important legislation to be a provision for a certificate to set aside conviction upon completion of the expiration of sentence or completion of probation. 18 U.S.C. 5021. The certificate setting aside sentence has somewhat dubious effect on state law. However, it has given an important advantage for legally admitted alien residents who have been involved in a narcotics transaction involving a small amount of narcotics. These defendants have been granted an exception to the general rule requiring automatic deportation for trafficking in narcotics. In Tatum v. United States, 310 F.2d 854 (D.C. Cir. 1962), the court (which included Chief Justice (then Circuit Judge) Berger as a member of the panel) held that such a certificate was an expungement and better than a pardon. If the Federal Youth Corrections Act is permitted to be utilized, the future may witness achievement of the beneficial Congressional purpose in enacting this important statute.

However, S. 1437 (like its predecessor bill, S. 1) completely eliminates the provisions for the Federal Youth Corrections Act.

Considering the legal effect of the failure of S. 1 to provide for continuation of the Federal Youth Corrections Act, the Special Committee on S. 1 of the California State Bar Association advised that Association that its opinion and recommendation on this issue was as follows:

"In light of the Draconian range of penalties in S. 1, the provisions of the Federal Youth Corrections Act merely affords an option to the sentencing judge who may impose the regular sentence, 18 U.S.C. 5010(d). The elimination of this worthwhile legislation for youthful offenders is a serious deficit, and no alternative for youthful offenders is a serious deficit, and no alternative is offered by S. 1. The Committee recommends against the sentencing provision of S. 1 for failure to include such a provision."

The recommendation has continuing validity. No more than S. 1 did does S. 1437 provide for continuation of this innovative and creative legislation which affords real hope for youth which has come into conflict with the criminal law system. Instead, this legislation is obviously to be subsumed into the jurisdiction of the Sentencing Commission. And once again, it becomes clear that the ultimate determination is to be made by appointees of a Judicial Conference controlled and dominated by Chief Justice Warren Burger, and who can be handpicked to reflect his views, similarly to the manner in which the four Nixon appointees on the Supreme Court were carefully chosen by that disgraced former President to represent his "strict construction" views of law and the Constitution.

CONCLUSION

The foregoing analysis has attempted to deal in some depth with the major sentencing provisions of S. 1437. Of equal importance, it has sought to confront the underlying sentencing philosophy of this omnibus proposed federal criminal code. What has turned up in instance after instance has been retrogression, overkill, zeal for imprisonment, and a harsh, retributive sentencing philosophy totally at odds with the approach which holds out real hope for an end to the vicious cycle of arrest, incarceration, release to the streets without hope of employment or inner motivation, recidivism, and re-arrest and re-incarceration.

There is nothing wrong with the concept of assured punishment as a deterrent, but the bias and prejudices which permeates S. 1437, just as it did S. 1, is for retribution, revenge, simple storage and incarceration of law breakers, and an unfounded hope that such imprisonment will somehow teach the offender a lesson, or at least "reflect the seriousness of the offense," "promote respect for law" and "provide just punishment for the offense." Sec. 2003(a)(2)(C). Simple imprisonment has not worked in the past. S. 1437 offers no real hope it will work in the future. The sentencing provisions of S. 1437 are simplistic and bottomed essentially upon the premise that the crime problem of this country will somehow be alleviated if enough persons are incarcerated. The approach is self-defeating. Existing prisons can be filled past capacity (inviting a future Attica). More prisons can be built (and undoubtedly will be if S. 1437 becomes law). Yet so long as the mechanical concept of false uniformity implicit in S. 1437, and equally so in the Sentencing Commission it envisages, are accepted as guidelines for sentencing policy in the federal criminal law system, there will be no real alleviation of the problem of crime. The difficulty is that there is a seemingly inexhaustible supply of fresh candidates for incarceration in the federal (and state) prisons and jails as long as the social problems that are the root causes of crime remain unsolved.

There is no disagreement here with the wisdom of incarceration for a long prison term of the truly dangerous offender. Society must be adequately protected. However, that is not what S. 1437 limits itself to. All offenders are to be swept up in its mechanical, juggernaut approach. The all-powerful Sentencing Commission is to establish guidelines. The overwhelming probability is that those guidelines will reflect the harsh, vindictive views of sentencing and of the Constitution that may be expected from the architect of the Burger Court majority and its startling view of the Bill of Rights and constitutional freedoms.

"S. 1 cannot be adequately amended to avoid creating serious voids and retrogressions in existing federal criminal practice, and the Committee recommends that the State Bar make every attempt to defeat this unwise proposed legislation."

That conclusion is equally applicable to S. 1437. The legislative "compromise" which has converted S. 1 into S. 1437 has failed to remove the taint of the anti-democratic, repressive approach toward criminal law and civil liberties which permeated S. 1, and which still infects S. 1437. And that taint is equally prevalent in the sentencing provisions, as the foregoing analysis has made clear.

The sentencing provisions of S. 1437 emerge, upon analysis, as retrogressive, unworkable, illusory, and unwise. The concern of the public about violence and crime, particularly street crime, is concern over a serious national problem. However, S. 1437, like S. 1 before it, offers simplistic panaceas, in the form of determinate sentencing, restrictions on probation and parole, a skewing of correctional approaches away from such hopeful concepts as diversion of the offender to carefully supervised community programs. The seemingly "tough" approach exemplified by S. 1437 will work no better than did the incarceration of the prisoners sent to Attica, Rahway, Trenton State Prison, or any of the other gloomy cages for men and women that have utterly failed to do anything more than put those convicted of crime out of sight and mind for a certain period of time.

But beyond even the harshness and vindictive approach which mar S. 1437, and which will unquestionably mold the guidelines to be promulgated by the Sentencing Commission which is touted as the major reform of S. 1437 lies a constitutional crisis of unprecedented dimensions.

Congress has the constitutional obligation to formulate legislation. The Constitution does not provide for delegation of that authority to the judiciary, where the important area of a national policy about sentencing is concerned. Yet that is what is squarely involved in the indefensible provision of the Sentencing Commission provisions of S. 1437 (Sec. 991(a) (p. 301)), that the Sentencing Commission "shall consist of nine members designated by the Judicial Conference of the United States." To enact this proposal will be to surrender control over sentencing policy to a tight, secretive group of jurists, the Judicial Conference, dominated by their chairman, Chief Justice Warren Burger, and who will have the opportunity to designate as members of the Sentencing Commission those who will reflect his views, and those of his colleagues comprising the Burger Court majority. This abdication of legislative responsibility will, if enacted, effectively delegate to the most repressive element in the federal judiciary policy-making which is constitutionally the province and the responsibility of Congress.

This is not legislation. It is instead indefensible capitulation to the type of stifling of Bill of Right protections which has typified the decisions of the Burger Court majority. The purported compromise of S. 1 is thus seen to emerge as an unprecedented grant of delegated power to the Burger Court majority through the device of delegating authority over sentencing and the making of binding guidelines upon a Judicial Conference answerable only to itself and tightly controlled by Chief Justice Warren Burger.

Nowhere in the Constitution, our great charter of freedom, is such delegation of legislative power to the judiciary sanctioned. And this Congress should defeat this startling power grab by the judiciary.

---

DARK DOINGS AMONG THE JUDGES

(By John P. MacKenzie<sup>1</sup>)

"Sunlight," said Justice Louis D. Brandeis, "is the best of all disinfectants." Yet one enormously influential body of high-level jurists, the Judicial Conference of the United States, has been meeting in the dark for so many decades that by now one almost hesitates to throw its proceedings open to the cleansing sunlight and fresh air.

Twice a year, this government-financed body meets secretly in a large, rarely used room in the cavernous Supreme Court Building—that awesome edifice in which even the great Brandeis said he felt uncomfortable, and where, Justice Harlan Fiske Stone complained, the Justices perch like "nine black beetles in the temple of Karnak."

But why should the public care about this secret society of a few dozen eminent judges? Why not just let the judicial "beetles" doze away on their perches, safe from the glare of publicity?

The answer is that, whatever its original intended functions, this conference of respected jurists, chaired and guided by Chief Justice Warren Burger, has slowly become a secret lobby, a powerful policy-shaping instrument that is in no way accountable for its often questionable actions.

Not content with lobbying for higher salaries for judges (a perhaps understandable preoccupation), the group has lately gone on to influencing congressional deliberations on wiretap legislation and similar key policy matters. As things stand, the Judicial Conference is fast becoming a secret governmental force to be reckoned with.

Both the conference and the edifice in which it meets are monuments to William Howard Taft, who was Chief Justice from 1921 until he died in 1930, too soon to see the shrine built, but not too soon to launch the judicial organization and become its first presiding officer. Taft was an activist Chief Justice, though an advocate of what is called "judicial restraint" in deciding whether courts should intervene in any but the most conventional kinds of legal disputes. Until recently, Taft was probably the undisputed titleholder of "foremost empire builder" in American judicial history since the Founding Fathers. A modern challenger is the current and fifteenth Chief Justice, Warren E. Burger, whose designs for a more "efficient" and less activist federal bench often are first aired—if that word can be applied to the hermetically sealed meetings—before the U.S. Judicial Conference.

Chief Justices have many collateral duties thrust upon them, but Burger, who has sought and gained more renown as a judicial administrator than as a jurist, has accepted the conference chairmanship with gusto and spends long hours on its work. The members (11 chief judges of the regional U.S. courts of appeals, 11 federal district judges elected by their peers from those same regions, and representatives from claims and patents courts) often are no match for a well-prepared presiding officer, even if the judges were inclined to resist his leadership.

---

<sup>1</sup> John P. MacKenzie, former Supreme Court reporter for The Washington Post, is currently studying clients of legal services programs under a grant from the Edna McConnell Clark Foundation.

What does the conference actually do? An attempt to help outsiders find out was quietly launched a few years ago—and just as quietly buried last year. James E. Doyle, a U.S. district judge in Madison, Wisconsin, advanced the modest proposal that the conference meetings be thrown open to the public. He told his colleagues that after attending a number of these meetings as a conference member, he couldn't think of any discussion he had heard that couldn't have been held in the open. His proposal was drowned in apathy and opposition led by Burger. The subject itself became classified. Burger refused to discuss the details. Terrified staff members, taking that cue, were struck dumb when questioned. Judge Doyle himself found the topic too hot to talk about. "No comment," he replied to inquiries. Was he the initiator of such a proposal? "No comment on that either," he answered.

The closest to a reasonable explanation was an on-the-cuff remark by Burger to a group of news reporters. Asked what prevented the opening of the conference to the public, he replied, "Would you open up the editorial conference of your newspaper to all members of the public?" The questioner protested that the press was not part of the government (and thus not bound to do what the Constitution might require of government institutions). "Oh, you're not government?" Burger quipped, "I thought you were the fourth branch of government." It was reminiscent of Burger's frequent comments from the bench during a recent series of First Amendment cases. He never tired of noting the irony that the press was seeking confidentiality for its informants but was unwilling to let the government take "effective steps" to protect its secrets from the prying press.

Whether or not the press can be likened to government, there's little doubt that the Judicial Conference performs important governmental tasks—judicial, legislative, and executive. It has come a long way since 1922, when Congress heeded Taft's call for a body to cope with case-load arrears and possibly do something about the disparity among courts in their sentencing of convicted criminals. Those two problems remain as baffling as ever, but the conference has branched out into other fields. One is lobbying, and not just for higher federal-court payrolls. One recalcitrant congressman predicted early that the conference would become "a legally constituted and publicly financed propaganda organization on behalf of the federal judiciary." His predictions have been borne out several times.

One notable instance occurred in 1967, when the conference, then led by the late Chief Justice Earl Warren, voted to volunteer its views to Congress on the wisdom of then pending wiretap bills. It was an odd stance, one that came to light only in the fine print of the conference's report and the satisfied reactions of wiretap advocates. The conference, with its roster of senior and prominent jurists, could be expected to properly comment on the practicality of specific provisions in a bill, but this body went beyond that: it chose a pro-tap bill in preference to a bill banning all wiretapping, and it favored a bill that was clearly unconstitutional under existing Supreme Court precedents. Activists and advocates of judicial restraint alike let the resolution pass, since there was no recorded dissent. Subsequent inquiries by several members of the Judicial Conference as to what had happened yielded the inescapable conclusion that many of them had no idea of what they had done.

Chief Justice Warren and Chief Justice Burger have inspired many studies in contrast, but they are alike in their passion for conference secrecy. Congress could cool that passion by bringing the conference under the lash of disclosure and public access now required of government advisory committees and agencies by the Freedom of Information Act. The judicial branch is not covered by the information law—indeed, the alarming fact is that these same secretive jurists are the ones with power to say what that law means—but there is little reason to exempt the conference, especially when it is not performing strictly judicial work.

That was the view of former senator Sam J. Ervin, Jr. (D-N.C.). Like many other lawmakers, Ervin found other fields to conquer than the Judicial Conference. But he said this in 1970:

"They certainly do not act as judges when they vote to approve or disapprove of pending legislation, or adopt rules of financial disclosure for their colleagues. Why, then, should the conference meet in secret? I believe that when judges act as policy makers and lobbyists it follows that their discussions should be public. If the conference supports or opposes a bill, the Congress and the public should have free access to the conference's debate on that proposal. The Congress should know how carefully the Judicial Conference researches its positions so that it can attach relative weights to them."

WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE FOR PEACE AND FREEDOM.

Cottage Grove, Oreg., July 6, 1977.

Senator JOHN McCLELLAN,

*Chairman, Senate Judiciary Subcommittee of Criminal Law and Procedures, Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.*Be it Resolved, That

The Cottage Grove Branch of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom urges defeat of S. 1437 because we feel it contains many elements of the universally opposed S. 1.

Specifically, we oppose the immunity provision which effectively subverts the Fifth Amendment by forcing testimony. We also oppose the wiretapping provision which requires and pays landlords and custodians to cooperate.

As a peace organization, we are especially concerned with the section entitled "Leading a Riot" which could be used against speakers crossing state lines.

We firmly believe in our right to peacefully assemble and peacefully demonstrate and the sections on demonstrations would infringe upon our rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

Our criticisms of S. 1437 are numerous. Therefore, we suggest that the subcommittee table S. 1437 and substitute it with the scholarly criminal code revision written by constitutional lawyers on the Brown Commission.

We ask that this statement be made a part of the public record of the June 1977 hearings on S. 1437.

Sincerely,

BIRDY HOELZLE,
Corresponding Secretary.

REPORT WITH RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE SECTION COUNCIL
FROM THE COMMITTEE ON CRIMINAL CODE REVISION, AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION—AUGUST 1977

RECOMMENDATION

The Committee on Criminal Code Revision, joined by the chairperson and vice chairperson of the CJS Committee on Sentencing, Probation, Parole and Reintegration of Offenders, request Council approval of the following resolution:

BE IT RESOLVED, That the Criminal Justice Section—building on ABA positions already taken on S. 1 (94th Congress) and in the ABA Standards for Criminal Justice—support sentencing provisions in S. 1437 (95th Congress), the pending Federal criminal code bill, to the following extent:

1. A Sentencing Commission should be created, but should be composed of 5 members—not 9, as the bill provides. Three members should be designated by the Judicial Conference of the United States and 2 appointed by the President with advice and consent of the Senate. (The bill provides that all members would be designated by the Judicial Conference.) Further, not more than 2 members should be judges; the other 3 should be broadly representative of the criminal justice system. (The bill provides no restrictions on the Commission's make-up.)

2. The committee approves the concept of guidelines which the Sentencing Commission would promulgate for use by sentencing courts in determining what sentence to impose. For the foreseeable future, however, these guidelines should only be advisory. Until reliable empirical data and experience have been gathered and examined, and until the content of the guidelines is known, drastic revision of present procedures should be implemented cautiously. While the committee does not support the guidelines enforcement mechanism in S. 1437—a defendant can appeal any sentence above the guidelines and the government any sentence below—it does support the already-existing ABA policy favoring appellate review of sentences.

3. S. 1437 provides the sentencing judge with the option of applying either an indeterminate or a determinate sentence. The committee supports this approach. When an indeterminate sentence is given, however, the committee believes that the sentencing judge—and not the Parole Commission—should arrive at a release date. The committee recognizes problems which have occurred with the existing parole system. The Committee proposes that the Parole Commission have the initial responsibility for undertaking a review of the release question and then prepare recommendations for presentation to the judge who handled the original sentencing decision. If, however, the parole commission does not act within a set period of time, or if, once having initiated an inquiry it decides not to proceed, the judge can initiate action sua sponte. Action by the judge and by counsel would necessarily be governed in such circumstances by the Code of Judicial Conduct and the Code of Professional Responsibility.

REPORT

Background

The Committee on Criminal Code Revision has followed developments with respect to the introduction May 2 of the new federal criminal code bill (S. 1437, 95th Congress), which represents a carefully-structured compromise between conservative and liberal supporters. As the Council is aware, the section has been deeply involved in study of the proposed code since the initial drafts of the Brown Commission were available some eight years ago. The committee chairperson attended a series of hearings in June held by the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedure. These focused almost exclusively on the sentencing proposals in the bill—which would dramatically revamp existing federal sentencing procedures.

The committee has also reviewed S. 1437 vis-a-vis already-established ABA policies, including policy formulated in 1975 on S. 1 and positions contained in the ABA Standards for Criminal Justice. These policies already cover many key areas in the bill. The committee has also alerted other section committees to areas in the legislation covering subjects within their jurisdictions.

The ABA's present policies on sentencing (largely contained in the ABA Standards Relating to Sentencing Alternatives & Procedures) do not address the question of a sentencing commission, nor the concept of sentencing guidelines. The committee thus decided to focus on these provisions. Three committee members (8 were invited, but due to conflicts five were unable to attend) met July 9 with representatives of the CJS Committee on Sentencing, Probation, Parole and Reintegration of Offenders. Staff from the Senate and House Judiciary Committees and the Justice Department also attended. The committee carefully reviewed and discussed S. 1437's provisions proposing a Sentencing Commission and other sentencing sections. [Relevant pages of the legislation are attached to this report, as is a chart comparing ABA policy with S. 1 and S. 1437.]

Sentencing Commission

The bill provides dramatic revisions in the present federal sentencing system, aimed, according to its sponsors, at bringing fairness and certainty to the sentencing process and reducing disparities. S. 1437 would create a 9-person Sentencing Commission, with members designated by the Judicial Conference, and created as a part of the judicial branch. The Commission would establish guidelines to cover both offender and offense characteristics—including such factors as the nature and degree of the harm caused, the offender's role in the offense, the community view of the gravity of the offense, and the offender's family ties and responsibilities. [See attached Xerox of bill's provisions for complete list.] Judges would be obliged to consider the guidelines—but not necessarily to follow them. If the judge sentenced above the range or below it, however, reasons for doing so would have to be spelled out, and sentence appeal would be available to the offender (if above the range) and to the government (if below). Government appeals would have to be approved by the Attorney General or his designee.

The present draft of S. 1437 retains the parole system; but remarks by Attorney General Bell and others who have urged abolition of the system appear to have made it likely that the bill will be amended to phase out parole.

Comments on committee recommendations

At its July 9 meeting, the committee carefully examined the bill's provisions for a Sentencing Commission and related features. Many members had serious doubts about the workability and effectiveness of a sentencing guidelines system. While recognizing that sentencing disparities exist, the committee felt that individualized treatment of persons coming before the sentencing court is essential—and that a guidelines system could lead to a mechanized decisionmaking process. Use of alternatives to imprisonment, in particular, do not appear to be sufficiently recognized in the legislation. After much debate, the committee arrived at the recommendations outlined at the beginning of this report.

The committee supports the concept of a Sentencing Commission but feels this body would be more workable if reduced to 5 members. Nine members would perpetuate the numerical make-up of the Parole Commission, perhaps inappropriate in light of the new approaches. The committee feels strongly the Commission must represent all segments of criminal justice and not reflect only a judicial voice. It recommends that the bill specify that no more than 2 members may be judges, and that the remainder be named from diverse segments of the system—such as defense lawyers, prosecutors, penologists, and correctional personnel. S. 1437 further provides that the Judicial Conference of the U.S. name all members. The committee is aware of the sentiment widely expressed during the June hearings that all members of the Commission be Presidentially-appointed. The Committee suggests that a mixture of selection methods—with 3 designated by the Conference and 2 appointed by the President with advice and consent of the Senate—will increase the body's representativeness and lessen its becoming a political vehicle.

The committee debated at length the desirability of sentencing guidelines. Several members were deeply concerned over the ability of guidelines to cover all offenders. Some questioned whether guidelines would depersonalize the sentencing process and institutionalize decisionmaking.

The committee finally agreed, however, that a sentencing guidelines system should be tried—but only on an advisory basis for the foreseeable future. This is particularly critical because, until the legislation is enacted and the Sentencing Commission created and operational, no one knows what the guidelines will contain. Further, if instituted initially on an advisory basis, empirical data can be compiled on experience with their use. Until then, the committee does not believe the guidelines should be enforced, as S. 1437 provides, by appellate review of sentences outside the guidelines.

The question of determinate sentences was also examined by the committee. It agrees that the indeterminate sentence has received deserved criticism. There is a lack of certainty for both the offender and for society. However, the committee supports the approach contained in S. 1437, wherein both options are available to the sentencing judge. When an indeterminate sentence is given, the committee does not favor the Parole Commission's setting the release date, since it recognizes the host of problems which have plagued the present parole system. The sentencing judge should make the release decision, based on investigation and recommendations of the Parole Commission. If the Commission refuses to initiate this process by a set time, or having started it refuses to carry it forward, the judge would be authorized to act sua sponte. Recognizing potential problems, the committee has also made special note of the fact that behavior of both judge and counsel under such circumstances must be governed by the Codes of Judicial Conduct and of Professional Responsibility.

The committee also supports provision of sufficient research monies to the Justice Department's new Office for Improvements in the Administration of Justice to permit it to undertake badly-needed empirical research on the federal level on use of the proposed sentencing guidelines system. If the Department is unable to undertake this or if such is not available, perhaps other public monies or private foundations may be applied to for grants to accomplish these ends.

The committee discussed additional areas which are not presented to the Council for action, since they represent subjects on which the Association has already taken a position. For example, the committee strongly reasserts the ABA's prior objection (in 1975 S. 1 policy) to the fact that the bill contains no presumption for probation. The use of probation and alternatives to imprisonment is an underlying concept of the ABA Standards on Sentencing Alternatives and Procedures. The committee also reasserted ABA support for appellate review of sentences, policy spelled out in the ABA Standards for Appellate Review of Sentences.

Congressional timetable

It would appear that full Senate Judiciary Committee action on S. 1437 will not occur until after the August recess. Senate floor action by October seems debatable. Even if passed by the Senate, House consideration is unlikely to begin before the Second Session of the 95th Congress. There is thus opportunity for timely Section and ABA action on these provisions of the proposed federal criminal code.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM GREENHALGH,
Chairperson, Committee on Criminal Code Revision.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, BERKELEY,
SCHOOL OF LAW (BOALT HALL),
Berkeley, Calif., December 30, 1975.

Senator PHILIP A. HART,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HART: I am responding to your letter of December 15 concerning section 1302 of S. 1.

I agree with your staff that the courts could construe this offense as not applying to protected first amendment rights to assemble and petition the government. The crux is, as your letter suggests, that the conduct must be "intentional" to constitute the offense. As the committee report points out, and as apparently specified by § 1302(a) in the bill, this means that to establish the specified offense the government would have to prove "that the offender had a conscious objective or desire to obstruct or impair a function and to do so by physical interference or obstacle." Particularly in light of the first amendment concerns, this would seem to be the appropriate construction of the statute by its own terms. Buttressed by the explicit statement in the committee report, this outcome seems to be as clear as possible at this stage. On this basis, I believe that the passage of the ACLU Statement which you quote in your letter is wrong.

On this basis also I believe that this offense would not be subject to a valid vagueness or overbreadth attack. As to vagueness, the terms used in the section seem to me sufficiently clear and specific, both to give notice to individuals who may be involved and to provide the means for judicial check on arbitrariness of officials. Indeed, I find it hard to conceive what more specific terms could be used to accomplish the legitimate purposes of this section. As to overbreadth, while I suppose that one could not be certain that the provision by its terms could not encompass some protected activity, it does not seem to me that the section is vulnerable to a charge of "substantial overbreadth" such as would be necessary to invalidate it on its face. This is particularly true because the thrust of the provision as drafted is not directed toward speech or assembly activity. (Of course, if in particular circumstances there was an effort to use this provision to prosecute individuals for conduct which is protected under the first amendment, the courts would presumably hold that the statute could not validly apply to such conduct. But that of course—desirably—is true for any statute.)

I hope you find this helpful.

Sincerely,

PAUL J. MISHKIN.
Emanuel S. Heller, Professor of Law.

---

UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH, SCHOOL OF LAW, June 9, 1977.

HON. JOHN McCLELLAN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR McCLELLAN: I have recently had the opportunity to review the Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977, S. 1437, H.R. 6869, and believe it to be a substantial improvement over S. 1 introduced in the 94th Congress. Your personal commitment to the concept and necessity for recodification of our Federal criminal laws is highly commendable, and your perseverance and hard work in preparation of S. 1437, H.R. 6869 is greatly appreciated by all those who understand the magnitude of the political and intellectual labors you undertook to perform.

Obviously, however, no individual will agree with all details of the new proposed Code. Hence, I must note that I have serious concern about delegating to the proposed United States Sentencing Commission decisionmaking authority over sentencing norms which, it appears to me, is essentially legislative in nature. Moreover, I am troubled by the vagueness of the language of the "Impairing Military Effectiveness" offense (§ 1112), with the overly severe grading of the offense of "Obstructing a Proceeding by Disorderly Conduct" (§ 1334), with the equivocation as to the necessity for compulsory notice to affected parties previously subjected to lawful wire interception (§ 3105(b)(1)), and with retention of the partially unconstitutional and wholly undesirable sections on the admissibility of confessions (§§ 3713-3714).

However, the provision which causes me the most concern in S. 1437, H.R. 6869, is the section "creating" a federal obscenity offense—§ 1842. In brief, there is absolutely no reason to have a Federal obscenity statute on the books and there are a number of reasons why such a statute is undesirable. The regulation and scope of nonprotected speech in a local community, if arguably of legitimate concern to any governmental body (a proposition I would disavow), are certainly not the regulatory business of the Federal Government. Isn't that what federalism is all about? Let the States deal with obscenity within permissible constitutional perimeters.

Section 1842, questionable in and of itself due to its reliance upon the shaky Miller standards and its antiquated supporting policies, encourages the kind of Federal prosecutorial abuses which we observed in Tennessee during the past 2 years. Furthermore, as the recent Supreme Court case, Smith v. United States, 45 L.W. 4495 (No. 75-1439, May 23, 1977), demonstrates, the mere existence of a Federal obscenity statute totally nullifies an individual state's (Iowa in the Smith case) efforts to tailor its own obscenity laws to the demands and mores of the community. Smith was a case where "[t]he transaction offended no one and violated no Iowa law. Nonetheless, because the materials proves 'offensive' to third parties [on a national level] who were not intended to see them, a federal crime was committed." 45 L.W. at 4500 (Dissenting Opinion of Justice Stevens). Again, it is neither necessary nor desirable to have the Federal Government overruling the will of the States in this area. There should not be a Federal obscenity statute.

Let me note, again, in closing, that the foregoing vigorous objections notwithstanding, I think S. 1437, H.R. 6869, on the whole, a masterful job. Codification is urgently needed and the present vehicle, if it can withstand additional substantive compromise and alteration (other, of course, than the compromises I propose!), is an extremely workable and attractive piece of legislation.

Thank you very much for your personal efforts in getting it introduced.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN M. BURKOFF,
Assistant Professor of Law.

---

HARVARD LAW SCHOOL,
Cambridge, Mass., January 7, 1976.

HON. PHILIP A. HART,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HART: I am sorry that the holidays delayed my response to your letter of December 15 inquiring about Section 1302 of S. 1, the bill to reform the Criminal Code.

The ACLU criticism of Section 1302 is, in my opinion, a forced and false interpretation which would appear plausible only to one determined to find reasons for seeking to defeat the bill. I am quite sure that the Committee Report and line of authorities exemplified by Screws v. U.S., 325 U.S. 91, would lead to a narrow and constitutional interpretation.

An "influx of cars carrying demonstrators to the chosen site" would violate Section 1302 only if the site were consciously chosen in such a way as to interfere with the performance of governmental functions. My imagination is not quite up to visualizing a realistic example, but one can abstractly conceive a situation in which the accused plan to have a long cavalcade of traffic block a necessary movement of the National Guard despite normal traffic controls.

It should be noted that conduct is criminal under Section 1302 only when physical interference with the government's performance of its functions conjoins with a specific intent thus to interfere. The right to demonstrate or to speak at a time and place causing large crowds to assemble is subject to regulation where the public concern is with the physical consequences of the demonstration or the selection of the particular time and place, rather than with the ideas expressed or the consequences of their expression. Section 1302 falls in this category because it is concerned only with physical interference or obstacles; it is subject to the further safeguard that physical obstruction must be the specific purpose of the defendant. I cannot say that there is no conceivable circumstance in which the application of Section 1302 might be unconstitutional, but I feel quite sure that it is not subject to attack upon grounds of vagueness or overbreadth. Being confined to the intentional use of physical obstacles, the relevant test for overbreadth is less stringent than with a statute proscribing words alone. Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601 (1973).

May I take the occasion to say that it is a pleasure to hear from you again.

With best wishes.

Sincerely,

ARCHIBALD COX.

---

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BAIL AGENCY,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR,
Washington, D.C., June 1977.

HON. THEODORE KENNEDY,

U.S. Senate, Chairman, Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopolies, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

HON. JOHN L. McCLELLAN,

*Chairman, Subcommittee on Criminal Laws,
Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.*

DEAR SENATORS KENNEDY AND McCLELLAN: I would like to offer for your consideration some comments on portions of S. 1437 (Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977) recently introduced by you. I am particularly interested in the provisions that address questions of release or detention of persons charged with offenses and awaiting trial. I would respectfully ask that my comments be entered as a portion of the Hearing Record should that be appropriate.

The provision which causes me the most concern is § 3503 of Chapter 35. This section as it stands mandates pretrial detention of those charged with capital offenses if "Such a risk of flight or danger is believed to exist . . . [the judge has reason to believe that no conditions of release will reasonably assure that the person will not flee or will not pose a danger to any other person or to the community . . .] . . . the person shall be ordered detained." (Emphasis supplied.)

The debates over pretrial detention and the injection of considerations of danger into the bail hearing have raged for years. On the one hand, subsequent to the Judiciary Act of 1789 and the Eighth Amendment to the Constitution, no American could be denied Bail (pretrial) in noncapital cases.

Many offenses carried capital punishment then and do not today, e.g., burglary, rape, murder, armed robbery, etc. Just as clearly, however, the theory on which Bail was denied was one which presumed that a defendant facing the ultimate in punishment (death) if convicted would be so motivated to flee that no Bail could be set that would insure appearance.

On the other hand, despite the lip service paid to the principle that "risk of flight is the only proper purpose for Bail," every magistrate who has ever set Bail has done so with at least a concern about danger. Although unarticulated, danger has played and continues to play the most significant role in the fixing of Bail. Your efforts in this bill to put the issue of danger in the open and on the record is commendable. I believe, however, that some additional provisions might be appropriate.

To change a legal principle which is considered a traditional if not a Constitutional one with a short paragraph may provide short shrift to some of the serious issues that need resolution. Were it not for six (6) years of experience with both the detention and danger issues in the District of Columbia, nearly ten (10) years of experience around the nation in providing Technical Assistance to other jurisdictions experiencing problems with pretrial detention and release, and nearly fifteen (15) years of experience arguing and debating the principles involved in the bail setting process I would not have proposed these suggestions. I sincerely hope they will aid you and your colleagues and staffs.

I recommend to your attention D.C. Code § 23-1321-1332 (particularly § 1322-1332). These statutory sections provide a comprehensive release law that includes the presumption of release, consideration of danger, protection of the rights of those accused held in pretrial detention without bail, and a total approach to the problem posed by trying to predict danger, flight, appearance, etc.

To be perfectly candid, when the law was first proposed in 1969 and 1970 I was adamantly opposed to the idea of openly permitting detention without Bail and to allowing danger to be a criterion in fixing conditions of release. My reasons included: a belief in a Constitutional right to release (this right derived from a combined treatment of the Judiciary Act of 1789, the Eighth Amendment to the Constitution, and the words of the United States Supreme Court in Carlson v. Landon and Stack v. Boyle.); a then recent study commissioned by the Department of Justice of the United States at a cost of $360,000 which concluded that danger could not be predicted; and a belief that wholesale detention without Bail would occur. Experience has proved otherwise and reflection has convinced me that although there are some minor flaws in the law, for the most part, it is a good one. It is the only statute I have seen that provides the means to eliminate the hypocrisy that permits the unfettered pretrial detention of the poor under the fiction of a money bond "high enough to insure appearance." And, at the same time, it permits magistrates to detain those who pose a serious risk of either flight or danger.

Specifically, the D.C. law has the following provisions which could enhance S 1437:

A proscription against the use of financial conditions to assure safety (1321). (I believe financial conditions should be eliminated altogether. Both the American Bar Association in its Project on Minimum Standards for Criminal Justice, Standards Relating to Pretrial Release, and the National Advisory Commission on Criminal Justice Standards and Goals recommend the abolition of Bail Bonds-men and suggest that dollar amounts bear little or no relationship to risk of flight or appearance. I think that if financial conditions can be eliminated the decision becomes simply release or detention. If release is appropriate then consideration of those conditions best designed to effect return to court or safety can commence. Under such a system no one would be detained because of financial inability to post bond and conversely the very wealthy who should be detained would not be able to secure release.) ;

A direction to confine those detained in facilities other than those where convicted criminals are housed (1321) (h) (1) ;

Three very precise definitions of the type defendant who may qualify for a detention hearing (1322(a) ) ;

A precise definition of the kind of hearing prerequisite to the issuance of a detention order (1322(b)&(e) ) ;

A provision for speedy trial (within 60 days) or release of a pretrial detainee (1322(d) ) ;

A separate provision for treatment of those on probation or parole (1322(e) ) ;

Provisions for appeal (1324) ;

Penalties (1327-1329) ; and

Definitions of crimes that qualify by crime rather than by punishment (1330).

I urge you to consider providing the safeguards and protections afforded by the D.C. law to those who may be detained. § 3503 does not provide any of the protections afforded in the D.C. law nor do any of the other provisions. At the same time § 3504 (Release Pending Sentence or Appeal) is infinitely more sensible than its D.C. counterpart.

I appreciate your attention to these matters and would be most willing to answer any questions you may have.

Yours truly,

BRUCE D. BEAUDIN,
Director, District of Columbia Bail Agency.

---

PREPARED STATEMENT OF THE AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION

Founded in 1876, the American Library Association is the oldest and largest library association in the world. It is a nonprofit, educational organization representing over 35,000 librarians, library trustees, and other individuals and groups interested in promoting library service. The Association is the leader of the modern library movement in the United States and, to a considerable extent, throughout the world. It seeks to improve libraries and librarianship and to create and publish literature in aid of this objective.

THE RIGHT TO KNOW: LIBRARY SERVICE IN THE UNITED STATES

Libraries are repositories of knowledge and information, and are established to preserve the records of the world's cultures. In the United States, under the First Amendment, libraries play a unique role by fulfilling the right of all citizens to have unrestricted access to these records for whatever purpose they might have. The Association's interpretation of the First Amendment as it applies to library service is set forth in the Library Bill of Rights (attached). Under this interpretation, it is the responsibility of the library to provide books and other materials presenting all points of view concerning the problems and issues of our times. The Library Bill of Rights further states that no library materials should be proscribed or removed because of partisan or doctrinal disapproval, and that the right of an individual to the use of the library should not be denied or abridged because of age, race, religion, national origin or social or political views.

In sum, libraries foster the wellbeing of citizens by making information and ideal available to them. It is not the duty of librarians to inquire into the private lives of library patrons, nor is it their duty to act as mentors by imposing the patterns of their own thoughts on their collections. Citizens must have the freedom to read and to consider a broader range of ideas than those that may be held or approved by any single librarian, or publisher or government or church.

CURRENT ANTI-OBSCENITY LAWS

In general terms, the American Library Association rejects anti-obscenity laws as unwarranted intrusions upon those basic freedoms which Justice Cardozo once described as the matrix of all our other freedoms. Anti-obscenity laws, which are directed not at the control of anti-social action but rather at the control of communication, represent a form of censorship ultimately aimed at the control of the thoughts, opinions, and basic beliefs of citizens in a free democracy.

Anti-obscenity laws confront American librarians with a very special dilemma. Under the most recent rulings of the U.S. Supreme Court (including Smith, aka Intrigue v. U.S., decided May 23, 1977) the "community standards" by which the obscenity of a work will be determined cannot be ascertained until after the prosecution has been initiated and the jury impaneled.

This means that librarians disseminating works having sexual content must do so at their peril. On the one hand, if they refuse to disseminate a work because they believe it to be obscene, librarians infringe the First Amendment rights of their patrons if that belief is wrong. On the other hand, if they disseminate a work having sexual content, they are subject to criminal prosecution, fine, and imprisonment if a jury ultimately deems the work obscene.

The American Library Association believes that librarians must have the absolute right, free from the chilling effect of the threat of criminal prosecution, to procure and disseminate all works and materials which have not been held obscene by a court of competent jurisdiction, and the right to continue to do so with immunity until they are so held.

This right becomes even more essential to the fair and honest performance of libraries and librarians because of those rulings of the Supreme Court which make clear:

First, that any librarian disseminating any work describing or depicting normal or abnormal intercourse, excretion, masturbation, or the genitals, is vulnerable to federal criminal prosecution, notwithstanding express exemption from such prosecution under state law.

Second, that the determination of a jury that a work is obscene is a question of fact which is substantially unreviewable on appeal.

Third, that the general existence and ready availability of other works substantially comparable in nature, content, descriptions, and representations to the work which prompts the prosecution does not establish that the work in question satisfies community standards.

Fourth, "guilty knowledge," that is, knowledge of the obscenity of the work, is not required for conviction so long as the disseminator is aware that the work includes the descriptions or depictions which the jury ultimately determines to be obscene.

SECTION 1842 OF S. 1437

Although Section 1842 would apply to the non-commercial dissemination of materials in only certain cases, none of the above concerns generated by the rulings of the Supreme Court is eliminated for librarians. Section 1842 applies to dissemination to minors, and library service to minors employs more librarians today than all other forms of library service combined.

Accordingly, Section 1842 of S. 1437 should be amended to exempt librarians or, alternatively, to provide that no criminal prosecution for disseminating an obscene work shall be initiated until the work has first been adjudged obscene in a prior in rem proceeding.

Attachment.

LIBRARY BILL OF RIGHTS

THE COUNCIL OF THE AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION REAFFIRMS ITS BELIEF IN THE FOLLOWING BASIC POLICIES WHICH SHOULD GOVERN THE SERVICES OF ALL LIBRARIES

1. As a responsibility of library service, books and other library materials selected should be chosen for values of interest, information and enlightenment of all the people of the community. In no case should library materials be excluded because of the race or nationality or the social, political, or religious views of the authors.

2. Libraries should provide books and other materials presenting all points of view concerning the problems and issues of our times; no library materials should be proscribed or removed from libraries because of partisan or doctrinal disapproval.

3. Censorship should be challenged by libraries in the maintenance of their responsibility to provide public information and enlightenment.

4. Libraries should cooperate with all persons and groups concerned with resisting abridgment of free expression and free access to ideas.

5. The rights of an individual to the use of a library should not be denied or abridged because of his age, race, religion, national origins or social or political views.

6. As an institution of education for democratic living, the library should welcome the use of its meeting rooms for socially useful and cultural activities and discussion of current public questions. Such meeting places should be available on equal terms to all groups in the community regardless of the beliefs and affiliations of their members, provided that the meetings be opened to the public.

Adopted June 18, 1948.

Amended February 2, 1961, and June 27, 1967, by the ALA Council.

---

PREPARED STATEMENT OF PROF. JOHN MONAHAN<sup>1</sup> ON THE CRIMINAL CODE REFORM ACT OF 1977 (S. 1437)

I have for some time been involved with the application of behavioral science research to the problems of crime and criminal law, especially as that research relates to the disposition of criminal and mentally disordered offenders. It is my belief that the provisions of the Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977 dealing with criminal sentencing (sections 2001-2008) and with mentally disordered offenders (sections 3611-3617) reflect the most sophisticated and current empirical research in these areas and represent a marked advance over current law.

My reasons for supporting the sentencing provisions were set forth in an article in The Washington Post on April 30, 1977, which I would like to submit for the record. In brief, behavioral scientists have not distinguished themselves at the task of forcing rehabilitation on those offenders they predict will be dangerous. Indeterminate sentences have failed a fair test of their usefulness, and should be replaced by strict guidelines promulgated by a Sentencing Commission and reflected in this bill.

The right of appeal from excessively onerous or excessively lenient sentences, as well as the establishment of a federal Victim Compensation Fund, are additional factors to recommend passage of S. 1437.

The one point I would like to stress to the Subcommittee is that abandoning forced rehabilitation as a purpose of criminal sentencing does not imply a lessened commitment to provide increased access to voluntary rehabilitative services to those federal prisoners who wish to avail themselves of them. I have dealt with this issue in a June 3, 1977 article in The Los Angeles Times, which I would also like to submit for the record.

My sole reservation regarding the provisions of S. 1437 concerning mental disease or defect is that I believe the time limits for examination and treatment are grossly excessive. Sixty days for a psychiatric or psychological examination (section 3617) is at least 30, and probably 50, days too many. A second six-month commitment for persons found incompetent to stand trial (section 3611) is likewise unnecessary and subject to abuse. I would urge the Subcommittee to reduce the time limits substantially.

---

<sup>1</sup> John Monahan, Ph. D. is a Fellow in Law and Psychology at Harvard Law School, and Assistant Professor in the Program in Social Ecology, University of California, Irvine.

[From the Los Angeles Times, June 3, 1977]

PRISONS: A RETREAT FROM REHABILITATION

PUNISHMENT MAKES STRONG COMEBACK, BUT THERE ARE REASONS FOR CAUTION

(By John Monahan)

Across country, the death knell is being sounded for rehabilitation programs in our prisons.

Conservatives, who have always opposed the concept of rehabilitation, are watching in silent satisfaction as liberals and academics rush to recant their faith in the ability of psychiatrists and psychologists to alleviate prisoners' anti-social tendencies. Once derided as barbaric and ineffectual, punishment is making a strong comeback as the radical-chic answer to the problem of crime in America.

The reasons for this new negativism toward prisoner rehabilitation are not hard to ascertain. Research projects by the hundreds have failed to document any positive effect of even the most intensive therapy on the attitudes, let alone the behavior, of offenders once they are released from prison.

Meanwhile, prisoner-rights groups complain that existing rehabilitation programs are, more often than not, forced on them. Such programs, they also charge, have turned prison life into an Orwellian nightmare where inmates, denied a firm date for getting out, are reduced to playing endless games to prove that they have achieved "insight" into the psychic causes of their crime.

Given the lack of evidence that forced rehabilitation works and the ever-rising crime rate, the patience of even the most tolerant community is bound to wear thin. It was not surprising, then, that Sens. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) and John L. McClellan (D-Ark.) last month introduced a new federal criminal-sentencing bill that omitted any mention of "treatment" or "rehabilitation."

True, the time is long overdue to limit this power of psychiatrists and psychologists in deciding, almost single-handedly, who goes to prison and how long they stay here. These "experts" should also be deterred from forcing their wares on a—quite literally—captive audience.

However, it should be clearly understood that treatment has always been the exception in prison rather than the rule. Most of the time "rehabilitation" has just been a convenient excuse for placing enormous discretion in the hands of prison administrators. Not infrequently, it has also served as a way of rationalizing actions taken against prisoners—such as administering painful drugs—that would plainly be viewed as "cruel and unusual" if they were labeled punishment. Indeed, fewer than 100 full-time psychologists work in the entire federal penal system, which gives some indication of the priority actually accorded rehabilitation.

Yet our hasty retreat from the excesses and overpromises of the "rehabilitative ideal" poses a serious danger not only for prisoners after their release but also for the larger society. The danger is that legislators at both federal and state levels will seek to cut expenditures and balance budgets by seizing on the current climate of pessimism about rehabilitation to justify eliminating even the woefully inadequate amount of treatment now being provided.

Though research shows that coerced participation in rehabilitation programs fails to change prisoners' behavior once they leave the institution, that does not mean rehabilitation efforts are wholly worthless. Voluntary treatment may well help many prisoners control their behavior, especially if participation in therapy could be divorced from parole consideration and if prisoners were afforded the same confidentiality that exists in private practice. Even if it could be proved that such treatment does nothing to reduce future crime, inmates should at least have ready access to psychological care—just as the courts have ruled they have the right to adequate medical and dental services.

The resurrection of deterrence and retribution as the guiding principles of penal policy in this country will surely please those who have long favored throwing away the key and letting prisoners rot in their cells—and "rot," unfortunately, is exactly the right word.

Conditions in many of our prisons would disgrace any self-respecting kennel owner. No judge would purposely sentence a man to serve time in a place where repeated homosexual rapes and other forms of violence are the norm, and yet that is precisely what a prison term often means.

In a recent civil suit in Alabama, state officials admitted that all but 30 of 1,100 inmates in one prison had been physically or sexually assaulted. When Gov. George C. Wallace charged that court-ordered reforms of the state prison system had created a "hotel atmosphere," Judge Frank Johnson—the man who mandated the changes—replied this way: "The elimination of conditions that will permit maggots in a patient's wound for over a month before his death does not constitute creation of a hotel atmosphere."

By all means Americans should stop telling criminal offenders that we put them in prison for their own good: It is for our good, not theirs, that prisons exist. But we should think twice before eliminating psychological services from prison budgets, and at all costs we must avoid becoming complacent about what goes on inside prison walls.

As Dostoevsky observed in "Memoirs From the House of the Dead," "The degree of civilization in a society can be judged by entering its prisons."

[From the Washington Post, April 30, 1977]

PRISONS: A WARY VERDICT ON REHABILITATION

(By John Monahan)

It was only a few years ago that psychiatrist Karl Menninger declared that the real "crime" in criminal justice was society's punishing offenders rather than offering them psychiatric treatment. Ramsey Clark more recently announced that "we know corrections can rehabilitate."

Yet a bill to totally restructure criminal sentencing, introduced by Sen. Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.), does not once mention the words "treatment" or "rehabilitation." Instead, prison is now to provide "just punishment for the offense" and "to afford adequate deterrence to criminal conduct," notions anathema to liberals only a few years ago.

What has happened to cause such a rapid change of heart on the basic purpose of imprisonment?

For one thing, rehabilitation by almost all accounts has failed to live up to the promises of Menninger, Clark and others. Literally hundreds of research studies of prison treatment programs have reached the same conclusion: There is no difference in the future crime rates of inmates given treatment and those in the control group, who simply sat in their cells. And this holds whether the treatment in question is psychotherapy, "behavior modification," job training or education. "The cage," Norval Morris and Gordon Hawkins conclude in their new book, "Letter to the President on Crime Control," "is not a sensible place in which to cure the criminal."

Even if prison treatment is ineffective, the "rehabilitative ideal" could be partly salvaged if it could be shown that psychologists and psychiatrists could predict which offenders were so dangerous they needed to be isolated from society. The rest could then be kept out of prison and given social services in the community. Yet here too research has popped the rehabilitative balloon, finding that for every correct prediction of future criminality there are at least two mistakes.

As if the data weren't bad enough, prisoner groups and prisoner advocates such as Jessica Mitford have charged that the supposedly humane and enlightened rehabilitation approach actually has resulted in longer sentences and worse prison conditions than the "eye for an eye" justice it was meant to replace. Many unusual if not cruel procedures have been fobbed off as "treatment," while the indeterminate sentence has made archaic the movie stereotype of the convict chalking off the remaining days of his sentence on the cell wall: You never know when you're getting out. Dissatisfaction with such ambiguity was cited by the McKay Commission as a major cause of the Attica uprising.

As C. S. Lewis put it: "To be re-made after some pattern of 'normality' hatched in a Viennese laboratory to which I never paid allegiance to know that this process will never end until either my captors have succeeded or I have grown wise enough to cheat them with apparent success—who cares whether this is called Punishment or not?"

Add to these concerns a steadily rising crime rate, and it is not difficult to see why the "justice model" is gaining on the "treatment model" of imprisonment.

The Kennedy bill—on which hearings will be held shortly—would establish a sentencing commission to promulgate strict guidelines for judges to use in sentencing convicted offenders. Judges could sentence outside the guidelines, but they would have to put their reasons in writing. If the sentence were higher than the maximum prescribed by the guidelines, the defendant would have the right to appeal. If it were lower than the minimum given in the guidelines, the government could do likewise.

The bill would not eliminate treatment services in prison, but rehabilitation would no longer be a purpose of incarceration. If a convict wanted to participate in treatment programs, that would be encouraged. But if not, that would be acceptable too, since in neither case would it affect his or her release date, which would have been set by the judge at the time of conviction.

Several states, including Maine and California, have already abolished indeterminate sentences and eliminated rehabilitation as a purpose of imprisonment. There is little doubt that the pendulum is on the move and that prisons will once again be a place where people go to be punished rather than cured. Enforced rehabilitation and indeterminate sentences were noble social experiments. But, like prohibition, their time has come and gone.

---

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
DEPARTMENT OF LAW AND PUBLIC SAFETY,
Trenton, N.J., June 16, 1977.

Hon. JOHN L. McCLELLAN,
Dirksen Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR McCLELLAN: I am writing to inform you that at a regular meeting of the National Association of Attorneys General held in Indianapolis earlier this week, the Association unanimously adopted in principle the Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977 (S. 1437). A copy of the resolution is attached for your information.

The Association also authorized the creation of a subcommittee of its Committee on Criminal Law and Procedure to monitor the progress of the legislation, to report to the membership on significant developments, and to take positions on behalf of the membership in the course of the legislative process.

I have been appointed Chairman of this subcommittee. The balance of the membership consists of Attorneys General Diamond of Vermont, Edmisten of North Carolina, Hansen of Utah, La Follette of Wisconsin, MacFarlane of Colorado, and Mendicino of Wyoming.

Our subcommittee will endeavor to complete its analysis of the bill at the earliest possible date so that your staff can be advised of any proposed amendments or supplements to the bill. We will also decide at an early date whether one or more members of the committee will be asked to testify.

I will appreciate being advised of the member of your staff with whom any necessary contacts can be made, and will also want to be advised of significant developments that may affect the work of our committee.

You and Senator Kennedy are to be congratulated for the significant accommodations that have been made in drafting S. 1437. I anticipate that the final legislative product will be a significant step in the advancement of the federal criminal justice system, and the NAAG is anxious to assist in the final enactment of a measure that will advance your purposes, and at the same time be mindful of the responsibilities of the states in the area of criminal justice.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM F. HYLAND,
Attorney General.

Attachment.

Resolution concerning the Criminal Code adopted by the National Association of Attorneys General. Larry Derryberry, Attorney General of Oklahoma, Committee on Criminal Law and Law Enforcement.

RESOLUTION XVI.—REVISION OF FEDERAL CRIMINAL CODE

Whereas the Congress of the United States is considering Senate Bill 1437 and House of Representatives Bill 6869, which would revise the federal criminal code; and

Whereas a majority of the states have enacted modernized criminal codes; and

Whereas the Congressional proposals represent the culmination of a ten-year effort to enact a comprehensive and simplified criminal code to replace the present complex, inconsistent and often archaic statutes; and

Whereas previous objections of National Association of Attorneys General to portions of the earlier version of the code have substantially been addressed in the present version: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the National Association of Attorneys General at its 71st Annual Meeting, in Indianapolis, Indiana, June 12-15, 1977, That its membership endorse in principle the concept of a comprehensive Federal criminal code; and be it further

Resolved, That a subcommittee of the National Association of Attorneys General Committee on Criminal Law and Procedure be appointed by the Chairman of that committee to monitor the progress of SB 1437 and HR 6869, and to report to the membership on significant developments; and that said subcommittee be authorized to take positions on behalf of the National Association of Attorneys General membership concerning these proposals except in respect to issues concerning which the subcommittee determines there is substantial controversy among the National Association of Attorneys General membership.

PUBLIC DEFENDER SERVICE,
FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D.C., July 14, 1977.

HON. JOHN L. McCLELLAN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR McCLELLAN: I am writing to request your assistance in obtaining an amendment to the Criminal Justice Act (18 U.S. Code § 3006A) which would permit the District of Columbia Public Defender Service to provide defense services in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, with the approval of the Judicial Conference of the United States and with the permission of the federal judges in this jurisdiction. The proposed amendment would delete from subsection (l) 18 U.S. Code § 3006A the language “, other than subsection (h) of section 1,”. This would then provide to the federal courts in the District of Columbia the same options that are available to federal courts in the rest of the country. The brief memorandum enclosed explains the background of the problem and the need for the amendment. I would, of course, be happy to provide any additional information which you might think desirable.

We would greatly appreciate your support in this matter.

Respectfully,

J. PATRICK HICKEY, Director.

Enclosure.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO 18 U.S. CODE § 3006A (FEDERAL CRIMINAL JUSTICE ACT)

The Criminal Justice Act, which authorizes payment to private attorneys who represent indigent defendants in criminal cases in the federal courts, also gives all federal courts except those located in the District of Columbia the option of establishing a defender office to furnish representation in a portion of the criminal cases. This option is contained in subsection (h) of 18 U.S.C. § 3006A which, by virtue of subsection (l), is made inapplicable to the District of Columbia. The District of Columbia Public Defender Service has, with the agreement of the Chief Judges of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, suggested the deletion of this language in subsection (l) to allow those courts to establish a defender office if they so desire.

BACKGROUND

Prior to the 1970 reorganization of the court system in the District of Columbia, nearly all criminal cases were handled in the United States District Court here. Representation was provided to indigent defendants in those cases by staff attorneys employed by the Legal Aid Agency and by private attorneys appointed by the court. The Legal Aid Agency was a defender office established for the District of Columbia by Congress in 1960 (Public Law 86-531, 74 Stat. 229) ; its funds were part of the appropriation for the District of Columbia.

In 1970, Congress amended the Federal Criminal Justice Act, the statute authorizing payment to private attorneys who represent indigent defendants, to allow federal courts with sufficient volume of criminal cases to establish defender offices. However, the amendments provided that the authorization to establish defenders would not apply in the District of Columbia because the District already had its own defender office, the Legal Aid Agency. See H. Rep. 91-1546, 91st Cong., 2d Sess. 3 (1970). (The Public Defender Service is the statutory successor to the Legal Aid Agency, created by Congress as part of the District of Columbia Court Reform and Criminal Procedure Act of 1970, Public Law 91-358.)

However, as much of the criminal jurisdiction previously handled by the United States District Court was transferred to the local courts pursuant to the Court Reform and Criminal Procedure Act of 1970, the Public Defender Service likewise transferred most of its attorneys to the local courts and ceased to provide any significant amount of legal services in cases in the United States District Court or the United States Court of Appeals. These courts have been left to rely almost exclusively on private appointed counsel to furnish representation.

The proposed amendment would enable the Public Defender Service to become in part a community defender with the approval of the Judicial Conference of the United States. If that approval is forthcoming, the Public Defender Service would create a unit to provide legal services in the United States District Court and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit which would be financed by grants from the Criminal Justice Act appropriation. Furthermore, the chief judges of the federal courts in this jurisdiction to which services would be available would continue to participate in the appointment of the governing board of the Public Defender Service.

Attorneys and other personnel employed with these funds by the Public Defender Service would only be utilized to provide representation in the District of Columbia federal courts, after appointment by the federal judges and magistrates here, who would also continue to have the authority to appoint private counsel under the Criminal Justice Act.

---

[Hastings Law Center]

A CONSUMER'S GUIDE TO SENTENCING REFORM—MAKING THE PUNISHMENT FIT THE CRIME

(By Franklin E. Zimring)

In its current crisis the American system of criminal justice has no friends. Overcrowded, unprincipled, and ill-coordinated, the institutions in our society that determine whether and to what extent a criminal defendant should be punished are detested in equal measure by prison wardens and prisoners, cab drivers and college professors. What is more surprising (and perhaps more dangerous), a consensus seems to be emerging on the shape of desirable reform—reducing discretion and the widespread disparity that is its shadow, abolishing parole decisions based on whether a prisoner can convince a parole board that he has been “reformed,” and creating a system in which punishment depends much more importantly than at present on the seriousness of the particular offense.

A number of books and committee reports that have endorsed these goals and proposed various structural reforms to achieve them are the stimulus for this essay. While diverse in style, vocabulary, and emphasis, at least six books in the past two years have proposed eroding the arenas of discretion in the system.<sup>1</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup>Norval Morris, The Future of Imprisonment (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1974); James Q. Wilson, Thinking About Crime (New York: Basic Books, 1975); Ernest van den Haag, Punishing Criminals (New York: Basic Books, 1975); Andrew von Hirsch, Doing Justice—The Choice of Punishments, the Report of the Committee for the Study of Incarceration (New York: Hill and Wang, 1976); David Fogel, We are the Living Proof: The Justice Model of Corrections (Cincinnati: W. H. Anderson, 1975); Task Force on Criminal Sentencing, Fair and Certain Punishment—Report of the Twentieth Century Task Force on Criminal Sentencing (New York: McGraw-Hill, 1976).

The central concern of these books, the coercive control of convicted offenders, is very much an issue for bioethics. Imprisonment, while centuries old, is essentially a form of experimentation with human subjects. Various new treatment technologies available to the prison system have been widely discussed among those concerned about the impact of scientific knowledge on social institutions; but the basic problems posed by imprisonment itself have been less widely recognized.

Some authors, such as James Q. Wilson and Ernest van den Haag, see reform as a path to enhancing crime control. Others, such as Andrew von Hirsh, the Twentieth Century Fund Committee, and David Fogel, advocate reform for less utilitarian reasons, with titles or subtitles such as "Doing Justice," "A Justice Model of Corrections," and "Fair and Certain Punishment."

This essay cannot comprehensively review such a rich collection of literature, nor is it politic for me to oppose justice, fairness, or certainty. Rather, I propose to summarize the present allocation of sentencing power in the criminal justice system and discuss some of the implications of the "structural reforms" advocated in some current literature.

MULTIPLE DISCRETION IN SENTENCING

The best single phrase to describe the allocation of sentencing power in state and federal criminal justice is "multiple discretion." Putting aside the enormous power of the police to decide whether to arrest, and to select initial charges, there are four separate institutions that have the power to determine criminal sentences—the legislature, the prosecutor, the judge, and the parole board or its equivalent.

The legislature sets the range of sentences legally authorized after conviction for a particular criminal charge. Criminal law in the United States is noted for extremely wide ranges of sentencing power, delegated by legislation to discretionary agents, with extremely high maximum penalties and very few limits on how much less than the maximum can be imposed. In practice, then, most legislatures delegate their sentencing powers to other institutions. For example, second-degree murder in Pennsylvania, prior to 1973, was punishable by "not more than 20 years" in the state penitentiary.<sup>2</sup> Any sentence above twenty years could not be imposed; any sentence below twenty years—including probation—was within the power of the sentencing judge.

The prosecutor is not normally thought of as an official who has, or exercises, the power to determine punishment. In practice, however, the prosecutor is the most important institutional determinant of a criminal sentence. He has the legal authority to drop criminal charges, thus ending the possibility of punishment. He has the legal authority in most systems to determine the specific offense for which a person is to be prosecuted, and this ability to select a charge can also broaden or narrow the range of sentences that can be imposed upon conviction. In congested urban court systems (and elsewhere) he has the absolute power to reduce charges in exchange for guilty pleas and to recommend particular sentences to the court as part of a "plea bargain"; rarely will his recommendation for a lenient sentence be refused in an adversary system in which he is supposed to represent the punitive interests of the state.

The judge has the power to select a sentence from the wide range made available by the legislature for any charge that produces a conviction. His powers are discretionary—within this range of legally authorized sanctions his selection cannot be appealed, and is not reviewed. Thus, under the Pennsylvania system we studied, a defendant convicted of second-degree murder can be sentenced to probation, one year in the penitentiary, or twenty years. On occasion, the legislature will provide a mandatory minimum sentence, such as life imprisonment for first-degree murder, that reduces the judge's options once a defendant has been convicted of that particular offense. In such cases the prosecutor and judge retain the option to charge or convict a defendant for a lesser offense in order to retain their discretionary power.<sup>3</sup> More often the judge has a wide range of sentencing choices and, influenced by the prosecutor's recommendation, will select either a single sentence (such as two years) or a minimum and maximum sentence (not less than two nor more than five years) for a particular offender.

The parole or correctional authority normally has the power to modify judicial sentences to a considerable degree. When the judge pronounces a single sentence, such as two years, usually legislation authorizes release from prison to parole after a specified proportion of the sentence has been served. When the judge has provided for a minimum and maximum sentence, such as two to five years, the relative power of the correctional or parole authority is increased, because it has the responsibility to determine at what point in a prison sentence the offender is to be released. The parole board's decision is a discretionary one, traditionally made without guidelines or principles of decision.

<sup>2</sup> The old Pennsylvania statute is used as an example because we have recently studied the distribution of punishment in Philadelphia for those convicted of criminal homicides occurring during the first five months of 1970. See Franklin E. Zimring, Joel Eigen, and Sheila O'Malley, "Punishing Homicide in Philadelphia: Perspectives of the Death Penalty," University of Chicago Law Review 43 (1976), 227.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., pp. 229-41.

This outline of our present sentencing system necessarily misses the range of variation among jurisdictions in the fifty states and the federal system, and oversimplifies the complex interplay among institutions in each system. It is useful, however, as a context in which to consider specific proposed reforms; it also helps to explain why the labyrinthine status quo has few articulate defenders. With all our emphasis on due process in the determination of guilt, our machinery for setting punishment lacks any sanctioned principle except unguided discretion. Plea bargaining, disparity of treatment, and uncertainty are all symptoms of a larger malaise—the absence of rules or even guidelines in determining the distribution of punishments. Other societies, less committed to the rule of law, or less infested with crime, might suffer such a system. Powerful voices are beginning to tell us we cannot.

PAROLE UNDER ATTACK

Of all the institutions that comprise the present system, parole is the most vulnerable—a practice that appears to be based on a now-discredited theoretical foundation of rehabilitation and individual predictability. The theory was that penal facilities rehabilitate prisoners and that parole authorities could select which inmates were ready, and when they were ready, to reenter the community. The high-water mark of such thinking is the indeterminate sentence—a term of one-year-to-life at the discretion of the correctional authority for any adult imprisoned after conviction for a felony. Ironically, while this theory was under sustained (and ultimately successful) attack in California, New York was passing a set of drug laws that used the one-year-to-life sentence as its primary dispositive device. Yet we know (or think we know) that prison rehabilitation programs “don't work,” and our capacities to make individual predictions of future behavior are minimal.

So why not abolish parole in favor of a system where the sentence pronounced by the judge is that which is served by the offender? The cost of post-imprisonment sentence adjustments are many: they turn our prisons into “acting schools,” promote disparity, enrage inmates, and undermine both justice and certainty.<sup>4</sup>

There are, however, a number of functions performed by parole that have little to do with the theory of rehabilitation or individual predictability. A parole system allows us to advertise heavy criminal sanctions loudly at the time of sentencing and later reduce sentences quietly. This “discounting” function is evidently of some practical importance, because David Fogel's plan to substitute “flat time” sentences for parole is designed so that the advertised “determinate sentences” for each offense are twice as long as the time the offender will actually serve (since each prisoner gets a month off his sentence for every month he serves without a major disciplinary infraction). In a system that seems addicted to barking louder than it really wants to bite, parole (and “good time” as well) can help protect us from harsh sentences while allowing the legislature and judiciary the posture of law and order.

It is also useful to view the abolition of parole in terms of its impact on the distribution of sentencing power in the system. Reducing the power of the parole board increases the power of the legislature, prosecutor, and judge. If the abolition of parole is not coupled with more concrete legislative directions on sentencing, the amount of discretion in the system will not decrease; instead, discretionary power will be concentrated in two institutions (judge and prosecutor) rather than three. The impact of this reallocation is hard to predict. Yet parole is usually a statewide function, while judges and prosecutors are local officials in most states. One function of parole may be to even out disparities in sentencing behavior among different localities. Abolishing parole, by decentralizing discretion, may increase sentencing disparity, at least as to prison sentences, because the same crime is treated differently by different judges and prosecutors. Three discretions may be better than two!

There are two methods available to avoid these problems. Norval Morris argues for retaining a parole function but divorcing it from rehabilitation and individual prediction by providing that a release date be set in the early stages of an offender's prison career. This would continue the parole functions of "discounting" and disparity reduction, while reducing uncertainty and the incentive for prisoners to "act reformed." It is a modest, sensible proposal, but it is not meant to address the larger problems of discretion and disparity in the rest of the system.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Fogel, pp. 196–99.

LEGISLATIVE SENTENCING

A more heroic reform is to reallocate most of the powers now held by judges and parole authorities back to the legislature. Crimes would be defined with precision and specific offenses would carry specified sentences, along with lists of aggravating and mitigating circumstances that could modify the penalty. The three books with "justice" or "fairness" in their titles advocate this "price list" approach, albeit for different reasons and with different degrees of sophistication. The Twentieth Century Fund study goes beyond advocating this approach and sets out sections of a sample penal code, although all members of the committee do not agree on the specific "presumptive sentences" provided in the draft.

There is much appeal in the simple notion that a democratically elected legislature should be capable of fixing sentences for crimes against the community. Yet this is precisely what American criminal justice has failed to do, and the barriers to a fair and just system of fixed sentences are imposing. The Twentieth Century Fund scheme of "presumptive sentences," because it is the most sophisticated attempt to date, will serve as an illustration of the formidable collection of problems that confront a system of "fair and certain" legislatively determined punishments. In brief, the proposal outlines a scale of punishments for those first convicted that ranges (excluding murder) from six years in prison (aggravated assault) to probation (shoplifting). Premeditated murder is punished with ten years' imprisonment.

Burglary of an empty house by an unarmed offender has a presumptive sentence of six months; burglary of an abandoned dwelling yields a presumptive sentence of six months' probation. The sample code clearly aims at singling out violent crimes such as armed robbery for heavier penalties, while the scale for nonviolent offenders led two of the eleven Task Force members to argue that the "range . . . appears to be unrealistically low in terms of obtaining public or legislative support." Repeat offenders receive higher presumptive sentences, under specific guidelines.

The Task Force proposal produces in me an unhappily schizophrenic response. I agree with the aims and priorities of the report, at the same time that I suspect the introduction of this (or many other) reform proposals into the legislative process might do more harm than good.

ROADBLOCKS TO REFORM

Why so skeptical? Consider a few of the obstacles to making the punishment fit the crime:

1. The incoherence of the criminal law.<sup>6</sup> Any system of punishment that attaches a single sanction to a particular offense must define offenses with a morally persuasive precision that present laws do not possess. In my home state of Illinois, burglary is defined so that an armed housebreaker is guilty of the same offense as an eighteen-year-old who opens the locked glove compartment of my unlocked station wagon. Obviously, no single punishment can be assigned to crimes defined in such sweeping terms. But can we be precise? The Task Force tried, providing illustrative definitions of five different kinds of night-time housebreaking with presumptive sentences from two years (for armed burglary, where the defendant menaces an occupant) through six months' probation. The Task Force did not attempt to deal with daylight or nonresidential burglary.

The problem is not simply that any such penal code will make our present statutes look like Reader's Digest Condensed Books; we lack the capacity to define into formal law the nuances of situation, intent, and social harm that condition the seriousness of particular criminal acts. For example, the sample code provides six years in prison for "premeditated assault" in which harm was intended and two years for serious assaults where vital harm was not intended. While there may be some conceptual distinction between these two mental states, one cannot confidently divide hundreds of thousands of gun and knife attacks into these categories to determine whether a "fair and certain punishment" is six years or two.

<sup>5</sup> Morris, pp. 47-50.

<sup>6</sup> Task Force Report, pp. 55-56.

Rape, an offense that encompasses a huge variety of behaviors, is graded into three punishments: six years (when accompanied by an assault that causes bodily injury); three years (when there is no additional bodily harm); and six months (when committed on a previous sex partner, with no additional bodily harm). Two further aggravating conditions are also specified.<sup>7</sup> Put aside for a moment the fact that prior consensual sex reduces the punishment by a factor of six and the problem that rape with bodily harm has a "presumptive sentence" one year longer than intentional killing. Have we really defined the offense into its penologically significant categories? Can we rigorously patrol the border between forcible rape without additional bodily harm and that with further harm—when that distinction can mean the difference between six months and six years in the penitentiary?

I am not suggesting that these are problems of sloppy drafting. Rather, we may simply lack the ability to comprehensively define in advance those elements of an offense that should be considered in fixing a criminal sentence.

2. The paradox of prosecutorial power. A system of determinate sentences re-allocates the sentencing power shared by the judges and parole authorities to the legislature and the prosecutor. While the judge can no longer select from a wide variety of sanctions after conviction, the prosecutor's powers to select charges and to plea-bargain remain. Indeed, a criminal code like that proposed by the Twentieth Century Fund Task Force will enhance the relative power of the prosecutor by removing parole and restricting the power of judges. The long list of different offenses proposed in the report provides the basis for the exercise of prosecutorial discretion: the selection of initial charges and the offer to reduce charges (charge-bargaining) are more important in a fixed-price system precisely because the charge at conviction determines the sentence. The prosecutor files a charge of "premeditated" killing (ten years) and offers to reduce the charge to "intentional" killing (five years) in exchange for a guilty plea. In most of the major crimes defined by the Task Force—homicide, rape, burglary, larceny, and robbery—a factual nuance separates two grades of the offense where the presumptive sentence for the higher grade is twice that of the lower grade.<sup>8</sup>

This means that the disparity between sentences following a guilty plea and those following jury trial are almost certain to remain. Similarly, disparity between different areas and different prosecutors will remain, because one man's "premeditation" can always be another's "intention." It is unclear whether total disparity will decrease, remain stable, or increase under a regime of determinate sentences. It is certain that disparities will remain.

The paradox of prosecutorial power under determinate sentencing is that exercising discretion from two of the three discretionary agencies in criminal sentencing does not necessarily reduce either the role of discretion in sentence determination or the total amount of sentence disparity. Logically, three discretions may be better than one. The practical lesson is that no serious program to create a rule of law in determining punishment can ignore the pivotal role of the American prosecutor.

3. The legislative law-and-order syndrome. Two members of the Twentieth Century Fund Task Force express doubts that a legislature will endorse six-month sentences for burglary, even if it could be shown that six months is above or equal to the present sentence served. I share their skepticism. When the legislature determines sentencing ranges, it is operating at a level of abstraction far removed <sup>7</sup> The aggravating factors are (1) "the victim was under 15 or over 70 years of age" and (2) the victim was held captive for over two hours. Task Force Report, p. 59.

<sup>8</sup> The presumptive sentence for rape doubles with an assault causing bodily injury. The penalty for armed robbery where the offender discharges a firearm is three years if the offender did not intend to injure and five years if intent can be established. The presumptive sentence is two years if the weapon is discharged but the prosecutor cannot or does not establish that "the likelihood of personal injury is high." The penalty for armed burglary doubles when the dwelling is occupied. An armed burglar who "brandishes a weapon" in an occupied dwelling, receives twenty-four months while a nonbrandishing armed burglar receives eighteen. Assault is punished with six years when "premeditated" and committed with intent to cause harm. Without intent, the presumptive sentence is two years. See Fair and Certain Punishment, pp. 38-39, 56-59. Threat of force in larceny means the difference between six and twenty-four months. As I read the robbery statute, armed taking of property by threat to use force is punished with a presumptive sentence of six months on page 40 of the report, while the same behavior receives twenty-four months on pages 60-61.

from individual case dispositions, or even the allocation of resources to courts and correctional agencies. At that level of abstraction the symbolic quality of the criminal sanction is of great importance. The penalty provisions in most of our criminal codes are symbolic denunciations of particular behavior patterns, rather than decisions about just sentences. This practice has been supported by the multiple ameliorating discretions in the present system.

It is the hope of most of the advocates of determinate sentencing that the responsibilities thrust on the legislature by their reforms will educate democratically elected officials to view their function with realism and responsibility—to recognize the need for priorities and moderation in fixing punishment. This is a hope, not firmly supported by the history of penal policy and not encouraged by a close look at the operation and personnel of the state legislatures.

Yet reallocating power to the legislature means gambling on our ability to make major changes in the way elected officials think, talk, and act about crime. Once a determinate sentencing bill is before a legislative body, it takes only an eraser and pencil to make a one-year "presumptive sentence" into a six-year sentence for the same offense. The delicate scheme of priorities in any well-conceived sentencing proposal can be torpedoed by amendment with ease and political appeal. In recent history, those who have followed the moral career of the sentencing scheme proposed by Governor Edmund Brown Sr.'s Commission on Law Reform through the Senate Subcommittee on Crime can testify to the enormous impact of apparently minor structural changes on the relative bite of the sentencing system.<sup>9</sup>

If the legislative response to determinate sentencing proposals is penal inflation, this will not necessarily lead to a reign of terror. The same powerful prosecutorial discretions that limit the legislature's ability to work reform also prevent the legislature from doing too much harm. High fixed-sentences could be reduced; discretion and disparity could remain.

4. The lack of consensus and principle. But what if we could trade disparity for high mandatory sentences beyond those merited by utilitarian or retributive demands of justice? Would it be a fair trade? It could be argued that a system which treats some offenders unjustly is preferable to one in which all are treated unjustly. Equality is only one, not the exclusive, criterion for fairness.

This last point leads to a more fundamental concern about the link between structural reform and achieving justice. The Task Force asks the question with eloquent simplicity: "How long is too long? How short is too short?"<sup>10</sup> The question is never answered in absolute terms; indeed, it is unanswerable. We lack coherent principles on which to base judgments of relative social harm. Current titles of respectable books on this subject range from Punishing Criminals to The End of Imprisonment, and the reader can rest assured that the contents vary as much as the labels. Yet how can we mete out fair punishment without agreeing on what is fair? How can we do justice before we define it?

Determinate sentencing may do more good than harm; the same can be said for sharp curtailment of judicial and parole discretion. Such reforms will, however, be difficult to implement, measure, and judge. Predicting the impact of any of the current crop of reform proposals with any degree of certainty is a hazardous if not foolhardy occupation.

Not the least of the vices of our present lawless structures of criminal sentencing is that they mask a deeper moral and intellectual bankruptcy in the criminal law and the society it is supposed to serve. The paramount value of these books and reform proposals is not the "structural reforms" that each proposes or opposes. It is the challenge implicit in all current debate: no matter what the problems with particular reforms, the present system is intolerable. The problems are deeper than overcrowding or lack of coordination, more profound than the structure of the sentencing system. These problems are as closely tied to our culture as to our criminal law. They are problems of principle that have been obscured by the tactical inadequacies of the present system.

<sup>9</sup> Compare the Final Report of the National Commission on Reforms of Federal Criminal Laws (Government Printing Office, 1971) with Senate Bill 1, 94th Cong. 1st Session (1975). Among other things, the Senate bill changes a presumption in favor of probation to a presumption against probation, increases the number of felonies in the proposed code and increases the length of authorized sentences by a considerable margin. See Louis Schwartz, "The Proposed Criminal Code," Criminal Law Reporter, 17 (1975), 3203.

<sup>10</sup> Task Force Report, p. 4.

CONSUMER PROTECTION AND RECENT VERSIONS OF THE PROPOSED NEW FEDERAL CRIMINAL CODE

(By the Special Committee on Consumer Affairs)

In 1971, the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws submitted its report proposing a new federal criminal Code. A number of provisions of this draft were criticized by this Committee and others as injurious to consumer protection, principally the weakening of the mail fraud statute (18 U.S.C. 1341) by substitution of a mere larceny law.<sup>1</sup> The subsequent versions of the Code eliminated the features found objectionable in these respects.<sup>2</sup> In other respects, however, there have been wide differences of opinion in regard to varying provisions of the proposed new criminal Code.<sup>3</sup> The principal rival versions are S. 1, 94th Cong., 1st Sess. (1975) as reported by the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and H.R. 12504, 94th Cong., 2d Sess. (1976) sponsored by Representative Kastenmeier and twenty other Members of the House of Representatives as an alternative to S. 1.

S. 1 and the Kastenmeier bill are identical in regard to the principal features which would affect consumer protection. These features are aimed at remedies against deliberately fraudulent schemes of the type injurious to both the consumer and legitimate business. We recommend that these features be adopted as part of any proposed new federal criminal code, or separately in the event that action on the balance of the Code is significantly delayed because of controversies over other issues.

The principal provisions contained in both rival versions of the Code, designated by the same section numbers in both bills, are as follows:

Section 1734, entitled "Executing a Fraudulent Scheme," re-enacts the substance of the present mail fraud section (18 U.S.C. 1341) with the significant extension that it applies to the use of any interstate or foreign communication facility as well as the mails, by virtue of the jurisdiction set forth in subsection (e). This is somewhat broader than the present wire fraud statute (18 U.S.C. 1343), which refers to the transmission of sound signals in interstate commerce. Section 1734 also expressly covers "pyramid sales schemes," involving endless chain promotions whereby each victim can make money by inducing others to join in the scheme on the promise that they can do likewise, etc. Such schemes have been repeatedly held illegal under the mail fraud statute.<sup>4</sup> However, prosecution has often been difficult and consequently more specific legislation was passed by the Senate and unanimously approved by this Committee.<sup>5</sup> Pyramid sales frauds seriously injure both legitimate franchisers who are hurt by the fear generated and the public, and warrant specific prohibition.

Section 2201(c) of both bills authorizes a fine not to exceed twice the gross gain derived or the gross loss caused, whichever is greater, in case of an offense through which pecuniary gain is directly or indirectly derived, or by which personal injury or property damage or other loss is caused. This is far more realistic than existing maximum fines, such as the $1,000 maximum authorized by the present mail fraud section (18 U.S.C. 1341). Since the mail fraud statute is the principal criminal sanction against deliberately fraudulent schemes,<sup>6</sup> a realistic maximum fine is important.

<sup>1</sup> Special Committee on Consumer Affairs, "The Proposed New Federal Criminal Code and Consumer Protection," 27 Record of The Association of the Bar of The City of New York 734 (May 1972); Reform of the Federal Criminal Laws, Hearing Before the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures of the Senate Judiciary Committee, 92nd Cong., 2d Sess., Part III (B) at 1553-58, 1827-29 (1972).

<sup>2</sup> E.g., S. 1, 94th Cong., 1st Sess., § 1734 (1975); H.R. 12504, 94th Cong., 2d Sess., § 1734 (1967). See Reform of the Federal Criminal Laws, Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures of the Senate Judiciary Committee, 92nd Cong., 1st Sess., Part IX at 6479 (1973).

<sup>3</sup> See generally Association of the Bar of The City of New York, Special Committee on the Proposed New Federal Criminal Code, "The Criminal Code Proposed by the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws" (1972); "Three Versions of the Proposed New Federal Criminal Code (July 1974).

<sup>4</sup> E.g., United States v. Armentrout, 411 F.2d 60 (2d Cir. 1969) and cases cited. <sup>5</sup> S. 1939, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. (1974); S. Rept. No. 93-1114, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. (1971); "Report on Legislation To Prohibit Pyramid Sales Transactions," 30 Record of The Association of the Bar of the City of New York 209 (March 1975).

<sup>6</sup> E.g., United States v. Armentrout, supra; Zorluck v. United States, 448 F.2d 239 (2d Cir. 1971) (fraudulent health service); Adams v. United States, 347 F.2d 665, 666 (5th Cir. 1965) (misrepresentation of value of nurses training course); Williams v. United States, 268 F.2d 972, 974 (10th Cir. 1966) (misleading solicitation by telephone solicitors); Friedman v. United States, 347 F.2d 697, 699, 709 (8th Cir. 1965) (subtle physical detention until unconscionable contracts for dance lessons signed).

Part V, Chapter 40, subchapter C, section 4021 of both bills provides authority to the Attorney General to sue for injunctive relief where the antifraud provision (section 1734) is violated.<sup>7</sup> This is in accord with the unanimous recommendations of the Special Committee on the Proposed New Federal Criminal Code of this Association, which has recommended general authority for equitable relief as a sanction against criminal conduct in fraud and other cases.<sup>8</sup> Such a provision is vital to prevent continuation of serious criminal conduct detrimental to the public.<sup>9</sup>

We recommend that these important improvements in federal sanctions against deliberately fraudulent schemes be adopted as expeditiously as practical either as part of the proposed new Code if one is agreed upon, or by separate legislation if it is not.

Respectfully submitted,

Special Committee on Consumer Affairs: Rhoda H. Karpatkin, Chairperson; Dongals V. Ackerman; Sheila G. Birnbaum; David Caplowitz; Martin Cole; Evan A. Davis; Jane Detra; James D. Dougherty; Albert W. Driver, Jr.; Robert J. Egan; Carl Felsenfeld; Emilio Gautier; Richard A. Givens; John H. Hall; Leon Harris; Carol H. Katz; James J. Lack; Michael B. Maw; Sheila Rush Okpaku; Barbara B. Opotowsky; John B. O'Sullivan; David Paget; Don Allen Resnikoff; Donald K. Ross; Irving Scher; Philip Schrag; Andrew B. Schultz; Paul S. Shemin; Hon. Edward Thompson; Joseph L. Torres.

---

CITIZENS COMMITTEE FOR A JUST CRIMINAL CODE.

June 30, 1977.

JOHN L. McCLELLAN,

Chairman, Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR McCLELLAN: The enclosed is the written testimony of the Citizens Committee for a Just Criminal Code on S. 1437, the "Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977".

We thank you for the opportunity to testify in these hearings and would appreciate receiving a copy of the proceedings as soon as it is available.

Sincerely yours,

SHELVIN SINGER, Chairperson.

PREPARED TESTIMONY OF SHELVIN SINGER ON S. 1437

The Citizens Committee for a Just Criminal Code is dedicated to the single issue of securing passage of a federal criminal code which is consistent with the open and free spirit upon which American freedoms, the Constitution and the Bill of Rights are based; and to defeat all attempts by Congress to enact a repressive criminal code. The CCJCC is an outgrowth of the "Greater Chicago Town Meeting on Senate Bill One", held on January 18th, 1976, which was attended by over 500 representatives of 135 co-sponsoring groups who came to "alert and inform the community of the dangers of the bill and to encourage communication from constituents to Senators and Representatives". At this writing, 44 organizations and many more individuals officially participate in the CCJCC.

At the June 23rd, 1977 meeting of the Citizens Committee for a Just Criminal Code, guidelines and principles for the following statement on S. 1437, "The Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977", were approved for submission to the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures for consideration and action:

In 1976, the CCJCC advised participating and other interested organizations and individuals that a "bias toward authoritarian government permeates S. 1" and that an alternative code introduced in the House as H.R. 10850 "seeks to restore the balance between the rights and liberties of citizens and powers of government".

<sup>7</sup> H.R. 12504 also authorizes similar relief in certain other cases.

<sup>8</sup> The Association of the Bar of The City of New York, Special Committee on Proposed New Federal Criminal Code, the New Criminal Code Proposed by the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws 81 (1972); Three Versions of A Proposed New Criminal Code 71 (1974); Reform of the Federal Criminal Laws, Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures of the Committee on the Senate Judiciary Committee, 93d Cong., 1st Sess., Part IX at 6482-84 (1973); see also Pugach v. Dollinger, 275 F.2d 503, 507 (2d Cir. 1960).

<sup>9</sup> See Brief for the United States at 7-8, Zorluck v. United States, 448 F.2d 339, 342 (2d Cir. 1971); Comment, "Roadblocks to Remedy in Consumer Fraud Litigation," 24 Case-Western Reserve L. Rev. 144, 147 (1972).

On June 23rd, 1977, a full meeting of the CCJCC approved a statement by Professors Thomas Emerson, Vern Countryman, and Carole Goldberg<sup>1</sup> entitled, "Analysis of S. 1437, the McClellan-Kennedy Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977", in which it was succinctly stated: "We continue to support revision and codification of the Federal Criminal Code. But we do not believe that such reform should be achieved at the price of sacrificing our civil liberties."

This statement sums up the commitment and belief of the CCJCC and we urge the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures to adopt this same standard in their consideration of any bill purporting to reform and codify federal criminal laws. Despite changes from the text of Senate Bill One in the 94th Congress, we do not believe that Senate Bill 1437 meets this standard.

OUTLINE OF REPRESSIVE PROVISIONS

The Emerson/Countryman/Goldberg statement outlines twelve repressive and potentially repressive features of S. 1437 that contribute to the assessment of the likely unamendability of the bill. In brief these are: (1) the inchoate offenses which are dangerously vague and overbroad so as to criminalize innocent behavior; (2) "official secrets act" provisions in the bill as well as those left intact in present law; (3) provisions attempting to protect the executive branch of government from political opposition; (4) provisions infringing upon First Amendment rights to demonstrate and protest with regard to proceedings of the judicial branch; (5) provisions to shield military and defense operations from political opposition; (6) provisions dangerously limiting the right of assembly and demonstrations in general; (7) provisions that will increase the dangers inherent in political investigations and political surveillance; (8) provisions that would provide for overbroad extensions of police powers; (9) provisions that will endanger legitimate union activities; (10) provisions aimed at obscenity, but which are so broad as to endanger legitimate free speech; (11) reforms of the penalty and sentencing procedures that do not address the deficiencies of the present-day criminal justice system, and which remove legitimate law-making discretion from the Congress; (12) probation and parole provisions which do not conform to the reforms recommended by the Brown Commission.

A broad, national citizens movement, of which the CCJCC was a part, grew up last year to oppose S. 1 and criticize its anti-democratic provisions. This movement was instrumental in preventing passage of the bill by our Bicentennial Congress. It is apparent that some of the specific criticisms of that movement led to changes in text which were unsuccessfully proposed as amendments last year, and carried over into the text of S. 1437 this year. However, a study of the total impact of these changes reveals that in large part they are token and illusory and do not address the fundamental repressive character of the bill.

The CCJCC is especially cognizant of the failure of the drafters of the bill to propose reform in important areas of present law, particularly espionage, electronic eavesdropping, labor rights, and codification of general defenses.

The piecemeal introduction of S. 1382 and S. 1566, bills providing for an expanded federal death penalty and a legitimizing of government wiretapping abuses, betray the original mandate given to the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws (Brown Commission) to "improve the federal system of criminal justice".

AN ALTERNATIVE

The CCJCC urges that H.R. 2311, "The Federal Criminal Law Revision and Constitutional Rights Preservation Act of 1976", be considered as a basis for writing a just criminal code. The only satisfactory procedure in consideration of such omnibus legislation is to start the legislative process with an acceptable bill. H.R. 2311, a revision of H.R. 10850 in the 94th Congress, is based upon sound democratic principles and such defects as appear can be cured, or changes made, in the course of the regular legislative process.

NEED FOR FURTHER HEARINGS

The democratic process requires that bills, such as S. 1437 and H.R. 2311, which will have far-reaching consequences for the American people, should receive the fullest possible public scrutiny and input prior to passage. The five days of hearings on S. 1437 which have already taken place are woefully inadequate to meet this basic requirement. This is particularly evident in light of the fact that the majority of these hearings was devoted to a very small part of the bill, the sentencing provisions, almost totally ignoring the important civil rights and civil liberties provisions which aroused widespread public protest last year.

<sup>1</sup> Statement submitted as testimony before this Subcommittee on June 21, 1977.

The CCJCC urges the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures to hold further extensive hearings on proposals to reform and revise the criminal code. We urge that the text of H.R. 2311 be considered in these hearings as a basis for a constructive and democratic alternative to S. 1437.

---

UNIVERSITY OF COLORADO AT BOULDER, SCHOOL OF LAW,
BOULDER, COLO., JUNE 30, 1977.

KENNETH R. FEINBERG,
Office of Senator Edward M. Kennedy,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR KEN: I like the sentencing provisions of your bill very much, and you are right that plea bargaining in the federal courts is sufficiently different from that in the state courts that the concerns which I expressed in my California talk are substantially less applicable. Of course the bill does pass the most critical sentencing issues on to the Commission. I believe, however, that this approach is not only "politic" but exactly right on the merits in light of our limited knowledge.

It was good to see you, if only briefly. I wish that I could persuade you to build on the sensible base that your sentencing bill establishes by starting work on the Anti-Plea-Bargaining Act of 1982. Who knows? It might be possible to turn the criminal justice system into something vaguely rational.

Anyway, congratulations on a nice job. If you're making a list of legal academics who endorse the sentencing reforms of S. 1437, please add my name.

Sincerely yours,

ALBERT W. ALSCHULER,
Professor of Law.

---

In the United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin

75-C-493, decided May 6, 1977 (W. D. Wis.)

HAYWARD BROWN, PETITIONER

v.

NORMAN CARLSON AND GEORGE RALSTON, RESPONDENTS

---

75-C-607

HAROLD LOUIS WALLS, PETITIONER

v.

GEORGE RALSTON AND NORMAN CARLSON, RESPONDENTS

---

75-C-544

NORMAN WEAVER, PETITIONER

v.

GEORGE RALSTON AND NORMAN CARLSON, RESPONDENTS

ORDER

These are petitions for writs of habeas corpus properly before this court by virtue of 28 U.S.C. § 2241 (1970). Petitioners are currently inmates at the Federal Correctional Institution, Oxford, Wisconsin. They were sentenced pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 5010(c), which is a part of the Federal Youth Corrections Act (YCA), 18 U.S.C. §§ 5005-5026. Each petitioner alleges that Oxford is not the type of institution specified in the YCA for his confinement. In addition, petitioner Brown alleges that he has not been sent to a classification center or agency before being sent to a designated institution despite the requirements of 18 U.S.C. § 5014. Because the issue presented in each of these petitions regarding the propriety of each petitioner's confinement at Oxford is identical, I have consolidated the petitions for the purposes of this opinion. I now "dispose of the matter as law and justice require." 28 U.S.C. § 2243.

FACTS

On the basis of the entire record in each case, I find as fact those matters set forth in this section of this opinion.

On January 19, 1954, the Deputy General of the United States issued a memorandum (memo no. 64) to the clerks of the United States District Courts, the United States Attorneys, the United States Marshals, and the United States Probation Officers, informing them that the Director of the Bureau had certified, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 5012, that proper and adequate treatment facilities and personnel were available for the implementation of the YCA for the judicial districts of the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth (except for districts in Texas and Louisiana), Sixth and Seventh Circuits. The memorandum stated that the availability of facilities for commitment of youths from the remaining districts would be announced as soon as possible. The memorandum continued:

"The Federal Correctional Institution at Ashland, Kentucky, is being converted into a Classification Center and treatment facility for youth offenders as contemplated by the Act, and most youths between the ages of 18 and 22 will be committed to this institution. The National Training School for Boys, Washington, D.C., will be designated for selected youth offenders. Under exceptional circumstances and where the youth presents an unusual custody risk, the Federal Reformatory, Chillicothe, Ohio may be designated initially."

On October 4, 1956, the Attorney General issued another memorandum (memo no. 62, supplement No. 1) to the same addressees, informing them that the Director had certified that proper and adequate treatment facilities and personnel were available for the implementation of the YCA for the judicial districts of the Eighth, Ninth (except for Alaska, Hawaii, and Guam), and Tenth Circuits, and for the districts of Texas and Louisiana. The memorandum continued:

"The Federal Correctional Institution at Englewood, Colorado, is being converted into a classification center and treatment facility for youth offenders as contemplated by the Act, and most youths between the ages of 18 and 22 sentenced under the provisions of the Act from the districts listed above will be committed to this institution. Under exceptional circumstances and particularly where the youth presents an unusual custody risk, the Federal Reformatory, El Reno, Oklahoma, may be designated."

On June 16, 1975, the Director issued a policy statement (number 7300.13E) on the subject of "delegation of transfer authority." By this statement, the Director delegated to the chief executive officer of each federal facility, and to the Bureau's regional director of the appropriate region, the power to transfer offenders from one federal institution to another or to an approved non-federal facility. The policy statement included general guidelines, a statement of limitations and regulations, a statement on relationship with other governmental agencies, and a statement of procedures, to assist those to whom the transfer authority was being delegated. Also, attached to the policy statement was an appendix which provided current information as to the mission of each federal correctional institution and described the population, characteristics, commitment areas, security limitations, and significant program resources of each institution. The delegates were instructed to preserve the integrity of the missions of the respective institutions when selecting an institution as the place to which a particular offender was to be transferred.

The policy statement's guidelines provide that a "significant number of transfers will be for the purpose of placing newly committed offenders in institutions for which they more properly classify." They provide that at "an inmate's initial classification, the staff should attempt to plan a complete program for the entire period of confinement, including both institutional and post-release phases," and that in making the plan, "all of the resources of the Federal Prison System should be considered." Also, they state that generally, "transfer consideration is most appropriately given at the time of intake screening, initial classification, or at regularly scheduled interviews." They instruct that transfer should be considered when it becomes apparent that the offender's program or other needs will be best served by the programs at another facility, when the continuity of a training program or treatment program or both requires it, and when the resources of the present institution are inadequate to meet the offender's needs. It appears from the policy statement that more particular reasons for transfers may include: that the transferee institution is geographically closer to the point at which the offender is to be released; that poor institutional adjustment or attempts at escape indicate the need for closer supervision and controls; that medical attention is required or that it has been completed; that work release or study release is possible at the transferee institution; that the transferee is a community center; that overcrowding at the transferor institution requires it; or that there is a need to build up the population at the transferee institution.

With specific reference to the YCA, policy statement 7300.13E provides:

"Youth Corrections Act commitments shall be classified at the receiving institution, where the initial parole hearing will also be given. Following this hearing, or any appropriate time thereafter, the youth offender may be transferred by delegated authority to another more appropriate youth institution, without referral to the Regional Case Management Branch. Youth offenders recommended for an adult correctional facility at the time of initial classification or at any later date, shall be referred to the Regional Administrator, Case Management Branch for approval. [At this point reference is made to another portion of policy statement 7000.13E relating to the timing of transfers in relation to initial parole hearings for YCA offenders. The reference does not appear to be pertinent to the issues in the present cases.]

"Any youth offender, having once been authorized for transfer to an adult Federal Correctional Institution, may be transferred under delegated authority to some other, more appropriate, adult FCI. However, any youth offender authorized for transfer to a penitentiary by the Regional Office may not be transferred to another penitentiary under delegated authority; each transfer of this nature must be approved by the Regional Case Management Branch."

In the descriptions of individual correctional institutions embodied in Appendix A to policy statement 7300.13E, there are occasional references to YCA, but there is no systematic statement of those to which YCA offenders may or may not be committed initially or transferred. As to Oxford specifically, there is no reference to YCA; it is said that the "population is composed of medium to long term young male adults," that Oxford is not suitable for juvenile offenders and that the age range is "21 to 28 at time of commitment."

Among the 56 institutions operated by the Bureau of Prisons, there are 12 facilities which are classified either as juvenile and youth institutions (4) or as young adult institutions (8).

Apparently as a matter of operating policy, not made explicit in memorandum no. 64, memorandum no. 62 (supplement no. 1), or policy statement number 7300.13E, above, the Bureau has designated these 12 institutions as the standard institutions for initial commitment of prisoners sentenced under the YCA.

The Bureau does not maintain any institution which is used exclusively for prisoners serving YCA sentences (hereafter referred to as "YCA offenders"). At least 27 percent of the population of each Bureau of Prisons institution is composed of prisoners serving adult sentences (that is, sentences not imposed under YCA).

The Federal Correctional Institution, Oxford, Wisconsin, is classified as a medium security young adult institution. The inmates at Oxford are persons who have been committed to medium and long-term sentences, and they have an age range of 21 to 28 years at the time of commitment. The average age of all inmates at Oxford on May 5, 1976, was 24.98 years.

Among the May 5, 1976, population at Oxford, 12 percent of the inmates were serving commitments under YCA sentencing provisions and the remaining inmates were serving commitments under adult sentencing provisions. Persons serving YCA sentences at Oxford are not separated from those serving adult sentences, either in their treatment programs or in their housing units.

The Bureau does not maintain any institutions which are used exclusively as centers for initial study or classification of prisoners, but instead uses each of its institutions as the site of a classification center for prisoners designated to serve sentences there. It is an infrequent occasion on which, either before or after the admission and orientation program at such institution has been completed, the initial designation of an institution for service of sentence is changed because it has been determined that an improper designation has been made.

Upon arrival at Oxford, new inmates are placed in an admission and orientation program, which lasts approximately three weeks and which provides new inmates with information about the treatment programs available at the institution. The new inmates are given physical and dental examinations, and undergo educational and psychological testing.

At the conclusion of the admission and orientation period at Oxford, an inmate is assigned to one of three functional units there, on the basis of an evaluation by the institution's psychology department of the personality traits observed and studied by the case manager, correctional counselor, and unit officer during the admission and orientation period. The three functional units at Oxford are divided into: (1) the most manipulative and criminally oriented inmates; (2) the inmates least likely to revert to crime when released; and (3) an intermediate group of inmates. About two weeks after an inmate has been assigned to one of the three functional units, a classification interview is provided him by four staff members to discuss his treatment needs, goals, and institutional program preferences. No distinction is made between YCA and non-YCA offenders in the course of this admission, orientation, and assignment procedure.

Oxford was originally designed architecturally by the State of Wisconsin as an institution for youth offenders, and since its acquisition by the Federal Bureau of Prisons it has always been used by the Bureau as an institution for youthful offenders. The ratio of inmates to case managers is 63 to 1, and to counselors 75 to 1. At federal adult institutions, equivalent ratios on the average are 100 to 1, and 85 or 90 to 1.

The rehabilitative programs available to inmates at Oxford include adult basic education, general educational development, 11 college courses (for the spring semester of 1976) taught by the faculty of the University of Wisconsin at Baraboo, one group counselling program conducted by a clinical psychologist, additional group counselling programs, vocational training in food management leading to an associate of arts degree, vocational training in drafting, transactional analysis group therapy, a self-improvement organization seminar conducted by inmates, a self-improvement seminar conducted by outside consultants, and federal prison industries training in plastic products manufacturing and electronic cable assembly.

Inmates are not assigned to the various programs. The inmates are responsible for voluntary selection and participation in programs. YCA offenders are given no priority in these programs.

The Bureau has determined that the 12 institutions which it designates for the confinement of YCA offenders and the treatment programs made available there to YCA offenders, meet the requirements of the YCA. Based upon criteria of age, offense, prior record, security requirements, and special treatment needs, the Bureau has determined that many other offenders not sentenced under YCA, will also benefit from confinement in the same institutions, and from the opportunity to participate in the same treatment programs. Therefore, the members of the latter category (which is far more numerous than the YCA offender category) are confined in the same institutions and are given the opportunity to participate in the same treatment programs as those designated for YCA offenders.

As of spring 1976, there were approximately 2700 YCA offenders in confinement in the United States. If they were confined in a few institutions, perhaps five, from which all other offenders were excluded, it would be more difficult in some degree to maintain ties with their families and communities than it is when YCA offenders are distributed among 12 institutions.

With respect to administrative remedies, although the records in these cases are not explicit, the parties appear to agree, and I find, that the administrative procedures available to these petitioners are as they are described in Cravatt v. Thomas, 399 F. Supp. 956, 961 (W.D. Wis. 1975).

75-C-493

On July 30, 1975, petitioner Brown was convicted of possession of: 3 unregistered destructive devices (Molotov cocktails); destruction by explosion of a Planned Parenthood clinic in Detroit, Michigan; and causing personal injury to a doctor. On the date of conviction, petitioner Brown was 20 years old. He has no other adult convictions. He has served one juvenile commitment for breaking and entering, and has been arrested several times. On July 30, 1975, he was sentenced by the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan to an 8-year commitment "for treatment and supervision pursuant to Title 18, U.S.C. § 5010(c)."

After being temporarily detained one day at the Oakland County Jail, Pontiac, Michigan, and eight days at the Federal Correctional Institution, Milan, Michigan, petitioner was transported to the Federal Correctional Institution, Oxford, which was designated by the Bureau of Prisons as the place for service of petitioner's sentence. At no time prior to incarceration at Oxford was petitioner committed to any classification center or agency for study and analysis.

Upon arrival at Oxford, petitioner was placed in the institution's admission and orientation program. At the conclusion of that program petitioner was placed in the functional unit provided for those inmates considered to be most manipulative and criminally oriented.

Petitioner Brown has participated in several educational programs since his arrival at Oxford. He has not been separated from inmates serving adult sentences in either his treatment programs or in his housing unit.

75-C-544

Petitioner Weaver was found guilty of armed bank robbery. On the date of conviction, petitioner Weaver was 23 years old. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Eastern Division, found that he was "suitable for handling under the Federal Youth Correction Act as a young adult offender, Title 18, Section 4209, U.S.C." and on June 18, 1975, sentenced him to a term of imprisonment of eight and one-half years, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 5010(c).

On July 1, 1975, petitioner Weaver was delivered to the Federal Correctional Institution at Milan, Michigan. On August 20, 1975, he was transferred to the Federal Correctional Institution, Oxford. Petitioner has not been separated from inmates serving adult sentences in either his treatment programs or his housing unit.

75-C-607

On April 7, 1975, petitioner Walls was sentenced by the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 5010(c). On April 17, 1975, he was delivered to the Federal Correctional Institution at Oxford, Wisconsin. He has not been separated from inmates serving adult sentences in either his treatment programs or his housing unit.

OPINION

In 75-C-493 and 75-C-544 respondents contend that since petitioners have not exhausted their administrative remedies, their claims should not be considered by this court at this time.<sup>1</sup>

In the absence of a statutory requirement, the application of the exhaustion doctrine to a particular case is within the court's discretion. Cravatt v. Thomas, 399 F. Supp. 956, 968 (W.D. Wis. 1975). The more closely the particular administrative procedures resemble court procedures, the more forceful the argument that the aggrieved party should be required to exhaust those procedures. Inmate grievance procedures differ from court procedures in significant respects. Accordingly, respondents in cases such as these must "make a showing of particularized need" that an inmate should be required to exhaust the inmate grievance procedures. Cravatt at 969. Respondents have failed to make this showing.

Respondents make two somewhat contradictory arguments. The first is that since the petitioners are seeking a transfer to another institution which is more suitable for service of their sentence, the issue is factual, and the Bureau should be given the opportunity to consider whether the facts of each petitioner's particular case warrant a transfer. This argument views the petitions too narrowly. They are not simply claims by members of the general population of the federal correctional institutions system that in their particular cases one existing correctional institution is more suitable than another, but rather they are claims that respondents are failing to confine them as YCA offenders in the kind of institution, and to afford them the kind of programs, which Congress directed. Even were I to view petitioners' claims so narrowly, respondents have made no showing that the procedures available to petitioners would serve as adequate fact-finding vehicles, or that the administrative record would provide any assistance in the course of subsequent judicial inquiry.

<sup>1</sup> I conclude that the controversies in these cases satisfy the criteria for ripeness set forth in Cravatt v. Thomas, 399 F. Supp. 956, 965-966 (W.D. Wis. 1975).

Respondents' second argument is that even though this court might generally be reluctant to require exhaustion absent a more formal administrative procedure, a more formal procedure is not necessary in these cases because the "thrust of petitioner[s]' contentions before the Court are directed not at factual determinations by the Bureau in [their] cases[s] but rather at the legality of a general Bureau policy." But if the issue in question in these cases is purely legal, a requirement of exhaustion is inappropriate. Cravatt, supra, at 970.

I conclude that exhaustion of the Bureau's grievance procedures should not be required in these cases.

A. The statutory scheme

Section 4082 of Title 18, which was enacted long before 1950, when the YCA became law, provides in part:

"(a) A person convicted of an offense against the United States shall be committed, for such term of imprisonment as the court may direct, to the custody of the Attorney General of the United States, who shall designate the place of confinement where the sentence shall be served.

"(b) The Attorney General may designate as a place of confinement any available, suitable, and appropriate institution or facility, whether maintained by the Federal Government or otherwise, and whether within or without the judicial district in which the person was convicted, and may at any time transfer a person from one place of confinement to another."

The Attorney General has delegated to the Director of the Bureau of Prisons the power to designate places of confinement conferred by § 4082. 28 C.F.R. § 0.96(c).

The YCA sets forth for the discretionary use of federal judges a system for the sentencing and treatment of eligible young offenders. As defined in 18 U.S.C. §§ 5006(e) and (f), a "youth offender" is a person under the age of twenty-two at the time of conviction, and a "committed youth offender" is one who is sentenced pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §§ 5010(b) or (c):

"(b) If the court shall find that a convicted person is a youth offender, and the offense is punishable by imprisonment under applicable provisions of law other than this subsection, the court may, in lieu of the penalty of imprisonment otherwise provided by law, sentence the youth offender to the custody of the Attorney General for treatment and supervision pursuant to this chapter until discharged by the Commission as provided in section 5017(c) of this chapter; or

"(c) If the court shall find that the youth offender may not be able to derive maximum benefit from treatment by the Commission prior to the expiration of six years from the date of conviction it may, in lieu of the penalty of imprisonment otherwise provided by law, sentence the youth offender to the custody of the Attorney General for treatment and supervision pursuant to this chapter for any further period that may be authorized by law for the offense or offenses of which he stands convicted or until discharged by the Commission as provided in section 5017(d) of this chapter."

Sections 5017(c) and (d) provide:

"(c) A youth offender committed under section 5010(b) of this chapter shall be released conditionally under supervision on or before the expiration of four years from the date of his conviction and shall be discharged unconditionally on or before six years from the date of his conviction.

"(d) A youth offender committed under section 5010(c) of this chapter shall be released conditionally under supervision not later than two years before the expiration of the term imposed by the court. He may be discharged unconditionally at the expiration of not less than one year from the date of his conditional release. He shall be discharged unconditionally on or before the expiration of the maximum sentence imposed, computed uninterruptedly from the date of conviction."

Under certain circumstances a federal judge may also sentence young adult offenders (offenders between the ages of 22 and 25, inclusive, at the time of conviction) pursuant to the provisions of the YCA. 18 U.S.C. § 4216.

Section 5014 states, in part:

"Classification studies and reports

"The Director shall provide classification centers and agencies. Every committed youth offender shall first be sent to a classification center or agency. The classification center or agency shall make a complete study of each committed youth offender, including a mental and physical examination, to ascertain his personal traits, his capabilities, pertinent circumstances of his school, family life, any previous delinquency or criminal experience, and any mental or physical defect or other factor contributing to his delinquency. In the absence of exceptional circumstances, such study shall be completed within a period of thirty days."<sup>2</sup>

Section 5015(a) states:

"(a) On receipt of the report and recommendations from the classification agency any Director may—

"(1) recommend to the Division [now to the Parole Commission] that the committed youth offender be released conditionally under supervision; or

"(2) allocate and direct the transfer of the committed youth offender to an agency or institution for treatment; or

"(3) order the committed youth offender confined and afforded treatment under such conditions as he believes best designed for the protection of the public."

Section 5011 provides:

"TREATMENT

"Committed youth offenders not conditionally released shall undergo treatment in institutions of maximum security, medium security, or minimum security types, including training schools, hospitals, farms, forestry and other camps, and other agencies that will provide the essential varieties of treatment. The Director shall from time to time designate, set aside, and adapt institutions and agencies under the control of the Department of Justice for treatment. Insofar as practical, such institutions and agencies shall be used only for treatment of committed youth offenders, and such youth offenders shall be segregated from other offenders, and classes of committed youth offenders shall be segregated according to their needs for treatment."

Section 5012 provides:

"No youth offender shall be committed to the Attorney General under this chapter until the Director shall certify that proper and adequate treatment facilities and personnel have been provided."

Other pertinent provisions of the YCA will be referred to in the following discussion.

B. The congressional history

The legislative history reveals that the YCA was the outgrowth of studies which concluded that the period of life between 16 and 22 years of age is the time when special factors operate to produce habitual criminals.<sup>3</sup> Then existing methods of dealing with criminally inclined youths were found inadequate in avoiding recidivism.

"By herding youth with maturity, the novice with the sophisticate, the impressionable with the hardened, and by subjecting youth offenders to the evil influences of older criminals and their teaching of criminal techniques, without the inhibitions that come from normal contacts and counteracting prophylaxis, many of our penal institutions actively spread the infection of crime and foster, rather than check it." H.R. Rep. No. 2979, 81st Cong., 2d Sess. (1950) (hereinafter H.R. Rep. No. 2979): 1950 U.S. Code Cong. Service, p. 3985.

As a result of this dissatisfaction with existing methods of dealing with young offenders, Congress established a system of sentencing and treatment designed to:

"... promote the rehabilitation of those who in the opinion of the sentencing judge show promise of becoming useful citizens, and so will avoid the degenerative and needless transformation of many of those persons into habitual criminals. . . . The underlying theory of the bill is to substitute for retributive punishment methods of training and treatment designed to correct and prevent antisocial tendencies. It departs from the mere punitive idea of dealing with criminals and looks primarily to the objective idea of rehabilitation." H.R. Rep. No. 2979; 1950 U.S. Code Cong. Service, pp. 3983, 3985.

<sup>2</sup> At the time each of these petitioners was sentenced, the remainder of Section 5014 read: "The agency shall promptly forward to the Director and to the Division a report of its findings with respect to the youth offender and its recommendations as to his treatment. At least one member of the Division, or an examiner designated by the Division, shall, as soon as practicable after commitment, interview the youth offender, review all reports concerning him, and make such recommendations to the Director and to the Division as may be indicated." These provisions have since been modified to provide that the agency report go to the Parole Commission and that the youth offender receive a parole interview promptly after commitment.

<sup>3</sup> Although the YCA has been amended a number of times since 1950, the amendments are not relevant to the issues presented in these cases.

Thus, by enactment of the YCA, Congress hoped to provide a better method for treating certain young offenders to be selected by the sentencing judges, and thereby to rehabilitate these offenders. Dorszynski v. United States, 418 U.S. 424, 433 (1974). Rehabilitation is the "underlying theory" of the YCA (H.R. Rep. No. 2979; 1950 U.S. Code Cong. Service, p. 3985). This House committee report, as well as Senate Report No. 1180, 81st Congress, 1st Session, 1949, emphasize the objective of rehabilitation as contrasted with what were perceived as traditional goals in the confinement of non-YCA offenders. They include pointed discussion of the programs of individualized treatment embodied in the English Borstal system, on which the YCA was said to have been modeled.

C. The merits

The general and pronounced pattern in the federal correctional scheme is that sentencing judges decide whether an offender is to be imprisoned, but "imprisonment" is left undefined by Congress and by the court's judgment. The word is defined, and the everyday reality of life in confinement is determined administratively by the Bureau of Prisons. The Bureau decides where the offender is to be confined and to what regimen he or she is to be subjected. If changes in the places or the forms of confinement are to occur, either for a particular offender during a particular term or for offenders generally throughout the system, the decisions are to be made by the Bureau.

The YCA represents a sharp departure from this pattern of remarkably wide administrative discretion. The harsh question for the court in the present cases is how to respond when it appears that an executive agency is failing to obey a legislative command. Congress has said rather bluntly that offenders aged 18 through 25, sentenced by courts under YCA, are to be segregated from other offenders for purposes of classification and then treatment. The fact appears to be that the Bureau is not segregating them.

When the question is put so baldly, the answer may appear easy. It is not. The reason it is not is that the Bureau has been left to struggle with painful anomalies. The source of these anomalies is that the Congressional departure from the general pattern of administrative discretion is limited to a single group of offenders. The result is that the Bureau is called upon to reconcile a relatively rigid institutional arrangement reflecting a relatively specific correctional theory, imposed by the Congress as to one group of offenders, with a highly flexible institutional arrangement responsive to a variety of correctional theories administratively developed for all other offenders. It is not for me to evaluate the wisdom of either the general pattern of administrative discretion or the YCA departure from the pattern. But some comments on the anomalies arising from their co-existence may illuminate the issue.<sup>4</sup>

A core difficulty lies in assigning a workable meaning to the term "rehabilitation," and thus in prescribing the ingredients of a rehabilitative treatment program.

There is no doubt that in enacting the YCA, Congress had in mind some rather specific kind of program. Under the provisions of §§ 5010(b), 5017(c) and 5020, if one is convicted of a crime for which the maximum sentence is two years, for example, and if the sentencing judge chooses to impose sentence under the YCA, one may be confined for as long as six years. The hoped for rehabilitation obviously comprises "the quid pro quo for a longer confinement but under different conditions and terms than a defendant would undergo in an ordinary prison." Carter v. United States, 306 F. 2d 283, 285 (D.C. Cir. 1962). In accord, Cunningham v. United States, 256 F. 2d 467, 472 (5th Cir. 1958); Sero v. Oswald, 351 F. Supp. 522, 526, n. 4 (S.D.N.Y. 1972). Also, under § 5010(d), if the offender is under 22 years of age at the time of conviction, the court must impose a YCA sentence unless the court affirmatively finds that the offender "will not derive benefit from treatment under subsection (b) or (c). * * *" And under § 4216, if the offender is 22 years of age or older but not yet 26, the court may impose a YCA sentence if it affirmatively finds reasonable grounds to believe that the offender "will benefit from the treatment provided under the [YCA] * * *" These provisions of the YCA would be inexplicable had not Congress intended <sup>4</sup> My reservations about the very institution of prisons, and my belief that they lie as a dark continent in federal constitutional law, have been expressed, Morales v. Schmidt, 340 F. Supp. 544 (W.D. Wis. 1972). But in the present cases, there is no challenge to the federal constitutionality of any particular attribute of confinement, such as censorship, limits on visitations, and so on.

the treatment of YCA offenders to differ from what it understood to be the prevailing treatment of non-YCA offenders, young and old.

Yet the term "treatment" which appears throughout the Act, §§ 5010(b), 5010(e), 5010(d), 5010(e), 5011, 5012, 5014, 5015(a), 5020 5025(a), 5025(b), and 5025(e), is defined no more precisely than "corrective and preventive guidance and training designed to protect the public by correcting the antisocial tendencies of youth offenders * * *" § 5003(f). If the Federal Correctional Institution at Oxford housed only YCA offenders, and if the program or programs offered were identical to those now offered to all inmates there, I could not conclude that the Bureau was failing to provide the "treatment" required by the YCA. No doubt, there is a wide array of rehabilitatively oriented treatment programs, all of which would fall within the range permitted by the YCA. I will refer to such programs in this opinion as "YCA-type" treatment programs.<sup>5</sup>

A second difficulty in dealing with this Congressional intervention with respect to only one segment of the population of federal correctional institutions is related to the first. The legislative history of the YCA suggests that in 1950 Congress viewed the federal correctional institutions as a monolith of retribution in which it was necessary to carve legislatively a niche of rehabilitation for a certain category of young offenders. I doubt that this view was accurate in 1950, but if so, it is no longer accurate. For some time, the theory and practice of corrections have been in a highly volatile state. See, generally, for example, Norval Morris, The Future of Imprisonment (University of Chicago Press, 1974) ; II Corrections Magazine, March 1976, at 3-8, 21-26. Considerable flexibility has developed within the federal correctional institutions—as well as within many state institutions—with varying degrees of emphasis upon retribution, rehabilitation, specific and general deterrence, and simple physical incapacitation, with yet more variety in techniques and methods intended to achieve one or more of these goals. Although controversy persists particularly whether rehabilitation can be coerced during physical confinement, and although the quantity and quality of rehabilitative opportunities available on a voluntary basis leave much to be desired, nevertheless such opportunities in the form of education and counseling and psychiatry, among others, do exist for older as well as younger offenders, for those with much criminal experience as well as for those with little. I have no doubt that there remain in the federal correctional system certain physical facilities and certain treatment programs that would fall clearly outside the permissible range for YCA offenders generally. But the current reality is that YCA-type physical facilities and YCA-type treatment programs are being afforded to many confined offenders who were not sentenced under YCA. It would surely be unreasonable to assume, and so to construe the YCA, that Congress intended to bar from YCA-type treatment programs all offenders not sentenced under the YCA.

This brings us to a third and related difficulty: that the responsibility for deciding whether certain offenders should participate in YCA-type treatment programs has been divided between sentencing judges and the Bureau.<sup>6</sup> It is true that for those under 22 years at the time of conviction, and for those 22 or older but under 26 years, the responsibility for the initial decision is assigned to the sentencing judges, and that if the sentencing judges decide affirmatively, the Bureau may not disregard, initially at least, the judicial command that the offenders participate in YCA-type treatment programs. But even for those under 22 whom the sentencing judges have decided will not derive benefit from YCA-type treatment programs (§ 5010(d)), the Bureau is not foreclosed from providing the opportunity to participate in such programs. This is more clearly true for those 22 or older but under 26 as to whom the sentencing judges have refrained from affirmative findings that the offenders will benefit from YCA-type treatment programs (§ 4216). It is yet more clearly true of those for whom sentencing judges are powerless to prescribe YCA-type treatment programs, namely, all those 26 or older at time of conviction. During the period of confinement, the Bureau has abundant opportunity to observe from offenders' attitudes and performances whether participation in YCA-type treatment programs is indicated. In any given case, this opportunity for the Bureau persists long after the brief moment at which the sentencing judge makes his or her evaluation. Whether similar or divergent standards are used by sentencing judges, on the one hand, and the Bureau, on the other, in discharging the divided responsibility for decision has not been shown and is a question probably not amenable to empirical determination. The same may be said of a comparison of the degrees of care exercised in the judicial and administrative processes. But it is reasonable to suppose that the standards, vague as they no doubt are, are highly similar, and it seems necessary to presume that an adequate degree of care marks both the judicial and the administrative processes.

<sup>5</sup> The uncertainties concerning the kind of treatment program called for by the YCA are sharply revealed in the several opinions by members of the court in Harrin v. United States, 445 F. 2d 675 (D.C. Cir. 1971).

<sup>6</sup> This discussion of the comparative roles of the sentencing courts and the Bureau is limited to cases in which there is to be physical confinement. Nor does it reach the matter of the opportunity under the YCA for the setting aside of convictions, § 5021.

Thus, absent the enactment of the YCA, it would appear that the following would be a rational arrangement: The Bureau would classify initially all committed offenders 18 years of age or older, and would reexamine their classifications from time to time, in order to identify those for whom YCA-type treatment programs, that is, rehabilitatively oriented programs, should be provided. The Bureau would determine the content of such programs and the physical facilities within which they would be provided, and would make such changes in manner and places of treatment as might appear necessary or desirable from time to time. With respect to the grouping of those deemed eligible for YCA-type treatment, the Bureau would exercise its discretion. If the Bureau considered it sound theory and practice to avoid "herding youth with maturity, the novice with the sophisticate, the impressionable with the hardened," as Congress apparently believed in 1950, the Bureau could develop standards to effect such segregation. However, it is not graven in stone that confinement exclusively with one's peers in age is more effective or desirable than confinement in an institutional community whose membership more closely reflects the age variations encountered outside correctional institutions. If the Bureau considered it sound, it could effect integration among the young and the mature, the novice and the sophisticate, the impressionable and the hardened, or, more sensibly, it could attempt evaluations of the quality of the maturity, sophistication, and hardness of particular offenders in determining the groups within which they should reside.<sup>7</sup>

Against the background I have described and in view of the specific language of the YCA, there must be decided the central question in this case: how much discretion remains in the Bureau in the cases of offenders committed by sentencing judges under the YCA (to whom I will continue to refer as "YCA offenders")? More particularly, the questions are: (1) whether a YCA offender must be the subject of special classification procedures; and (2) whether, once it has been determined through the classification procedures that he or she is to be physically confined, the YCA offender must be segregated from non-YCA offenders for treatment.

(1) Classification.

Following the decision by a sentencing judge to commit a young person for treatment under the YCA, the Bureau is called upon by the Act to engage in a special classification process in special classification centers or agencies. This classification study is clearly required to precede a decision by the Director as to the appropriate treatment in a particular case and, therefore, clearly to precede the designation of the particular institution within which the offender is to be confined. § 5015(a). From Memo No. 64 dated January 19, 1954 and Memo No. 62 (supplement no. 1) dated October 4, 1956, it appears that the Bureau shared this understanding in the years closely following upon the enactment of the YCA. The institution at Ashland, Kentucky, was "being converted into a classification center and treatment facility as contemplated by the Act," as was the institution at Englewood, Colorado, and "most youths between the ages of 18 and 22 will be committed to" one or the other of these institutions, depending upon geography. The administrative history between about 1956 and about 1975 is unrevealed in this record,<sup>8</sup> but it does reveal that there is presently no compliance, save only that there is operative some generalized Bureau decision that one or another of a group of 12 institutions will be designated as the initial place of confinement and the place at which the classification process will occur in the cases of YCA offenders, and that none of another group of 44 institutions will be so designated.

<sup>7</sup> The present record does not reveal the quality of the maturity, sophistication, or hardness of the particular non-YCA offenders who are presently confined with the petitioners at Oxford. Petitioners have presented their cases on the flat contention that no such integration is permissible, without regard to the characteristics of the particular non-YCA offenders with whom they are confined.

<sup>8</sup> Some difficulty has arisen from the apparent absence of a continuing and formalized procedure for the certification by the Director that proper and adequate YCA treatment facilities and personnel are in place. § 5012. See Robinson v. United States, 474 F.2d 1085, 1090-1091 (10th Cir. 1973); United States v. Lowery, 335 F. Supp. 519 (D.D.C. 1971).

I do not suggest that this record supports a finding that the designation of the place of confinement is not performed YCA case by YCA case, or that it is not performed sensitively and intelligently. But the record does compel a finding that the designation does not involve or await the special classification studies for YCA offenders provided for in § 5014, and apparently intended in 1954 and 1956 to be performed at Ashland and Englewood when they had been converted into "classification centers . . . as contemplated by the Act."

Conceivably the 12 institutions currently designated as the places of confinement for YCA offenders could be viewed as the modern counterparts of the YCA classification centers to which Ashland and Englewood were to be converted. Thus, rather than only two such YCA classification centers, 12 would now be available. But this theory would be vindicated only if it were shown that each of the 12 centers performs a special YCA classification process for the YCA offenders, after which each YCA offender is promptly committed for confinement to that one of the 12 institutions most appropriate in his or her case. It is true that in policy statement 7300.13E, issue June 16, 1975, on the subject of interinstitutional transfers of all offenders, YCA and otherwise, there is a suggestion that the initial designation is to be viewed as rather tentative—as simply a designation to a "classification center," so to speak, physically located within a particular institution at which the classification process is to be engaged in, followed by a determination as to which one of the 56 institutions would be most appropriate and by a prompt transfer thereto. But no showing has been made in this record that this is how the classification and designation system actually works nationwide or at Oxford, or that there is anything special about how it works in the cases of YCA offenders either nationwide or at Oxford. Rather, it appears that at Oxford, for YCA offenders and non-YCA offenders alike, the admission and orientation program looks to a decision as to which one of the three functional units at Oxford is appropriate to the case.

It is plain that the classification procedure afforded YCA offenders as a category is not distinct and segregated from that afforded many non-YCA offenders as another category. This lack of discrimination between the two categories was not contemplated by Congress when it enacted the YCA.<sup>9</sup>

(2) Treatment.

Subject only to the qualifying phrase "insofar as practical," Congress has expressly commanded the Director to designate, set aside, and adapt institutions and agencies to be used only for treatment of YCA offenders, and to segregate youth offenders from other offenders. § 5011. From this language it appears that Congress views segregation itself as an essential element of the treatment to be afforded those offenders committed by sentencing judges under the YCA.

But there is not a single Bureau institution which is used only for the treatment of YCA offenders. Whether there is any institution housing both YCA offenders and non-YCA offenders within which these two categories are segregated is not clear from this record, but it is clear that they are not segregated at Oxford.

Faced with this apparent discrepancy between the statutory command and the actual practice, I understand respondents to argue, first, that despite § 5011 the Bureau enjoys unlimited discretion in deciding the places of confinement and the treatment programs for all offenders, YCA and otherwise; and, second, that in fact, "insofar as practical," institutions and agencies have been designated, set aside, and adapted for use only for treatment of YCA offenders, and YCA offenders are segregated from other offenders.

It is true that 18 U.S.C. § 4082(b) confers broad authority upon the Attorney General to designate "any available, suitable, and appropriate institution or facility" for the confinement of persons committed to his or her custody by sentencing courts and for the transfer of such persons from institution to institution, and that the Attorney General has delegated this authority to the Director. 28 C.F.R. § 0.96(e). Also, § 5015(a) of the YCA itself provides that upon receipt of the report and recommendation from the classification agency the Director may: recommend to the Commission that the offender be conditionally released; transfer the offender to an agency or institution for treatment; or order the offender "confined and afforded treatment under such conditions as he believes best designed for the protection of the public." Section 5011 of the Act provides that treatment shall be undergone "in institutions of maximum security, medium security, or minimum security types, including training schools, hospitals, farms, forestry and other camps, and other agencies that will provide the essential varieties of treatment."

<sup>9</sup> It should be noted that with respect to classification procedures, as distinct from treatment, the Act contains no saving provision to the effect that there be segregation only insofar as practical.

I am aware, also, that in Sonnenberg v. Markley, 289 F.2d 126 (7th Cir. 1961), it was held that the choice of the place of confinement of a person committed to the custody of the Attorney General under the Juvenile Delinquency Act (18 U.S.C. § 5031 et seq.) lay so wholly within the discretion of the Attorney General that a penitentiary might be chosen. However, at that time the Juvenile Delinquency Act contained no requirement that, following a finding of delinquency, juvenile delinquents were to be confined separately from other persons. In 1974, the Act was amended to require such segregation. 18 U.S.C.A. § 5039 (1976).<sup>10</sup>

Familiar rules of construction require that the authorization contained in the broad sweep of § 4082(b) be considered limited by the later enacted YCA which was directed to a particular category of offenders. Also, the broad language of §§ 5015(a) and 5011 must be construed within the narrowing and interrelated provisions of YCA which so clearly confine the Director's exercise of discretion as to choice of institutions and choice of treatment.

I conclude that the Bureau does not enjoy complete discretion in designating the place of confinement of YCA offenders. On the contrary, subject to an important qualification, § 5011 plainly requires that institutions and agencies be designated, set aside, adapted, and used only for the treatment of YCA offenders, and that YCA offenders be segregated from non-YCA offenders.

Therefore, the ultimate question must be answered: whether the Bureau's practice is permissible because the words "insofar as practical" appear in § 5011, which reads:

"TREATMENT

"Committed youth offenders not conditionally released shall undergo treatment in institutions of maximum security, medium security, or minimum security types, including training schools, hospitals, farms, forestry and other camps, and other agencies that will provide the essential varieties of treatment. The Director shall from time to time designate, set aside, and adapt institutions and agencies under the control of the Department of Justice for treatment. Insofar as practical, such institutions and agencies shall be used only for treatment of committed youth offenders, and such youth offenders shall be segregated from other offenders, and classes of committed youth offenders shall be segregated according to their needs for treatment."

It is not easy to find a construction of § 5011 which gives effect to its arrangement and its punctuation, and also gives common sense effect to "insofar as practical."

One conceivable construction is easy to discard. In this opinion I have discussed at length several anomalies resulting from a Congressional departure, with respect to a certain group of offenders, from the dominant and general pattern of remarkably wide administrative discretion. But it cannot be supposed reasonably that by inserting the words "insofar as practical" in § 5011, Congress intended to permit the Bureau to decide that, by reason of these anomalies or by reason of added costs in facilities and staff, the entire statutory scheme of segregation is impractical and then simply to refrain, wholesale, from implementing the scheme. So to construe the Act would be to infer Congressional willingness that its major command be nullified by the executive. That is, it would be to infer Congressional acquiescence in executive recalcitrance similar to the practice of executive impoundment of Congressionally appropriated funds, a practice so vigorously and recently criticized by Congress. Such a radical construction must yield to a more reasonable view.

The last sentence of § 5011, which opens with "insofar as practical" consists of three clauses: (1) "such institutions and agencies shall be used only for treatment of committed youth offenders," (2) "and such youth offenders shall be segregated from other offenders," (3) "and classes of committed youth offenders shall be segregated according to their needs for treatment." Clause (3) appears to have no bearing on the present cases. Two initial questions concerning clauses (1) and (2) are: whether "insofar as practical" modifies only (1) or both (1) and (2); and whether (1) and (2) can be rescued from redundancy.

<sup>10</sup> In Coats v. Markley, 200 F. Supp. 687 (S. D. Ind. 1962), it was held, with heavy reliance upon Sonnenberg, supra, that in the choice of confinement of a person sentenced under the YCA, the Attorney General enjoys discretion as complete as that the Attorney General enjoyed under the Juvenile Delinquency Act, as the latter act read when Sonnenberg was decided. In Coats, the court made no reference to the explicit provisions of the YCA calling for segregated confinement. I consider it necessary to attempt a fresh analysis.

I conclude that "insofar as possible" modifies both (1) and (2); there seems no reason to attach this safety valve to the requirement that the institutions and agencies be used only for YCA offenders, but to withhold it from the requirement that YCA offenders be segregated from other offenders.

The apparent redundancy between (1) and (2) is more difficult to solve. If a group of YCA offenders are housed in an institution used only for the treatment of YCA offenders, it follows that they have been segregated from non-YCA offenders. But I am obliged to give meaning to each clause and thus to avoid redundancy, if I reasonably can, and this seems possible. That is, I conclude that if and when it is not practical to house one or more YCA offenders in an institution or agency used only for the treatment of YCA offenders, and the said YCA offender or YCA offenders are housed with non-YCA offenders, then, insofar as practical, the two categories of offenders are to be segregated from one another within the institution or agency in which they are both housed. An example might be a training program in a particular skill which the Bureau desires to make available both to YCA offenders and to non-YCA offenders and for which unusually expensive equipment and high salaried instructors are required. Practical considerations, particularly the conservation of funds, might dictate that a single physical facility be maintained for this particular training program, and that there be brought successively to that facility for the necessary training periods "classes" consisting of some YCA offenders and some non-YCA offenders. While it might be impractical for the two categories to attend segregated classes and laboratories, it might nevertheless be practical to segregate them for all other purposes within the single facility during the training period.

I have undertaken to analyze the last sentence of § 5011. There remains the need to synthesize that last sentence with the two sentences which precede it.

The first sentence reads: "Committed youth offenders not conditionally released shall undergo treatment in institutions of maximum security, medium security, or minimum security types, including training schools, hospitals, farms, forestry and other camps, and other agencies that will provide the essential varieties of treatment." In this sentence, no mention is made of segregation of YCA offenders from non-YCA offenders, and the references to maximum security institutions and to hospitals, for example, may be thought to imply non-segregation.

The second sentence reads: "The Director shall from time to time designate, set aside, and adapt institutions and agencies under the control of the Department of Justice for treatment." Obviously, this must be read in conjunction with the first sentence, and it seems to imply that from the universe of all the "institutions of maximum security, medium security, or minimum security types, including training schools, hospitals, farms, forestry and other camps, and other agencies," then existing or later to come into existence, the Bureau was to designate certain ones, set them aside for YCA offenders, and adapt them for treatment of YCA offenders. Read together, the first two sentences imply at least some degree of segregation of YCA offenders because they would be housed within those institutions and agencies set aside and adapted for their treatment.

Then, of course, the first clause of the third and final sentence makes explicit what was implicit, namely, that those institutions and agencies designated and set aside from the all-encompassing universe of institutions and agencies, and adapted by the Bureau for the treatment of YCA offenders, are to be used only for that purpose, "insofar as practical."

From all this, I can conclude only that Congress has commanded that within a universe consisting of all the institutions and agencies housing all offenders sentenced to confinement by federal courts, there was to be created and there is now to be maintained a smaller universe consisting of those institutions and agencies designated, set aside, and adapted for the treatment of the YCA offenders. And I can conclude only that the institutions and agencies within this smaller universe are to be used exclusively for the treatment of YCA offenders. To speak more concretely, I conclude that the YCA requires that the 2500 or so YCA offenders in confinement (to use the spring 1973 figure) are to be distributed within a segregated network of maximum security, medium security, and minimum security institutions, some of which (presumably the minimum security institutions) would be hospitals, farms, and forestry camps, and some of which (perhaps maximum and medium, as well as minimum security institutions) would be training schools, and some of which (with provision for whatever degree of security may be appropriate) would be yet "other agencies that will provide the essential varieties of treatment."

However, this segregation of YCA offenders within the smaller universe of YCA institutions and agencies need be maintained only "insofar as practical."

It is conceivable that because Congress envisaged a transitional period in the wake of enactment of the YCA, the phrase "insofar as practical" was inserted in part to ease the transition. But it is unlikely that this was the exclusive reason, particularly in light of § 5012, which defers the time at which judges might commence to commit offenders under YCA until the time at which the Director should certify "that proper and adequate treatment facilities have been provided."

I conclude that the presence of the phrase "insofar as possible" in § 5011 means that the Bureau is free to depart from the statutory norm of segregation occasionally, in the presence of unusual and unforeseen circumstances, and for only so long as may be necessary. I construe it to mean, also, that the Bureau is free to depart from the statutory norm for longer periods of time, even semi-permanently, with respect to limited numbers of YCA offenders. One example of such an exception might be the need for an unusually expensive and specialized training facility of the sort I have mentioned. Another example might be that if experience reveals that at any given time a number of YCA offenders require confinement under maximum security conditions, but that this number is consistently small (50 to 100, for example), the Bureau would be free to house them in existing maximum security institutions in which non-YCA offenders are also housed; provided, however, that within such maximum security institutions, the YCA offenders are segregated from the other offenders "insofar as practical."

By 1977, of course, any reasonable transition period under YCA is long past. In the present cases there has been no showing that the departures from a scheme of segregation are only occasional, that they are compelled by unusual circumstances, or that they have been brief. Nor has there been a showing that in the particular case of any of these petitioners, the Bureau has concluded, either at the time of the initial designation of a place of confinement or subsequently by reason of his behavior during confinement, that it is necessary that he be specially expected from a scheme of segregation. On the contrary, the record shows that the Bureau has made non-segregation the continuing norm.

I conclude that in the case of petitioner Brown, the Youth Corrections Act has been violated by the Bureau's failure, prior to the designation of Oxford as his place of confinement, to perform a separate and distinct classification procedure in the kind of classification center contemplated by the Act. In the case of each of the three petitioners, I conclude that the Youth Corrections Act has been violated, and is being violated, by confinement in an institution not used only for youth offenders committed under the Act and by confinement in which petitioners are unsegregated from offenders not committed under the Act.

Order

It is ordered that the petition for habeas corpus in each of the above-entitled cases is granted, and that:

1. Petitioner Brown in 75-C-493 is to be released unconditionally on the 91st day following entry of this order unless, prior to that time, he is placed in a center used solely for the classification of offenders committed by sentencing courts pursuant to the Youth Corrections Act; and unless he is thereupon accorded a procedure separately and distinctly designed for the classification of offenders so committed; and unless, if the Director then orders him to be confined, he is then confined in an institution used only for offenders so committed.

2. Petitioner Walls in 75-C-607 is to be released unconditionally on the 91st day following entry of this order unless, prior to that time, he is confined in an institution used only for offenders committed by sentencing courts pursuant to the Youth Corrections Act.

3. Petitioner Weaver in 75-C-544 is to be released unconditionally on the 91st day following entry of this order unless, prior to that time, he is confined in an institution used only for offenders committed by sentencing courts pursuant to the Youth Corrections Act.

Entered this 6th day of May, 1977.

By the Court:

JAMES E. DOYLE,
District Judge.

STATEMENT OF THE ASSOCIATED BUILDERS AND CONTRACTORS, INC., PRESENTED TO THE SENATE JUDICIARY SUBCOMMITTEE ON CRIMINAL LAWS AND PROCEDURES

My name is Gerald Oliver. I am President of the Associated Builders and Contractors, Inc. I am pleased to have this opportunity to present this statement on behalf of the Association. We wish to thank the Subcommittee for the opportunity to present our views on S-1437, a bill to revise the Federal Criminal Code.

To begin, the Subcommittee and the sponsors of this legislation are to be credited for a most worthy purpose in their efforts to revise and reform the Federal Criminal Code. Specifically, we will restrict our remarks to Chapter 15, offenses involving individual rights (Sub-Chapter A) and Chapter 17, offenses involving property (Sub-Chapters A and C). Property destruction during a labor dispute has been a matter of long concern to our members. At present, uncontrolled willful labor violence can result in many thousands of dollars damage to property at a factory, construction site or elsewhere but in the absence of bombing or as an objective of robbery or extortion, there is no crime under federal law. This situation arises from an unfortunate Supreme Court decision in the Enmons case in which the Court ruled in a 5-4 decision that federal law (Hobbs Act) did not pertain to violent destruction of an employer's property if the damage was done to promote "legitimate collective bargaining objectives". This decision has left employers almost totally vulnerable to parties who resort to violent destruction of property to win collective bargaining demands or to drive an employer out of business or to compel him to discontinue certain business connections.

It is appropriate here to point out the history of this labor unrest. In the late 1960's wage settlements in the construction industry were exorbitant. Inflation became rampant and, in response, owners sought alternative methods of construction. For the most part, this meant using Merit Shop and open shop contractors. And, as more and more work went to these firms, the Building Trades Unions became increasingly frustrated and numerous violent confrontation took place. These incidents most often occur on the actual construction site but at times spill over into nearby areas where construction workers reside and commute to work. The violence has been carried out by both large groups of persons and by a handful of individuals. The nature of the violence ranges from destruction of the physical site and to equipment and machinery.

Employers who became the targets of this violence sought protection from the courts but found little relief. The National Labor Relations Act as now written does view labor violence as an unfair labor practice but the remedy is not one of criminal prosecution. An employer can sue for damages but such action is long after the fact and, more importantly, the Act fails to provide immediate relief to restore order on a job site. In this same vein, state and local laws have proved equally ineffective for several reasons. The very nature of labor unrest often divides community feeling and tiers of law enforcement back passing most often result in nonenforcement. Moreover, labor violence usually occurs in such locations and either at night or with such size and ferocity that local and state officials are unable to cope with them.

In short, there is an immediate and justifiable need for federal involvement to provide adequate protection for employers, employees and the general public. Surely, it cannot be the will of Congress to exclude from federal law terrorists and racketeers who hide out in unions and engage in supposedly legitimate labor activities. Willful property destruction is in every sense of the word a means of extortion and we are pleased to see that it is inter alia, the intent of S-1437 to reverse the Enmons decision.

In this connection, we believe there are certain aspects of S-1437 that should be clarified to provide adequate federal jurisdiction relating to property destruction. Since this element of violence is the main one to prescribe, we propose that the word "violence" be substituted for "force or the threat of force" under Section 1506 so the section would read: "A person is guilty of an offense if, by violence or threat of violence, he intentionally obstructs or interferes with: 1) peaceful picketing employees in the course of a bona fide labor dispute affecting wages, hours, or conditions of labor; or 2) the exercise by employees of rights of self-organization or collective bargaining." We also propose that unions do not cloak extortionate demands under the guise of an objective which can be legitimately sought through collective bargaining. Therefore while we support the inclusion of Section 1722, we propose that the affirmative defense to prosecution under Subsection (a)(1) be amended to read: "that the threatened or feared injury was an ordinary, customary, or reasonably likely result of conduct flowing from an incidental to peaceful picketing or other concerted activity in the course of a bona fide labor dispute."

We believe it is questionable under Sub-Chapter A of Chapter 17 (damages by arson and explosion) whether construction site projects would be covered when "the property that is the subject of the offense is used in actively affecting interstate or foreign commerce, and is damaged by a destructive device." It appears arguable that property under construction is not "used in an activity affecting interstate or foreign commerce." A motel, for instance, is used in an activity affecting interstate commerce, but might not be considered as used when "under construction." This should be clarified. Moreover, a potential loophole arises by the use of language which calls for damage "by a destructive device." Suppose a valuable piece of machinery is set on fire by hand rather than a bomb, or mechanical device. Would the law not apply because no destructive device were used? We feel such activity should be covered.

Under the sections covering extortion, it appears to be the unmistakable intent to reverse the Enmons decision while at the same time preserving the right to peaceful picketing. We wish to point out that the Enmons case did not involve a construction site but rather an operating utility and question whether a reversal of that decision would necessarily make it applicable to construction site property.

Finally, we note that construction work would be covered for extortion under S-1437 if to any degree the job received federal financing. This form of protection is highly desirable but should be broadened to protect a building which is 100 percent privately financed.

In conclusion, we believe that S-1437 is a move in the proper direction. If the courts give it favorable interpretation it could substantially solve the problem with respect to damage to property. However, we strongly urge that the Subcommittee favorably view the strengthening amendments suggested by this Association.

STATEMENT OF GLENN KING, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF CHIEFS OF POLICE (IACP)

I appreciate the opportunity to submit a statement to the Senate Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures to express the beliefs of the International Association of Chiefs of Police (IACP) regarding the Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977.

The IACP is a membership organization with more than 11,000 members from sixty-four nations. The majority of its membership, however, is from the United States and is directly affected by the proposed legislation.

The IACP supports the enactment of S. 1437 with the exceptions and suggestions that I will detail in my testimony. These exceptions and suggestions are necessary to enable state and local law enforcement agencies to protect the citizens of our country.

As you know, the purpose of S. 1437 is to establish justice in the context of a federal system by:

(a) Defining and providing notice of conduct that indefensibly causes or threatens harm to those individuals or public interests for which federal protection is appropriate;

(b) Prescribing appropriate sanctions for engaging in such conduct that will:

(1) Deter such conduct;

(2) Protect the public from persons who engage in such conduct;

(3) Assure just punishment for such conduct;

(4) Promote the correction and rehabilitation of persons who engage in such conduct; and

(c) Establish a system of fair and expeditious procedures for:

(1) Investigating such conduct by means that will lead to the identification of persons engaged in such conduct;

(2) Determining the guilt or innocence of persons charged with engaging in such conduct; and

(3) Imposing sanctions upon persons found guilty of such conduct.

If enacted S. 1437 would codify all the criminal law provisions contained in the different titles of the United States Code into one orderly title within the Code.

The IACP supports the purpose of S. 1437. If enacted, S. 1437 would provide remedies for the confusion present in the varying statutes. S. 1437 would establish, for the first time, an integrated Code of virtually all statutes and rules concerning federal crimes and the federal criminal justice process. Probably the single most important contribution is the setting forth of the law in a far more comprehensive, orderly, and simple manner than the existing statutes.

EFFECT ON STATE AND LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT

The bill as drafted does nothing to impair the availability or terms of any civil or administrative remedy or penalty. Court powers remain unrestricted in civil proceedings to compel compliance with an order, decree, process, writ or rule, or to direct compensation to a complainant for loss.

Federal jurisdiction over an offense includes jurisdiction over those offenses committed in the general, special, and extraterritorial jurisdictions of the United States. General jurisdiction covers that territory within the United States. Special jurisdiction covers such territories as government-owned lands or land leased to the government; organized territories or possessions of the United States, Indian lands; or an island, rock or key that, at the discretion of the President, appertains to the United States; and a facility for exploration or exploitation of natural resources constructed or operated on or above the outer continental shelf. The federal government also maintains jurisdiction over the special maritime jurisdiction and the special aircraft jurisdiction.

Extraterritorial jurisdiction includes jurisdiction over an offense committed outside the general or specific jurisdictions if the victim or intended victim is a United States official, federal public servant outside the United States for the purpose of performing his official duties, or the offense is treasonous in nature.

The proposed legislation provides that Federal jurisdiction over an offense does not generally preclude a state or local government from exercising its concurrent jurisdiction to enforce its laws applicable to the same criminal conduct. Therefore, state and local governments would maintain their present power to enact and enforce laws to protect the health, safety, and welfare of their citizens. The exception is that the United States Attorney General may order exclusive jurisdiction over an offense where the victim is a United States official, a foreign official or a member of his immediate family, or an official guest of the United States and the crime is specified in Chapter 10 or Chapter 16 of the bill (serious crimes against the person).

The IACP supports this concept in that the Association believes it is vital for effective law enforcement to permit state and localities flexibility in enforcing laws and protecting the health, safety, and welfare of their citizens.

CULPABLE STATE OF MIND DEFINED

Chapter 3 sets forth and defines the culpable states of mind required to be proved with respect to conduct. The terms used to describe the different states of mind are "intentional," "knowing," "reckless," and "negligent" and variants thereof.

The International Association of Chiefs of Police supports this Chapter in that by defining the culpable state of mind and the requisite proof for conviction, much of the confusion that currently exists will be clarified.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Federal crimes would be completely reclassified under S. 1437. The death penalty as punishment for conviction for certain crimes would be abolished and replaced with life imprisonment. However, the penalty provisions of 49 U.S.C. 1472(1) (1) (B) (Aircraft Piracy) will remain in place. Under the aforementioned section anyone who commits or attempts to commit aircraft piracy and if the death of another person results from the commission or attempted commission of the offense, the offender may be punished by death or by imprisonment for life.

The IACP vehemently opposes the abolishment of the death penalty. We believe that the abolition of capital punishment would endanger the lives of many innocent victims of criminal depredations. The Association believes that the death penalty should be imposed for premeditated murder, murder committed during the perpetration of a crime, and the killing of a law enforcement officer or corrections officer during the performance of his or her duties.

Under the reclassification of crimes there would be five classes of felony, three classes of misdemeanor, and one class of infraction. The classifications are set forth as follows:

CLASSIFICATION OF FELONIES

Class A felony, punishable by life imprisonment or any period of time, possibility of fine up to $100,000.

Class B felony, punishable by imprisonment for not more than 25 years; possibility of fine up to $100,000.

Class C felony, punishable by imprisonment for not more than 12 years; possibility of fine up to $100,000.

Class D felony, punishable by imprisonment for not more than 6 years; possibility of fine up to $100,000.

Class E felony, punishable by imprisonment for not more than 3 years; possibility of fine up to $100,000.

CLASSIFICATION OF MISDEMEANORS

Class A misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment for not more than 1 year; possibility of fine up to $10,000.

Class B misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment for not more than 6 months; possibility of fine up to $10,000.

Class C misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment for not more than 30 days; possibility of fine up to $10,000.

CLASSIFICATION OF INFRACTION

An offense punishable by imprisonment for not more than 5 days; possibility of fine up to $1,000.

The legislation eliminates the Federal Youth Offenders Act as well as the Narcotics Addict Rehabilitation Act. Both of these pieces of legislation provide for special treatment of certain qualifying individuals. Through these acts certain individuals were afforded leniency by the courts.

The IACP supports the elimination of these acts. While both of the acts were needed and appropriate at the time of their passage, subsequent experience while operating under their provisions has raised significant questions as to whether they should be continued. Specifically, most individuals involved in the administration of Criminal Justice, including judges, prosecutors, attorneys, and correctional administrators, have abandoned the so-called "medical model", based upon research and experience which clearly indicate that change in a criminal offender cannot be coerced. This does not mean, however, that offenders should not be provided the maximum opportunity to change their pattern of behavior through the provision of educational, vocational and other kinds of correctional programs.

ELIMINATION OF GOOD TIME CREDITS

Another significant provision of S. 1437 is the elimination of good time credits which operate under present law to reduce the time the offender must serve if he is not previously released on parole. Provision is made for parole release, but the elimination of good time will mean that if an offender fails to gain parole release, he will serve the entire sentence imposed.

The IACP supports the elimination of good time credits. However, the Association does see a need for an incentive to the offender. Consequently, the IACP supports the parole provision of Subchapter D of Chapter 38—Post Sentence Administration.

We believe that it must also be noted that under present law, good time operates in a significant percentage of cases to reduce the actual time served by offenders. Thus the "hard time" served under the maximum statutory sentences provided by S. 1437 without good time may be longer than the "hard time" served under the longer termed sentence under present law. Consequently, we believe that judges should take this into account in sentencing offenders under the proposed legislation.

SENTENCING COMMISSION

Probably one of the most significant provisions of S. 1437 is the establishment of a Sentencing Commission to promulgate sentencing guidelines for federal district court judges. As drafted the legislation provides that the Sentencing Commission will consist of nine members chosen by the Judicial Reform Commission. The Sentencing Commission will be charged with establishing sentencing guidelines to eliminate the indiscriminate discrepancies that exist in sentences currently imposed by federal judges. In determining the particular sentence to be imposed under Section 2003(a), the court must consider the nature and circumstances of the offense and the history and characteristics of the defendant; what punishment will afford adequate deterrence as well as protect the public from further crimes of the defendant; the seriousness of the offense; and the educational, vocational, and medical needs of the offender that will be most effective in dealing with the offender.

The court may impose a sentence outside the guidelines promulgated by the Sentencing Commission. At the time of sentencing the court must state, in open court, the general reasons for the imposition of a particular sentence, and, if the sentence is outside the range described by the Sentencing Commission, the reason for the imposition of a sentence outside such range.

After the court hands down a sentence, either the defendant or the government may seek review. In other words, if the defendant feels that the imposition of a particular sentence is outside the commission's guidelines, i.e., the sentence is too harsh, he may seek appeal; or if the government feels that the imposition of a particular sentence is too lenient, it may seek appeal.

The court, in imposing a sentence on a defendant who has been found guilty of an offense causing bodily injury, property damage or other loss, may order, in addition to the sentence, the defendant to make direct restitution to a victim of the offense in an amount and manner set by the court. Although there is a similar provision under current law, the court may only order direct restitution if the defendant is placed on probation.

The International Association of Chiefs of Police supports the concept of a Sentencing Commission. The association believes that the irrational variation in sentence under present law raises questions as to the rationality of the Federal criminal justice system. However, the Association believes that the statute should prescribe certain members for the Commission. These prescribed members include:

1. The Attorney General of the United States;
2. The head of the Corrections System;
3. The head of the Parole System;
4. Representatives from the law enforcement arms of the Department of Justice and the Treasury Department; and
5. Four Federal Judges.

The aforementioned composition would provide the balance required to establish workable sentencing guidelines in that it would provide representation from all aspects of law enforcement.

PAROLE INELIGIBILITY

If the court imposes a term of imprisonment it must designate the portion, if any, of the term to be served as a term of parole ineligibility. The authorized term of imprisonment that the court may require to be served prior to the eligibility for parole is any term found appropriate by the court in light of the totality of the circumstances surrounding the commission of the crime. However, no term of parole ineligibility may extend into the last one tenth of the sentence.

Upon motion of the Director of the Bureau of Prisons "for extraordinary and compelling reasons," the court "may reduce an imposed term of imprisonment or term of parole ineligibility to the time that the defendant has served in imprisonment." This provision expands the present law which permits the court, upon motion of the Bureau of Prisons, to make an offender immediately eligible for parole by reducing any minimum term to the time the defendant has served.

The IACP supports the concept of parole ineligibility. However, the association opposes the restriction against extending parole ineligibility to the last tenth of the sentence.

The association supports the concept providing the Director of the Bureau of Prisons authority to motion the court if he feels, for compelling reasons, that an injustice has been done.

MANDATORY SENTENCING

S. 1437 provides for an indeterminate sentence system with the maximum term indicated. Except for Trafficking in an Opiate, section 1811 and Using a Weapon in the course of a Crime, section 1823, no mandatory prison terms are provided. Under section 1811 the court may not sentence the defendant to probation but must sentence him to a term of imprisonment of not less than 2 years and to a term of parole ineligibility of not less than 2 years, with the sentence to run consecutively to any other imprisonment imposed.

Section 1823(a) (1) provides if a person is guilty of an offense and displays or uses a firearm or a destructive device, the court may not sentence the defendant to probation but must sentence him to a term of imprisonment of not less than 2 years with a term of parole ineligibility of 2 years. If a person is guilty of possessing a firearm or destructive device during the commission of a crime, the court must sentence the defendant to a term of imprisonment of 1 year with a term of parole ineligibility of one year. Again, as in the offense of Trafficking in an Opiate, the sentence must run consecutively to any other sentence imposed.

The IACP supports the concept of mandatory minimum prison sentences. The association believes that mandatory minimum sentences are the best method of dealing with the above-mentioned crimes. We believe that mandatory sentences for these serious crimes is the only method to provide the protection our citizens deserve and the deterrence necessary to minimize the commission of these offenses.

MULTIPLE SENTENCE

Section 2304, Multiple Sentences of Imprisonment, provides that multiple terms of imprisonment run concurrently unless the court orders that the terms are to run consecutively. This codifies the presumption of current sentencing laws where a subsequent Federal sentence is imposed on an offender presently serving a prior Federal sentence. However, the reverse is true when a Federal sentence is imposed upon an offender presently serving a State sentence. In this case, if the Federal judge remains silent, case law and the application of statutory law dictate that the Federal sentence will be computed to run consecutively.

Section 2304(c) provides that the aggregate of consecutive terms of imprisonment to which a defendant may be sentenced may not exceed such term as is authorized by the proposed legislation for an offense one grade higher than the most serious offense for which he was found guilty.

The IACP supports the concept of multiple sentences. It is not clear, however, whether this aggregate sentencing limitation applies only to sentences imposed at the same time, or for any subsequent sentencing situation. If the limitation is applied to any subsequent sentencing situation, offenders who commit a series of crimes for which the maximum penalty is no greater than that for which they are presently incarcerated would achieve a certain degree of unwarranted immunization from possible criminal sanctions. The most they could get in terms of a new prison term is the difference between their present sentence and the maximum penalty for the next grade higher. If the limitation is only intended to apply to sentences imposed at the same time, we are not opposed to this provision. But, we do urge that the aforementioned ambiguity be cleared up.

JUVENILES

Under S. 1437, the provisions for placing committed juveniles are much more restrictive than present law. Under current law, "no juvenile committed to the custody of the Attorney General may be placed or retained in an adult jail or correctional institution in which he has regular contact with adults incarcerated because they have been convicted of a crime or are awaiting trial on criminal charges." S. 1437 proposes that a juvenile cannot be held "in an official detention facility in which an adult convicted of an offense or awaiting trial on a charge of an offense is held in official detention."

The IACP opposes this provision. It places an unnecessary burden on the states to provide separate detaining facilities. Many States simply do not have juvenile facilities for these individuals. If these juveniles cannot be placed in a State facility, and this provision will significantly reduce the number of State facilities available, we may be forced to establish one or two Federal juvenile facilities, which means that most of the offenders placed there will be thousands of miles away from their families.

TREATMENT OF NARCOTICS

Pursuant to section 1813(a), it is no longer a Federal offense for a person to possess 10 grams or less of marihuana.

The IACP opposes the decriminalization of marihuana. We are trying to hold the line State by State and we believe that the decriminalization of marihuana will severely weaken the position of the States.

S. 1437 also modifies current law in the regulation of opiates. The proposed legislation sets forth different grades of offenses for the possession of an opiate, depending on quantity, as well as different grades of offenses for trafficking in an opiate. If an individual is found guilty of possessing less than 100 grams of an opiate, he is guilty of a class A misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment for not more than 1 year. If an individual is found guilty of possession of 100 grams or more, he is guilty of a class D felony, punishable by imprisonment for not more than 6 years.

Under current law there is no delineation drawn as to the quantity possessed. An individual found guilty of possession of an opiate shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not more than 1 year for the first offense and 2 years for subsequent offenses.

S. 1437 differentiates the possible penalties for trafficking in an opiate based on the quantity of the opiate trafficked in. If an individual is found guilty of trafficking in less than 100 grams of an opiate he is guilty of a class C felony, punishable by imprisonment of not more than 12 years. Whereas, if an individual is convicted of trafficking in 100 grams or more of an opiate, he is guilty of a class B felony, punishable by imprisonment of not more than 25 years.

Under current law if an individual is found guilty of trafficking in an opiate, he may be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not more than 15 years regardless of the quantity involved.

RECOMMENDATION

The IACP supports the concept treating traffickers of large quantities of opiates more severely than traffickers of small quantities. However, due to the seriousness of the aforementioned offense, and the societal problems as a result of trafficking in opiates, the IACP believes that the quantity stipulation of 100 grams is much too high. The association believes that the quantity stipulation for both possession and trafficking in an opiate should be 30 grams. Thirty grams of pure heroin has a value of $2,000. Only then will society be able to reach the level of deterrence necessary to reduce the occurrences of this offense.

Furthermore, the IACP believes that with the possession of 30 grams or more of an opiate that the intent to traffic need not be proved; but rather may be presumed, relieving the Government of its burden of proof. We believe that it is evident that an individual possessing 30 or more of an opiate does not intend to keep the substance for his personal use.

RIOTING

Subchapter D of chapter 18 provides a uniform set of offenses for rioting, with increased penalties for rioting in a prison setting. Section 1381 provides that it is a class D felony for a person, during a riot in a correctional facility, to urge participation in, lead, give commands, instructions or directions in furtherance of the riot. It is a class A misdemeanor for persons who participate in a riot within a correctional facility.

The IACP supports the special penalty provision for prison rioting. The association feels however, that the disparity between leading a riot and participating in a riot is unwarranted. The association, therefore, suggests that the penalty for participating in a riot should be raised to a class E felony.

Chapter 10 pertains to the crimes of Criminal Attempt, Criminal Conspiracy, and Criminal Solicitation. Section 1001 defines Criminal Attempt as an offense where the actor is acting with the State of mind otherwise required for the commission of a crime and he intentionally engages in conduct that, in fact, amounts to more than mere preparation for the commission of the crime.

Criminal attempt is an offense of the same class as the crime attempted, except that, if the crime attempted is a class A felony, the attempt is a class B felony.

Criminal conspiracy is defined in section 1002 as an offense where one person agrees with one or more persons to engage in conduct, the performance of which would constitute a crime or crimes, and he or one of the persons in fact engages in any conduct with intent to effect any objective of the agreement.

Criminal conspiracy is an offense of the same class as the most serious crime that was an objective of the conspiracy, except that if the most serious crime that was the objective of the conspiracy is a class A felony, the conspiracy is a class B felony.

Criminal solicitation, a new crime under S. 1437, is defined in section 1003. A person is guilty of such an offense if, with intent that another person engage in criminal conduct, and, in fact, under circumstances strongly corroborative of that intent he commands, entreats induces or otherwise endeavors to persuade such other person to engage in such conduct.

The offense of criminal solicitation is of the class next below that of the crime solicited.

The IACP supports the concept of the addition of the offense of criminal solicitation in that it enables law enforcement agencies to prosecute individuals more readily than the current conspiracy statutes. Under current conspiracy statutes if a higher up in an organized crime syndicate orders a person in the lower ranks to commit a crime and that individual is arrested prior to commission of the crime, there is no conspiracy in that no agreement exists between the two parties to the crime. Whereas, with the new offense of criminal solicitation the higher up may be reached for ordering another to commit a crime. This addition compliments the range of conspiracy.

S. 1437 substantively leaves the current law provisions for the interception of a private oral communication and immunity intact. The IACP wholeheartedly supports these practices. We, in law enforcement, realize the need for such operations and capabilities in the fight against crime. Without the ability to intercept communications and offer immunity much of law enforcement's intelligence capabilities to detect crime prior to the commission as well as solving crime after commission will be greatly hindered.

With the aforementioned exceptions and suggestions, the International Association of Chiefs of Police urges passage of S. 1437. There is an urgent need for reform in the present structure of the law. S. 1437 embodies the needed reform and its passage will significantly reduce the irrationality of the present system, and will enable the federal sentencing system to function swiftly and with more certainty. Passage of S. 1437 would result in a fair and workable Federal Criminal Code. Furthermore, the enactment of the proposed legislation would give law enforcement agencies at all levels the guidelines and direction necessary for efficient law enforcement.

Attached you will find a chart that the IACP drew up comparing maximum allowable sentences under current law with those provided under S. 1437.

Thank you.

The following is a chart comparing maximum punishment for major crimes between S. 1437 and existing Federal law. It must be noted that under Section 1823 of S. 1437 (Using a Weapon in the Course of a Crime) a mandatory prison sentence, of not less than 2 years to run consecutively to any other term of imprisonment, is provided if a person displays or otherwise uses a firearm or destructive device during the commission of a crime. Consequently, an additional penalty may be tacked onto many of the offenses listed below.

Crime	Present law	S. 1437
Murder 1.....	Death (life) invalidated by decisional law.	Life, number degrees, includes felony murder.
Murder 2.....	Life.....
Voluntary manslaughter.....	10 yr.....	12 yr.
Involuntary manslaughter.....	3 yr.....	Negligent homicide, 6 yr.
Mayhem.....	7yr.....	Punishable as maiming, 12 yr.
Assault with a deadly weapon.....	5 yr.....	Punishable as menacing, 1 yr plus; provided weapon was firearm sec. 1823 applies.
Assault with a deadly weapon on Federal officer or employee.	10 yr.....	Same as above no special provision may be punished as aggravated battery if serious bodily injury, 6 yr.
Kidnapping.....	Life.....	Life if actor does not voluntarily release victim alive, 12 yr in other cases.
Aircraft hijacking.....	20 yr.....	25 yr.
Aircraft hijacking with death resulting.	Death.....	Death penalty provisions of 49 U.S.C. 1472(i)(1)(B) apply.
Rape.....	Death invalidated by decisional law, life.	12 yr. Sec. 1823 may apply if firearm involved in threat.
Arson:
Unoccupied structure.....	5 yr.....	12 yr.
Occupied structure.....	20 yr.....	Do.
Burglary.....	do.....	Do.
Robbery:
Person.....	15 yr.....	Do.
Bank.....	20 yr.....	Do.
Drug offenses:
Trafficking in an opiate.....	15 yr.....	If 100 g or more or distributing to a minor—25 yr—12 yr in other cases.
Possession of an opiate.....	1 yr.....	Less than 100 g 1 yr more than 100 g 6 yr.
Trafficking in drugs.....	15 yr.....	12 yr if drug is a schedule I or II drug (21 U.S.C. 812) 6 yr if other than above or less than 300 g of marihuana; 3 yr if drug is a schedule IV drug 1 yr if drug is schedule V.
Possession of a drug.....	1 yr.....	1 yr if substance is other than opiate or marihuana.
Trafficking in marihuana.....	5 yr.....	6 yr if more than 300 g, 1 yr if between 100 and 300 g, 6 mo if less than 100 g.
Possession of marihuana.....	1 yr.....	No offenses if 10 g or less, 30 days or $500 fine, if more than 10 g.

CITIZENS COMMISSIONS ON HUMAN RIGHTS.

Washington, D.C., July 15, 1977.

DEAR SENATOR: This submission is presented to the members of the Judiciary Committee in regards to Sub-Chapter B of Chapter 36, Senate Bill 1437, involving offenders with mental disease or defect.

We are concerned with the provisions of this Sub-Chapter which, if enacted, would empower the State to deny American citizens basic freedoms guaranteed by the United States Constitution and provided for under the Nuremberg Code and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Under this bill, a person could be arrested and held involuntarily in a mental institution for up to 60 days to determine competency to stand trial. If found incompetent, the person could then be held for up to a year in the mental hospital without ever being convicted of a crime. And if the person is found not guilty by reason of insanity, he or she could be detained indefinitely, even beyond the sentence prescribed by the courts.

As will be shown in this submission, "clear and convincing" evidence from the fields of psychology, psychiatry and law enforcement technology does not exist to allow for the accurate assessment of mental states or the predicable alleviation of the symptoms of mental illness. Yet under Sub-Chapter B even the suspicion of mental illness becomes grounds for forcible mental incarceration by the State without due process of law.

For this reason, we recommend that Chapter 36, Sub-Chapter B be deleted from Senate Bill 1437 and legislation be initiated which conforms to the human rights codes mentioned above, and in addition, by providing effective rehabilitation programs for those who are found to be guilty of committing a crime.

We respectfully request that our submission be brought to the attention of the Judiciary Committee with the full expectation that this nation's founding principles of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness shall not be abridged.

Sincerely,

KATHLEEN WILTSEY,
Regional Director.

A SUBMISSION REGARDING SENATE BILL 1437 CHAPTER 36, SUBCHAPTER B,
JULY 15, 1977

PART I: A BRIEF OUTLINE OF CHAPTER 36, SUBCHAPTER B, OF S. 1437

This Subchapter is entitled "Offenders with Mental Disease or Defect." It outlines the procedures involved in (1) the Determination of Mental Competency to Stand Trial, (2) the Determination of the Existence of Insanity at the Time of the Offense, (3) the Hospitalization of a Person Acquitted by Reason of Insanity, (4) the Hospitalization of a Convicted Person Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect, & (6) the Hospitalization of a Person Due for Release but Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect.

This subchapter would include any individual, whether they have a history of violence, insanity, criminality, or not.

Section 3611 of this Subchapter states that at any time after the commencement of a prosecution for an offense, and before the sentencing of the defendant, a motion can be made by the attorney for the government that a hearing be held to determine the mental competency of the defendant to stand trial. If the court grants this motion, the defendant must undergo a psychiatric examination for the purposes of determining his mental competency to stand trial. This psychiatric examination may include commitment to a mental institution for up to 60 days. This commitment takes place before the defendant has been proven guilty, before he has been considered violent or dangerous, before he has been considered mentally incompetent to stand trial, and before he is afforded a hearing.

The next step is for the hearing to be conducted for the purpose of determining the mental competency of the defendant to stand trial. If the defendant is found to be "mentally incompetent to the extent that he unable to understand the nature and consequences of the proceeding against him or to assist properly in his defense," he may be committed to a mental institution for up to one year, with or without his consent. This additional commitment takes place before the defendant is found to be guilty or even violent or dangerous. It is purely a result of his assumed ignorance of the legal consequences facing him at that time.

After this commitment, the defendant may be given another hearing, at which time, if he is found to be "presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of serious bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another," he may be committed to a mental institution for an indefinite period of time. This commitment takes place before the defendant has been found to be guilty of any crime.

Section 3612 of this subchapter is concerned with the procedures to be followed if a motion is made that a psychiatric examination be conducted for the purpose of determining if the defendant was insane at the time of the offense. If this issue of insanity is raised, the defendant is to be found either (1) guilty, (2) not guilty, or (3) not guilty by reason of insanity.

Section 3613 of this subchapter deals with the procedure for hospitalization of a person found "not guilty by reason of insanity" as described above. Again, this involves a psychiatric examination which may include commitment to a mental institution for up to 60 days.

Following this is a hearing and then disposition of the defendant which may include commitment to a mental institution for an indefinite period of time. This procedure, again, is carried out before the defendant is found to be guilty of any crime.

Sections 3614 and 3615 of this subchapter deal with the hospitalization of convicted persons and imprisoned respectively. The procedures are similar to those carried out in the previous sections, requiring psychiatric examination, hearing, and disposition of the person.

Section 3616 of this subchapter deals with persons due for release but found to be suffering from a mental disease or defect at the time of release. The procedure followed in this case is again similar to that described in the above sections, including a psychiatric examination, hearing, and then disposition.

Section 3617 of this subchapter explains the general provisions for this Subchapter. The definition for "insane" is given in this section and is stated as "a mental disease or defect of a nature constituting a defense to a federal criminal prosecution." The psychiatric examinations, psychiatric reports, and the hearings are explained in full in this section, as well as specific responsibilities and rights of the significant parties involved in the proceedings. This is the last section in Subchapter B of Chapter 36.

PART II: THE FUNCTION OF THE PSYCHIATRIST UNDER S. 1437, CHAPTER 36, SUBCHAPTER B, VERSUS PSYCHIATRIC QUALIFICATIONS TO CARRY OUT THIS FUNCTION.

The psychiatrist or clinical psychologist under the authority of S. 1437, has an important function in determining the past, present, and future mental state of the individual under consideration. This determination is arrived at through a psychiatric examination. The individual, if he is not already incarcerated in prison or in a mental hospital or other facility, may be committed to a mental hospital for up to 60 days for the purpose of this examination. The final paragraph of section 3617 reads as follows:

"For the purpose of an examination pursuant to an order under section 3611, 3612, 3613, or 3614, the court may commit the person to be examined for a reasonable period, but not more than sixty days, to the custody of the Attorney General for placement in a suitable mental hospital or another facility designated by the court as suitable."

The commitment and examination procedure should be considered in light of the possible consequences of forced commitment and in light of statistical evidence of psychiatrists ability to determine the mental state of individuals. To commit an individual to a mental institution for any purpose, on the word of a psychiatrist amounts to a blatant denial of the right to freedom and due process. Evidence of this is presented in a study by D. L. Rosenhan<sup>1</sup>, professor of psychology and law at Stanford University. In this study, 8 sane individuals had themselves committed to 12 mental institutions in order to determine if the staff could detect their sanity. During their entire stay (length of commitment ranged from 7 to 52 days; the average being 19 days) none of the "pseudo-patients" were detected as being sane by the staff or psychiatrists.

This same study also exemplified the detrimental effects of commitment to a mental institution. Dr. Rosenhan describes some of the observations of the "psendopatients":

"The data I have presented does not do justice to the rich daily encounters that grew up around matters of depersonalization and avoidance. I have records of patients who were beaten by staff for the sin of having initiated verbal contact. During my own experience, for example, one patient was beaten in the presence of other patients for having approached an attendant and told him, 'I like you.' Occasionally, punishment meted out to patients for misdemeanors seemed so excessive that it could not be justified by the most radical interpretations of psychiatric canon. Nevertheless, they appeared to go unquestioned. Tempers were often short. A patient who had not heard a call for medication would be roundly excoriated, and the morning attendants would often wake patients with, 'Come on, you ————, out of bed!'"

Rosenhan concludes: "The consequences to patients hospitalized in such an environment—the powerlessness, depersonalization, segregation, mortification, and self-labeling—seem undoubtedly countertherapeutic."

The beatings of patients by staff and countertherapeutic atmosphere in the institutions is not unique to the Rosenhan study. In California in January 1976, just prior to reports of many suspicious patient deaths in the State hospitals there, the Commission on California State Government Organization and Economy published a report<sup>2</sup> after their review of the State Department of Health facilities. They described what they found on one ward of Sonoma State Hospital:

"In summary, the facilities on the Phoenix Ward not only were physically unfit for human habitation but provided conditions hazardous to the patients' health. The unsatisfactory environment was not offset by any obvious treatment programs or by warm, personal patient-staff relationships."

Investigations were done in March of this year amidst charges of neglect and violence at Creedmoor Hospital in New York.<sup>3</sup> The following May, District

<sup>1</sup> D. L. Rosenhan, "On Being Sane in Insane Places." Science, vol. 179, p. 250, 1973.

<sup>2</sup> Commission on California State Government Organization and Economy, January 1976 Report.

<sup>3</sup> Sunday Newsday, the Long Island Newspaper, Queens Edition, Mar. 6, 1977.

Attorney John Santucci ordered another investigation of Creedmoor as a result of 180 allegations of patient abuse or neglect, including six deaths.<sup>4</sup>

In Massachusetts, Worcester State Hospital Superintendent David J. Myerson described the state hospital system as one of "If you squeal, we'll beat you up." Such are the cruel and unusual punishments which a psychiatric examination under S. 1437, Chapter 36, Subchapter B would inflict upon defendants not yet convicted of any crime.

The stigma attached to being committed to a mental hospital for examination should also be examined. If the diagnosis comes out negative, the individual still has the stigma of being put in the mental institution, to carry with him into his trial or later in life. As a 'stigma' can be a difficult thing to classify statistically, the reader should subjectively monitor his response to a somewhat unlikely but communicative statement such as the following: "Gentlemen, I would like to present our next nominee for President of the Elks Club, John Doe, just released from Metropolitan State Psychiatric Hospital with a clean bill of health." And if the individual is diagnosed as mentally ill, the stigma is even more far reaching.

In the Rosenhan study, each of the 'sane' individuals was released with a diagnosis of "schizophrenia in remission." Rosenhan believes that this indicates, in the institution's eyes, the individual was not sane, nor had he ever been sane. For an individual to carry a label of "schizophrenia in remission", or any psychiatric label, for the rest of his life, could be damaging and also could effect a court trial, if this information were known by the judge or jury.

Since the psychiatrist or clinical psychologist will be examining the individual to determine their mental state, the current statistics of success or failure in his area should be examined.

In a 1972 study by Wenk, Robinson, and Smith,<sup>5</sup> 7000 parolees were assigned to categories of potential aggressiveness based on their case histories and psychiatric reports. In a one year follow up study, it was found that for every correct identification of a potentially aggressive individual, there were 326 incorrect ones. Another 1972 study by Kozol, Boucher and Garofalo<sup>6</sup> lasted 10 years and involved almost six hundred previous offenders. Each offender was examined by two psychiatrists, two psychologists and a social worker. A complete case history was compiled and a full battery of psychological tests were administered. During a five year follow-up period, it was found that 65 percent of individuals identified as dangerous did not commit a dangerous act.

Steadman and Keveles<sup>7</sup> followed 121 patients upon their release from two hospitals for the criminally insane in New York State. These patients were believed to be some of the most dangerous mental patients in the state of New York. Steadman and Keveles followed the patients for an average of 2½ years of freedom. In that time, only one patient was convicted for a violent act and eight others were convicted for non-violent crimes.

In an article published in January 1975,<sup>8</sup> Steadman (the same as above) and Concozza, after completing studies of their own and analysing other studies were led to the conclusion that:

"Because Americans continue to support statutes that permit and demand preventive detention, they should become aware of how such laws actually operate and of the consequences of the misleading assumptions upon which the laws are based. They should know that we cannot define or predict dangerousness, and that there is no correlation between it and mental illness."

Based on this data, it is apparent that psychiatric examinations and diagnoses are unreliable indicators of the individuals mental state and his potential for violence.

Another function designated to the psychiatrist under S. 1437, is to treat the individual who is committed to the psychiatric hospital. The statistics of this type of treatment should be examined before it is assumed that commitment to a mental hospital and psychiatric care will assist in the individual's competency to stand trial or reduce his potential for causing serious bodily injury or damage.

<sup>4</sup> Newsday, the Long Island Newspaper, May 7, 1977.

<sup>5</sup> E. Wenk, J. Robinson, G. Smith, "Can Violence Be Predicted," Crime & Delinquency, vol. 18, p. 393, 1972.

<sup>6</sup> H. Kozol, R. Boucher, and R. Garofalo, "The Diagnosis and Treatment of Dangerousness," Crime & Delinquency, vol. 19, p. 371, 1972.

<sup>7</sup> H. Steadman and G. Keveles, "The Community Adjustment and Criminal Activity of the Baxtrom Patients: 1966-1970," American Journal of Psychiatry, vol. 129, p. 304, 1972.

<sup>8</sup> H. Steadman and J. Concozza, "We Can't Predict Who Is Dangerous," Psychology Today, 1975.

The current methods of treatment employed by psychiatrists are chemotherapy (drugging), aversion therapy, psychotherapy, Electro Shock Therapy, and psychosurgery. Each of these methods has inherent in it the potential for seriously harming the individual. In a January 1977 study published in the American Journal of Psychiatry by Dr. Frederic Quitkin,<sup>9</sup> it was found that tardive dyskinesia, a serious and sometimes irreversible effect of antipsychotic drug use was becoming more and more common among chronically hospitalized psychiatric patients. The existence of the disease was found to vary among hospitals and ranged from 2% to 56% of the patients. The disease consists of "repetitive, involuntary movements of the mouth, lips, and tongue and is sometimes accompanied by choreiform movements of the limbs or trunk." In a 1975 study appearing in the American Journal of Psychiatry<sup>10</sup> by Drs. Carpenter, McGlashan, and Strauss, it was found that the use of antipsychotic drugs increased the chances for a schizophrenic patient to have future relapses: "In any case, in an illness with so many paradoxes, we raise the possibility that antipsychotic medication may make some schizophrenic patients more vulnerable to future relapse than would be the case in the natural course of their illness."

Wade Hudson a former mental patient describes the effects of the psychotropic drug prolixin<sup>11</sup>: "One injection every week or two and you have a nation of zombies, easily controlled. * * * My entire body felt like it was being twisted up in contortions inside some unseen wringer."

Aversion therapy consists of punishing the patient, either physically or socially, for conduct considered wrong. In the Commission on California State Government Organization and Economy's January 1976 report, the observers were led to the following conclusion about this type of therapy:

"Aversive conditioning, however, seems to be an inhuman type of practice, regardless of the conditions under which it is administered. Hospitals may utilize a variety of battery-generated devices including cattle prods and electric belts. Even if such therapy is considered as a last resort, if consent is obtained from a parent or guardian, and if trained personnel are utilized in such treatment, we question the legitimacy of this treatment as substitutes for other more humane and personal treatment modalities."

The effects of Electric Shock Treatment (sometimes called ECT—Electroconvulsive Therapy) are in many cases permanently damaging to the individual. ECT causes brain damage, memory loss, and the inability to learn new information. In a study done by I. M. Allen in 1959 and published in the New Zealand Medical Journal,<sup>12</sup> he found that damage was done to brain tissue as a result of ECT. He states that:

"The various physical signs and disturbances of function following electric shock treatment reported in the literature and found in the cases on which this paper is based, left no doubt that definite neurological variations, which could be found on detailed examination and many of which were irreversible, were left after electric shock treatment."

Dr. Allen also stated:

"The observations recorded in this paper left no doubt about the conclusions to be drawn from them and call for little comment. Their clinical implications demand, however, the most careful consideration.

"They confirmed the appearance of irreversible physical changes in the brain after and as a result of electric shock treatment. They gave no indication of the frequency with which these changes occurred; but suggested that physical changes, some of which might be irreversible with increase in the number and frequency of treatments, but showed at the same time that they could appear and be irreversible after very few treatments."

Dr. Karl Pribram, head of Stanford University's Neuropsychology Institute was quoted in the Sept/Oct 1974 issue of the American Psychiatric Association Monitor as saying: "I'd rather have a small lobotomy than a series of electroconvulsive shock . . . I just know what the brain looks like after a series of shock—and it's not very pleasant to look at."<sup>13</sup>

<sup>9</sup> Frederic Quitkin, M.D., et al., "Tardive Dyskinesia: Are First Signs Reversible?", American Journal of Psychiatry, vol. 134, January 1977.

<sup>10</sup> William T. Carpenter, et al., "The Treatment of Acute Schizophrenia Without Drugs: An Investigation of Some Current Assumptions," American Journal of Psychiatry, vol. 134, p. 14, 1977.

<sup>11</sup> Los Angeles Times, Aug. 19, 1975, Part I, p. 20.

<sup>12</sup> I. M. Allen, "Cerebral Lesions From Electric Shock Treatment," New Zealand Medical Journal, vol. 58, p. 369, 1959.

<sup>13</sup> Karl Pribram, American Psychiatric Association Monitor, September-October 1974.

A study published in the New England Journal of Medicine in 1946 by Norman and Shea,<sup>14</sup> as well as documenting prolonged memory impairment as a result of ECT, stated that some cases where 50 treatments were given showed symptoms indicating organic brain damage.

A more recent study on patients receiving 50 or more shock treatments was published in the Journal of Clinical Psychology in 1972 by Goldman, Gomer, and Templer.<sup>15</sup> This study led them to the following conclusion:

"The significantly greater error scores obtained by the ECT Ss (subjects) on both the Bender-Gestalt and the Benton (tests) after a relatively long time period since the last course of treatment suggest that ECT causes irreversible brain damage."

It is a well known fact among those who have studied it, that memory loss occurs as a result of electric shock treatment. In a 1975 study done by Squire and Chase and published in the Archives of General Psychiatry,<sup>16</sup> it was found that:

"The percentage of subjects with memory complaints was 63 percent after bilateral ECT, 30 percent after unilateral ECT, and 17 percent after hospitalization without ECT. Subjects with complaints related only to the period of hospitalization were not scored as having perceived memory impairment."

Exactly why the authors decided to ignore memory complaints related to the period of hospitalization is not known, although to consider this time period would certainly increase the percentages of those complaining of memory loss. The memory complaints were made from 6 to 9 months after receiving electric shock.

Instances of learning impairment as a result of ECT are particularly plentiful. In a bibliography of 500 studies on ECT done between 1939 and 1963 and published by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare,<sup>17</sup> all of the studies regrading learning showed an impairment in the ability to learn.

Some of the effects of ECT cannot be accurately described by statistics. In the book Shock Treatment Is Not Good For Your Brain, written by John Friedberg and published in 1976, the author interviews people who have undergone electric shock treatment. Some excerpts of these interviews appear below:

"A. The last thing I remember is graduating high school in June of 1964. I was seventeen, and the next thing I remember is being in the hospital (at nineteen). I mean I have no memory of anything, it's just what I've been told. And some of the things I can reconstruct—I went back to the same college. I don't have any idea—I mean I've read on my transcript what classes I took."

"Dorothy Molinare"

"Q. Just a little more about the effects of shock treatment. Were any of your skills affected, like reading?"

A. It slowed my reading way down. Those things are horrible, man.

Q. Do you ever have dreams about the shock treatments?"

A. Yes. In fact, I can close my eyes, and think about it, and I can relive it up to the point of the electricity and I have to open my eyes. Well, that's the horror in my life."

William Freeman

"Q. Try to (describe the shock) in words if you can.

A. It's like an atomic bomb that runs horizontally through your brain."

"Q. And when you woke up what did it feel like?"

A. That pain right through your head. And all you know, all you're aware of is that pain. That's all you're aware of is this jolting pain going through your mind. You know. And you can't remember anything. You don't know why you're alive, how you got there, your mother's name—all you know is the pain, that all you are is this brain with a pain going through it. And if you're depressed then that's the reason."

"Alan Rogers"

<sup>14</sup> Jacob Norman and John T. Shea, "Three Years Experience With Electric Convulsive Therapy." New England Journal of Medicine, vol. 234, p. 857, 1946.

<sup>15</sup> H. Goldman, F. Gomer, and D. Templer, "Long Term Effects of Electroconvulsive Therapy Upon Memory and Perceptual Motor Performance," Journal of Clinical Psychology, vol. 28, p. 32, 1972.

<sup>16</sup> Larry Squire, Ph. D., Paul M. Chase, "Memory Functions Six to Nine Months After Electroconvulsive Therapy," Archives of General Psychiatry, vol. 32, p. 1557, December 1975.

<sup>17</sup> "Studies on Electroconvulsive Therapy 1939-1963. A Selected Annotated Bibliography," U.S. Dept. of H.E.W. Public Health Service, No. 1447, Series No. 64.

There is evidence that shock is used as a form of punishment by psychiatrists, as presented in a paper by Robert R. Dies in 1968.<sup>18</sup> Dies concludes that the patient is being punished for his supposed "illness." "The patient is punished for his pathology and the psychological rug is virtually pulled out from under him. Upon release from the hospital the patient usually encounters the same environment in which his pathology developed. Without alternative solutions it is to be expected that many patients will again develop the same symptomatic methods of responding." Also, it was found in a study published in the Archives of Neurology and Psychiatry, in 1959 by Rabiner and Gralnick,<sup>19</sup> that the most accurate predictor of whether shock would be prescribed for the patient, was a lack of rapport between the doctor and the patient. The patient's diagnosis and symptomatology played no part in the choice of shock by the psychiatrist. Currently, money appears to be the greatest motivation for giving shock. In a 1975 letter to Representative John Vasconcellos of California, from Drs. Thomas Rusk and Randold Read, they stated that:

"The abuses of ECT, as they exist now, seem to fall into two major categories: first is the financial abuse. ECT in California is extremely lucrative and this encourages its overuse. In Canada, and especially in Quebec where the amount of money paid the psychiatrist for giving ECT has dropped to somewhere between $5 and $10 a treatment as opposed to the $40 to $50 here, the use of ECT has dropped precipitously. It is no secret that psychiatrists who heavily use ECT and medications for that matter, treatments that can be exploited for maximum earning per hour, frequently have incomes in excess of $100,000 to $200,000 per year. On the other hand, psychiatrists who restrict their practices to mild to moderate use of medication, rarely have incomes in excess of $60,000 * * * The other abuse of ECT, less frequent but still present, is its use as punishment for patients in hospitals. Although not as common as it was previously, ECT is often used as a threat to induce patients to change their behavior. If this were occurring in prisons, public outcry would definitely arise; and yet, the subtle means of control such as telling an unruly patient "you're very depressed today and will need some more shock treatment" must raise questions of cruel and unusual punishment."

Psychosurgery is a process whereby healthy brain tissue is destroyed in order to alter behavior. In a publication by the National Institute of Mental Health in 1973<sup>20</sup> psychosurgery was defined thusly:

"Psychosurgery can be defined as surgical removal or destruction of brain tissue or the cutting of brain tissue to disconnect one part of the brain from another with the intent of altering behavior."

The adverse effects of this type of treatment include grand mal seizures, dependence on drugs, loss of emotion and drive, postoperative seizures, and a cognitive deficit (reduced ability to think). This information comes from the findings of the National Commission for the Protection of Human Subjects of Biomedical and Behavioral Research as summarized in a 1977 paper by Gerald S. Coles and published in "State and Mind."<sup>21</sup>

There is sufficient evidence to conclude that psychiatric treatment is damaging to the individual. His condition is complicated by the harmful side-effects of psychiatric drugs, he is humiliated through aversion therapy, his ability to remember, think, and learn new things is reduced through ECT and psychosurgery. One of the purposes of commitment is to increase the individual's competency to stand trial. It can be seen that his competency to stand trial, as well as do other things, is decreased and not increased through psychiatric treatment. The other reason for commitment under S. 1437 is to reduce the criminal tendencies of the individual so that he can be returned to society and not pose a threat. The effectiveness of psychiatric treatment on criminal behavior is discussed in the next section.

The psychiatrists's ability to treat criminal behavior has not been confirmed in any conclusive studies. A result of this is the rising crime rate in the United

<sup>18</sup> Robert R. Dies, "Electroconvulsive Therapy: A Social Learning Interpretation," The Journal of Nervous and Mental Disease, vol. 146, 1968.

<sup>19</sup> Edwin L. Rabiner and Alexander Gralnick, "Transference—countertransference phenomena in choice of shock," AMA Archives of Neurology and Psychiatry, vol. 81, p. 517, 1959.

<sup>20</sup> Brown, Wlenckowski, Bivens, "Psychosurgery: Perspective on a Current Issue," National Institute of Mental Health, 1973.

<sup>21</sup> Gerald S. Coles, "Psychosurgery—Too Much Thinking Can Cause Emotional Distress," State and Mind, vol. 5, p. 12, 1977.

States. From 1955 to 1975, the incidence of violent crime increased by nearly 600 percent in the United States according to the FBI Uniform Crime Reports.<sup>23</sup> The overall crime index (taking into account the increase in population) also rose during these same years by more than 380 percent. Perhaps the most frightening statistic in the crime rate is that for offenses committed by those under 18 years of age; from the years 1955 to 1975, the crime rate for this age group increased more than 2,000 percent according to the FBI and as tabulated in two Bureau of the Census publications.<sup>23, 24</sup> As the crime rate has increased in recent years, so has the amount of money spent on prisoners in Federal institutions, which includes treatment of these individuals. From 1969 to 1977, the amount of money spent on the custody, care and treatment of prisoners in Federal institutions has increased by more than 250 percent according to the U.S. Government publication, Budget of the United States Government, 1976.<sup>25</sup>

There is evidence in existence that indicates psychiatric treatment may cause criminal behavior. The following three incidents were reported in the Los Angeles Free Press in the June 24-30, 1977, issue: Last April in a Chicago suburb, Thomas Venda brutally stabbed a young woman after being released by the Illinois Department of Mental Health. Gregory Canatis of Midwest City, Okla., ate part of his fathers' body after stabbing him and hitting him in the head with a brick. He had been released from the psychiatric ward of an Oklahoma Hospital in February of 1976. Just hours after seeing a psychiatrist, Freddie Prinze, the talented young comedian, shot and killed himself. These are of course individual cases, although incidents such as these are not uncommon. The Citizens Commission on Human Rights reviewed over 500 accounts of violent crimes committed over the past 5 years in the United States. It was found that more than half of the crimes were committed by individuals who had been previously released from psychiatric institutions as certifiably sane. Upon release, these individuals committed over 250 murders, rapes, and assaults.<sup>26</sup>

There have been studies done which show that the incidence of violent crimes increases after release from a mental hospital. In a study by Rappeport and Lassen, published in the American Journal of Psychiatry in 1966,<sup>27</sup> there is evidence that female patients (the only patients studied) were more violent after their release than before entering the mental hospital:

"The clear indication that our women are more assaultive than the general population, particularly after hospitalization, causes us much concern and may in some way be related to factors connected with persons who are identified as mentally ill."

In a study completed in 1975 and published in the American Journal of Psychiatry in February 1976,<sup>28</sup> the authors studied the arrest rates for 867 patients who were discharged from the psychiatric division of Bellevue Hospital. The author's found the following to be true:

"Arrests for violent offenses involving bodily harm (emphasis added) occurred 1½ times more frequently during the 2-year period after admission, but arrests for violent offenses with potential for harm and arrests for non-violent offenses occurred at about the same frequency before and after admission."

Under sections 3613(d) and 3616(d) of S. 1437, "Determination and Disposition," if the person is found to be suffering from a disease which may result in bodily harm (emphasis added) or property damage, he is to be placed in a mental hospital. From the evidence given above, this would appear to be counter-therapeutic. The exact wording of the "Determination and Disposition" sections is given below so that the similarity of these situations can be observed:

"If, after the hearing, the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the acquitted person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result

<sup>23</sup> FBI Uniform Crime Reports, 1955-76.

<sup>23</sup> "Historical Statistics of the United States," U.S. Dept. of Commerce, Bureau of the Census.

<sup>24</sup> "Statistical Abstract of the United States, 1976," U.S. Dept. of Commerce, Bureau of the Census.

<sup>25</sup> "Budget of the U.S. Government, vols. 1969-76.

<sup>26</sup> Copies of this study are available upon request from the Citizens Commission on Human Rights.

<sup>27</sup> Jonas R. Rappeport and George Lassen, "The Dangerousness of Female Patients: A Comparison of the Arrest Rate of Discharged Psychiatric Patients and the General Population," American Journal of Psychiatry, vol. 123, p. 413, 1966.

<sup>28</sup> Arthur Zitrin, Anne Hardesty, Eugene Burdock, and Ann Drossman, "Crime and Violence Among Mental Patients," American Journal of Psychiatry, vol. 133, p. 142, 1976.

of which his release would create a substantial risk of serious bodily injury (emphasis added) to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall commit the person to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall release the person to the appropriate official of the state in which the person is domiciled if such state will assume responsibility for his custody, care, and treatment. If such state will not then assume such responsibility, the Attorney General shall hospitalize the person for treatment in a suitable mental hospital, or in another facility designated by the court as suitable, until such state will assume such responsibility or until the person's mental condition is so improved that his release would not create a substantial risk of serious bodily injury (emphasis added) to another person or serious damage to property of another."

From the above discussion, the statistics point to the fact that the person's mental condition upon release from a mental hospital would create an even greater risk of serious bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another than if he were never admitted to the hospital.

There is also evidence that the overall incidence of crime (taking into consideration all crimes and not just violent crimes) is not reduced by reason of institutionalization in a mental hospital. In the study by Steadman and Keveles mentioned earlier,<sup>29</sup> of 1,000 patients released from two New York State Hospitals for the criminally insane, for the time period 1966-70, it was revealed that "There was no relationship between the number of arrests and the number of incarcerations before the Baxtrom institutionalization and the number of arrests or number of convictions after the patients' release."

One study by Guze, Woodruff, and Clayton,<sup>30</sup> indicated that criminal activity among mental patients is closely related to sociopathy (antisocial personality), alcoholism, and drug dependence. A 1967 study by Giovannoni and Gruel<sup>31</sup> confirmed the high incidence of alcoholism among mental patients who committed crimes. In their report entitled "Socially Disruptive Behavior of Ex-Mental Patients," they stated that 65.8 percent of the 156 patients involved in at least one offense, also had a problem with alcohol. The 1974 study by Guze, Woodruff, and Clayton concluded that:

"The results are consistent with those previously obtained from studies of convicted felons. Sociopathy, alcoholism, and drug-dependence are the principal psychiatric disorders associated with serious crime."

Furthermore:

"The implications of these results are important. To the degree that psychiatrists may be involved in the prevention or treatment of criminality, they must deal chiefly with sociopathy, alcoholism, and drug-dependence. These disorders are generally resistant to currently available treatment. At the same time, because populations at high risk for these conditions may be easily identified, hope for prevention must depend on further research with children and adolescents so recognized. Until more is known about prevention of these conditions, or until more effective treatments are developed, psychiatrists should be modest in their claims."

From the evidence presented in this section, it can be stated that psychiatric diagnosis and treatment are inaccurate and ineffective at best. In many cases the diagnosis and treatment are damaging to the individual and to society, especially in the case of treatment of mentally ill offenders.

PART III: VIOLATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS CODES

As S. 1437 involves the forced institutionalization of individuals and other restrictions of persons not yet convicted of any offense, its correlation with various codes of human rights should be closely examined.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights was adopted by the United Nations in 1948 and is their code of human rights today. Specific points of this declaration are violated by S. 1437 as follows:

Article 9 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights reads:

<sup>29</sup> See footnote 7, p. 9457.

<sup>30</sup> Samuel B. Guze, Robert A. Woodruff, Jr., Paula J. Clayton, "Psychiatric Disorders and Criminality," JAMA, vol. 277, 1974.

<sup>31</sup> Jeanné M. Giovannoni, Lee Gruel, "Socially Disruptive Behavior of Ex-Mental Patients," 1967.

"No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile." The last paragraph of section 3617 of S. 1437 reads as follows:

"For the purpose of an examination pursuant to an order under section 3611, 3612, 3613, or 3614, the court may commit the person to be examined for a reasonable period, but not more than sixty days, to the custody of the Attorney General for placement in a suitable mental hospital or another facility designed by the court as suitable."

The "order" referred to above is based on "if there is reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect." The detection of "mental disease or defect" rendering the individual "mentally incompetent to the extent that he is unable to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him or to assist in his defense," or "for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a mental hospital."

It has been previously shown in this report that the detection of "mental disease" and the "need of custody for care or treatment in a mental hospital" are uncertain parameters. Also, the statement "mentally incompetent to the extent that he is unable . . . to assist in his defense," is sufficiently arbitrary so as to violate Article 9 of this Declaration.

In addition, under section 3617 (c) of S. 1437, "PSYCHIATRIC REPORTS," it is stated "A psychiatric report ordered pursuant to this subchapter shall be prepared by the examiner designated to conduct the psychiatric examination, shall be filed with the court with copies provided to the counsel for the person examined and to the attorney for the government." The report is to contain, "(4) the examiners' opinions as to diagnosis, prognosis, and . . .

(C) if the examination is ordered under section 3613 or 3616, whether the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of serious bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another; or

(D) if the examination is ordered under section 3614 or 3615, whether the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a mental hospital."

The information required of the psychiatrist in this report, has been shown to be of such a nature that he is unqualified to provide it accurately. It is therefore arbitrary and, if accepted as authoritative or expert information in the hearing, would lead to an arbitrary detention or exile of the individual, for an indeterminate period of time. Likewise, section 3613, part (d):

"If, after the hearing, the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the acquitted person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of serious bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall commit the person to the custody of the Attorney General . . . the Attorney General shall hospitalize the person for treatment in a suitable mental hospital, or in another facility designated by the court as suitable, until such state will assume such responsibility or until the person's mental condition is so improved that his release would not create a substantial risk of serious bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another."

Article 10 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights reads:

"Everyone is entitled in full equality to a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal, in the determination of his rights and obligations and of any criminal charge against him."

Under section 3611 part (a) of S. 1437, the defendant may not be given a "fair and public hearing" "in the determination . . . of any criminal charge against him." The statement which denies the defendant this right reads as follows:

"At any time after the commencement of a prosecution for an offense and prior to the sentencing of the defendant, the defendant or the attorney for the government may file a motion for a hearing to determine the mental competency of the defendant."

This may deny the defendant the right to face criminal charges against him and instead, his sanity or potential for causing harm would be on trial.

Article 11 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights reads:

"(1) Everyone charged with a penal offense has the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law in a public trial at which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defence."

PART IV: CHAPTER 36, SUBCHAPTER B OF S. 1437 WITH RESPECT TO INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS

Now, more than ever, the United States needs to agree upon a firm stand on human rights. President Carter's recent statements regarding human rights in the Soviet Union and elsewhere were only ineffective to the degree that no firm policy regarding human rights had been established or followed in the United States. Human rights and laws ensuring them must be developed and adhered to in the United States before we can criticize other countries.

It is now a well known fact that dissidents and others in the Soviet Union are declared insane and committed to mental institutions for indeterminate sentences, as reported in the February 21, 1977 issue of Time<sup>32</sup> and the June 1977 issue of Psychology Today.<sup>33</sup> This is more convenient than a lengthy court trial, especially when the individual has committed no crime. It is also noteworthy that the length of hospitalization for mental patients is indeterminate in that country, whereas if the defendant were put on trial, his prison sentence, if he were found guilty, would probably be less than the time spent in the mental institution. This type of violation of human rights must be guarded against in the United States.

In the Soviet Union, many psychiatrists have prostituted themselves by declaring many sane individuals insane. One of the methods used in Russia to find people insane is described in an interview with Soviet dissident Valdimir Bukovsky, and published in June 1977 in Psychology Today.<sup>34</sup> In an exchange with E. Fuller Torrey, a Washington psychiatrist, Bukovsky described the method as follows:

"Bukovsky: Most of the political prisoners are diagnosed as schizophrenics. Anything they do, any protest they make, even a hunger strike is said to be proof of the diagnosis. Torrey: G. V. Morozov, the head of the Serbsky Institute, has even written that argumentativeness is an important symptom of schizophrenia.

Bukovsky: Then I guess it's a pretty common disease even in the United States if that is its definition."

Bukovsky has spent 12 years in prisons, labor camps, and internal exile. He was diagnosed as schizophrenic by Soviet psychiatrists although upon his release in December of 1976, he was diagnosed by a group of British psychiatrists and found to be completely sane. Bukovsky estimates that there are at least 2,000 political prisoners in Russian mental institutions today.

The problem of political exile to mental institutions is not unique to the Soviet Union. In the United States, Ezra Pound was declared to be insane and unfit to stand trial. He was subsequently incarcerated in Saint Elizabeth's Hospital, in Washington, D.C., for 13 years. Another case is that of General Edwin Walker who resisted integration at the University of Mississippi in 1962. He was hospitalized against his will to determine his sanity and was thereby discredited. Leonard Frank was committed to a California mental hospital because, "he couldn't or wouldn't work and spent most of his time reading or doing nothing. (He) grew a beard, ate only vegetarian food and lived the life of beatnik." This was according to the Certificate of Medical Examiners. His case is documented in the book, Shock Treatment Is Not Good For Your Brain by John Friedberg. Frank is Jewish, and as a result of his "religious preoccupations" he was given 50 insulin-induced comas and 35 electroshock treatments. The confusions that these shock treatments caused were described as desirable by Dr. Robert E. James, who wrote Frank's father, "it helps him get away from the concerns about his beard, diet and religious preoccupations."

If the individual, under S. 1437, section 3611, is "charged with a penal offense," he may not be given a "public trial at which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defense." In fact, he may not be allowed any defense to the charges at all and simply found to be mentally incompetent to stand trial and committed to a mental institution.

Article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights reads:

"Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; this right includes freedom to change his religion or belief, and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship and observance."

Under S. 1437, Chapter 36, Subchapter B, the individual's freedom of thought, conscience, or religion may be denied. For instance, if the individual decides to proceed with his defense in a specific way (which may be contrary to his counsel's advice), this may be interpreted as an inability to assist in his defense. It is stated in section 3611 of S. 1437, that the court shall grant a motion to conduct a hearing if:

<sup>32</sup> "The Dissidents V. Moscow," Time, p. 20, Feb. 21, 1977.

<sup>33</sup> "The Serbsky Treatment," Psychology Today, June 1977, p. 38.

<sup>34</sup> See footnote 33.

"There is reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect rendering him mentally incompetent to the extent that he is unable to * * * assist in his defense."

If the hearing confirms this resistance to "assist in his defense," the individual may be determined mentally incompetent to stand trial and could spend up to 1 year in a mental hospital during which time his thoughts and conscience may be altered against his will through the use of psychotropic drugs, electric shock treatment, behavior modification, or psychosurgery, as described in Part II of this report. Article 22 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights reads:

"Everyone, as a member of society, has the right to social security and is entitled to realization, through national effort and international co-operation and in accordance with the organization and resources of each State, of the economic, social and cultural rights indispensable for his dignity and the free development of his personality."

Chapter 36, Subchapter B, of S. 1437, in its entirety, violates this article by requiring a forced commitment of the individual to a mental hospital. The "free development of his personality" can be violated by forcing the individual to undergo psychiatric treatment such as psychotropic drugs, electric shock treatment, behavior modification, or psychosurgery. These forms of treatment, as discussed in PART II of this report, alter the development of personality and in many cases damage personality permanently.

The Bill of Rights of the United States Constitution has been an accepted code for human rights of this country. One section of the Bill of Rights is severely violated by S. 1437. This is Amendment VI:

"In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense."

Another issue which could lead to a violation of human rights is that of the right to a public trial in lieu of a hearing where his sanity and not his guilt is on trial. The circumstances leading up to this "sanity" hearing are well covered previously in this report.

Another issue which could lead to a violation of human right is that of the definition of 'insanity' given in section 3617. The definition is as follows: "As used in this subchapter, 'insanity' means a mental disease or defect of a nature constitution a defense to a federal criminal prosecution." This definition is sufficiently circular that it does not describe what insanity is and thus can be misinterpreted.

S. 1437, Chapter 36, Subchapter B, gives free reign to any political power, to have political enemies placed in mental institutions against their will for indeterminate periods of time. Although the more basic issue here is human rights for all persons, whether politically oriented or not, the consequences of forsaking these rights and allowing individuals to be committed to mental institutions against their will without having committed any crime may be as frightening as Bukovsky states:

"Torrey: If we don't fight the abuse of psychiatry in the Soviet Union and elsewhere, what are the consequences?"

Bukovsky: If the abuses begin in your country then it will be too late. If you try and fight it once it begins they will probably just call you insane and put you away."

PART V: SOLUTION

Instead of instituting Chapter 36, Subchapter B, of S. 1437, a solution to this complex problem can be arrived at by initiating legislation which conforms to the human rights codes mentioned in part IV, and in addition, by providing effective rehabilitation programs for those who are found to be guilty of committing a crime. Amendment VI of the Bill of Rights is stated as follows:

"In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense."

In using this as a guideline, the following procedure would serve to conform to this and preserve the individual's rights:

1. The accused is to be given a public trial by an impartial jury, regardless of his actual or supposed mental state. He is to have the assistance of counsel for his defense. He and his counsel are to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation. He is to be confronted with the witnesses against him and is to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor. He is to be afforded all guarantees necessary for his defense.

2. If he is found innocent of all charges against him, he should be released, regardless of actual or supposed mental state.

3. If he is found guilty, the offender or his counsel, or the attorney for the government may file a motion for a hearing to determine the mental competency of the individual. The court shall grant the motion or shall order a hearing on its own motion if there is reasonable cause to believe that the offender is mentally incompetent and in need of specialized rehabilitation. A board made up of a minister, layman, medical doctor, and lawyer, should carry out an examination of the individual and a study of his personal history. If he is found to be in need of specialized rehabilitation by reason of mental incompetence, he should be given an opportunity for such rehabilitation in programs maintained by the state. The individual shall be placed in a secure environment in accordance with already existing security regulations for prisoners. However, his safety and the safety of society or those in his immediate environment shall not be jeopardized by reason of his mental incompetency.

4. Rehabilitation facilities shall be established and maintained and shall afford people the opportunity to recover in a peaceful environment, restore their previous abilities, and release them as confident individuals, well able to cope with situations they encounter in their environment.

Rehabilitation shall include:

a. Basic educational training that will assist the individual in understanding the society which he will be returned to, and which will assist him in understanding the magnitude of his crime and its impact on that society.

b. Vocational training that will assist the individual in contributing to and surviving in the society which he will be returned to.

c. If the individual is addicted to drugs or alcohol, effective rehabilitation programs shall be available for him to take part in.

d. Regular medical care, physical exercise and proper nutrition.

e. Freedom from psychiatric experimentation.

f. The right to refuse, after having been given thorough information on its consequences and possible side effects, harmful psychiatric treatments such as forced drugging, electric shock treatment, behavior modification, aversion therapy, psychotherapy, and psychosurgery, or any other type of psychiatric treatment. The individual must understand the consequences and possible side effects of this treatment and consent to its administration, before the treatment can be given.

5. The individual's progress should be reviewed monthly by the board responsible for his disposition to ensure that he is making progress toward becoming rehabilitated. These recommendations would guarantee a jury trial for all offenders and ensure that no psychiatric or other form of punishment is inflicted upon offenders. Freedom from cruel and unusual punishment is guaranteed under Amendment VIII of the U.S. Constitution:

"Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted."

[From the Congressional Record, May 2, 1977]

By Mr. McCLELLAN (for himself and Mr. Kennedy):

S. 1437. A bill to codify, revise, and reform title 18 of the United States Code, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE CRIMINAL CODE REFORM ACT OF 1977

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, today I introduce for myself and Senator Kennedy, the Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977.

I am very pleased to introduce this bill because it marks a long step toward attaining an important and historic goal for which I and many others have been working for over 10 years—a truly modern Federal Criminal Code.

The need for codification and revision of the Federal criminal laws is uncontroverted. Our present Federal statutes have been enacted in a haphazard manner over the course of the past 200 years. Many of them have become outdated or contain inconsistent provisions, and others no longer reflect the values and culture of our modern society. Their complexity, their overlapping nature, and their lack of uniformity make it difficult for both layman and lawyer to know what the law is, and very difficult, indeed, for courts to apply the law with equal and balanced justice. The obsolescence of some Federal criminal statutes and the cumbersomeness of others often operate to hinder the administration of justice.

On November 8, 1966, the Congress undertook to do something about the prevailing unsatisfactory condition of our Federal criminal laws. By statute, it established the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws. This Commission was chaired by former Gov. Pat Brown of California and became known as the Brown Commission. It was mandated to make a "full and complete review and study of the statutory and case law of the United States" for the purpose of recommending to the Congress legislation to improve the Federal system of criminal justice. Pursuant to that mandate, the Commission, on January 7, 1971, issued its final report in the form of a draft criminal code that was to serve, in the Commission's words, as a "work basis" for necessary reform by the Congress.

The Commission's work and report have served as just that—a "work basis." Within a month or two thereafter, the Senate Subcommittee on Criminal Law and Procedures, which I am privileged to chair, opened the first of a 4-year series of hearings on the Brown Commission report and on the whole question of criminal law codification and reform.

During the course of those hearings, testimony was received from judges, lawyers, bar associations, and from private citizens and groups of every political persuasion and point of view culminating in over 8,500 pages of testimony and exhibits contained in 15 volumes of printed hearings.

After several preliminary drafts were studied and analyzed, the Criminal Justice Reform Act of 1975 evolved and was introduced by me on January 15, 1975, with 10 cosponsors. It undertook to incorporate the best of the earlier versions and the recommendations made by those who submitted their view to the subcommittee.

Obviously, a bill of that nature, covering the whole spectrum of criminal law, could hardly be expected to receive unanimous acceptance and approval. No one would agree with all that it contains. It was not primarily drafted to please, nor does it reflect, the exclusive views, conclusions, or judgments of any one person—not of myself, or of any other individual Senator.

When I reported the measure to the full Senate Committee on the Judiciary on October 21, 1975, I said:

I again assert that no sponsor or supporter of this bill regards all of its provisions as sacrosanct. There are areas of the bill—provisions thereof—which no doubt may well be improved by amendment. That is our legislative and democratic procedure to which I subscribe and which I fervently respect. And I shall have no hesitancy in supporting proposed changes in the bill which, in my judgment, strengthen and improve it.

Constructive counsel and suggestions are certainly welcome and will be appreciated at all stages of consideration of this measure. But efforts to slander the bill or disseminate false information calculated to perpetuate a deception regarding its merits I reject as being neither constructive nor in the public interest.

We have always known that there would be honest differences of opinion about some of its provisions, and that, in the spirit of compromise, concessions, and accommodations would have to be made in order to achieve the goal of criminal law reform earnestly sought by so many for so long. Unfortunately, deliberate consideration and debate of the true merits of the various provisions of the bill were clouded and impeded by an unprecedented campaign of flagrant distortions, half-truths and misrepresentations by some groups and individuals to defeat the measure at any cost.

Recognizing the gravity of public concern and also conscious of the great need for reform of the Federal criminal laws, on February 11, 1976, Senators Mansfield and Scott, majority and minority leaders of the Senate, respectively, in an effort to effectuate a reasonable compromise and promote the bill's enactment, suggested to the four Senators then most actively involved in the processing of the criminal code bill—Senators Hruska, Kennedy, Hart, and myself—that some 13 controversial provisions in the bill either be deleted or returned to current law. We felt that by excising these controversial provisions the remaining 95 percent or more of the bill could and should be enacted. Former Governor Brown joined in this approach, writing that the defeat of the bill “would be a severe blow to criminal law reform in this country.”

Senator Hruska and I were willing to accept the recommendations of the leadership. On March 8, Senators Hart and Kennedy responded to the leadership's initiative by submitting to Senator Hruska and myself a significantly expanded list of provisions to be modified, deleted, or returned to current law. The points in controversy in the intervening weeks had grown from 13 to 22.

On March 25, 1975, Senator Hruska and I issued a response in which we felt we went a long way in meeting the letter and spirit of the leadership's initiative to deal with controversial parts of the bill and the issue posed by the expanded list. Unfortunately, it was not possible to work out all of the details before the end of the 94th Congress.

Notwithstanding the delay, this studied response by Senator Hruska and myself with respect to the controversial parts of the criminal code bill has continued to be the basis for working with Senator Kennedy and the new administration—particularly Attorney General Bell and his staff—to produce the bill I am introducing today.

Mr. President, I believe the bill introduced today is a product of the give and take that inevitably must be a part of the legislative process. Sixteen of the 22 major issues involved were resolved using the approach suggested by the leadership last Congress of adopting a policy of retaining current law. This was accomplished in some instances, by deleting some sections in favor of relying on case law rules developed by the courts over the past 200 years;<sup>1</sup> in other instances, by deleting certain modifications of current law;<sup>2</sup> and, in still others, by retaining current statutory law verbatim and including, if anything, simply a cross-reference to the current statutes;<sup>3</sup> or by adopting language that all agree will duplicate current law with no significant change.<sup>4</sup>

Mr. President, the remaining 6 of the 22 issues are resolved in such a way as to change current law but in a balanced approach recognizing significant opposing views in each case. Current law is substantially strengthened in the bill by adopting a carefully drafted general Federal solicitation offense section 1003, and by providing new mandatory minimum prison sentences for those who traffic in heroin, section 1811. On the other hand, some aspects of current law were eliminated by deleting the so-called “Smith Act” dealing with persons who advocate overthrow of the Government by unlawful means, section 1103, by deleting the offense for malicious spreading of false information during wartime with intent to aid the enemy, section 1114, and by leaving to the various States the responsibility of determining the proper sanction and its enforcement—whether criminal or civil—for simple possession of not more than 10 grams of marijuana, section 1813.

Mr. President, these latter three issues all involve parts of current Federal law that for one reason or another are no longer prosecuted. The Supreme Court has so severely restricted the applicability of the provisions of present law with respect to advocacy of unlawful overthrow of the Government that no prosecutions have been brought in more than 15 years.

In the same vein, the current version of the wartime offense of spreading false statements concerning the war effort with intent to aid the enemy is seldom used and, when used, has most often been applied to war dissenters expressing opinions rather than conveying false information. For example, Mr. President, a man was prosecuted for distributing a pamphlet claiming that World War I was fought to protect J. P. Morgan investments. Other cases can be cited.

<sup>1</sup> Defenses (chapter 5) and identification testimony (section 3714).

<sup>2</sup> Obstruction or delaying of goods or services that impair military effectiveness (section 1111 and 1112) and riot jurisdiction based on interference with a federal governmental function (section 1831(c)(5)).

<sup>3</sup> Espionage and related offenses (sections 1121–1124) and death penalty for causing death during an aircraft hijacking (49 U.S.C. 1472, 1473).

<sup>4</sup> Treason (section 1101), obscenity (section 1842), wiretapping authority (sections 3101–3108), and admissibility of confessions (section 3713).

Similarly, Mr. President, I am informed that the Federal Government has long ago abandoned efforts to prosecute persons in possession of small amounts of marihuana, preferring instead to defer to State and local authorities. While I have some misgivings about changing the law in this regard, I completely agree that this minor offense should be left to State and local enforcement, and that the limited Federal resources should be reserved for apprehension and conviction of those who traffic in narcotics and dangerous drugs.

Finally, Mr. President, the sentencing system has been revised in two respects worth noting. A sentencing guideline system has been adopted to attack the problem of unwarranted sentencing disparity between judges. It would not eliminate judicial flexibility; but it would provide guidance to the trial judge and a bench mark for a defendant or the Government to appeal clearly unreasonable sentences. The other substantive change involves creation of sentencing authority for the trial judge to bar parole for nine-tenths of the term of imprisonment imposed, as a replacement for the current law provision for automatic parole eligibility after one-third of the sentence. This change justified a concomitant modest reduction of the maximum terms of imprisonment authorized.

I wish to say at this time, Mr. President, that on some of these issues I thought the criminal code bill under consideration last Congress contained better provisions than current law or those now proposed. In particular, I felt very strongly about the provisions designed to provide the Federal system with a constitutional procedure for imposition of the death penalty for certain serious and heinous crimes. As an accommodation to facilitate consideration of the criminal code bill I am willing to process separately a capital punishment bill in the Senate and, upon favorable action by the Senate on the separate legislation, to determine at that time, whether it should be added to the code bill.

While I have spent some time today discussing the controversial issues in the bill, Mr. President, it is perhaps more important to note that 95 percent of the bill has been noncontroversial and that it contains many provisions which are universally recognized to be clear and substantial improvements.

The bill represents a true codification that is, in short, a modern, workable penal code. Some of the general advantages flowing from this codification include:

All Federal felonies presently scattered throughout the 50 titles of the United States Code are brought within a single title.

Overlapping offenses are consolidated. Present Federal law contains some 70 theft provisions, 80 forgery and counterfeit statutes, 50 false statement crimes, and more than 70 arson or property destruction. In contrast, the bill has one basic theft section; and perjury and false statement sections are reduced to three. Similar reductions occur throughout.

Gaps in present law are filled. For instance, the current Federal bank robbery statute does not cover extortion, and the Federal extortion statutes do not cover banks. This combination fails to protect against an increasingly common extortion situation where a robber informs a bank officer that their spouse will be killed if the officer does not deliver bank funds as directed. The bill remedies this and similar situations.

Inconsistencies are dealt with in a more effective manner. Current law often inexplicably uses different language and penalties to apply to essentially the same conduct. For example, the penalty for making a false statement to a Federal agency may vary from a minor penalty to 5-years imprisonment, depending on which provision of current law is invoked. By consolidation, the bill eliminates this and similar problems.

The bill is simpler than present law. In current Federal law, no one provision has any necessary relationship to any other. One can find theft offenses under robbery chapters, under extortion chapters, under Indian chapters, under mail chapters, and so on. In this bill, similar offenses are consolidated and placed in a single chapter according to the type of criminal conduct. For example, chapter 16 contains crimes against the person.

The bill standardizes the terms and requirement of "criminal intent." Under current law there are dozens of terms denoting the mental states involved in criminal offenses, for example, willingly, knowingly, maliciously, willfully, corruptly, et cetera. Following the example of the Model Penal Code and the final report of the Brown Commission, the bill incorporates only four carefully defined culpability terms.

The bill provides an improved framework for extraditing criminals who flee the United States by defining crimes solely in terms of the type of criminal conduct involved and stating separately the basis for Federal jurisdiction. In the Vesco matter, for example, extradition was denied because the Federal jurisdictional factor was incorporated as an element of the offense, and the country to which Vesco had fled had no jurisdictional element in its fraud statute. This separation of jurisdictional matters from the elements of the offense should also simplify Federal prosecutions and prevent unjust multiplication of criminal charges. Under current mail fraud provisions, for example, the mailing of 10 fraudulent solicitations would lead to 10 mail fraud counts. Under the bill, the charge would be a single count of fraud with Federal jurisdiction based on use of the mails.

Similarly, under current law, robbery of a Federal credit union located on Federal property would violate at least three separate Federal robbery statutes that differ in the description of the criminal conduct, penalty, and bases for Federal jurisdiction. Under this bill, a single robbery offense would be charged—with the three bases for Federal jurisdiction.

The bill thus provides, through codification, numerous important general advantages for every participant in the criminal justice system.

A complementary goal of the codification process is substantive reform within the context of a sound respect for past judgments of Congress and the courts. Examples of reform efforts in the bill include the following :

The bill carries forward in an improved fashion those parts of current law designed to protect and foster civil rights. Under existing law when interference with civil rights is by a private party, the prosecutor must establish a conspiracy. The bill eliminates that need. Under existing law only citizens are protected. The bill extends coverage to all persons. Under existing law, when a State official deprives a person of a constitutional right, the Government must establish that that was his specific intent. The bill imposes a standard of recklessness as to the effect on a person's civil rights.

One aspect of current law forbids some forms of discrimination against women, but where force is used to discriminate, the law only applies to racial or religious discrimination. The bill expands the section to forbid the use of force, or threats of force, to discrimination on the grounds of sex.

The bill contains improved provisions protecting the right to privacy, including prohibitions against private, nonconsensual electronic eavesdropping, trafficking in eavesdropping devices, intercepting correspondence, and governmental disclosure of certain private information submitted to the Government by citizens.

The bill contains improved rape provisions. In line with reforms being carried out in some States, the bill expressly eliminates the requirement of corroboration of the victim's testimony, and severely restricts inquiry into the past sexual conduct of the victim. While not applying criminal sanctions to the sexual conduct of consenting adults, the bill expands coverage of rape to cover homosexual rapes.

The bill provides better coverage for white collar crimes. It contains an expanded statute of limitations for concealable crime such as fraud. Realistic fine schedules insure that criminal penalties cannot be written off as a mere cost of doing business. An improved means of fine collection is provided by utilizing many of the devices presently used to collect taxes. A new provision is included to outlaw pyramid sales schemes which have bilked the public of hundreds of millions of dollars over the past few years. Under the bill fraudulent schemes may be stopped through the use of Federal injunctive provisions. Perpetrators of such schemes may also be required to give notice of conviction to their victims.

The bill contains improved provisions to fight organized crime. A new serious offense of operating a racketeering syndicate is included to supplement the offenses in current law directed at organized crime.

The bill provides, for the first time in Federal law, a civil hospitalization procedure for Federal defendants who are found not guilty by reason of insanity.

The bill contains an improved series of provisions relating to governmental corruption to deal more effectively with Watergate-type situations. Provision is made for Federal prosecution of a person who commits any crime for the purpose of influencing the outcome of a Federal election. These provisions would reach the serious "dirty tricks" that were exposed in the course of the Watergate investigations. The bill prohibits anyone from soliciting a political contribution in a Federal facility. Current law only covers public servants and thus would not include an official of a political party. This situation was discussed in the report of the Watergate special prosecution force. That report called for a lengthening of the 3-year statute of limitations created for campaign legislation of 1974. The bill does this. It removes any doubt that grand juries may file special reports relating to governmental misconduct—with appropriate due process safeguards—with regard to all Federal officials.

As discussed earlier, the bill, for the first time, creates an orderly system of sentencing in Federal courts to replace the chaotic variety of existing terms of imprisonment and penalties often applied to identical conduct.

The bill places reasonable restrictions on the imposition of consecutive sentences.

It provides, for the first time in Federal law, for appellate review of sentences to help deal with unjustifiable disparity common under current law.

The bill incorporates the progressive features of parole legislation recently enacted. Imposition of a prison sentence under the bill carries with it an automatic parole component graduated according to the seriousness of the offense.

The bill would establish, for the first time in Federal law, a program to compensate the victims of violent Federal crimes with funds derived from criminal fines. This program would attempt to provide innocent victims with financial assistance to cover personal injuries resulting from specified crimes.

Mr. President, these then are some of the benefits long sought by those who would modernize and make more effective the criminal justice system of this country. Hopefully, we can move forward to enactment in due course this Congress.

Mr. President, I would be remiss if I did not mention and acknowledge with deep appreciation the long labors of my former colleague and ranking minority leader of the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures, Senator Roman Hruska, in the effort to achieve a modern criminal code. His wise counsel was indispensable to the work of the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws on which we both were privileged to serve from 1966 until its final report was made to the President and the Congress in January 1971. In the months of hearings and study conducted by the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures spanning Senator Hruska's last 6 years in the Senate, he was tireless in his dedication to make the new criminal code a reality.

Mr. President, without detracting from the efforts of many others, I sincerely venture the observation that we would never have reached the point of introducing this bill today without the efforts of Senator Hruska. He provided the highest example of bipartisan cooperation that is indispensable for consideration of a bill of this magnitude. I will miss his assistance and advice as the measure is processed.

I wish to add, Mr. President, that I appreciate the efforts and cooperation of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts in reaching this historic point. I have disagreed with him on some difficult issues on which we both have strong feelings. He did not have to get involved. With considerable commitment of time and a willing acceptance of the risks that inevitably accompany legislative involvement with controversial issues, he accepted the responsibility of identifying the major issues and worked with me in the spirit of give and take to attain a bill that I believe will be viewed from all perspectives as a step forward. I know that he has been willing to assume the responsibility and the accompanying risks out of the conviction—which I share with him—that the best interests of this Nation is involved and this legislation is urgently needed.

Mr. President, the bill I introduce today contains all substantive provisions of the proposed Federal Criminal Code. In the near future I will introduce an amendment to the bill which will add the many technical changes which must be made in other titles of the United States Code in order to conform them with this proposed new title 18.

I ask unanimous consent that an outline of the provisions of the bill be printed in the Record.

THE PROPOSED CRIMINAL CODE REFORM ACT OF 1977

OUTLINE OF SIGNIFICANT PROVISIONS

The bill provides for the first time in the history of the Federal Government as integrated Criminal Code. It would replace existing Title 18 of the United States Code in its entirety.

The bill contains hundreds of improvements. A brief overview of the bill containing most of the important matters proposed, is set out below.

FORMAT OF THE CODE

The bill is divided into two titles. Title I would replace Title 18 of the United States Code. It consists of five interlocking Parts.

Part I embodies the general provisions and principles of the Code. Included in this part are chapters on jurisdiction, culpability, complicity, and defenses.

Part II consists of all the offenses defined in such a way that the reader knows: (1) the elements of the offense; (2) the requisite state of mind (culpability); (3) the circumstances under which the Federal government can prosecute the offender (jurisdiction); and (4) the authorized sentence for violation of the offense (grading).

In order to determine whether criminal liability is to be imposed in a given situation, a reader must engage in the following analysis:

Are the objective elements of some offense in the Code satisfied?

Is the necessary state of mind (i.e., mens rea) present with respect to each element? To determine this, one must consider the definition of the offense in light of the culpability principles of Chapter 3.

Does the accused have a defense to the charge, or is the prosecution barred for any reason? General defenses and bars applying to all offenses, are described or discussed in Chapter 5. Others are stated with the definition of the offense itself if peculiarly applicable to a specific offense or type of offense.

Does the Federal government have jurisdiction to prosecute? Determining the extent of Federal jurisdiction of an offense requires reference to the general provisions of jurisdiction in Chapter 2 and the jurisdictional subsection. If any, included in the section defining the offense.

What is the authorized sentence upon conviction for the offense? Each section defining an offense contains a subsection which describes the grade of the offense, or, in some cases, the different grades which might apply depending on the circumstances. The sentences available for a given grade are set out in Part III of the Code.

Part III embodies all the sentencing provisions. Among other things, it defines the classes of grading, states what types of sanctions may be imposed and mandates the use of sentencing guidelines.

Part IV contains the procedural sections of existing Title 18.

Part V contains provisions on ancillary private civil remedies, such as civil actions against racketeering offenders.

Title II of the bill contains those revisions which occur outside of Title 18 of the United States Code. This includes such things as establishment of a Sentencing Commission responsible for promulgating sentencing guidelines, amendments to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, and technical conforming amendments.

PART I. GENERAL PROVISIONS AND PRINCIPLES

Chapter 1. General provisions

This chapter sets forth the general purposes of the Code, provides general principles of construction, and defines over one hundred terms that are commonly used in the Code and in the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

Chapter 2. Jurisdiction

The general Code treatment of federal jurisdiction is introduced in this chapter. The Code defines offenses in terms of the underlying misconduct (e.g., kidnapping) just as a state penal code does, and in a separate subsection of each offense it specifies the particular circumstances under which the federal government may exercise jurisdiction over the criminal conduct (e.g., transportation of the victim across a state line). The basis for federal jurisdiction is not an element of the offense, but it will still have to be proved to the court beyond a reasonable doubt. This approach to federal jurisdiction permits far clearer definitions of offenses, and allows consolidation of numerous existing offenses into a single offense with several jurisdictional bases (e.g., the Code contains only one theft offense, with a listing of several specified circumstances permitting the federal government to prosecute for the theft). It also allows simplified instructions for juries.

The jurisdictional bases in the Code have been tailored to avoid unnecessary expansion of existing federal jurisdiction.

The Code contains provisions for ancillary federal jurisdiction over certain offenses—primarily violent offenses—committed in the course of other federal offenses. For example, if the federal government prosecutes for a civil rights violation the Code will also permit it to prosecute for an assault or a murder committed in the course of the civil rights violation.

The chapter also sets forth principles of extraterritorial jurisdiction. In doing so it fills several gaps in current law (e.g., it permits a criminal trial of a former serviceman for a murder he committed overseas prior to being discharged).

Chapter 3. Culpable states of mind

This chapter defines the specific mental states (the “mens rea” elements) that are used throughout the Code in defining an offense. The current Title 18 uses 79 different terms to define the requisite mental state. Like the Model Penal Code and most modern state codes, this chapter reduces the number of terms used to describe the state of mind to four: intentional, knowing, reckless or negligent. The simplification should permit far more clarity and uniformity of interpretation.

Chapter 4. Complicity

This chapter sets forth those circumstances under which a person may be criminally liable for the acts of another individual or for the acts of an organization. The accomplice liability section includes a codification of the doctrine of Pinkerton v. United States, making a co-conspirator guilty of each specific offense committed in furtherance of the criminal conspiracy if it was reasonably foreseeable that the specific acts would be performed in furtherance of the unlawful agreement.

One significant section in this chapter is the organization liability provision. It codifies current case law by making an organization liable for the acts of its agent committed within his express, implied or apparent authority.

Chapter 5. Bars and defenses to prosecution

A general statute of limitations and a bar to prosecution on grounds of immaturity are set out in this chapter. The generally recognized common law defenses, including mistake of fact or law, insanity, intoxication, duress, exercise of public authority, protection of persons, protection of property, unlawful entrapment, and official misstatement of law, are all left uncoded for further development by the courts through case law. (It is expected that sometime in the next few years the Congress may be able to attempt a codification of the basic elements of the more common defenses.)

PART II. OFFENSES

Chapter 10. Offenses of general applicability

This chapter codifies the attempt, conspiracy and solicitation offenses. There is under current law no Federal attempt statute of general applicability, although many of the individual offenses contain attempt provisions. This section makes it an offense to attempt to commit any Federal crime. The attempted offense in most instances carries the same penalty as the completed offense on the theory that a defendant who begins to commit an offense should not benefit from the happenstance causing its interruption. In order to encourage the abandonment of a criminal enterprise, a voluntary, complete, and effective avoidance of the offense constitutes an affirmative defense.

The conspiracy section reflects current law, as developed through judicial interpretations of the present general conspiracy statute.

With the exception of subornation of perjury, there is no solicitation offense in current Federal law. The National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws recommended a general offense covering the solicitation of another to commit any Federal offense, an approach adopted in this bill.

Chapter 11. Offenses involving national defense

Three series of offenses relating to treason, sabotage, and espionage are set out in this chapter.

The treason series generally codifies current law. It adds a new section, however, penalizing use of weapons by para-military groups that intend to take over a function of government by force. Such an offense was recommended by the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws.

The Smith Act is repealed in its entirety.

The sabotage series of offenses generally codifies the current law statutes, except that a current law provision dealing with the spreading of false military information in wartime with intent to aid the enemy has been deleted.

The current law offenses relating to espionage and release of classified information have not been revised. Because of the controversy surrounding this area, the existing statutes are moved, unchanged, to title 50 of the United States Code, with the Code simply cross-referencing to those provisions.

Chapter 12. Offenses involving international affairs

This chapter is divided into two subchapters. The first subchapter encompasses those offenses that pertain to foreign relations, such as disclosing a foreign code or engaging in an unlawful international transaction. The second subchapter covers offenses involving immigration, naturalization, and passports such as unlawful entry into the United States or improper use of a passport. The offenses covered here are basically a codification of present law. One major change, however, would make it an offense to conspire within the United States to assassinate a foreign official (Section 1202).

The Logan Act, prohibiting private communication with a foreign government with intent to influence its actions in a dispute with the United States, is repealed. This was recommended by the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws and has been incorporated in all prior versions of this bill.

Chapter 13. Offenses involving government processes

The offenses encompassed by this calendar are those that constitute obstructions of Government functions, whether they be obstructions of justice, contempt offenses, offenses involving false statements, or offenses involving official corruption. For the most part, the chapter reflects current law. However, certain reforms are introduced.

Current law contains an offense of conspiracy to defraud the Government but no substantive offense of defrauding the Government. The current offense has therefore been subject to criticism for punishing a conspiracy to commit an act that is not in itself punishable. Section 1301 establishes the substantive offense of defrauding the Government.

Section 1312 gears the punishment for bail pumping to the nature of the underlying offense. Thus, it will be punished as a felony if the defendant is awaiting trial for a felony, but as a misdemeanor if the underlying offense is a misdemeanor. This reduces the incentive to jump bail in the hope of facing a reduced penalty after sufficient time has passed that the Government's case has grown stale. The section also makes it an offense to fail to surrender for service of sentence, a possible loophole in current law.

Current law covers tampering with witnesses and informants by means of force or threats only in a general obstruction of justice statute. Section 1323 spells out the prohibited conduct in detail, at the same time including a catch-all clause to insure that the coverage of current law is maintained.

The contempt offenses are defined more clearly, the general criminal contempt statute is limited to a six-month penalty, and certain defenses are added to cover impossibility of compliance with court orders and non-compliance with illegal court orders.

The perjury series adds a new offense, false swearing, as a lesser-included perjury offense where the false statement is not material. Like the perjury offense now appearing in 18 U.S.C. 1623, the "two witness" rule is abolished and a defense of retraction is provided. A single false statement offense consolidates over 50 false statement statutes appearing in current law; an oral false statement to a government official is an offense only if an investigator first advises the declarant that making such a false statement is an offense or if it is volunteered to an investigator. A new defense of retraction is added to the false statement offense.

Finally, under Section 1356 public servants are prohibited from using their own official actions or information gained because of their position for private gain while they remain public servants or for one year after they leave public service. As a statute of general applicability, this offense is new to Federal law.

Chapter 14. Offenses involving taxation

This chapter would incorporate Federal criminal tax offenses currently in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (Title 26, United States Code). This approach was suggested by the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws. This is consistent with a fundamental precept of codification requiring that all felony offenses be included in Title 18.

The chapter is divided into two subchapters. The first subchapter would cover internal revenue offenses and the second subchapter would contain customs offenses.

Chapter 14 generally recodifies existing law. However, one particularly significant change is introduced with respect to prosecutions for tax evasion (section 1401). Under existing law, a successful tax evasion prosecution requires a "net" tax deficiency. Thus, if one were to intentionally understate his income with the intent to evade taxes but, due to oversight or neglect, failed to take available deductions adequate to offset the undeclared income, the case against him would fall under existing law. Section 1401, read together with Section 1001 (Attempts), eliminates the "net" deficiency requirement. Thus a taxpayer could be prosecuted for understating his income with a criminal intent, despite the fact that no tax was actually due and owing because of overlooked deductions.

It should be noted that an offense where there is no "net" deficiency is a Class E felony (3 years). However, if there exists a "net" deficiency of $100,000 or less, the penalty is a Class D felony (6 years). Where a "net" deficiency in excess of $100,000 exists, the sanction is upgraded to a Class C felony (12 years).

Chapter 15. Offenses involving individual rights

This chapter covers offenses involving civil rights, political rights, and privacy.

Civil Rights. Basic coverage of present civil rights statutes is retained, but language has been added to broaden the coverage with respect to sex discrimination. In addition, the coverage is extended to protect all persons, not just citizens. The current statute covering conspiracy to deprive a person of his civil rights under color of law is modified to cover an offense by a single individual or organization. Also the statute is modified to make it clear that the criminal state of mind required for the offense applies to the conduct which deprives a person of a right under the Constitution and laws of the United States and does not impose a further requirement that the defendant specifically intend to infringe a federally guaranteed right. Other sections carry forward the coverage of the Civil Rights Act of 1968.

The civil rights provisions also represent an excellent example of use of ancillary Federal jurisdiction as a grading mechanism. The basic offenses are generally graded as Class A misdemeanors (1 year); however, Federal jurisdiction also exists for serious crimes against persons and property committed in the course of such offenses. Thus, a civil rights offense involving a murder would permit Federal prosecution for murder. This treatment is similar in concept to the granting provided in present 18 U.S.C. 245.

Election Offenses. Section 1511 for the first time in Federal law provides a specific series of statutes covering fraud. Heretofore, frauds in connection with a Federal election could be reached only under the general civil rights conspiracy statute. In addition, the bill prohibits engaging in any criminal conduct for the purpose of influencing an election, thereby reaching serious "dirty tricks" conduct such as the Watergate burglary.

The basic offenses applicable to obstructing or influencing elections are primarily directed at elections of Federal officers. However, the bill would for the first time in Federal law permit Federal prosecution for such conduct ostensibly directed at the election of a State or local official if it is a mixed election, that is, an election involving candidates for both Federal and State or local offices.

Privacy. Section 1524 protects from disclosure certain information required to be furnished to the government by private citizens or to obtain a Federal benefit.

Wiretapping. Due to the recent vintage of the wiretap and surveillance warrant provisions and the controversy that surrounds the subject, the bill carries present law provisions forward without substantive change. There is added an offense for possession of an eavesdropping device with intent that it be used unlawfully. It might be noted that due to consolidation and standardization of offenses flowing from codification, there may be some contraction or expansion of the criminal conduct in different areas for which a warrant could issue.

In addition, the offense of mail interception is broadened to protect all forms of non-oral communication.

Chapter 16. Offenses against the person

This chapter contains all of the offenses which protect the person as an individual. Included here are such offenses as murder, manslaughter, maiming, reckless endangerment, kidnapping, aircraft hijacking, and rape. By and large, while the chapter clarifies and simplifies the basic offenses, no substantive changes are made.

The offense of rape, and the other sexual offenses in the sections that follow, apply without distinction as to the sex of the offender or of the victim; forcible sodomy is included in the definition of the offense. It might be noted that the statutory rape provision (Section 1643) can be committed by females but eliminates consensual acts between peers from the offense. No particularized evidentiary requirements or instruction requirements are included. Corroboration requirements are expressly eliminated. No defense or grading distinction is based upon the promiscuity of the victim. Inquiry into the prior sexual conduct of the victim is severely restricted.

The reckless endangerment provision is new to Federal law. It was suggested by the National Commission on Reform of Federal Criminal Laws and a similar statute has been enacted in New York. It provides for a penalty for engaging in any criminal conduct which recklessly endangers the life of another.

Chapter 17. Offenses against property

Chapter 17 incorporates and consolidates the many varied property offenses found throughout the United States Code into some 81 sections. It is in this chapter that the provisions relating to arson, burglary, securities violations and their related offenses are found. It is also in this chapter, perhaps more than in any other, that the consolidation and reduction of unnecessarily repetitious offenses, one of the significant benefits of codification, can be found. By separating the jurisdictional element from the definition of the substantive offense, for example, Section 1731 is able to incorporate the 70-odd theft provisions under current law in the area of property offenses. But some reforms are also accomplished.

Section 1722, defining the offense of extortion is designed to correct a "loop-hole" arising out of the recent Supreme Court decision, United States v. Hammors. In that case, the Court held that the Hobbs Act, which prohibits the obstruction of interstate commerce by extortion, was not applicable to otherwise extortionate conduct when that conduct was used to extort property to which the defendant purported to have a legitimate claim. Such an interpretation is inconsistent with the construction under other Federal extortion provisions (See United States v. Pignatelli, 125 F. 2d 643 (2d Cir. 1942)) and essentially creates a Federal "claim of right" defense. Section 172 focuses on the means used rather than the ends sought and would bring such conduct within the definition of extortion. Recognizing the serious nature of extortion an affirmative defense is provided for minor incidents of violence that may occur in the cause of legitimate picketing.

Section 1734 makes it an offense to execute a scheme to defraud, which in large measure carries forward the existing law on mail and wire frauds. A new consumer fraud provision similar to the measure that passed the Senate in the 94th Congress is included. One of the significant features of these sections lies in their relationship to the procedure part of the code, where a new statutory injunction remedy is provided to restrain violations, a remedy that should be of considerable importance in protecting potential victims of "white collar" crime. Such a remedy would parallel the effective injunction relief that has long been available for violations of the fraud provisions of the Securities and Exchange Act. Section 1734 also prohibits fraud involving pyramid sales schemes.

Chapter 18. Offenses involving public order, safety, health and welfare

This chapter is divided into seven subchapters.

Subchapter A incorporates a series of organized crime offenses which generally mirror current law under the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970. However, several innovations are worthy of note. First, a distinction is made between simple "racketeering" and "operating" a racketeering syndicate—the former is punished at a C felony level (12 years) and the latter at a B felony level (25 years).

Second, a new offense entitled "Washing Racketeering Proceeds" (§ 1803) is created to proscribe the takeover of legitimate businesses with the proceeds of a racketeering enterprise. Finally, Federal loansharking laws are strengthened to reach grossly usurious credit transactions, which in present 18 U.S.C. 892 are stated in terms of a prima facie case for proving an extortionate extension of credit.

Subchapter B contains the various Federal drug offenses. The drug offenses are primarily a codification of the 1970 statutes except that simple possession of more than 100 grams of an opiate (which would carry a retail value of at least $4,000) is made a more serious offense than a simple possession of other drugs, and except that simple possession of 10 grams or less of marijuana left to the states to prosecute. The several provisions of current law providing for a doubling of the penalty for repeat offenders are eliminated. There is added, however, a two-year mandatory minimum sentence for trafficking in an opiate unless the offense was committed, under one of four specified mitigating circumstances.

Subchapter C codifies existing penal provisions involving firearms and explosives. The offense of using a firearm in the course of committing a federal crime is made subject to a mandatory minimum penalty of two years' imprisonment, to be served consecutively within the sentence for the underlying offense, unless one of four specified mitigating circumstances is present.

Subchapter D contains the riot offenses. The riot offenses of existing law are substantially narrowed, both in terms of the definition of the substantive offenses and in terms of the federal ability to prosecute. An incitement to riot may not be prosecuted unless a riot actually occurs. A riot is defined to require at least ten participants instead of three as in current law.

Subchapter D covers gambling, obscenity, and prostitution offenses. Section 1842 contains a definition of obscene material consistent with recent Supreme Court decisions respecting obscenity. The section proscribes any dissemination of obscene material to a minor or to any person in a manner affording no opportunity to avoid exposure to such material. In addition, it proscribes the commercial distribution of obscene material as defined in the section. In general, Federal jurisdiction applies to the offense when the mails or interstate commerce is involved.

With respect to gambling and prostitution, the Code seeks to reach the operators of a gambling or prostitution ring but leaves lesser offenses in this area to State law.

The balance of Chapter 18 covers public health offenses, certain other relatively minor miscellaneous offenses, such as the assimilated crimes act applicable in Federal enclaves. The assimilated crimes act is continued in order to reach minor, uncodified offenses committed in federal enclaves, but because of the existence of a complete federal Code there will be less occasion for its use than has existed in the past. Accordingly, the penalty for assimilated crimes is limited to a one-year maximum.

PART III. SENTENCES

It is in Part III that the sentencing scheme for the entire United States Code, and not merely Title 18, is set out. The sentencing provisions are significantly different from current law. Uniform grading categories are provided to facilitate a penalty structure of consistent penalties for conduct of a similar nature or seriousness. Maximum fines are substantially increased. A provision is added to require notice to fraud victims. For the first time in Federal law, a judge can include an order of restitution to the victim as part of any sentence. The special dangerous offender provisions of current law are incorporated in a more effective form in sentencing guidelines provisions. The Code sets forth four generally recognized purposes of sentencing—deterrence, protection of the public, assurance of just punishment, and rehabilitation.

These specific provisions are important but are overshadowed by the structural and procedural changes in sentencing. A sentencing commission is created and directed to establish guidelines to govern the imposition of sentences for all federal offenses, taking into consideration factors relating to the purposes of sentencing, the characteristics of the offender, and the aggravating and mitigating circumstances of the offense. In sentencing offenders, a judge will be expected to sentence within the range specified in the guidelines, although if he considers the guideline range inappropriate for a particular case he is free to sentence above or below the guideline range as long as he explains his reasons for doing so. If an offender is sentenced above the range specified in the guidelines he may obtain appellate review of his sentence; if he is sentenced below the range specified in the guidelines the government may obtain appellate review of the sentence. The system is designed to promote greater uniformity and fairness, while retaining necessary flexibility. A parole system is retained under the current draft of the bill. However, the trial judge has the authority to sentence a defendant to imprisonment without eligibility for parole for up to nine-tenths of the sentence imposed. The sentencing guidelines will include guidelines on imposing terms of parole ineligibility.

PART IV. ADMINISTRATION AND PROCEDURE

The chapters appearing in this part consolidate, clarify, and codify existing procedural sections of Title 18. Except for the provisions noted below, the codification is accomplished without substantial change in the existing law.

The provisions concerning court-authorized wiretapping have been modified slightly. The statute permitting wiretapping without court order in emergencies is limited specifically to offenses involving treason, sabotage, or espionage, or to offenses involving a risk of death. The provision of current law stating that nothing contained in the wiretapping chapter shall be construed to limit the constitutional power of the President is eliminated because of the controversy it has provoked and because it is without any legal effect.

The extradition statutes are materially modernized and simplified.

The jurisdiction of United States Magistrates is expanded to encompass all misdemeanors, and to permit trial of offenses carrying six months or less without the necessity of obtaining a waiver of jury trial.

An entirely revised series of provisions dealing with mental competency is included in order to overcome the inadequacies of the current law. Included is a provision for the civil commitment, if justified, of an individual who is acquitted by reason of insanity. Although state commitment proceedings may be preferred, federal commitment proceedings are provided to ensure that a genuinely dangerous individual will not be released prematurely.

The ability of the federal government to collect fines that have been imposed by the courts is substantially increased as a result of permitting recourse to the Internal Revenue Service lien procedures.

PART V. ANCILLARY CIVIL PROCEDURES

Chapter 40 covers public civil remedies. It expands the civil forfeiture proceedings of existing law, carries forward existing provisions involving civil restraints of racketeering, and provides the Department of Justice with authority to seek injunctions against general fraud schemes and consumer fraud activities.

Chapter 41 covers private civil remedies. It carries forward civil actions against racketeers and eavesdropping offenders, and adds a civil action against fraud offenders.

More important is the chapter's creation of a system to compensate the victims of violent federal crimes; funding for such compensation will be derived from collected fines.

---

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today I join the distinguished senior Senator from Arkansas in introducing "the Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977." The purpose of this comprehensive legislation is to reform, modernize, and codify the entire Federal criminal code. It has the support of the Department of Justice and Attorney General Griffin Bell, who has been especially helpful and cooperative in drafting the legislation.

The Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977 constitutes the most important attempt in 200 years to reorganize and streamline the administration of Federal criminal justice. It is a major undertaking, of critical importance to our people. As I have repeatedly stated in recent months, I view this legislation as the cornerstone of the Federal Government's commitment to the critical problem of crime in America. I believe it is the key to progress on every other front, and that is why I have made this effort one of my principal legislative goals in the current Congress.

This legislation follows in the wake of various State code recodifications. Since 1970, well over half the States have either reformed their criminal laws or are currently doing so. The Federal Government has a similar responsibility to act. Public attitudes reflect a growing sense of frustration at the inability of Government to deal with crime and the inequities of our criminal justice system. We owe it to the public to put our Federal house in order and to restore the confidence of the people that we are making progress once again.

The bill introduced today is not a hastily conceived idea. It is the culmination of an ongoing 11-year effort to develop a just, workable, modern Federal criminal code. The main impetus for this effort was the decision of President Lyndon Johnson in 1966 to establish the National Commission on Reform of Criminal Laws. This Commission, chaired by the former distinguished Governor of California, Edmund G. Brown, concluded, after almost 5 years of hearings and careful research that a completely new comprehensive codification of the Federal criminal law was necessary. Piecemeal change was ruled out as inconsistent with the goal of genuine reform.

Few have disagreed with this conclusion of the Brown Commission. Judges, academicians, law enforcement officers, and civil libertarians alike have all agreed on the need for prompt development of comprehensive, logically organized, and internally consistent Federal criminal law.

The plain fact is that the current Federal criminal code is a disgrace. Congresses over the years have enacted over 3,000 criminal laws which are currently on the books, piling one on top of another, until today we have a code that looks more like a Tower of Babel than a comprehensible criminal code. There are no standardized definitions. Offenses are scattered throughout all 50 titles of the U.S. Statutes, with no organization or consistency from one provision to the next.

For example, there are 80 separate theft offenses and 70 counterfeiting and forgery offenses, all with their own conflicting language and definitions. The interpretation and application of such multiple statutes inevitably results in inconsistencies, loopholes, and hypertechnicalities.

In addition, there are almost 80 separately defined culpability terms, ranging from "wontonly" and "lasciviously" to "maliciously," and "corruptly." Such terminology cannot help but breed uncertainty and widely disparate interpretation of the law.

The current code is archaic. Many provisions should have been repealed years ago. For example, the Logan Act of 1799—enacted during the administration of President John Adams—prohibits private communications to a foreign government. It is still a crime "to impair military effectiveness by a false statement," even though this provision has not been invoked since World War I. In a lighter vein, it remains a Federal crime to lie to a ship's captain or to detain a Government carrier pigeon. Such provisions are an embarrassment to the very idea of an enlightened Federal criminal code.

Nor, is the current dilemma limited to the flaws and confusion of existing sections. The omissions are also significant. The Federal law currently lacks effective criminal provisions designed to meet many contemporary problems—consumer and election fraud, environmental pollution, white collar crime, and organized crime.

Most importantly, the current Federal criminal code is harsh and unfair. I am referring primarily to the serious problem of sentencing disparity which offends the precept of equal justice under law.

There is a deep public conviction today that justice means different things for the rich and different things for the poor that it is available only to those with money to hire an expensive lawyer.

When we talk about how current laws promote injustice, how they mean different things to the rich and the poor, the one flaw that stands out above the rest is our sentencing policy. Sentencing in America today is a national scandal. Every day the system breeds massive injustice. There are no guidelines to aid judges in the exercise of their discretion. There is no appellate review of sentences. Judges are free to roam at will, dispensing ad hoc justice in ways that defy both reason and fairness. Different judges hand out widely differing sentences to similar offenders convicted of similar crimes. Some offenders, including many repeat offenders, escape jail altogether while others—convicted of the very same crime—go to jail for excessive periods.

The impact of such sentencing disparity on our criminal justice system is devastating. Certainty of punishment is a joke. To all who come in contact with it, the "system" is seen for what it is—a game of chance in which offenders play the odds and gamble on avoiding punishment.

Sentencing disparity also tilts the process against the young and poor and nurtures a growing public cynicism about our institutions. The youth who goes for a joyride or commits a petty larceny is sentenced to a year in jail. Too often the tax evader, the price fixer, the polluter, or the corrupt public official receive suspended sentences on the unthinking ground that the stigma of their convictions is punishment enough.

The judges are not to blame. The problem cannot be traced to "weak" judges who "coddle" criminals. The great majority of our Federal judges try to perform their sentencing duties in a responsible, diligent manner. But they must act without guidelines or review, because there are no standards or review procedures in our current criminal code. The law invites injustice by conferring unlimited discretion on judges to impose sentences within vast statutory limits.

A convicted bank robber can be sentenced anywhere from a term of probation to 25 years in prison, a rapist anywhere from probation to life imprisonment.

This use of broad discretion has backfired; there has been a notorious increase in arbitrariness and injustice. In the last few years study after study has been published documenting the nature and scope of sentencing disparity.

Many of the leading authorities of our criminal justice system—Dean Norval Morris of the University of Chicago Law School and the Honorable Marvin E. Frankel, U.S. district judge for the southern district of New York, to name just two—have written about the critical flaws which threaten the criminal sentencing process. And just a few months ago, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger also commented that "some form of review procedure is needed to deal with this dilemma" of disparity.

Nor is sentencing disparity the only problem. Sentencing maximums are inconsistent and irrational—if one robs a federally insured bank today a 25-year term of imprisonment is possible; but if one robs a post office, the maximum term is only 10 years. If one commits a minor mail fraud of $200 by sending three letters through the mail 15 years can be imposed; but if a major $25,000 mail fraud is committed by sending only one letter through the mail, the maximum is just 5 years.

And only occasionally, as if by accident, are the criminal fines which are imposed related to the amount of actual injury inflicted or gain realized by the offender.

In plain terms, the present penalty structure of the Federal criminal law must be completely revised.

The Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977 is designed to deal with these and other injustices found in current law. The bill completely reorganizes the code in a logical and consistent manner. Over 70 current statutes relating to arson and property destruction are consolidated into just three sections. The one theft section in the bill replaces over 70 current theft and fraud statutes, with the penalty for the offense varying depending on the kind and value of the property stolen. Similarly, five forgery and counterfeiting offenses replace the 80 offenses found in current law, while 50 statutes involving perjury and false statements have been consolidated into four sections.

In place of 80 current levels of culpability, all undefined, this reform bill, defines just four: intentional, knowing, reckless, and negligent. This simplification will permit far greater clarity and uniformity. In addition, over 100 definitions are listed to insure uniform interpretation. The new bill thus provides a common dictionary to make it understandable on its face.

Every effort has been made to draft offenses simply, uniformly, and precisely. Verbose and technical language such as that which appears in the current mail fraud statute—has been avoided. Instead, a conscious effort has been made to speak in common English.

Mr. President, although these new features in the bill basically result from our effort to codify current law, the proposed bill goes well beyond mere codification. It is a reform effort as well.

First and foremost, the new bill overhauls the entire Federal sentencing process by adopting many of the sentencing reforms I suggested in S. 181, "the sentencing guidelines bill," introduced with broad, bipartisan support, including the cosponsorship of Senator McClellan, on January 10. I view the sentencing provisions as the key reform of the entire bill. The bill sets forth four generally recognized purposes of sentencing—deterrence, protection of the public, assurance of just punishment, and rehabilitation. A sentencing commission is created and directed to establish guidelines to govern the imposition of sentences for all Federal offenses, taking into consideration factors relating to the purposes of sentencing the characteristics of the offender, and the aggravating and mitigating circumstances of the offense.

In sentencing offenders, a judge will be expected to sentence within the range specified in the guidelines, although if he considers the guideline range inappropriate for a particular case he is free to sentence above or below the guideline range as long as he explains his reasons for doing so. If an offender is sentenced below the range specified in the guidelines, the Government may obtain appellate review of the sentence. If an offender is sentenced above the range specified in the guidelines, the offender may appeal. This system is designed to promote greater uniformity and fairness, while retaining necessary judicial flexibility. Under this new approach, the gross disparities in sentencing found in current law should be significantly reduced.

In addition, each offense in the bill is described as a certain grade of felony or misdemeanor or as an infraction, as is common under most modern State codes. This provides a shorthand method of referring to the penalties and other considerations that apply to the offense.

Finally, maximum fines are substantially increased—a new, effective weapon against white collar crime—and an important new section mandates notice to victims of consumer fraud in order to facilitate class actions for recovery of losses. No longer will the white collar offender be able to write off a criminal fine as simply a cost of doing business.

But the bill goes well beyond current law in a number of other important respects. There are new provisions designed to further protect civil liberties and civil rights, provisions drafted to meet modern social, political and economic problems, provisions designed to improve the administration of criminal justice and important new provisions which will improve the Federal Government's law enforcement capability:

A. NEW PROVISIONS TO PROTECT CIVIL LIBERTIES AND CIVIL RIGHTS

First. The Logan Act is repealed. This law (18 U.S.C. 951) has been on the books since 1799 and prohibits private communications with a foreign government with intent to influence foreign policy. It has long outlived its usefulness and is looked upon today as little more than an ancient relic. Nevertheless, on occasion it is dusted off and used to raise the spectre of prosecution against those who may disagree with official Government policy. In the late 1960's those American citizens who communicated directly with the North Vietnamese Government in an effort to achieve a breakthrough for peace were threatened with prosecution under this section. It is time it was repealed.

Second. New defenses are added to protect the press from "gag orders." A major improvement over the current law of contempt (18 U.S.C. 401). Under current law the invalidity of a judicial order is not a defense to the crime of contempt. Under this bill it is a defense to contempt if the order is clearly invalid and there was not sufficient time to litigate its validity.

Third. The coverage of the present civil rights laws is expanded. Current law (18 U.S.C. 241) deals only with conspiracies to violate civil rights. Under this bill there need be only one offender, that is, no conspiracy need be found for civil rights violations.

Fourth. The bill changes the Supreme Court decision of Screws v. United States (325 U.S. 91) (1946). Current law requires a finding that a defendant had a specific intent to deprive the victim of his federally protected civil rights, an almost impossible standard to prove—that is, it is not enough, for example, to show that the defendant intended to assault or maim the victim; the Government must also prove to the jury's satisfaction that the assault was done with a specific intent to intimidate the victim from exercising, for example, his right to vote. The bill eliminates this requirement and replaces it with a standard of "recklessness."

Fifth. The Civil Rights Act of 1968 (18 U.S.C. 245; 42 U.S.C. 3631) is expanded to prohibit discrimination based on sex as well as race, color, religion, or national origin. This provision primarily covers equal employment opportunity but would also reach equal access to restaurants and inns as well as public education.

Sixth. The offense of rape is completely modernized. Special corroboration of the victim's testimony is no longer required. Proscriptions are imposed upon the ability of the defense at trial to explore the prior sexual history of the victim. In this way, the law will treat rape victims like any other victim of a criminal assault. It is hoped that this new provision will serve as a model for States to incorporate into their own criminal codes.

Seventh. Important new provisions are directed at the procedures for the commitment of offenders with mental disease or defect. The scope of these provisions and the civil liberties protection provided for, are much more comprehensive than those found in current law—chapter 313 of title 18, United States Code. For example, the time for an examination to determine competency is limited to 6 months instead of 1 year; the hospitalization standard is raised to “clear and convincing evidence” and requires a showing of “substantial risk of serious bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another”; that is, danger to oneself is not a justification for Federal commitment; also, in order to impose hospital conditions at Federal institutions, the Attorney General is required to consult with the Secretary of HEW “in establishing standards for facilities used in the implementation of this subchapter.” Other provisions prevent the Federal Government from committing or detaining an individual once the criminal charges have been dropped for reasons unrelated to that mental illness.

B. NEW MODERN PROVISIONS NOT FOUND IN CURRENT LAW

First. A detailed series of election offenses is created in the wake of the 1972 Presidential campaign to prohibit sabotage of political campaigns. Obstructing an election, obstructing registration and obstructing a political campaign of a Federal election. The bill also makes it illegal to distribute campaign literature without accurately identifying the sponsor, such as the “dirty tricks” aspect of the 1972 Presidential campaign. Currently, the only principal statute for prosecuting election fraud is an 1870 statute (18 U.S.C. 241) which is broadly designed to prohibit any interference with a Federal right—including voting. In light of the events of recent years a specific set of election offenses is needed. The Watergate burglary was a Federal offense only because it occurred in the District of Columbia.

Two. A new provision making environmental pollution a class A misdemeanor with special increased fines is established.

Third. A victim of crime compensation program is created for certain violent Federal crimes committed against the person. Claims are filed with a Federal Compensation Board. Financed by criminal fines and other sources, payments of up to 50,000 for “pecuniary loss” may be awarded to the victim or surviving dependent. But the recipient has an ongoing duty to cooperate with law enforcement authorities in prosecution of the case.

Four. Major new fraud offenses are established to deal with fraudulent pyramid sales schemes and consumer frauds, crimes which are often directed against those elderly and minority citizens most unable to bear the economic hardship of being victimized.

C. NEW TECHNICAL PROVISIONS TO IMPROVE THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

First. The bill contains new provisions for ancillary Federal jurisdiction over certain limited offenses, primarily violent common law offenses committed in the course of other Federal offenses. For example, under this provision, if the Federal Government prosecutes for a Federal civil rights violation, this bill will also permit it to prosecute for an assault or a murder committed in the course of that civil rights violation. I believe that this approach to ancillary jurisdiction, recommended by the Brown Commission, represents one of the most significant contributions made by the new codification. The time, expense, and uncertainty of multiple trials can be avoided by permitting prosecution for all of an individual's offenses committed as part of a single-course of conduct.

Second. The extradition statutes—now found in 18 U.S.C. 3181-3185—are substantially modernized and simplified to make extradition of fugitives possible. The bill clearly designates the procedures that are required for extradition, the events which must occur prior to surrender of a fugitive and the time limitations under which all parties are required to act.

Third. The jurisdiction of Federal magistrates is expanded to help relieve court congestion and backlog. The failure of our criminal justice system to dispense swift justice not only undercuts the Federal crime-fighting effort but, even more importantly, contributes to the growth of injustice. Steps must be taken now to help relieve our courts of their crushing caseloads. One way is to expand the role of our Federal magistrates by allowing them to assume jurisdiction over a limited number of civil and criminal cases which otherwise would fall on the shoulders of the Federal district judge. These new provisions have been drafted and recommended by the Attorney General as one innovative way to combat judicial delay and I look forward to his upcoming testimony concerning these sections.

D. NEW PROVISIONS TO IMPROVE THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S LAW ENFORCEMENT CAPABILITY

First. The legislation expressly designates the offenses over which the United States can claim extraterritorial jurisdiction, including overseas corporate bribery.

Second. The bill takes a broad view of the liability of an organization for the acts of its agents, an important white collar crime weapon.

Third. The bill creates a new offense of conspiracy in the United States to assassinate a foreign official outside the United States.

Fourth. The bill eliminates the archaic common law requirement of the need for two witnesses to prove perjury other than before a grand jury and also allows the Government to prove perjury by showing that the defendant made or affirmed two or more mutually inconsistent statements without indicating which statement was false.

Fifth. The legislation expands the tax evasion offense to include cases where there is no net tax liability involved—that is an attempt to evade taxes.

Sixth. The bill creates a new offense prohibiting the possession of eavesdropping devices with intent to use them illegally.

Seventh. The bill expands the offense of intercepting mail to include all forms of correspondence, for example, telegrams and Morse code transcriptions.

Eighth. The legislation creates a new offense of trafficking in stolen property, which is directed toward the professional fence who deals in stolen goods for a living.

Ninth. The bill expands existing law to cover the counterfeiting and forging of corporate securities and notes and bonds of State and local governments.

Tenth. The legislation expands existing laws regarding commercial bribery, for example bribery in the banking industry or bribery of employees of a contractor who has a contract to which the United States is a party.

Eleventh. The legislation creates a new offense of operating a racketeering syndicate which is aimed at leaders of organized crime. In addition, the legislation makes it an offense to "launder" the proceeds of organized crime by investing the gains of illegal operations in other legitimate businesses. By making the laundering of these proceeds a crime, this bill helps to strip away the financial machinations of organized crime.

Twelfth. The bill creates a lesser included offense of loansharking involving grossly usurious rates of interest.

Thirteenth. The legislation provides innovative civil injunction procedures to be used against perpetrators of consumer frauds or those engaged in organized crime racketeering. Since investigation of such schemes often takes months, if not years, before the case is ready for criminal prosecution, innocent people may continue to be victimized while the investigation is in progress. This bill allows the Attorney General, prior to commencing a criminal action, to bring a suit to enjoin such schemes. This injunction procedure is similar to that already used with great success in SEC cases.

Fourteenth. The new bill not only substantially increases the maximum amount of fines that can be imposed, but also provides that, for those offenses in which a defendant derived personal gain or caused property loss, the amount of fine imposed can be increased to twice the gain derived or twice the gross loss caused, whichever is greater.

Fifteenth. An important section of the bill makes it a crime to interfere with organized labor activities.

Sixteenth. Finally, a provision allows the Attorney General to initiate a civil forfeiture proceeding to recover property used or possessed in the course of violating various specific crimes, such as bribery, smuggling, counterfeiting, forgery, or firearms offenses.

Mr. President, these are just some of the major provisions that help to highlight the need for prompt enactment of this important legislation.

We are, of course, all aware of the storm of controversy which surrounded this bill's predecessor in the last Congress. Along with many others, I viewed S.1 as a setback to the goal of true criminal code reform. I say it as promising, not eliminating, injustice. During the past months, however, I have worked to come up with an alternative to S. 1, an alternative that would reflect changes which I and others perceived as essential to any new Federal criminal code effort. This bill is the product of that effort. It reflects the careful thought of a large number of distinguished and concerned people. Various Senators, including Senator

Abourezk and former Senators Roman Hruska and Philip Hart; representatives of the Department of Justice, including Attorney General Bell, Edward Levi, and Elliot Richardson; leading members of the academic community, in particular, Alan Derhowitz of the Harvard Law School and Louis Schwartz of the University of Pennsylvania Law School; the various member and staff of the Brown Commission; and, especially, the dean of the Senate when it comes to law enforcement matters, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas (Mr. McClellan). They have all labored tirelessly to work out the many controversial areas and to perfect an altogether new bill worthy of broad-based support.

The major objectionable provisions of S.1 have been modified or eliminated entirely from this bill: the so-called Official Secrets Act has been deleted, the insanity defense has been restored, the Smith Act has been repealed, provisions expanding the death penalty have been eliminated, a Federal disorderly conduct provision has been struck, provisions dealing with demonstrations at a courthouse and riot have been carefully drafted to take into account civil liberties objections, the extortion offense has been rewritten to protect organized labor activities, possession of small amounts of marihuana is no longer a Federal crime, the "inherent power disclaimer" section of the current wiretap law has been deleted, and emergency warrantless wiretaps have been restricted.

Perhaps most importantly, the size of this bill has been reduced from the 800 pages of S. 1, to a much more manageable 300 pages. This has been done by deleting the technical conforming amendments and by eliminating repetitive sections.

These are just a few of the improvements which distinguish this bill from its predecessor. Many, many other improvements have also been made.

Mr. President, I believe that this legislation is a major forward step in the ongoing effort to reform our Federal criminal laws and streamline the administration of criminal justice. It can still be improved and I look forward with anticipation to the hearings and debates over the next few months because I think we can do an even better job. But I am convinced that a point has now been reached where effective criminal code reform is nearing reality after more than a decade of waiting.

Just a few weeks ago, Edmund G. Brown, the distinguished chairman of the Brown Commission and a long-time supporter of criminal law reform, stated that "if the Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977 is adopted I think it will be one of the most constructive moves in the administration of criminal justice in this century." It is up to the Congress and this administration to make this "constructive move" a reality. Twenty-five years ago one of our Nation's most distinguished legal scholars, Herbert Wechsler, aptly expressed the profound impact that the criminal law has on our daily lives; in so doing he gave the Congress the mandate which should guide us in the months ahead:

Whatever view one holds about the penal law, no one will question its importance in society. This is the law on which men place their ultimate reliance for protection against all the deepest injuries that human conduct can inflict on individuals and institutions. By the same token, penal law governs the strongest force that we permit official agencies to bring to bear on individuals. Its promise as an instrument of safety is matched only by its power to destroy.

If penal law is weak or ineffective, basic human interests are in jeopardy. If it is harsh or arbitrary in its impact, it works a gross injustice on those caught within its coils. The law that carries such responsibilities should surely be as rational and just as law can be. Nowhere in the entire legal field is more at stake for the community, for the individual.

95TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

S. 1437

---

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

MAY 2 (legislative day, APRIL 28), 1977

Mr. McCLELLAN (for himself and Mr. KENNEDY) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

---

A BILL

To codify, revise, and reform title 18 of the United States Code; and for other purposes.

1 Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the
2 United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may
3 be cited as the "Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977".

4 TITLE I—CODIFICATION, REVISION, AND REFORM
5 OF TITLE 18

6 Sec. 101. Title 18 of the United States Code, which may be cited as 7 "18 U.S.C. §——" or as "Federal Criminal Code §——", is amended
8 to read as follows:

9 "TITLE 18.—FEDERAL CRIMINAL CODE
10 "TABLE OF CONTENTS

11 "PART I.—GENERAL PROVISIONS AND 12 PRINCIPLES

13 "Chapter 1.—GENERAL PROVISIONS

14 "Subchapter A.—Matters Relating to Purpose and Appli-
15 cation

"Sec.

"101. General Purpose.

"102. General Principle of Criminal Liability.

"103. Application.

"104. Civil Remedies and Powers Unimpaired.

16 "Subchapter B.—Matters Relating to Construction

"Sec.

"111. General Definitions.

"112. General Principles of Construction.

II—O

1 “Chapter 2.—JURISDICTION

“Sec.

“201. Federal Jurisdiction.

“202. General Jurisdiction of the United States.

“203. Special Jurisdiction of the United States.

“204. Extraterritorial Jurisdiction of the United States.

“205. Federal Jurisdiction Generally Not Preemptive.

2 “Chapter 3.—CULPABLE STATES OF MIND

“Sec.

“301. State of Mind Generally.

“302. ‘Intentional’, ‘Knowing’, ‘Reckless’, and ‘Negligent’ States of Mind.

“303. Proof of State of Mind.

3 “Chapter 4.—COMPLICITY

“Sec.

“401. Liability of an Accomplice.

“402. Liability of an Organization for Conduct of an Agent.

“403. Liability of an Agent for Conduct of an Organization.

“404. General Provisions for Chapter 4.

4 “Chapter 5.—BARS AND DEFENSES5 “Subchapter A.—General Provisions

“Sec.

“501. General Principle Governing Existence of Bars and Defenses.

“502. Application and Scope of Bars and Defenses.

6 “Subchapter B.—Bars to Prosecution

“Sec.

“511. Time Limitations.

“512. Immaturity.

7 PART II.—OFFENSES8 “Chapter 10.—OFFENSES OF GENERAL APPLICABILITY

“Sec.

“1001. Criminal Attempt.

“1002. Criminal Conspiracy.

“1003. Criminal Solicitation.

“1004. General Provisions for Chapter 10.

9 “Chapter 11.—OFFENSES INVOLVING NATIONAL DEFENSE10 “Subchapter A.—Treason and Related Offenses

“Sec.

“1101. Treason.

“1102. Armed Rebellion or Insurrection.

“1103. Engaging in Para-Military Activity.

11 “Subchapter B.—Sabotage and Related Offenses

“Sec.

“1111. Sabotage.

“1112. Impairing Military Effectiveness.

“1113. Violating an Emergency Regulation.

“1114. Evading Military or Alternative Civilian Service.

“1115. Obstructing Military Recruitment or Induction.

“1116. Inciting or Aiding Mutiny, Insubordination, or Desertion.

“1117. Aiding Escape of a Prisoner of War or an Enemy Alien.

1           "Subchapter C.—Espionage and Related Offenses

"Sec.

"1121. Espionage.

"1122. Disseminating National Defense Information.

"1123. Disseminating Classified Information.

"1124. Receiving Classified Information.

"1125. Failing to Register as a Person Trained in a Foreign Espionage System.

"1126. Failing to Register as, or Acting as, a Foreign Agent.

2           "Subchapter D.—Miscellaneous National Defense Offenses

"Sec.

"1131. Atomic Energy Offenses.

3           "Chapter 12.—OFFENSES INVOLVING INTERNATIONAL
 4                                               AFFAIRS

5           "Subchapter A.—Offenses Involving Foreign Relations

"Sec.

"1201. Attacking a Foreign Power.

"1202. Conspiracy against a Foreign Power.

"1203. Entering or Recruiting for a Foreign Armed Force.

"1204. Violating Neutrality by Causing Departure of a Vessel or Aircraft.

"1205. Disclosing a Foreign Diplomatic Code or Correspondence.

"1206. Engaging in an Unlawful International Transaction.

6           "Subchapter B.—Offenses Involving Immigration, Naturali-
 7                                               zation, and Passports

"Sec.

"1211. Unlawfully Entering the United States as an Alien.

"1212. Smuggling an Alien into the United States.

"1213. Hindering Discovery of an Alien Unlawfully in the United States.

"1214. Unlawfully Employing an Alien.

"1215. Fraudulently Acquiring or Improperly Using Evidence of Citizenship.

"1216. Fraudulently Acquiring or Improperly Using a Passport.

"1217. General Provisions for Subchapter B.

8           "Chapter 13.—OFFENSES INVOLVING GOVERNMENT
 9                                               PROCESSES

10          "Subchapter A.—General Obstructions of Government
 11                                               Functions

"Sec.

"1301. Obstructing a Government Function by Fraud.

"1302. Obstructing a Government Function by Physical Interference.

"1303. Impersonating an Official.

12          "Subchapter B.—Obstructions of Law Enforcement

"Sec.

"1311. Hindering Law Enforcement.

"1312. Bail Jumping.

"1313. Escape.

"1314. Providing or Possessing Contraband in a Prison.

"1315. Flight to Avoid Prosecution or Appearing as a Witness.

1           “Subchapter C.—Obstructions of Justice

- “Sec.
 “1321. Witness Bribery.
 “1322. Corrupting a Witness or an Informant.
 “1323. Tampering with a Witness or an Informant.
 “1324. Retaliating against a Witness or an Informant.
 “1325. Tampering with Physical Evidence.
 “1326. Improperly Influencing a Juror.
 “1327. Monitoring Jury Deliberations.
 “1328. Demonstrating to Influence a Judicial Proceeding.

2           “Subchapter D.—Contempt Offenses

- “Sec.
 “1331. Criminal Contempt.
 “1332. Failing to Appear as a Witness.
 “1333. Refusing to Testify or to Produce Information.
 “1334. Obstructing a Proceeding by Disorderly Conduct.
 “1335. Disobeying a Judicial Order.

3           “Subchapter E.—Perjury, False Statements, and Related
 4                                                       Offenses

- “Sec.
 “1341. Perjury.
 “1342. False Swearing.
 “1343. Making a False Statement.
 “1344. Tampering with a Government Record.
 “1345. General Provisions for Subchapter E.

5           “Subchapter F.—Commercial Bribery and Related
 6                                                       Offenses

- “Sec.
 “1351. Bribery.
 “1352. Graft.
 “1353. Trading in Government Assistance.
 “1354. Trading in Special Influence.
 “1355. Trading in Public Office.
 “1356. Speculating on Official Action or Information.
 “1357. Tampering with a Public Servant.
 “1358. Retaliating against a Public Servant.
 “1359. General Provisions for Subchapter F.

7           “Chapter 14.—OFFENSES INVOLVING TAXATION

8           “Subchapter A.—Internal Revenue Offenses

- “Sec.
 “1401. Tax Evasion.
 “1402. Disregarding a Tax Obligation.
 “1403. Alcohol and Tobacco Tax Offenses.
 “1404. Definitions for Subchapter A.

9           “Subchapter B.—Customs Offenses

- “Sec.
 “1411. Smuggling.
 “1412. Trafficking in Smuggled Property.
 “1413. Receiving Smuggled Property.
 “1414. General Provisions for Subchapter B.

10          “Chapter 15.—OFFENSES INVOLVING INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS

11          “Subchapter A.—Offenses Involving Civil Rights

- “Sec.
 “1501. Interfering with Civil Rights.
 “1502. Interfering with Civil Rights under Color of Law.
 “1503. Interfering with a Federal Benefit.
 “1504. Unlawful Discrimination.
 “1505. Interfering with Speech or Assembly Related to Civil Rights Activities.
 “1506. Strikebreaking.

1           “Subchapter B.—Offenses Involving Political Rights

“Sec.

“1511. Obstructing an Election.

“1512. Obstructing Registration.

“1513. Obstructing a Political Campaign.

“1514. Interfering with a Federal Benefit for a Political Purpose.

“1515. Misusing Authority over Personnel for a Political Purpose.

“1516. Soliciting a Political Contribution as a Federal Public Servant or in a Federal Building.

“1517. Making a Political Contribution as a Foreign National.

“1518. Making an Excess Campaign Expenditure.

“1519. Definitions for Subchapter B.

2           “Subchapter C.—Offenses Involving Privacy

“Sec.

“1521. Eavesdropping.

“1522. Trafficking in an Eavesdropping Device.

“1523. Possessing an Eavesdropping Device.

“1524. Intercepting Correspondence.

“1525. Revealing Private Information Submitted for a Government Purpose.

“1526. Definitions for Subchapter C.

3           “Chapter 16.—OFFENSES INVOLVING THE PERSON

4           “Subchapter A.—Homicide Offenses

“Sec.

“1601. Murder.

“1602. Manslaughter.

“1603. Negligent Homicide.

5           “Subchapter B.—Assault Offenses

“Sec.

“1611. Maiming.

“1612. Aggravated Battery.

“1613. Battery.

“1614. Menacing.

“1615. Terrorizing.

“1616. Communicating a Threat.

“1617. Reckless Endangerment.

“1618. General Provisions for Subchapter B.

6           “Subchapter C.—Kidnapping and Related Offenses

“Sec.

“1621. Kidnapping.

“1622. Aggravated Criminal Restraint.

“1623. Criminal Restraint.

“1624. General Provisions for Subchapter C.

7           “Subchapter D.—Hijacking Offenses

“Sec.

“1631. Aircraft Hijacking.

“1632. Commandeering a Vessel.

8           “Subchapter E.—Sex Offenses

“Sec.

“1641. Rape.

“1642. Sexual Assault.

“1643. Sexual Abuse of a Minor.

“1644. Sexual Abuse of a Ward.

“1645. Unlawful Sexual Contact.

“1646. General Provisions for Subchapter E.

1 “Chapter 17.—OFFENSES INVOLVING PROPERTY2 “Subchapter A.—Arson and Other Property Destruction
3 Offenses

“Sec.

“1701. Arson.

“1702. Aggravated Property Destruction.

“1703. Property Destruction.

“1704. General Provisions for Subchapter A.

4 “Subchapter B.—Burglary and Other Criminal Intrusion
5 Offenses

“Sec.

“1711. Burglary.

“1712. Criminal Entry.

“1713. Criminal Trespass.

“1714. Stowing Away.

“1715. Possessing Burglar's Tools.

“1716. Definitions for Subchapter B.

6 “Subchapter C.—Robbery, Extortion, and Blackmail

“Sec.

“1721. Robbery.

“1722. Extortion.

“1723. Blackmail.

“1724. General Provisions for Subchapter C.

7 “Subchapter D.—Theft and Related Offenses

“Sec.

“1731. Theft.

“1732. Trafficking in Stolen Property.

“1733. Receiving Stolen Property.

“1734. Executing a Fraudulent Scheme.

“1735. Bankruptcy Fraud.

“1736. Interfering with a Security Interest.

“1737. Fraud in a Regulated Industry.

“1738. Consumer Fraud.

“1739. General Provisions for Subchapter D.

8 “Subchapter E.—Counterfeiting, Forgery, and Related Offenses

“Sec.

“1741. Counterfeiting.

“1742. Forgery.

“1743. Criminal Endorsement of a Written Instrument.

“1744. Criminal Issuance of a Written Instrument.

“1745. Trafficking in a Counterfeiting Implement.

“1746. Definitions for Subchapter E.

9 “Subchapter F.—Commercial Bribery and Related Offenses

“Sec.

“1751. Commercial Bribery.

“1752. Labor Bribery.

“1753. Sports Bribery.

10 “Subchapter G.—Investment, Monetary, and Antitrust
11 Offenses

“Sec.

“1761. Securities Offenses.

“1762. Monetary Offenses.

“1763. Commodities Exchange Offenses.

“1764. Antitrust Offenses.

1 “Chapter 18.—OFFENSES INVOLVING PUBLIC ORDER
 2 SAFETY, HEALTH, AND WELFARE

3 “Subchapter A. Organized Crime Offenses

4 “Subchapter B.—Drug Offenses

“Sec.

“1811. Trafficking in an Opiate.

“1812. Trafficking in Drugs.

“1813. Possessing Drugs.

“1814. Violating a Drug Regulation.

“1815. General Provisions for Subchapter B.

5 “Subchapter C.—Explosives and Firearms Offenses

“Sec.

“1821. Explosives Offenses.

“1822. Firearms Offenses.

“1823. Using a Weapon in the Course of a Crime.

“1824. Possessing a Weapon aboard an Aircraft.

6 “Subchapter D.—Riot Offenses

“Sec.

“1831. Leading a Riot.

“1832. Providing Arms for a Riot.

“1833. Engaging in a Riot.

“1834. Definition for Subchapter D.

7 “Subchapter E.—Gambling, Obscenity, and Prostitution
 8 Offenses

“Sec.

“1841. Engaging in a Gambling Business.

“1842. Disseminating Obscene Material.

“1843. Conducting a Prostitution Business.

9 “Subchapter F.—Public Health Offenses

“Sec.

“1851. Fraud in a Health Related Industry.

“1852. Distributing Adulterated Food.

“1853. Environmental Pollution.

10 “Subchapter G.—Miscellaneous Offenses

“Sec.

“1861. Failing to Obey a Public Safety Order.

“1862. Violating State or Local Law in an Enclave.

11 “PART III.—SENTENCES

12 “Chapter 20.—GENERAL PROVISIONS

“Sec.

“2001. Authorized Sentences.

“2002. Presentence Reports.

“2003. Imposition of a Sentence.

“2004. Order of Criminal Forfeiture.

“2005. Order of Notice to Victims.

“2006. Order of Restitution.

“2007. Review of a Sentence.

“2008. Implementation of a Sentence.

13 “Chapter 21.—PROBATION

“Sec.

“2101. Sentence of Probation.

“2102. Imposition of a Sentence of Probation.

“2103. Conditions of Probation.

“2104. Running of a Term of Probation.

“2105. Revocation of Probation.

“2106. Implementation of a Sentence of Probation.

1 “Chapter 22.—FINES*“Sec.

- “2201. Sentence of Fine.
- “2202. Imposition of a Sentence of Fine.
- “2203. Modification or Remission of Fine.
- “2204. Implementation of a Sentence of Fine.

2 “Chapter 23.—IMPRISONMENT*“Sec.

- “2301. Sentence of Imprisonment.
- “2302. Imposition of a Sentence of Imprisonment.
- “2303. Parole Term and Contingent Prison Term Included in Sentence of Imprisonment.
- “2304. Multiple Sentences of Imprisonment.
- “2305. Calculation of Term of Imprisonment.
- “2306. Implementation of a Sentence of Imprisonment and Parole therefrom.

3 “PART IV.—ADMINISTRATION AND
4 PROCEDURE5 “Chapter 30.—INVESTIGATIVE AND LAW ENFORCEMENT
6 AUTHORITY7 “Subchapter A.—Investigative Authority*“Sec.

- “3001. Investigative Authority over Offenses within this Title.
- “3002. Investigative Authority over Offenses outside this Title.

8 “Subchapter B.—Law Enforcement Authority*“Sec.

- “3011. Federal Bureau of Investigation.
- “3012. Drug Enforcement Administration.
- “3013. Department of the Treasury.
- “3014. Postal Service.
- “3015. United States Marshals Service.
- “3016. United States Probation Service.
- “3017. Bureau of Prisons.
- “3018. Immigration and Naturalization Service.
- “3019. Department of the Interior.

9 “Chapter 31.—ANCILLARY INVESTIGATIVE AUTHORITY10 “Subchapter A.—Interception of Communications*“Sec.

- “3101. Authorization for Interception.
- “3102. Application for an Order for Interception.
- “3103. Issuance of an Order for Interception.
- “3104. Interception without Prior Authorization.
- “3105. Records and Notice of Interception.
- “3106. Use of Information Obtained from an Interception.
- “3107. Report of Interception.
- “3108. Definitions for Subchapter A.

11 “Subchapter B.—Compulsion of Testimony of Witnesses*“Sec.

- “3111. Compulsion of Testimony Generally.
- “3112. Court or Grand Jury Proceedings.
- “3113. Administrative Proceedings.
- “3114. Congressional Proceedings.
- “3115. Definitions for Subchapter B.

12 “Subchapter C.—Protection of Witnesses*“Sec.

- “3121. Facilities for Witness Protection.
- “3122. Reimbursement for Witness Protection Expenses.
- “3123. Definitions for Subchapter C.

1        “Subchapter D.—Payment of Rewards

“Sec.

“3131. Rewards for Apprehending Offenders.

2        “Chapter 32.—RENDITION AND EXTRADITION3        “Subchapter A.—Rendition

“Sec.

“3201. Interstate Agreement on Detainers.

“3202. Rendition of a Fugitive.

“3203. General Provisions for Subchapter A.

4        “Subchapter B.—Extradition

“Sec.

“3211. Scope and Limitation of Extradition Provisions.

“3212. Extradition Procedure.

“3213. Warrant of Surrender.

“3214. Waiver.

“3215. Appeal.

“3216. Return to the United States.

“3217. General Provisions for Subchapter B.

5        “Chapter 33.—JURISDICTION AND VENUE6        “Subchapter A.—Jurisdiction

“Sec.

“3301. Jurisdiction of District Courts over Offenses.

“3302. Jurisdiction of United States Magistrates over Offenses.

“3303. Jurisdiction to Order Arrests for Offenses.

7        “Subchapter B.—Venue

“Sec.

“3311. Venue for an Offense Committed in More than One District.

“3312. Venue for an Offense Committed outside any District.

“3313. Venue if a New District or Division is Established.

8        “Chapter 34.—APPOINTMENT OF COUNSEL

“Sec.

“3401. District Plans for Appointment of Counsel.

“3402. Appointment of Counsel.

“3403. Compensation of Counsel.

“3404. Defender Organizations.

“3405. General Provisions for Chapter 34.

9        “Chapter 35.—RELEASE AND CONFINEMENT PENDING10        JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS11        “Subchapter A.—Release Pending Judicial Proceedings

“Sec.

“3501. Release Authority Generally.

“3502. Release Pending Trial in a Non-Capital Case.

“3503. Release Pending Trial in a Capital Case.

“3504. Release Pending Sentence or Appeal.

“3505. Release of a Material Witness.

“3506. Appeal from Denial of Release.

“3507. Release in a Case Removed from a State Court.

“3508. Surrender of an Offender by a Surety.

“3509. Security for Peace and Good Behavior.

12        “Subchapter B.—Confinement Pending Judicial Proceed- 13        ings

“Sec.

“3511. Commitment of an Arrested Person.

“3512. Discharge of an Arrested But Unconvicted Person.

1 “Chapter 36.—DISPOSITION OF JUVENILE OR INCOMPE-
 2 TENT OFFENDERS

3 “Subchapter A.—Juvenile Delinquency

“Sec.

“3601. Surrender of a Juvenile Delinquent to State Authorities.

“3602. Arrest and Detention of a Juvenile Delinquent.

“3603. Juvenile Delinquency Proceedings.

“3604. Parole of a Juvenile Delinquent.

“3605. Use of Juvenile Delinquency Records.

“3606. Definitions for Subchapter A.

4 “Subchapter B.—Offenders With Mental Disease or Defect

“Sec.

“3611. Determination of Mental Competency to Stand Trial.

“3612. Determination of the Existence of Insanity at the Time of the Offense.

“3613. Hospitalization of a Person Acquitted by Reason of Insanity.

“3614. Hospitalization of a Convicted Person Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect.

“3615. Hospitalization of an Imprisoned Person Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect.

“3616. Hospitalization of a Person Due for Release but Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect.

“3617. General Provisions for Subchapter B.

5 “Chapter 37.—PRETRIAL AND TRIAL PROCEDURE, EVI-
 6 DENCE, AND APPELLATE REVIEW

7 “Subchapter A.—Pretrial and Trial Procedure

“Sec.

“3701. Pretrial and Trial Procedure in General.

“3702. Rulemaking Authority of the Supreme Court for Rules of Criminal Procedure.

8 “Subchapter B.—Evidence

“Sec.

“3711. Evidence in General.

“3712. Rulemaking Authority of the Supreme Court for Rules of Evidence.

“3713. Admissibility of Confessions.

“3714. Admissibility of Evidence in Sentencing Proceedings.

9 “Subchapter C.—Appellate Review

“Sec.

“3721. Appellate Review in General.

“3722. Rulemaking Authority of the Supreme Court for Rules of Appellate Procedure.

“3723. Appeal by a Defendant.

“3724. Appeal by the Government.

“3725. Review of a Sentence.

10 “Chapter 38.—POSTSENTENCE ADMINISTRATION

11 “Subchapter A.—Probation

“Sec.

“3801. Supervision of Probation.

“3802. Appointment of Probation Officers.

“3803. Duties of Probation Officers.

“3804. Transportation of a Probationer.

“3805. Transfer of Jurisdiction over a Probationer.

“3806. Arrest and Return of a Probationer.

“3807. Special Probation and Expungement Procedures for Drug Possessors.

1 “§ 102. General Principle of Criminal Liability

2 “A person commits an offense under this title only if:

3 “(a) he directly or indirectly engages in conduct, or under a pro-
4 vision of chapter 4 is responsible for conduct, described as an offense
5 in a section set forth in part II of this title;

6 “(b) the circumstances, if any, described in the section exist at the 7 time of the conduct;

8 “(c) the results, if any, described in the section are caused by the 9 conduct;

10 “(d) the states of mind described in the section, or required by the 11 provisions of chapter 3, exist with respect to the described conduct, 12 circumstances, and results; and

13 “(e) a defense or an affirmative defense that is properly raised and 14 that is described in the section, described in a general-provisions sec-
15 tion made applicable to the section, or otherwise recognized by law,
16 did not exist at the time of the conduct.

17 “§ 103. Application

18 “Except as otherwise provided, the provisions of this title apply
19 to prosecutions under any Act of Congress other than:

20 “(a) an Act of Congress applicable exclusively in the District
21 of Columbia;

22 “(b) the Canal Zone Code; or

23 “(c) the Uniform Code of Military Justice (10 U.S.C. 801 et 24 seq.).

25 This title does not apply to an Act of Congress described in subsection 26 (a), (b), or (c) except in an instance in which specific reference is 27 made to such an Act.

28 “§ 104. Civil Remedies and Powers Unimpaired

29 “Except as otherwise provided, nothing in this title affects:

30 “(a) the availability or terms of any civil or administrative 31 remedy or penalty;

32 “(b) the power of a court, through civil proceedings, to compel
33 compliance with its order, decree, process, writ, or rule; or

34 “(c) the authority of a court to direct the compensation of a
35 complainant for loss.

36 “Subchapter B.—Matters Relating to Construction

“Sec.

“111. General Definitions.

“112. General Principles of Construction.

1    “§ 111. General Definitions

2        “As used in this title and in the Federal Rules of Criminal Proce-
3    dure and in the Rules of Procedure for the Trial of Minor Offenses
4    before United States Magistrates, unless the meaning is modified or 5    replaced by a definition set forth in another section for application to 6    a limited portion of this title, or unless a different meaning is otherwise
7    plainly required :

8            “‘abet’ includes counsel, induce, procure, and command ;

9            “‘actor’ means the person, or one of the persons, who engaged 10    in the conduct charged, whether or not such person is the defend-
11    ant or a defendant in the case ;

12            “‘affirmative defense’ means a defense specifically designated 13    as an affirmative defense that the defendant has the burden of 14    proving by a preponderance of the evidence as prescribed by Rule
15    25.1 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure ;

16            “‘agent’ means a person authorized to act on behalf of another
17    person or a government, and, in the case of an organization or a
18    government, includes (a) a partner, director, officer, manager, 19    and representative ; and (b), except for the purpose of receipt of 20    service of process, a servant and employee ;

21            “‘aid’ includes facilitate ;

22            “‘aircraft’ includes any craft designed for navigation in air or 23    in space ;

24            “‘ammunition’ includes an ammunition or cartridge case, a
25    primer, a bullet, and a propellant substance designed for use in a 26    firearm ;

27            “‘anything of pecuniary value’ means (a) anything of value in 28    the form of money, a negotiable instrument, a commercial in-
29    terest, or anything else the primary significance of which is eco-30    nomic advantage ; or (b) any other property or service that has 31    a value in excess of $100 ;

32            “‘anything of value’ means any direct or indirect gain or ad-
33    vantage, or anything that might reasonably be regarded by the 34    beneficiary as a direct or indirect gain or advantage, including a 35    direct or indirect gain or advantage to any other person ;

36            “‘associate nation’ means a nation at war with a foreign power
37    with which the United States is at war ;

38            “‘attorney for the government’ means a United States attorney,
39    an assistant United States attorney, a special assistant United 40    States attorney, a special assistant to the Attorney General, or

1 any other attorney of the Department of Justice authorized by
2 statute, or by a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant thereto.
3 to act as an attorney for the government ;

4 " 'Attorney General' means the Attorney General of the United
5 States, and, unless issued in conjunction with a reference to another
6 specified officer of the Department of Justice, includes any officer
7 of the Department of Justice authorized to act for or on behalf of 8 the Attorney General ;

9 " 'bar to prosecution' means a ground for terminating a prose-
10 cution in favor of a defendant on a ground unrelated to guilt or 11 innocence ;

12 " 'bodily injury' includes (a) a cut, abrasion, bruise, burn, or 13 disfigurement ; (b) physical pain ; (c) illness ; (d) impairment
14 of the function of a bodily member, organ, or mental faculty ;
15 and (e) any other injury to the body no matter how temporary ;

16 " 'building' means an immovable or movable structure that is
17 at least partially enclosed, or a separate part of such a structure,
18 and that is designed for use, or used, in whole or in part, as (a)
19 an individual's permanent or temporary home or place of lodging ;
20 (b) a place for persons to engage in matters pertaining to govern-
21 ment, an occupation or a business or a profession, education,
22 religion, or entertainment ; or (c) a place for the storage of 23 property within which, because of its size or other characteristics,
24 it is apparent that an individual could be present ;

25 " 'Canal Zone' includes (a) the area designated as the Canal
26 Zone by sections 1 and 2 of title 2 of the Canal Zone Code ; and 27 (b) the corridor over which the United States exercises juris-
28 diction pursuant to the provisions of Article IX of the General
29 Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation between the United States
30 of America and the Republic of Panama, signed March 2, 1936,
31 to the extent that the application to the corridor of the provisions
32 of this title is consistent with the nature of the rights of the United 33 States in the corridor as provided by treaty ;

34 " 'chapter' means a chapter of this title ;

35 " 'class', when used to refer by letter designation to a particular
36 category of felony or misdemeanor, means a felony or misde-
37 meanor carrying the incidents assigned to such designation by
38 the provisions of part III of this title ;

39 " 'commission of an offense', or a variant thereof, includes the 40 attempted commission of an offense, the consummation of an

1 offense, and any immediate flight after the commission of an
2 offense;

3 “‘communicate’ means to impart or transfer information, or 4 otherwise to make information available by any means, to a per-
5 son or to the general public;

6 “‘conduct’ includes any act, any omission, and any possession;

7 “‘conduct constituting an offense’, or a variant thereof using the 8 term ‘crime’ or ‘felony’ instead of ‘offense’, means conduct with 9 the state of mind, under the circumstances, and with the results,
10 required for the commission of the offense;

11 “‘consent’ includes willing assent, but does not include assent
12 given by a person (a) who is legally incompetent to authorize the 13 conduct assented to; (b) who is a member of a category of per-14 sons whose improvident consent is sought to be prevented by the 15 law describing the offense; (c) who is, by reason of age, mental 16 disease or defect, or intoxication, manifestly unable, or known by 17 the actor to be unable, to make a reasonable judgment as to the 18 nature or harmfulness of the conduct assented to; or (d) whose 19 assent is induced by force, threat, intimidation, or deception;

20 “‘court’ includes a presiding judge;

21 “‘court of the United States’ means the Supreme Court of the 22 United States, a United States Court of Appeals, a United 23 States District Court established pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 132, the 24 United States District Court for the District of the Canal Zone,
25 the District Court of Guam, the District Court of the Virgin
26 Islands, the United States Court of Claims, the Tax Court of the 27 United States, the United States Customs Court, the United States
28 Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, or the United States Court
29 of Military Appeals;

30 “‘crime’ means a felony or a misdemeanor, but not an 31 infraction;

32 “‘crime of violence’ means (a) an offense that has as an element
33 of the offense the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical 34 force against the person or property of another; or (b) any other 35 offense that is a felony and that, by its nature, involves a sub-
36 stantial risk that physical force against the person or prop-37 erty of another may be used in the course of committing the
38 offense;

39 “‘dangerous weapon’ means (a) a firearm; (b) a destructive
40 device; or (c) any other weapon, device, instrument, material, or

1 substance, whether animate or inanimate, that as used or as
2 intended to be used is capable of producing death or serious bodily
3 injury;

4 “‘defense’ includes (a) anything specifically designated as a
5 defense by a statute, or by a regulation, rule, or order issued pur-
6 suant thereto; or (b) a specific exception, exclusion, or exemption
7 from criminal liability described in a statute outside this title, or 8 in a regulation, rule, or order issued pursuant thereto;

9 “‘destructive device’ means an explosive, an incendiary mate-
10 rial, a poisonous or infectious material in a form that can readily
11 be used to cause serious bodily injury, or a material that can be 12 used to cause a nuclear incident as defined in section 11 of the 13 Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2014(q));
14 and includes a bomb, grenade, mine, rocket, missile, or similar
15 device containing an explosive, an incendiary material, or a ma-
16 terial that can be used as a chemical, biological, or radiological
17 weapon;

18 “‘dwelling’ means an immovable or movable structure that is
19 at least partially enclosed, or a separate part of such a structure,
20 and that is designed for use, or used, in whole or in part, as an 21 individual’s permanent or temporary home or place of lodging;

22 “‘element of the offense’ means any (a) conduct; (b) state of 23 mind; (c) existing circumstance; or (d) result; that is specified 24 by the section describing the offense or that, with respect to 25 a state of mind, is required by section 303 for the commission
26 of the offense;

27 “‘enterprise’ includes any business undertaking by an organi-
28 zation or group;

29 “‘explosive’ means a chemical compound, a mechanical mix-
30 ture, or any other combination of materials, in proportions, quan-
31 tities, or packaging that may be exploded by operation of fire,
32 friction, concussion, percussion, nuclear fission, or nuclear fusion;

33 “‘felony’ means an offense for which a term of imprisonment
34 of more than one year is authorized by a federal statute, or would 35 be authorized if a circumstance giving rise to federal jurisdiction
36 existed, or, if qualified by the word ‘state’, ‘local’, or ‘foreign’, an 37 offense for which such a term is authorized by such state, local, or 38 foreign law;

39 “‘finance’ includes providing indirect financing;

40 “‘firearm’ means a weapon that can expel, or that can readily be

1 converted to expel, a projectile by the action of an explosive or a
2 flammable rocket propellant, and includes such a weapon, loaded
3 or unloaded, commonly referred to as a gun, pistol, revolver, rifle,
4 shotgun, machine gun, bazooka, or cannon;

5 “‘foreign commerce’ means commerce between a state and a
6 foreign country, or from a state to a foreign country, or from a
7 foreign country to a state, or between places in the same state
8 through a foreign country;

9 “‘foreign dignitary’ means (a) the chief of state or head of 10 government, or the political equivalent, of a foreign power; (b)
11 an officer of cabinet rank, or equivalent or higher rank, of a 12 foreign power; (c) an ambassador of a foreign power; (d) the 13 chief executive officer of an international organization; or (e) a
14 person who has previously served in any such capacity;

15 “‘foreign official’ means (a) a foreign dignitary; or (b) a per-
16 son of foreign nationality who is duly notified to the United States
17 as an officer or employee of a foreign power;

18 “‘foreign power’ includes (a) a foreign government, faction,
19 party, or military force, or persons purporting to act as such,
20 whether or not recognized by the United States; and (b) an in-
21 ternational organization;

22 “‘found guilty’ includes acceptance by a court of a plea of 23 guilty or nolo contendere;

24 “‘government’ means (a) the government of a nation, a state,
25 or a political subdivision thereof; (b) a branch of the foregoing,
26 including the executive, legislative, and judicial branches; or 27 (c) a government agency;

28 “‘government agency’ means (a) a subdivision of the executive,
29 legislative, judicial, or other branch of a government, including a
30 department, independent establishment, commission, administra-
31 tion, authority, board, and bureau; or (b) a corporation or other
32 legal entity established by, and subject to control by, a govern-
33 ment or governments for the execution of a governmental or inter-
34 governmental program;

35 “‘group’ includes (a) an assemblage of persons; and (b) an 36 association of persons, whether or not a legal entity;

37 “‘high seas’ means, in accordance with international law, those 38 parts of the sea that are not included in the territorial sea or in 39 the internal waters of a nation or state;

1           “‘immediate family’ of a designated individual means (a) his
2 spouse, parent, brother, sister, or child, or a person to whom he
3 stands in loco parentis; or (b) any other person living in his house-
4 hold and related to him by blood or marriage;

5           “‘incite’, or a variant thereof, means to urge other persons to 6 engage imminently in conduct in circumstances under which there
7 is a substantial likelihood of imminently causing such conduct;

8           “‘includes’ is to be read as if the phrase ‘but is not limited to’
9 were also set forth;

10          “‘individual’ means a human being who has been born and who 11 has not died;

12          “‘in fact’ means, in accordance with the provisions of section
13 303(a)(1), that the matter to which the phrase applies is not a
14 matter as to which a state of mind must be proved;

15          “‘infraction’ means an offense for which a term of imprison-16 ment of five days or less is authorized by a federal statute, or would
17 be authorized if a circumstance giving rise to federal jurisdiction
18 existed, or, if qualified by the word ‘state’ or ‘local’, an offense for 19 which such a term is authorized by such state or local law;

20          “‘intentional’, or a variant thereof, has the meaning pre-
21 scribed in section 302(a);

22          “‘international organization’ means a public international orga-
23 nization designated as such pursuant to section 1 of the Inter-
24 national Organizations Immunities Act (22 U.S.C. 288);

25          “‘internationally protected person’ has the meaning prescribed
26 in section 2 of the Act for the Prevention and Punishment of 27 Crimes Against Internationally Protected Persons, as amended
28 by section 221 of the Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977;

29          “‘interstate commerce’ means commerce between one state and 30 another state, or from one state to another state, or between places
31 in the same state through another state;

32          “‘intoxication’ means a disturbance of a mental or physical 33 capacity resulting from the introduction of alcohol or a drug or 34 other substance into the body;

35          “‘judge’ means any judicial officer, and includes a justice of the 36 Supreme Court and a magistrate;

37          “‘juror’ means a grand juror or a petit juror, and includes a 38 person who has been selected or summoned as a prospective
39 juror;

1       “‘knowing’, or a variant thereof, has the meaning prescribed
2 in section 302(b) ;

3       “‘law enforcement officer’ means a public servant authorized by 4 law or by a government agency to conduct or engage in the preven-
5 tion, detection, investigation, or prosecution of an offense ;

6       “‘local’ means of or pertaining to a political subdivision within 7 a state ;

8       “‘locality’ means a political subdivision within a state ;

9       “‘mail’ includes a post card, postal card, letter, envelope, parcel,
10 package, newspaper, magazine, circular, advertising matter, or 11 mailbag or mail container, or anything contained therein (a) that 12 has been left for collection in or adjacent to an authorized
13 depository for mail matter ; (b) that is under the care, custody,
14 or control of the United States Postal Service ; or (c) that, having 15 been under the care, custody, or control of the United States
16 Postal Service, has not been delivered to the person to whom it
17 was addressed ;

18       “‘military’ means relating to the armed forces or their support-
19 ing agencies, whether land, sea, or air forces, in either an offensive
20 or a defensive capacity ;

21       “‘misdemeanor’ means an offense for which a term of imprison-
22 ment of one year or less, but more than five days, is authorized by 23 a federal statute, or would be authorized if a circumstance giving 24 rise to federal jurisdiction existed, or, if qualified by the word 25 ‘state’, ‘local’, or ‘foreign’, an offense for which such a term is 26 authorized by such state, local, or foreign law ;

27       “‘motor vehicle’ means a self-propelled vehicle designed to 28 run on land but not on rails ;

29       “‘national credit institution’ means (a) a bank with deposits
30 insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation ; (b) an 31 institution with accounts insured by the Federal Savings and Loan
32 Insurance Corporation ; (c) a credit union with accounts insured
33 by the Administrator of the National Credit Union Administra-
34 tion ; (d) a Federal home loan bank or a member, as defined in 35 section 2 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended (12
36 U.S.C. 1422), of the Federal home loan bank system ; or (e) a
37 bank, banking association, land bank, intermediate credit bank,
38 bank for cooperatives, production credit association, land bank
39 association, mortgage association, trust company, savings bank, or 40 other banking or financial institution organized or operating
41 under the laws of the United States ;

1       “‘national defense emergency’ means a national emergency
2 that is proclaimed in accordance with title II of the National
3 Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1621 et seq.) and that involves mili-
4 tary combat operations undertaken in connection with an actual 5 or imminent war or armed attack by a foreign power against the 6 United States or its armed forces;

7       “‘negligent’, or a variant thereof, has the meaning prescribed
8 in section 302(d);

9       “‘objective’, when used with reference to a criminal conspiracy,
10 includes the commission of a crime, escape from the scene of a 11 crime, distribution of the fruits of a crime, and any measure for 12 concealing, or obstructing justice in relation to, any aspect of 13 the conspiracy;

14       “‘offense’ means conduct for which a term of imprisonment or a 15 fine is authorized by a federal statute, or would be authorized if 16 a circumstance giving rise to federal jurisdiction existed, or, if 17 qualified by the word ‘state’, ‘local’, or ‘foreign’, conduct for 18 which a term of imprisonment or a criminal fine is authorized by 19 such state, local, or foreign law;

20       “‘official action’ means a decision, opinion, recommendation,
21 judgment, vote, or other conduct involving an exercise of discre-
22 tion by a public servant in the course of his employment;

23       “‘official detention’ means (a) detention by a public servant, or 24 under the direction of a public servant, following arrest; follow-
25 ing surrender in lieu of arrest; following a charge or conviction
26 of an offense, or an allegation or finding of juvenile delinquency;
27 following commitment as a material witness; following civil com-
28 mitment in lieu of criminal proceedings or pending resumption of 29 criminal proceedings being held in abeyance; or pending extra-
30 dition, deportation, or exclusion; or (b) custody by a public serv-
31 ant, or under direction of a public servant, for purposes incident
32 to the foregoing, including transportation, medical diagnosis or 33 treatment, court appearance, work, and recreation; ‘official de-34 tention’ does not include supervision or other restrictions (other 35 than custody during specified hours or days) after release pending
36 trial or appeal, pursuant to the provisions of subchapter A of 37 chapter 35; after release on probation, pursuant to the provisions
38 of chapter 21; after release on parole, pursuant to the provisions
39 of subchapter D of chapter 38; or after release following a finding 40 of juvenile delinquency, pursuant to the provisions of subchapter
41 A of chapter 36;

1           “‘official guest of the United States’ means a person of foreign
2 nationality who has been designated by the Secretary of State as
3 an official guest of the United States and who is in the United
4 States pursuant to such designation;

5           “‘official proceeding’ means a proceeding, or a portion thereof,
6 that is or may be heard before (a) a government branch or agency;
7 or (b) a public servant who is authorized to take oaths, including
8 a judge, a chairman of a legislative committee or subcommittee,
9 a referee, a hearing examiner, an administrative law judge, and a 10 notary;

11           “‘omission’ means a failure by a person to perform an act that 12 he has a legal duty to perform;

13           “‘organization’ means a legal entity, other than a government,
14 established or organized for any purpose, and includes a cor-
15 poration, company, association, firm, partnership, joint stock
16 company, foundation, institution, trust, estate, society, union,
17 club, church, and any other association of persons;

18           “‘paragraph’ means a paragraph of the subsection or subdivi-
19 sion in which the term is used;

20           “‘person’ means (a) an individual; or (b), except when used to 21 refer to the victim of an offense involving death or bodily in-
22 jury, an organization;

23           “‘President’ means (a) the President of the United States; or 24 (b) a person who is acting as President under the Constitution
25 and laws of the United States;

26           “‘President-elect’ means the person who appears to be the suc-
27 cessful candidate for the office of President, as ascertained from 28 the results of the general election held to determine the electors of 29 President and Vice President pursuant to 3 U.S.C. 1 and 2;

30           “‘property’ means anything of value, and includes (a) real 31 property, including things growing on, affixed to, and found in 32 land; (b) tangible or intangible personal property, including 33 rights, privileges, interests, and claims; and (c) services; except 34 that, if used to refer to the object or possible object of damage,
35 does not include intangible property or services;

36           “‘property of another’ means property in which a person or 37 government has an interest upon which the actor is not privileged 38 to infringe without consent, whether or not the actor also has an 39 interest in the property;

1           “‘public facility’ includes (a) a facility of public or government
2 communication, transportation, energy supply, water supply, or
3 sanitation; (b) a facility of a police, fire, or public health agency;
4 (c) a facility designed for use, or used, as a means of national
5 defense; and (d) a part of any such facility or any property,
6 structure, or apparatus used in connection with or in support of 7 any such facility;

8           “‘public servant’ means an officer, employee, adviser, consultant,
9 juror, or other person authorized to act for or on behalf of a gov-
10 ernment or serving a government, and includes a person who has 11 been elected, nominated, or appointed to be a public servant; a 12 federal ‘public servant’ does not include a District of Columbia
13 public servant;

14           “‘railroad vehicle’ means a locomotive or car designed to 15 run on rails;

16           “‘reckless’, or a variant thereof, has the meaning prescribed
17 in section 302(c);

18           “‘section’ means a section within a chapter of this title;

19           “‘self-induced intoxication’ means intoxication caused by a 20 substance that the actor knowingly introduces into his body with 21 knowledge that it has, or with reckless disregard of the risk that 22 it may have, a tendency to cause intoxication;

23           “‘serious bodily injury’ means bodily injury which involves (a)
24 a substantial risk of death; (b) unconsciousness; (c) extreme
25 physical pain; (d) protracted and obvious disfigurement; or (e)
26 protracted loss or impairment of the function of a bodily member,
27 organ, or mental faculty;

28           “‘services’ means anything of value resulting from a person’s 29 physical or mental labor or skill, or from the use, possession, or 30 presence of property, and includes (a) repairs or improvements to 31 property; (b) professional services; (c) private or public or gov-
32 ernment communication, transportation, energy, water, or sani-
33 tation services; (d) lodging accommodations; and (e) admissions
34 to places of exhibition or entertainment;

35           “‘solicit’, when used in the description of an offense, includes 36 importune, approach with a request or plea, and try to obtain by 37 asking for; and is not limited to the conduct constituting an 38 offense under section 1003 (Criminal Solicitation);

39           “‘state’ means a state of the United States, the District of 40 Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Canal Zone, the Virgin Islands,

1 American Samoa, Johnston Island, Midway Island, Wake Island,
2 Guam, Kingman's Reef, or any other territory or possession of
3 the United States;

4 "state of mind' has the meaning set forth in section 301(a);

5 "stolen' property means property that has been the subject
6 of any criminal taking, including theft, executing a fraudulent
7 scheme, robbery, extortion, and blackmail, as those offenses are 8 described in this title;

9 "subchapter' means a subchapter of the chapter in which the 10 term is used;

11 "subdivision' means a subdivision of the rule in which the 12 term is used;

13 "subparagraph' means a subparagraph of the paragraph in 14 which the term is used;

15 "subsection' means a subsection of the section in which the 16 term is used;

17 "this title' means title 18 of the United States Code;

18 "traffic' means (a) to sell, transfer, distribute, dispense, or 19 otherwise dispose of to another person as consideration for any-20 thing of value; or (b) to buy, receive, possess, or obtain control of 21 with intent to do any of the foregoing;

22 "United States,' when used in a geographic sense, includes (a)
23 all states; (b) all places subject to the special territorial jurisdic-
24 tion of the United States that are described in section 203 (a) (4)
25 and (a) (5); (c) all waters subject to the admiralty and maritime 26 jurisdiction of the United States; and (d) the airspace overlying
27 such states, places, and waters;

28 "United States', when used in other than a geographic sense,
29 means the government of the United States;

30 "United States official' means a federal public servant who is 31 the President, the President-elect, the Vice President, the Vice 32 President-elect, a member of Congress, a member-elect of Con-
33 gress, a delegate or a commissioner of Congress, a delegate-elect
34 or a commissioner-elect of Congress, a Justice of the Supreme 35 Court, or a member of the executive branch of government of 36 cabinet rank;

37 "value,' when stated in monetary terms, means the aggregate
38 value in terms of (a) face, par, or market value; (b) original or 39 replacement cost; or (c) wholesale or retail price; whichever of 40 the foregoing is greatest;

1           “‘vehicle’ means a motor vehicle, railroad vehicle, vessel, or 2 aircraft;

3           “‘vessel’ means a self-propelled or wind-propelled craft de-
4 signed to navigate on or under water;

5           “‘Vice President-elect’ means (a) the person who appears to 6 be the successful candidate for the office of Vice President, as 7 ascertained from the results of the general election held to deter-
8 mine the electors of the President and Vice President pursuant to 9 3 U.S.C. 1 and 2; or (b) the person who is nominated by the 10 President for the office of Vice President pursuant to the pro-
11 visions of the Twenty-fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the 12 United States;

13           “‘violate’ means to engage in conduct that is described as an 14 offense proscribed, prohibited, declared unlawful, or made subject
15 to a criminal penalty; and

16           “‘war’ means (a) a war declared by Congress pursuant to sec-
17 tion 8 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States; (b)
18 a war declared by a foreign power against the United States;
19 (c) an armed attack by a foreign power against the United States
20 or its armed forces; or (d) a situation in which armed forces of 21 the United States are engaged in hostilities, or in which their 22 imminent involvement in hostilities is clearly indicated by the 23 circumstances, and concerning which the President has submitted
24 or is required to submit a report to the Congress pursuant to sec-
25 tion 4 of the War Powers Resolution (50 U.S.C. 1543).

26 “§ 112. General Principles of Construction

27           “(a) CONSTRUCTION IN GENERAL.—The provisions of this title shall 28 be construed in accordance with the fair import of their terms to 29 effectuate the general purposes of this title.

30           “(b) TITLES, HEADINGS, AND PARENTHETICAL EXPLANATIONS.—A 31 title, heading, or parenthetical explanation shall not be construed as 32 limiting or otherwise affecting the scope or application of the language 33 of the chapter, subchapter, section, subsection, rule, or subdivision in 34 which it appears or to which it refers.

35           “(c) NAMES OF OFFENSES.—A term that commonly is employed 36 generically to refer to a kind of offense or to a group of offenses, but 37 that also is employed as a title of a section describing an offense, shall 38 be construed in its generic sense when it is used outside such section
39 without reference to the number of such section.

40           “(d) NUMBER, GENDER, AND TENSE.—A term:

1           “(1) that is used in the singular includes and applies to the 2 plural of the term;

3           “(2) that is used in the plural includes and applies to the singular
4 lar of the term;

5           “(3) that signifies the masculine gender includes and applies to 6 the feminine gender and the neuter gender; and

7           “(4) that is used in the present tense includes the future tense
8 and, unless a different construction is plainly required, the past 9 tense.

10                                           “Chapter 2.—JURISDICTION

“Sec.

“201. Federal Jurisdiction.

“202. General Jurisdiction of the United States.

“203. Special Jurisdiction of the United States.

“204. Extraterritorial Jurisdiction of the United States.

“205. Federal Jurisdiction Generally Not Preemptive.

11   “§ 201. Federal Jurisdiction

12   “(a) JURISDICTION IN GENERAL.—Federal jurisdiction over an offense
13 described in this title includes:

14           “(1) the general jurisdiction of the United States, as set forth
15 in section 202;

16           “(2) the special jurisdiction of the United States, as set forth 17 in section 203; and

18           “(3) the extraterritorial jurisdiction of the United States, as 19 set forth in section 204.

20   “(b) JURISDICTION APPLICABLE TO SPECIFIC OFFENSES.—

21           “(1) If, in a section describing an offense, there is a separate 22 subsection in which one or more circumstances are specified as 23 giving rise to federal jurisdiction over the offense, there is federal 24 jurisdiction over the offense:

25                   “(A) if such a circumstance exists or has occurred and 26 the offense is committed within:

27                           “(i) the general jurisdiction of the United States; or 28                           “(ii) the special jurisdiction of the United States to 29 the extent that such jurisdiction is specified as such a

30 circumstance in the separate subsection; or

31                   “(B) whether or not such a circumstance exists or has oc-
32 curred if the offense is committed within the extraterritorial
33 jurisdiction of the United States to the extent applicable
34 under section 204.

35   Federal jurisdiction may be alleged as resting on more than one
36 of such circumstances, but proof of any such circumstance is

1 sufficient to establish the existence of federal jurisdiction over the 2 offense. Proof of more than one of such circumstances does not
 3 increase the number of offenses that may be found to have been
 4 committed. If federal jurisdiction over an offense exists by virtue
 5 of its commission during another offense, jurisdiction also exists
 6 over any lesser included offense.

7 “(2) If, in a section describing an offense, there is no separate
 8 subsection in which one or more circumstances are specified as
 9 giving rise to federal jurisdiction over the offense, there is federal 10 jurisdiction over the offense if it is committed within :

11 “(A) the general jurisdiction of the United States ;

12 “(B) the special jurisdiction of the United States ; or

13 “(C) the extraterritorial jurisdiction of the United States
 14 to the extent applicable under section 204 ;

15 unless the offense is described as a violation of a statute outside
 16 this title, or of a regulation, rule, or order issued pursuant thereto, 17 in which case there is federal jurisdiction over the offense to the 18 extent applicable under that statute.

19 “(c) JURISDICTION NOT AN ELEMENT OF OFFENSE.—The existence of 20 federal jurisdiction is not an element of the offense.

21 “§ 202. General Jurisdiction of the United States

22 “An offense is committed within the general jurisdiction of the 23 United States if it is committed within the United States.

24 “§ 203. Special Jurisdiction of the United States

25 “An offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of the 26 United States if it is committed within the special territorial juris-
 27 diction, the special maritime jurisdiction, or the special aircraft juris-
 28 diction of the United States, as set forth in subsections (a), (b), or 29 (c).

30 “(a) SPECIAL TERRITORIAL JURISDICTION.—The special territorial
 31 jurisdiction of the United States includes :

32 “(1) real property that is reserved or acquired for the use
 33 of the United States and that is under the exclusive or concurrent
 34 jurisdiction of the United States, and a place purchased or 35 otherwise acquired by the United States with the consent of the 36 legislature of the state in which such place is located for the 37 erection of a building or other structure ;

38 “(2) an unorganized territory or a possession of the United
 39 States ;

1           “(3) the Indian country, as defined in section 231(a) of the 2 criminal Code Reform Act of (25 U.S.C. —) ;

3           “(4) an island, a rock, or a key that may, at the discretion of 4 the President, be considered as appertaining to the United States;
5 and

6           “(5) a facility for exploration or exploitation of natural re-
7 sources constructed or operated on or above the outer continental
8 shelf as defined in section 2(a) of the Outer Continental Shelf
9 Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1331(a)).

10          “(b) SPECIAL MARITIME JURISDICTION.—The special maritime juris-
11 diction of the United States includes:

12           “(1) the high seas;

13           “(2) any other waters within the admiralty and maritime juris-
14 diction of the United States and outside the jurisdiction of any 15 state;

16           “(3) a vessel within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction
17 of the United States, and outside the jurisdiction of any state, 18 that belongs in whole or in part to:

19           “(A) the United States;

20           “(B) a state or locality;

21           “(C) a citizen of the United States; or

22           “(D) an organization created by or under the laws of the 23 United States or of a state; and

24           “(4) a vessel registered, licensed, or enrolled under the laws
25 of the United States, that is upon the waters of any of the Great
26 Lakes or the waters connecting them, or upon the Saint Lawrence
27 River where it constitutes the international boundary line.

28          “(c) SPECIAL AIRCRAFT JURISDICTION.—The special aircraft jurisdic-
29 tion of the United States includes:

30           “(1) an aircraft that belongs in whole or in part to:

31           “(A) the United States;

32           “(B) a state or locality;

33           “(C) a citizen of the United States; or

34           “(D) an organization created by or under the laws of the 35 United States or of a state;

36           “(2) a civil aircraft of the United States, as defined in section 37 101 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended (49 U.S.C.
38 1301);

1           “(3) a public aircraft of the United States, as defined in section
2           101 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended (49 U.S.C.
3           1301);

4           “(4) any other aircraft within the United States;

5           “(5) any other aircraft outside the United States:

6                 “(A) that has its next scheduled destination or last point
7                 of departure in the United States, and that next lands in the 8                 United States; or

9                 “(B) that has an ‘offense’, as defined in the Convention
10                for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft, com-
11                mitted aboard, and that lands in the United States with the 12                alleged offender still aboard; and

13           “(6) any other aircraft leased without crew to a lessee who has 14           his principal place of business in the United States, or, if the lessee
15           has no principal place of business, who has his permanent resi-
16           dence in the United States;

17           during the period that such aircraft is in flight, which is, for the pur-
18           pose of this subsection, from the moment when all the external doors
19           of such aircraft are closed following embarkation until the moment 20           when any such door is opened for disembarkation, or, in the case of 21           a forced landing, until a competent authority takes over the responsi-
22           bility for the aircraft and for the persons and property aboard.

23           “§ 204. Extraterritorial Jurisdiction of the United States

24           “Except as otherwise expressly provided by statute, or by treaty or 25           other international agreement, an offense is committed within the 26           extraterritorial jurisdiction of the United States if it is committed 27           outside the general or special jurisdiction of the United States and:

28                 “(a) the offense is a crime of violence and the victim or in-29                 tended victim is:

30                         “(1) a United States official; or

31                         “(2) a federal public servant outside the United States for 32                         the purpose of performing his official duties;

33                 “(b) the offense is treason, sabotage against the United States,
34                 espionage, disseminating national defense information, or dis-
35                 seminating or receiving classified information;

36                 “(c) the offense consists of:

37                         “(1) counterfeiting or forgery of, or uttering of a counter-
38                         feited or forged copy of, or issuing without authority, a seal, 39                         currency, security instrument of credit, stamp, passport, or

- 1 public document that is or that purports to be issued by the
2 United States;
- 3 “(2) perjury or false swearing in a federal official proceed-
4 ing;
- 5 “(3) making a false statement in a federal government
6 matter or a federal government record;
- 7 “(4) bribery or graft involving a federal public servant;
- 8 “(5) fraud against the United States or theft of property
9 in which the United States has an interest;
- 10 “(6) impersonation of a federal public servant;
- 11 “(7) any obstruction or impairment of a federal govern-
12 ment function, if committed by a national or resident of the 13 United States;
- 14 “(d) the offense consists of the manufacture or distribution of 15 narcotics or other drugs for import into, or eventual sale or dis-
16 tribution within, the United States;
- 17 “(e) the offense consists of entry of persons or property into the 18 United States;
- 19 “(f) the offense consists of possessing an explosive in a United 20 States Government building;
- 21 “(g) the offense is committed in whole or in part within the 22 United States and the accused participates outside the United 23 States, or the offense constitutes an attempt, a conspiracy, or a
24 solicitation to commit a crime within the United States;
- 25 “(h) the offense is committed by a federal public servant, other 26 than a member of the armed forces who is subject to court-martial
27 jurisdiction for the offense at the time he is charged with the of-
28 fense, who is outside the United States because of his official 29 duties; or by a member of his household residing abroad because 30 of such public servant’s official duties; or by a person accompany-
31 ing the military forces of the United States;
- 32 “(i) the offense is committed by or against a national of the 33 United States at a place outside the jurisdiction of any nation;
34 or
- 35 “(j) the offense is comprehended by the generic terms of, and 36 is committed under circumstances specified by, a treaty or other
37 international agreement, to which the United States is a party,
38 that provides for, or requires the United States to provide for,
39 federal jurisdiction over such offense.

1 “§ 205. Federal Jurisdiction Generally Not Preemptive

2 “(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, the
3 existence of federal jurisdiction over an offense does not, in itself,
4 preclude:

5 “(1) a state or local government from exercising its concurrent
6 jurisdiction to enforce its laws applicable to the conduct involved;

7 “(2) an Indian tribe, band, community, group, or pueblo from 8 exercising its concurrent jurisdiction in Indian country to enforce 9 its laws applicable to the conduct involved; or

10 “(3) a court-martial, military commission, court of inquiry,
11 provost court, or other military court of the United States from 12 exercising its concurrent jurisdiction to enforce the law applicable
13 to the conduct involved pursuant to the Uniform Code of Military 14 Justice (10 U.S.C. 801 et seq.), any other federal statute, or the 15 law of war.

16 “(b) PREEMPTIVE JURISDICTION OVER CERTAIN OFFENSES.—Upon
17 order of the Attorney General, the assertion of federal jurisdiction:

18 “(1) over an offense:

19 “(A) that has as a victim or intended victim a United 20 States official, a foreign official or a member of his imme-
21 diate family, or an official guest of the United States; and

22 “(B) that is described in:

23 “(i) section 1601 (Murder), 1602 (Manslaughter),
24 1603 (Negligent Homicide), 1611 (Maiming), 1612 (Ag-25 gravated Battery), 1613 (Battery), 1614 (Menacing), 26 1621 (Kidnapping), 1622 (Aggravated Criminal Re-27 straint), or 1623 (Criminal Restraint); or

28 “(ii) section 1001 (Criminal Attempt), 1002 (Crimi-
29 nal Conspiracy), or 1003 (Criminal Solicitation) if a
30 crime that was an objective of the attempt, conspiracy,
31 or solicitation is an offense set forth in subparagraph
32 (A); or

33 “(2) over an offense that is described in:

34 “(A) subchapter B of chapter 15;

35 “(B) section 1355 (Trading in Public Office); or

36 “(C) section 1503 (Interfering with a Federal Benefit), 37 1504 (Unlawful Discrimination), or 1616 (Communicating 38 a Threat), to the extent that it involves conduct proscribed
39 by the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended
40 (2 U.S.C. 431 et seq.);

1 shall suspend, to the extent indicated in the order, the exercise of 2 jurisdiction by a state or local government, under any state or local
 3 law applicable to the conduct involved, until the order is rescinded
 4 by the Attorney General.

5 “Chapter 3.—CULPABLE STATES OF MIND

“Sec.

“301. State of Mind Generally.

“302. ‘Intentional’, ‘Knowing’, ‘Reckless’, and ‘Negligent’ States of Mind.

“303. Proof of State of Mind.

6 “§ 301. State of Mind Generally

7 “(a) STATE OF MIND DEFINED.—As used in this title, ‘state of mind’
 8 means the mental state required to be proved with respect to conduct,
 9 an existing circumstance, or a result set forth in a section describing an
 10 offense.

11 “(b) TERMS USED TO DESCRIBE STATES OF MIND.—The terms used to 12 describe the different states of mind are ‘intentional’, ‘knowing’, ‘reck-
 13 less’, and ‘negligent’, and variants thereof.

14 “(c) STATES OF MIND APPLICABLE TO CONDUCT, AN EXISTING CIR-
 15 CUMSTANCE, AND A RESULT.—The states of mind that may be specified 16 as applicable to:

17 “(1) conduct are either ‘intentional’ or ‘knowing’;

18 “(2) an existing circumstance are either ‘knowing’, ‘reckless’,
 19 or ‘negligent’; and

20 “(3) a result are either ‘intentional’, ‘knowing’, ‘reckless’, or 21 ‘negligent’.

22 “§ 302. ‘Intentional’, ‘Knowing’, ‘Reckless’, and ‘Negligent’ States
 23 of Mind

24 “The following definitions apply with respect to an offense set forth
 25 in any federal statute:

26 “(a) ‘INTENTIONAL’.—A person’s state of mind is intentional with 27 respect to:

28 “(1) his conduct if it is his conscious objective or desire to 29 engage in the conduct;

30 “(2) a result of his conduct if it is his conscious objective or de-
 31 sire to cause the result.

32 “(b) ‘KNOWING’.—A person’s state of mind is knowing with respect
 33 to:

34 “(1) his conduct if he is aware of the nature of his conduct;

35 “(2) an existing circumstance if he is aware or believes that 36 the circumstance exists;

37 “(3) a result of his conduct if he is aware or believes that his 38 conduct is substantially certain to cause the result.

1     “(c) ‘RECKLESS’.—A person’s state of mind is reckless with re-
2 spect to:

3             “(1) an existing circumstance if he is aware of a risk that the 4 circumstance exists but disregards the risk;

5             “(2) a result of his conduct if he is aware of a risk that the 6 result will occur but disregards the risk;

7 except that awareness of the risk is not required if its absence is due
8 to self-induced intoxication. The risk must be of such a nature and 9 degree that to disregard it constitutes a gross deviation from the 10 standard of care that a reasonable person would exercise in such a 11 situation.

12     “(d) ‘NEGLIGENT’.—A person’s state of mind is negligent with re-13 spect to:

14             “(1) an existing circumstance if he ought to be aware of a risk
15 that the circumstance exists;

16             “(2) a result of his conduct if he ought to be aware of a risk
17 that the result will occur.

18 The risk must be of such a nature and degree that to fail to perceive
19 it constitutes a gross deviation from the standard of care that a rea-
20 sonable person would exercise in such a situation.

21     “§ 303. Proof of State of Mind

22     “Except as otherwise expressly provided, the following provisions
23 apply to an offense under any federal statute:

24     “(a) REQUIRED PROOF OF STATE OF MIND.—A state of mind must be 25 proved with respect to each element of an offense, except that:

26             “(1) no state of mind must be proved with respect to a par-27 ticular element of an offense if that element is specified in the 28 description of the offense as existing or occurring ‘in fact’; and 29             “(2) no state of mind must be proved with respect to any ele-30 ment of an offense described in a statute outside this title, or 31 described in this title as a violation of a statute outside this title,

32 or described in a regulation or rule issued pursuant to such a
33 statute, if the description of the offense does not specify any state
34 of mind with respect to that element and the legislative purpose
35 of the statute does not compel a contrary interpretation.

36     “(b) REQUIRED STATE OF MIND FOR AN ELEMENT OF AN OFFENSE IF 37 NOT SPECIFIED.—Except as provided in subsection (a), if an element
38 of an offense is described without specifying the required state of mind, 39 the particular state of mind that must be proved with respect to:

40             “(1) conduct is ‘knowing’;

1           “(2) an existing circumstance is ‘reckless’; and

2           “(3) a result is ‘reckless’.

3           “(c) SATISFACTION OF STATE OF MIND REQUIREMENT BY PROOF OF 4 OTHER STATE OF MIND.—If the state of mind required to be proved 5 with respect to an element of an offense is:

6           “(1) ‘knowing’, this requirement can be satisfied alternatively
7 by proof of an ‘intentional’ state of mind;

8           “(2) ‘reckless’, this requirement can be satisfied alternatively by 9 proof of an ‘intentional’ or ‘knowing’ state of mind;

10          “(3) ‘negligent’, this requirement can be satisfied alternatively 11 by proof of an ‘intentional’, ‘knowing’, or ‘reckless’ state of mind.

12          “(d) MATTERS OF LAW REQUIRING NO PROOF OF STATE OF MIND.—

13          “(1) EXISTENCE OF OFFENSE.—Proof of knowledge or other 14 state of mind is not required with respect to:

15           “(A) the fact that particular conduct constitutes an offense
16 or is required by, or violates, a statute or a regulation, rule,
17 or order issued pursuant thereto;

18           “(B) the fact that particular conduct is described in a sec-
19 tion of this title; or

20           “(C) the existence, meaning, or application of the law
21 determining the elements of an offense.

22          “(2) JURISDICTION, VENUE, AND GRADING MATTERS.—Proof of 23 state of mind is not required with respect to any matter that is 24 solely a basis for federal jurisdiction, for venue, or for grading.

25          “(3) MATTERS DESIGNATED A QUESTION OF LAW.—Proof of state
26 of mind is not required with respect to any matter that is des-
27 ignated as a question of law.           •

28          “(e) MATTERS PERTAINING TO BARS OR DEFENSES REQUIRING NO
29 PROOF OF STATE OF MIND.—Proof of state of mind is not required with 30 respect to an element of a bar to prosecution, defense, or affirmative
31 defense.

32   “Chapter 4.—COMPLICITY

“Sec.

“401. Liability of an Accomplice.

“402. Liability of an Organization for Conduct of an Agent.

“403. Liability of an Agent for Conduct of an Organization.

“404. General Provisions for Chapter 4.

33   “§ 401. Liability of an Accomplice

34          “(a) LIABILITY IN GENERAL.—A person is criminally liable for an 35 offense based upon the conduct of another person if:

36           “(1) he knowingly aids or abets the commission of the offense
37 by the other person; or

1           “(2) acting with the state of mind required for the commission
2           of the offense, he causes the other person to engage in conduct
3           that would constitute an offense if engaged in personally by the 4           defendant or any other person.

5           “(b) LIABILITY AS COCONSPIRATOR.—A person is criminally liable
6           for an offense based upon the conduct of another person if :

7           “(1) he and the other person engage in an offense under section
8           1002 (Criminal Conspiracy) ;

9           “(2) the other person engages in the conduct in furtherance of 10          the conspiracy ; and

11          “(3) the conduct is authorized by the agreement or it is reason-12          ably foreseeable that the conduct would be performed in further-
13          ance of the conspiracy.

14        “§ 402. Liability of an Organization for Conduct of an Agent

15        “An organization is criminally liable for an offense if the conduct 16        constituting the offense, in whole or in part :

17        “(a) is conduct of its agent, and such conduct :

18           “(1) occurs in the performance of matters within the scope
19           of the agent’s employment or within the scope of the agent’s 20           actual, implied, or apparent authority ; or

21           “(2) is thereafter ratified or adopted by the organization ;
22        or

23        “(b) involves a failure by the organization or its agent to dis-
24        charge a specific duty of conduct imposed on the organization
25        by law.

26        “§ 403. Liability of an Agent for Conduct of an Organization

27        “(a) CONDUCT ON BEHALF OF AN ORGANIZATION.—A person is crimi-28        nally liable for an offense based upon conduct that he engages in or 29        causes in the name of an organization or on behalf of an organization to 30        the same extent as if he engaged in or caused the conduct in his own
31        name or on his own behalf.

32        “(b) OMISSION TO PERFORM A DUTY OF AN ORGANIZATION.—Except as 33        otherwise expressly provided, whenever a duty to act is imposed upon 34        an organization by a statute, or by a regulation, rule, or order issued 35        pursuant thereto, an agent of the organization having significant re-
36        sponsibility for the subject matter to which the duty relates is crimi-
37        nally liable for an offense based upon an omission to perform the duty, if 38        he has the state of mind required for the commission of the offense, to 39        the same extent as if the duty were imposed upon him directly.

1       “(c) RECKLESS FAILURE TO SUPERVISE CONDUCT OF AN ORGANIZA-
2 TION.—A person responsible for supervising particular activities on 3 behalf of an organization who, by his reckless failure to supervise ad-
4 equately those activities, permits or contributes to the commission of 5 an offense by the organization is criminally liable for the offense, ex-
6 cept that if the offense committed by the organization is a felony the 7 person is liable under this subsection only for a Class A misdemeanor.

8       “§ 404. General Provisions for Chapter 4

9       “(a) TREATMENT AS PRINCIPAL.—A person whose criminal liability
10 is based upon section 401, 402, or 403 may be charged, tried, and pun-
11 ished as a principal.

12       “(b) DEFENSES PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution in 13 which the criminal liability of the defendant is based upon section 14 401, 402, or 403 that:

15               “(1) the defendant does not belong to the category of persons 16 who by definition are the only persons capable of committing the 17 offense directly; or

18               “(2) the person for whose conduct the defendant is criminally
19 liable has been acquitted, has not been prosecuted or convicted,
20 has been convicted of a different offense, was incompetent or 21 irresponsible, or is immune from or otherwise not subject to 22 prosecution.

23       “Chapter 5.—BARS AND DEFENSES

      “Subchapter

      “A. General Provisions.

      “B. Bars to Prosecution.

24               “Subchapter A.—General Provisions

      “Sec.

      “501. General Principle Governing Existence of Bars and Defenses.

      “502. Application and Scope of Bars and Defenses.

25       “§ 501. General Principle Governing Existence of Bars and De- 26               fenses

27       “Except as otherwise required by the Constitution or by a federal 28 statute, the existence of a bar to a prosecution under any federal 29 statute, or the existence of a defense or affirmative defense to a pros-
30 ecution under any federal statute, including a defense or an affirmative
31 defense of mistake of fact or law, insanity, intoxication, duress, exer-
32 cise of public authority, protection of persons, protection of property,
33 unlawful entrapment, and official misstatement of law, shall be deter-
34 mined by the courts of the United States according to the principles

1 of the common law as they may be interpreted in the light of reason
2 and experience.

3 “§ 502. Application and Scope of Bars and Defenses

4 “The bars to prosecution, defenses, and affirmative defenses set forth
5 in this title are not exclusive, but the general subject matters covered
6 constitute bars or defenses only to the extent described.

7 “Subchapter B.—Bars to Prosecution

“Sec.

“511. Time Limitations.

“512. Immaturity.

8 “§ 511. Time Limitations

9 “(a) BAR TO PROSECUTION.—It is a bar to prosecution under any 10 federal statute that the prosecution was commenced after the appli-
11 cable period of limitation.

12 “(b) APPLICABLE PERIOD GENERALLY.—Except for a prosecution for 13 a Class A felony or for an offense described in section 1121(a)(1)
14 (Espionage), which may be commenced at any time, and except as 15 otherwise provided in this section, a prosecution for an offense must 16 be commenced, if the offense is:

17 “(1) a felony or a misdemeanor, within five years after the com-
18 mission of the offense;

19 “(2) an infraction, within one year after the commission of the 20 offense.

21 “(c) EXTENDED PERIOD FOR CONCEALABLE OFFENSES.—If the period
22 prescribed in subsection (b) has expired, and if not more than three 23 years have passed since the date of such expiration, a prosecution may 24 nevertheless be commenced:

25 “(1) for an offense in which a material element is either fraud
26 or a breach of a fiduciary obligation, at any time within one year
27 after the facts relating to the offense became known to, or reason-
28 ably should have become known by, a federal public servant who 29 is charged with responsibility for acting with respect to such cir-
30 cumstances and who is not himself an accomplice in the offense;

31 “(2) for an offense based on official conduct in office by a
32 public servant, at any time during which the defendant is a public 33 servant or within two years after he ceases to be a public servant;
34 or

35 “(3) for an offense based on concealment of assets of a bank-
36 rupt or other debtor, at any time until the debtor has received
37 a discharge or until a discharge has been denied.

1       “(d) TIME WHEN OFFENSE COMMITTED.—Except as otherwise pro-
2       vided by statute, for purposes of this section the commission of an
3       offense occurs:

4               “(1) if the offense is other than a continuing offense, on the 5       occurrence of the last remaining element of the offense; or

6               “(2) if the offense is a continuing offense involving:

7                       “(A) criminal conspiracy, on the day of the occurrence of 8       the most recent conduct to effect any objective of the con-
9       spiracy for which the defendant is responsible, or on the day
10      of the frustration of the last remaining objective of the con-
11      spiracy, or on the day the conspiracy is terminated or finally 12      abandoned;

13                      “(B) a failure, neglect, or refusal to register, on the day the 14      defendant registers as required, or on the day the duty to reg-15      ister ceases; or

16                      “(C) a prolonged course of conduct which the statute
17      plainly appears to treat as a continuing offense, on the day
18      the course of conduct terminates.

19       “(e) COMMENCEMENT OF PROSECUTION.—For purposes of this sec-
20      tion, the filing of a complaint before a judicial officer empowered to 21      issue a warrant, or the filing of an indictment or information, com-
22      mences a prosecution for the offense charged and for any necessarily 23      included offense. A prosecution for an offense necessarily included in 24      the offense charged shall be considered to have been timely commenced, 25      even though the period of limitation for such included offense has 26      expired, if the period of limitation has not expired for the offense
27      charged and if there was, after the close of the evidence at the trial, 28      sufficient evidence as a matter of law to sustain a conviction of the 29      offense charged.

30       “(f) EXTENDED PERIOD FOR COMMENCEMENT OF NEW PROSECUTION.—
31      If a timely complaint, indictment, or information is dismissed for any 32      error, defect, insufficiency, or irregularity, a new prosecution may be 33      commenced within six months after the dismissal becomes final even 34      though the period of limitation has expired at the time of the dismissal
35      or will expire within six months thereafter.

36       “(g) SUSPENSION OF PERIOD OF LIMITATION.—The period of limita-
37      tion does not run while the person who committed or who is criminally
38      liable for an offense is absent from the United States or is a fugitive.

1 “§ 512. Immaturity

2 “It is a bar to prosecution under any federal statute, other than a
3 prosecution for an offense described in section 1601 (a) (1) or (a) (2)
4 (Murder), that at the time of the commission of the offense charged
5 the defendant was less than sixteen years old. This section does not 6 bar a proceeding against such person as a juvenile delinquent pursuant 7 to the provisions of subchapter A of chapter 36.

8 “PART II.—OFFENSES

“Chapter

“10. OFFENSES OF GENERAL APPLICABILITY

“11. OFFENSES INVOLVING NATIONAL DEFENSE

“12. OFFENSES INVOLVING INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

“13. OFFENSES INVOLVING GOVERNMENT PROCESSES

“14. OFFENSES INVOLVING TAXATION

“15. OFFENSES INVOLVING INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS

“16. OFFENSES INVOLVING THE PERSON

“17. OFFENSES INVOLVING PROPERTY

“18. OFFENSES INVOLVING PUBLIC ORDER, SAFETY, HEALTH, AND WELFARE

9 “Chapter 10.—OFFENSES OF GENERAL APPLICABILITY

“Sec.

“1001. Criminal Attempt.

“1002. Criminal Conspiracy.

“1003. Criminal Solicitation.

“1004. General Provisions For Chapter 10.

10 “§ 1001. Criminal Attempt

11 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, acting with the 12 state of mind otherwise required for the commission of a crime, he 13 intentionally engages in conduct that, in fact, amounts to more than 14 mere preparation for the commission of the crime, and that indicates 15 his intent that the crime be completed.

16 “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
17 cution under this section that, under circumstances manifesting a
18 voluntary and complete renunciation of his criminal intent, the de-
19 fendant avoided the commission of the crime attempted by abandon-20 ing his criminal effort and, if mere abandonment was insufficient to 21 accomplish such avoidance, by taking affirmative steps that prevented
22 the commission of the crime.

23 “(c) DEFENSE PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution under
24 this section:

25 “(1) that it was factually or legally impossible for the actor
26 to commit the crime, if the crime could have been committed had 27 the circumstances been as the actor believed them to be; or 28 “(2) that the crime attempted was completed.

1       “(d) PROOF.—In a prosecution under this section, any special proof
2 provision that is specified in this title as applicable to the crime
3 attempted is applicable also to an offense described in this section,
4 unless a different application is plainly required.

5       “(e) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is an offense of 6 the same class as the crime attempted, except that, if the crime at-
7 tempted is a Class A felony, an offense described in this section is a
8 Class B felony.

9       “(f) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
10 described in this section if the crime attempted is a federal crime with 11 regard to which federal jurisdiction :

12           “(1) is not limited to certain specified circumstances; or

13           “(2) is limited to certain specified circumstances and any such 14 circumstance exists or has occurred, or would exist or occur if 15 the crime attempted were committed.

16       “§ 1002. Criminal Conspiracy

17       “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he agrees with 18 one or more persons to engage in conduct, the performance of which 19 would constitute a crime or crimes, and he or one of such persons in 20 fact engages in any conduct with intent to effect any objective of the 21 agreement.

22       “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
23 cution under this section that, under circumstances manifesting a vol-
24 untary and complete renunciation of his criminal intent, the defendant 25 prevented the commission of every crime that was an objective of the 26 conspiracy.

27       “(c) DEFENSES PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution 28 under this section that one or more of the persons with whom the 29 defendant is alleged to have conspired has been acquitted, has not been 30 prosecuted or convicted, has been convicted of a different offense, was 31 incompetent or irresponsible, or is immune from or otherwise not 32 subject to prosecution.

33       “(d) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is an offense of 34 the same class as the most serious crime that was an objective of the 35 conspiracy, except that if the most serious crime that was an objective
36 of the conspiracy is a Class A felony, an offense described in this 37 section is a Class B felony.

1       “(e) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
2 described in this section if any objective of the conspiracy is a federal
3 crime with regard to which federal jurisdiction:

4               “(1) is not limited to certain specified circumstances; or

5               “(2) is limited to certain specified circumstances and any such
6 circumstance exists or has occurred, or would exist or occur if any 7 crime that is an objective of the conspiracy were committed.

8       “§ 1003. Criminal Solicitation

9       “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent that 10 another person engage in conduct constituting a crime, and, in fact,
11 under circumstances strongly corroborative of that intent, he com-
12 mands, entreats, induces, or otherwise endeavors to persuade such other 13 person to engage in such conduct.

14       “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
15 cution under this section that, under circumstances manifesting a
16 voluntary and complete renunciation of his criminal intent, the de-
17 fendant prevented the commission of the crime solicited.

18       “(c) DEFENSE PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution under 19 this section that the person solicited could not be convicted of the 20 crime because he lacked the state of mind required for the commis-
21 sion of the crime, because he was incompetent or irresponsible, or 22 because he is immune from prosecution or otherwise not subject to 23 prosecution.

24       “(d) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is an offense
25 of the class next below that of the crime solicited.

26       “(e) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
27 described in this section if the crime solicited is a federal crime with 28 regard to which federal jurisdiction:

29               “(1) is not limited to certain specified circumstances; or

30               “(2) is limited to certain specified circumstances and any such 31 circumstance exists or has occurred, or would exist or occur if the 32 crime solicited were committed.

33       “§ 1004. General Provisions for Chapter 10

34       “(a) DEFINITION.—As used in this chapter, a renunciation is not 35 ‘voluntary and complete’ if it is motivated in whole or in part by:

36               “(1) a belief that a circumstance exists that increases the prob-
37 ability of detection or apprehension of the defendant or another

1 participant in the crime, or that makes more difficult the consum-
2 mation of the crime; or

3 “(2) a decision to postpone the commission of the crime until 4 another time or to substitute another victim or another but similar 5 objective.

6 “(b) INAPPLICABILITY TO CERTAIN OFFENSES.—It is not an offense
7 under this chapter:

8 “(1) to attempt to commit, to conspire to commit, or to solicit
9 the commission of:

10 “(A) an offense described in section 1001 (Criminal At-
11 tempt), 1002 (Criminal Conspiracy), or 1003 (Criminal
12 Solicitation);

13 “(B) an offense described in section 1202 (Conspiracy
14 against a Foreign Power) or 1764 (Antitrust Offenses); or 15 “(C) an offense described outside this title that consists 16 of an attempt, a conspiracy, or a solicitation; or

17 “(2) to attempt to commit, to conspire to commit unless it was 18 in fact completed, or to solicit the commission of, an offense
19 described in section 1115(a)(3) (Obstructing Military Recruit-
20 ment or Induction), 1116(a)(1) (Inciting or Aiding Mutiny, In-21 subordination, or desertion), or 1831(a)(1) (Leading a Riot).

22 “Chapter 11.—OFFENSES INVOLVING NATIONAL
23 DEFENSE

“Subchapter

“A. Treason and Related Offenses.

“B. Sabotage and Related Offenses.

“C. Espionage and Related Offenses.

“D. Miscellaneous National Defense Offenses.

24 “Subchapter A.—Treason and Related Offenses

“Sec.

“1101. Treason.

“1102. Armed Rebellion or Insurrection.

“1103. Engaging in Para-Military Activity.

25 “§ 1101. Treason

26 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, while owing 27 allegiance to the United States, he:

28 “(1) adheres to the foreign enemies of the United States and 29 intentionally gives them aid and comfort; or

30 “(2) levies war against the United States.

31 “(b) PROOF.—In a prosecution under this section, a person may 32 not be convicted unless the evidence against him includes the testi-

1 mony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or unless he makes a con-
2 fession in open court.

3 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
4 felony.

5 “§ 1102. Armed Rebellion or Insurrection

6 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he engages in
7 armed rebellion or armed insurrection :

8 “(1) against the authority of the United States or a state
9 with intent to :

10 “(A) overthrow, destroy, supplant, or change the form of 11 the government of the United States ; or

12 “(B) sever a state’s relationship with the United States ;
13 or

14 “(2) against the United States with intent to oppose the 15 execution of any law of the United States.

16 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is :

17 “(1) a Class B felony in the circumstances set forth in sub-
18 section (a) (1) ;

19 “(2) a Class C felony in the circumstances set forth in sub-
20 section (a) (2).

21 “§ 1103. Engaging in Para-Military Activity

22 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he engages in the 23 acquisition, caching, or use of weapons, or in the training of other 24 persons in the use of weapons, by or on behalf of an organization or 25 group of ten or more persons that has as a purpose the taking over or 26 control of, or the unauthorized assumption of the function of, a federal 27 or state government agency, by force or threat of force.

28 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
29 felony.

30 “Subchapter B.—Sabotage and Related Offenses

“Sec.

“1111. Sabotage.

“1112. Impairing Military Effectiveness.

“1113. Violating an Emergency Regulation.

“1114. Evading Military or Alternative Civilian Service.

“1115. Obstructing Military Recruitment or Induction.

“1116. Inciting or Aiding Mutiny, Insubordination, or Desertion.

“1117. Aiding Escape of a Prisoner of War or an Enemy Alien.

31 “§ 1111. Sabotage

32 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent to 33 impair, interfere with, or obstruct the ability of the United States or

1 an associate nation to prepare for or to engage in war or defense
2 activities, he:

3 “(1) damages, tampers with, contaminates, defectively makes,
4 or defectively repairs:

5 “(A) any property used in, or particularly suited for use
6 in, the national defense that is owned by, or is under the care,
7 custody, or control of, the United States or an associate nation,
8 or that is being produced, manufactured, constructed, re-
9 paired, transported, or stored for the United States or an 10 associate nation;

11 “(B) any facility that is engaged in whole or in part, for 12 the United States or an associate nation, in:

13 “(i) furnishing defense materials or services; or 14 “(ii) producing raw material necessary to the support

15 of a national defense production or mobilization pro-
16 gram; or

17 “(C) any public facility used in, or designated and par-
18 ticularly suited for use in, the national defense; or

19 “(2) delivers any property described in paragraph (1) (A) that 20 has been damaged, tampered with, contaminated, defectively
21 made, or defectively repaired.

22 “(B) a service of a public facility used in, or designated
23 and particularly suited for use in, the national defense.

24 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

25 “(1) a Class A felony if the offense:

26 “(A) is committed in time of war; and

27 “(B) causes damage to or impairment of a major weapons
28 system or a means of defense, warning, or retaliation against 29 large scale attack;

30 “(2) a Class B felony if the offense:

31 “(A) is committed in time of war in any case other than 32 that described in paragraph (1) (B); or

33 “(B) is committed during a national defense emergency;

34 “(3) a Class C felony in any other case.

35 “§ 1112. Impairing Military Effectiveness

36 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, in reckless dis-
37 regard of the risk that his conduct would impair, interfere with, or 38 obstruct the ability of the United States or an associate nation to 39 prepare for or to engage in war or defense activities, he engages in 40 conduct described in paragraph (1) or (2) of section 1111(a).

1 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

2 “(1) a Class C felony if the offense:

3 “(A) is committed in time of war; and

4 “(B) causes damage to or impairment of a major weapons
5 system or a means of defense, warning, or retaliation against
6 large scale enemy attack;

7 “(2) a Class D felony if the offense:

8 “(A) is committed in time of war in any case other than 9 that described in paragraph (1); or

10 “(B) is committed during a national defense emergency;

11 “(3) a Class E felony in any other case.

12 “§ 1113. Violating an Emergency Regulation

13 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he violates section
14 2 of title II of the Act of June 15, 1917, as amended (50 U.S.C. 192)
15 (relating to promulgation of regulations concerning the anchorage and 16 movement of vessels during a national emergency).

17 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
18 felony.

19 “§ 1114. Evading Military or Alternative Civilian Service

20 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if:

21 “(1) knowing that he is under a duty imposed by a federal 22 statute governing military service, or by a regulation, rule, order,
23 or presidential proclamation issued pursuant thereto:

24 “(A) to register for military service;

25 “(B) to report for and submit to examination to determine
26 his availability for military or alternative civilian service;

27 “(C) to report for and submit to induction into military 28 service; or

29 “(D) to report for and perform alternative civilian service;
30 he fails, neglects, or refuses to do so; or

31 “(2) with intent:

32 “(A) to avoid or delay the performance of the military
33 or alternative civilian service obligation of himself or another
34 person imposed by a federal statute governing military serv-
35 ice, or by a regulation, rule, order, or presidential proclama-
36 tion issued pursuant thereto; or

37 “(B) to obstruct the proper determination of the existence
38 or nature of such an obligation;

39 he engages in conduct constituting an offense under section
40 1343(a) (1) (Making a False Statement).

1 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

2 “(1) a Class D felony if the offense is committed in time of 3 war;

4 “(2) a Class E felony in any other case, except as provided in 5 paragraph (3); or

6 “(3) a Class A misdemeanor under the circumstances set forth
7 in subsection (a) (1) (A) if it occurs exclusively during a period
8 in which only previously deferred registrants are subject to 9 induction.

10 “§ 1115. Obstructing Military Recruitment or Induction

11 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, in time of war
12 and with intent to hinder, interfere with, or obstruct the recruitment, 13 conscription, or induction of a person into the armed forces of the 14 United States, he:

15 “(1) creates a physical interference or obstacle to the recruit-
16 ment, conscription, or induction;

17 “(2) uses force, threat, intimidation, or deception against a
18 public servant of a government agency engaged in the recruit-
19 ment, conscription, or induction; or

20 “(3) incites others to engage in conduct constituting an offense
21 under section 1114 (Evading Military or Alternative Civilian
22 Service).

23 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
24 felony.

25 “§ 1116. Inciting or Aiding Mutiny, Insubordination, or Desertion

26 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if:

27 “(1) with intent to bring about mutiny, insubordination, re-
28 fusal of duty, or desertion by members of the armed forces of the 29 United States, he incites such members to engage in mutiny, insub-
30 ordination, refusal of duty, or desertion;

31 “(2) he aids or abets the commission or attempted commission
32 of mutiny or desertion by a member of the armed forces of the 33 United States; or

34 “(3) he interferes with, hinders, delays, or prevents the dis-
35 covery, apprehension, prosecution, conviction, or punishment of 36 a member of the armed forces of the United States, knowing
37 that such member has deserted, or is charged with or being sought
38 for desertion, by engaging in any conduct described in subpara-
39 graphs (A) through (D) of section 1311(a) (1) (Hindering Law 40 Enforcement).

1 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

2 “(1) a Class C felony in the circumstances set forth in sub-
3 section (a) (1) if:

4 “(A) the offense is committed in time of war; or

5 “(B) the persons incited are engaged, or about to be en-
6 gaged, in combat;

7 “(2) a Class D felony:

8 “(A) in the circumstances set forth in subsection (a) (1) in 9 any case other than that described in paragraph (1); or

10 “(B) in the circumstances set forth in subsection (a) (2);

11 “(3) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in subsec-
12 tion (a) (3).

13 “§ 1117. Aiding Escape of a Prisoner of War or an Enemy Alien

14 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

15 “(1) aids or abets the escape or attempted escape of a person
16 being held in the custody of the United States or an associate 17 nation as a prisoner of war or as an enemy alien; or

18 “(2) interferes with, hinders, delays, or prevents the discovery
19 or apprehension of:

20 “(A) a prisoner of war or an enemy alien, knowing that 21 such prisoner or alien has escaped from the custody of the 22 United States or an associate nation; or

23 “(B) an enemy alien, knowing that such alien is being 24 sought for detention by the United States or an associate
25 nation;

26 by engaging in any conduct described in subparagraphs (A)
27 through (D) of section 1311(a) (1) (Hindering Law Enforce-
28 ment).

29 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
30 felony.

31 “Subchapter C.—Espionage and Related Offenses

“Sec.

“1121. Espionage.

“1122. Disseminating National Defense Information.

“1123. Disseminating Classified Information.

“1124. Receiving Classified Information.

“1125. Failing to Register as a Person Trained in a Foreign Espionage System.

“1126. Failing to Register as, or Acting as, a Foreign Agent.

32 “§ 1121. Espionage

33 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he violates:

34 “(1) section 201 of the Espionage and Sabotage Act of 1954
35 (relating to gathering or delivering defense information to aid 36 a foreign government), as amended by section 245 of the Criminal 37 Code Reform Act of 1977 (50 U.S.C. —); or

1           “(2) section 224(a) or 225 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954,
2 as amended (42 U.S.C. 2274(a) or 2275) (relating to communi-
3 cation and receipt of restricted data with intent to injure the 4 United States or to secure an advantage to a foreign nation).

5           “(b) GRADING.—Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 2201(b),
6 2201(c), and 2301(b), the authorized sentence for a defendant found
7 guilty of violating:

8           “(1) subsection (a)(1) is the sentence set forth in section 201
9 of the Espionage and Sabotage Act of 1954 (relating to gather-
10 ing or delivering defense information to aid a foreign govern-
11 ment), as amended by section 252 of the Criminal Code Reform
12 Act of 1977 (50 U.S.C. —);

13           “(2) subsection (a)(2) is the sentence set forth in section 224(a)
14 or 225 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended (42
15 U.S.C. 2274(a) or 2275).

16           “§ 1122. Disseminating National Defense Information

17           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he violates:

18           “(1) section 18 of the Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950
19 (relating to gathering, transmitting, or losing national defense
20 information), as amended by section 251 of the Criminal Code
21 Reform Act of 1977 (50 U.S.C. —); or

22           “(2) section 224(b) of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as 23 amended (42 U.S.C. 2274(b)) (relating to communication of re-
24 stricted data with reason to believe the data will be used to injure
25 the United States or to secure an advantage to a foreign nation).

26           “(b) GRADING.—Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 2201
27 (b), 2201(c), and 2301(b), the authorized sentence for a defendant
28 found guilty of violating:

29           “(1) Subsection (a)(1) is the sentence set forth in section 18
30 of the Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950 (relating to 31 gathering, transmitting, or losing national defense information),
32 as amended by section 251 of the Criminal Code Reform Act of
33 1977 (50 U.S.C. —);

34           “(2) subsection (a)(2) is the sentence set forth in section 224
35 (b) of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended (42 U.S.C.
36 2274(b)).

1 “§ 1123. Disseminating Classified Information

2 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he violates:

3 “(1) section 24 of the Act of October 31, 1951 (65 Stat. 719)
4 (relating to disclosure of classified information), as amended by 5 section 253 of the Criminal Code Reform Act of 1977 (50 U.S.C.
6 —); or

7 “(1) subsection (a) (1) is the sentence set forth in section 24 of 8 1950, as amended (50 U.S.C. 783(b)) (relating to communication
9 of classified information by a federal public servant).

10 “(b) GRADING.—Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 2001
11 (b), 2201(c), and 2301(b), the authorized sentence for a defendant
12 found guilty of violating:

13 (1) subsection (a) (1) is the sentence set forth in section 24 of 14 the Act of October 31, 1951 (65 Stat. 719) (relating to disclosure 15 of classified information), as amended by section 253 of the Crimi-
16 nal Code Reform Act of 1977 (50 U.S.C. —);

17 “(2) subsection (a) (2) is the sentence set forth in section 4 of 18 the Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950, as amended (50
19 U.S.C. 783).

20 “§ 1124. Receiving Classified Information

21 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he violates:

22 “(1) section 4(c) of the Subversive Activities Control Act of 23 1950, as amended (50 U.S.C. 783(c)) (relating to the receipt of 24 classified information by a foreign agent or a member of a com-
25 munist organization); or

26 “(2) section 227 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C.
27 2277) (relating to disclosure of restricted data).

28 “(b) GRADING.—Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 2201
29 (b), 2201(c), and 2301(b), the authorized sentence for a person con-
30 victed of violating:

31 “(1) subsection (a) (1) is the sentence set forth in section 4
32 of the Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950, as amended (50
33 U.S.C. 783);

34 “(2) subsection (a) (2) is the sentence set forth in section 227
35 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2277).

36 “§ 1125. Failing to Register as a Person Trained in a Foreign 37 Espionage System

38 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

39 “(1) fails to register with the Attorney General as required 40 by section 2 of the Act of August 1, 1956 (50 U.S.C. 851) (relating

1 to registration of persons trained in foreign espionage systems) ;
2 or

3 “(2) violates a regulation or rule issued pursuant to the au-
4 thority conferred in section 5 of the Act of August 1, 1956
5 (50 U.S.C. 854) (relating to promulgation of regulations and
6 rules for registration of persons trained in foreign espionage
7 systems).

8 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
9 felony.

10 “§ 1126. Failing to Register as, or Acting as, a Foreign Agent

11 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if:

12 “(1) being an agent of a foreign principal, he fails to register
13 with the Attorney General as required by section 2 of the Foreign 14 Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended (22 U.S.C. 612) ;

15 “(2) he violates a provision of section 4(a) or 5, or a provision 16 of section 7 relating to a violation of section 4(a) or 5, of the 17 Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended (22 U.S.C.
18 614(a), 615, or 617), or a regulation, rule, or order issued pur-
19 suant thereto; or

20 “(3) being a federal public servant, he is or acts as an agent
21 of a foreign principal required to register under the Foreign 22 Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended (22 U.S.C. 611 et 23 seq.), in violation of 5 U.S.C. 9109.

24 “(b) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section, ‘agent of a foreign prin-
25 cipal’ and ‘foreign principal’ have the meanings set forth in section
26 1 of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended (22
27 U.S.C. 611).

28 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is.

29 “(1) a Class D felony in the circumstances set forth in sub-
30 section (a) (1) or (a) (2) ;

31 “(2) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in sub-
32 section (a) (3).

33 “Subchapter D.—Miscellaneous National Defense Offenses

“Sec.

“1131. Atomic Energy Offenses.

34 “§ 1131. Atomic Energy Offenses

35 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he violates any of 36 the following provisions of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as 37 amended:

38 “(1) section 57 (42 U.S.C. 2077) (relating to unauthorized
39 dealing in special nuclear material) ;

1 “(2) section 92 (42 U.S.C. 2122) (relating to the manufacture,
2 transfer, or possession of an atomic weapon) ;

3 “(3) section 101 (42 U.S.C. 2131) (relating to the unlicensed
4 manufacture, transfer, or possession of a utilization or produc-
5 tion facility for special nuclear material) ; or

6 “(4) section 108 (42 U.S.C. 2138) (relating to suspension of 7 licenses and recapture of special nuclear material) by interfering
8 with a recapture or entry order.

9 “(5) section 223 (42 U.S.C. 2273) (relating to a violation of the 10 Atomic Energy Act of 1954) or of a rule, regulation, or order per-11 taining to special nuclear material, source material, or byproduct
12 material ; or

13 “(6) section 226 (42 U.S.C. 2276) (relating to tampering with 14 restricted data).

15 “(b) GRADING.—Notwithstanding the provisions of section 2201
16 (b), 2201(c), and 2301(b), the authorized sentence for a defendant
17 found guilty of violating :

18 “(1) subsection (a) (1) is the sentence set forth in section 226
19 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended (42 U.S.C.
20 2276) ;

21 “(2) subsection (a) (2), (a) (3), (a) (4), or (a) (5) is the sen-
22 tence set forth in section 222 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954,
23 as amended (42 U.S.C. 2272) ;

24 “(3) subsection (a) (6) is the sentence set forth in section 223
25 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2273).

26 “Chapter 12.—OFFENSES INVOLVING INTERNATIONAL
27 AFFAIRS

“Subchapter

“A. Offenses Involving Foreign Relations

“B. Offenses Involving Immigration, Naturalization, and Passports

28 “Subchapter A.—Offenses Involving Foreign Relations

“Sec.

“1201. Attacking a Foreign Power.

“1202. Conspiracy against a Foreign Power.

“1203. Entering or Recruiting for a Foreign Armed Force.

“1204. Violating Neutrality by Causing Departure of a Vessel or Aircraft.

“1205. Disclosing a Foreign Diplomatic Code or Correspondence.

“1206. Engaging in an Unlawful International Transaction.

29 “§ 1201. Attacking a Foreign Power

30 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he launches or 31 carries on, from the United States, a military attack or expedition
32 against a foreign power with which the United States is not at war.

1     “(b) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, ‘military attack or expedi-
2     dition’ against a foreign power means :

3             “(1) any manned or unmanned warlike assault upon :

4                 “(A) the territory of such foreign power ;

5                 “(B) the inhabitants or property in the territory of such 6             foreign power, or

7                 “(C) a vessel or aircraft of such foreign power ; or 8             “(2) any organized warlike invasion of the territory of such 9             foreign power whether launched from or carried on by land, sea,

10            or air.

11   “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
12   felony.

13   “§ 1202. Conspiracy against a Foreign Power

14   “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, within the United 15   States, he agrees with one or more persons to engage in conduct outside
16   the United States, the performance of which would involve :

17             “(1) the death of a foreign official of a foreign power with 18             which the United States is not at war ; or

19             “(2) damage to or destruction of property owned by, or under 20             the care, custody, or control of, a foreign power with which the 21             United States is not at war, or a public facility located within 22             the jurisdiction of such foreign power ;

23   and he or one of such persons in fact engages in conduct with intent
24   to effect any objective of the agreement.

25   “(b) DEFENSES PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution
26   under this section that one or more of the persons with whom the 27   defendant is alleged to have conspired has been acquitted, has not 28   been prosecuted or convicted, has been convicted of a different offense, 29   was incompetent or irresponsible, or is immune from or otherwise not
30   subject to prosecution.

31   “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
32   felony.

33   “§ 1203. Entering or Recruiting for a Foreign Armed Force

34   “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, within the
35   United States, he :

36             “(1) contracts to enter the armed forces of a foreign power ; or 37             “(2) induces another person to contract to enter the armed 38             forces of a foreign power.

1       “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a
2 prosecution under this section that :

3           “(1) the foreign power was an associate nation and the person
4 who contracted to enter its armed forces was not a citizen of the 5 United States ; or

6           “(2) the foreign power was not then at war with the United
7 States and the person who contracted to enter its armed forces
8 was a citizen of the foreign power, and, in the case of a prosecu-
9 tion under subsection (a) (2), the person who induced the other
10 person to contract to enter its armed forces was also a citizen
11 of the foreign power.

12       “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
13 felony.

14       “§ 1204. Violating Neutrality by Causing Departure of a Vessel
15 or Aircraft

16       “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, during a war in 17 regard to which the United States is a neutral nation, he engages in 18 conduct that causes the departure from the United States of a vessel
19 or aircraft :

20           “(1) that is equipped as, or that is capable of service as, a war-21 ship or warplane, with knowledge that it may be used in the 22 service of a belligerent foreign power ;

23           “(2) that is the subject of a detention order issued pursuant to 24 a federal statute designed to restrict or control the delivery of 25 vessels, aircraft, goods, or services to belligerent foreign powers, 26 or a regulation or rule issued pursuant thereto ; or

27           “(3) that, in fact, has not been issued the clearance required by 28 a federal statute designed to restrict or control the delivery of ves-
29 sels, aircraft, goods, or services to belligerent foreign powers, or 30 a regulation, rule, or order issued pursuant thereto.

31       “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
32 felony.

33       “§ 1205. Disclosing a Foreign Diplomatic Code or Correspondence

34       “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he communicates
35 to any person :

36           “(1) a diplomatic code of a foreign government, or any in-
37 formation or matter prepared in such a code ; or

38           “(2) any information or matter intercepted while in the process

1 mission in the United States;
2 to which he obtained access as a federal public servant.

3 of transmission between a foreign government and its diplomatic

4 “(b) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section :

5 “(1) ‘information’ includes any property from which informa-
6 tion may be obtained ; and

7 “(2) ‘intercept’ has the meaning set forth in section 1525(d).

8 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
9 felony.

10 “§ 1206. Engaging in an Unlawful International Transaction

11 “(a) Offense.—A person is guilty of an offense if he violates :

12 “(1) section 5 of the United Nations Participation Act of 1945,
13 as amended (22 U.S.C. 287c) (relating to economic and communi-
14 cation sanctions called for by the United Nations Security Council
15 and ordered by the President) ;

16 “(2) section 7 of the Neutrality Act of 1939, as amended (22
17 U.S.C. 447) (relating to transactions involving securities or obli-
18 gations of belligerent foreign powers) ;

19 “(3) section 38 of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C.
20 2778) (relating to regulation of the export and import of defense
21 articles and defense services) :

22 “(4) section 3(a) or 5(b) of the Trading with the Enemy Act,
23 as amended (50 U.S.C. App. 3(a) or 5(b)) (relating to trade 24 with an enemy or an ally of an enemy of the United States) ; or

25 “(5) section 6(b) of the Export Administration Act of 1969
26 (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(b)) (relating to the export of prohibited 27 goods and technological information to certain nations) ;

28 with intent to conceal any matter from a government agency author-
29 ized to administer such statute, or with knowledge that such conduct
30 obstructs or impairs the administration of such statute or of any fed-
31 eral government function.

32 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
33 felony.

34 “Subchapter B.—Offenses Involving Immigration, Natural-
35 ization, and Passports

“Sec.

“1211. Unlawfully Entering the United States as an Alien.

“1212. Smuggling an Alien into the United States.

“1213. Hindering Discovery of an Alien Unlawfully in the United States.

“1214. Unlawfully Employing an Alien.

“1215. Fraudulently Acquiring or Improperly Using Evidence of Citizenship.

“1216. Fraudulently Acquiring or Improperly Using a Passport.

“1217. General Provisions for Subchapter B.

1 “§ 1211. Unlawfully Entering the United States as an Alien

2 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, being an alien,
3 he:

4 “(1) enters the United States at a time or place other than 5 a time or place designated for such entry under a federal statute,
6 or a regulation, rule, or order issued pursuant thereto;

7 “(2) eludes examination or inspection by an immigration
8 officer;

9 “(3) obtains entry into the United States by fraud; or 10 “(4) enters, or is present in, the United States after having 11 been deported from the United States under an order of exclusion

12 or deportation.

13 “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
14 cution under subsection (a) (4) that:

15 “(1) the Attorney General had expressly consented to the 16 alien’s reapplying for admission to the United States, prior to his 17 reembarkation at a place outside the United States or prior to his 18 application for admission from foreign contiguous territory; or

19 “(2) the alien had previously been deported under an order of 20 exclusion and he was not required by a federal statute, or a 21 regulation, rule, or order issued pursuant thereto, to obtain the 22 advance consent described in paragraph (1).

23 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

24 “(1) a Class D felony if the actor uses a passport, certificate of 25 naturalization or citizenship, immigrant or nonimmigrant visa,
26 border crossing identification card, alien registration receipt card,
27 or other document prescribed by statute or regulation for entry
28 into, or as evidence of an authorized stay in, the United States,
29 that is counterfeited or forged or that pertains to another person;
30 or

31 “(2) a Class E felony if the offense is committed in the circum-
32 stances set forth in subsection (a) (4) and the alien previously has 33 been convicted of that offense or of any federal, state, or foreign
34 felony;

35 “(3) a Class B misdemeanor in any other case.

36 “§ 1212. Smuggling an Alien into the United States

37 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he brings into 38 the United States an alien who he knows is:

39 “(1) not admitted for entry into the United States by an immi-
40 gration officer; or

1       “(2) not lawfully entitled to enter or reside within the United
2 States.

3       “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

4       “(1) a Class D felony if the actor engages in the described
5 conduct:

6               “(A) as consideration for the receipt, or in expectation
7 of the receipt, of anything of pecuniary value; or

8               “(B) with knowledge that the alien intends to engage,
9 in the United States, in conduct constituting a federal or state
10 felony;

11       “(2) a Class E felony ~~in any other case~~ if the actor engages in 12 the described conduct knowing that the alien is a member of 13 the class of aliens that, in fact, is excludable from the United 14 States under section 212(a)(27), (28), or (29) of the Immigra-15 tion and Nationality Act of 1952, as amended (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)
16 (27), (28), or (29));

17       “(3) a Class A misdemeanor in any other case.

18       “§ 1213. Hindering Discovery of an Alien Unlawfully in the United
19       States

20       “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he interferes with,
21 hinders, delays, or prevents the discovery or apprehension of an alien,
22 knowing that such alien is unlawfully within the United States, by 23 engaging in any conduct described in subparagraphs (A) through (D)
24 of section 1311(a)(1) (Hindering Law Enforcement).

25       “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

26       “(1) a Class E felony if the actor engages in the conduct:

27               “(A) as consideration for the receipt, or in expectation of 28 the receipt, of anything of pecuniary value;

29               “(B) with knowledge that the alien intends to engage, in 30 the United States, in conduct constituting a federal or state
31 felony;

32               “(C) with intent to obtain anything of value for placing the 33 alien in the employ of another; or

34               “(D) with intent that the alien be employed or continued
35 in the employ of an enterprise operated for profit;

36       “(2) a Class A misdemeanor in any other case.

37       “§ 1214. Unlawfully Employing an Alien

38       “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, being a farm
39 labor contractor who has failed to obtain a certificate of registration,

1 or whose certificate has been suspended or revoked, pursuant to the 2 Fair Labor Contractor Registration Act of 1963, as amended (7 U.S.C.
 3 2041 et seq.), he violates section 6(f) of the Act (7 U.S.C. 2045(f))
 4 (relating to employing the services of an alien not entitled to accept 5 employment), or a regulation, rule, or order issued pursuant thereto.

6 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
 7 felony.

8 “§ 1215. Fraudulently Acquiring or Improperly Using Evidence
 9 of Citizenship

10 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

11 “(1) obtains for any person, by fraud, United States naturaliza-
 12 tion, the creation of a record of permanent residence in the United 13 States, or the issuance of a certificate or other documentary
 14 evidence of United States naturalization or citizenship;

15 “(2) uses a certificate or other documentary evidence of 16 United States naturalization or citizenship, or a copy or duplicate
 17 thereof, that was unlawfully obtained; or

18 “(3) uses a certificate or other documentary evidence of 19 United States naturalization or citizenship that was issued to an-
 20 other person, or a copy or duplicate thereof, as showing naturali-
 21 zation or citizenship of any person other than the person for 22 whom it was lawfully issued.

23 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
 24 felony.

25 “§ 1216. Fraudulently Acquiring or Improperly Using a Passport

26 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

27 “(1) obtains the issuance or verification of a United States
 28 passport by fraud;

29 “(2) uses a United States passport, the issuance or verification
 30 of which was unlawfully obtained; or

31 “(3) uses a United States passport that was issued for the use
 32 of another person.

33 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
 34 felony.

35 “§ 1217. General Provisions for Subchapter B

36 “(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this subchapter:

37 “(1) ‘alien’, ‘application for admission’, ‘border crossing identi-
 38 fication card’, ‘entry’, ‘immigration officer’, ‘passport’, ‘United 39 States’, ‘immigrant visa’, and ‘nonimmigrant visa’ have the mean-

1       ings prescribed in section 101 of the Immigration and Nationality
2       Act, as amended (8 U.S.C. 1101), and 'alien' includes an alien
3       'crewman' as defined in that Act;

4       “(2) ‘fraud’ includes conduct described in sections 1301(a) and
5       1343(a) (1) (A) through (E).

6       “(b) PROOF OF MATERIALITY.—To the extent that materiality is an 7       element of an offense described in section 1211 through 1216, the 8       provisions of section 1345(b) (2) that apply to section 1343 (Making 9       a False Statement) apply also to such sections.

10      “(c) EXCEPTION.—The provisions of section 289 of the Act of 11      June 27, 1952 (8 U.S.C. 1359), apply to this subchapter.

12      “Chapter 13.—OFFENSES INVOLVING GOVERNMENT
13      PROCESSES

“Subchapter

“A. General Obstructions of Government Functions.

“B. Obstructions of Law Enforcement.

“C. Obstructions of Justice.

“D. Contempt Offenses.

“E. Perjury, False Statements, and Related Offenses.

“F. Official Corruption and Intimidation.

14      “Subchapter A.—General Obstructions of Government
15      Functions

“Sec.

“1301. Obstructing a Government Function by Fraud.

“1302. Obstructing a Government Function by Physical Interference.

“1303. Impersonating an Official.

16      “§ 1301. Obstructing a Government Function by Fraud

17      “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he intentionally
18      obstructs or impairs a government function by defrauding the govern-
19      ment in any manner.

20      “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
21      felony.

22      “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
23      described in this section if the government function is a federal govern-
24      ment function.

25      “§ 1302. Obstructing a Government Function by Physical Inter- 26      ference

27      “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, by means of 28      physical interference or obstacle, he intentionally obstructs or impairs 29      a government function involving:

30          “(1) the performance by a federal public servant of an official
31          duty;

1           “(2) the performance by an inspector of a specific duty imposed
2           by a federal statute, or by a regulation, rule, or order issued
3           pursuant thereto;

4           “(3) the delivery of mail; or

5           “(4) the exercise of a right, or the performance of a duty, under 6           a court order, judgment, or decree.

7           “(b) DEFENSE.—It is a defense to a prosecution under this section
8           that the government function was:

9           “(1) unlawful; and

10           “(2) conducted by a public servant who was not acting in good 11           faith.

12           “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
13           misdemeanor.

14           “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
15           described in this section if the government function is a federal gov-
16           ernment function.

17           “§ 1303. Impersonating an Official

18           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he pretends to be 19           a public servant or a foreign official and purports to exercise the au-
20           thority of such public servant or foreign official.

21           “(b) DEFENSE PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution
22           under this section that the pretended capacity did not exist or that 23           the pretended authority could not legally or otherwise have been exer-
24           cised or conferred.

25           “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
26           felony.

27           “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
28           described in this section if:

29           “(1) the pretended capacity or authority is that of a federal 30           public servant; or

31           “(2) the pretended capacity or authority is that of a foreign 32           official and the offense is committed within the general jurisdiction
33           of the United States or within the special jurisdiction of the
34           United States.

35           “Subchapter B.—Obstructions of Law Enforcement

“Sec.

“1311. Hindering Law Enforcement.

“1312. Bail Jumping.

“1313. Escape.

“1314. Providing or Possessing Contraband in a Prison.

“1315. Flight to Avoid Prosecution or Appearance as a Witness.

1   “§ 1311. Hindering Law Enforcement

2   “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he :

3       “(1) interferes with, hinders, delays, or prevents, the discovery,
4       apprehension, prosecution, conviction, or punishment of another
5       person, knowing that such other person has committed a crime,
6       or is charged with or being sought for a crime, by :

7           “(A) harboring the other person or concealing him or his 8           identity ;

9           “(B) providing the other person with a weapon, money,
10          transportation, disguise, or other means of avoiding or mini-
11          mizing the risk of discovery or apprehension ;

12          “(C) warning the other person of impending discovery or 13          apprehension ; or

14          “(D) altering, destroying, mutilating, concealing, or re-
15          moving a record, document, or other object ; or

16       “(2) aids another person to secrete, disguise, or convert the 17       proceeds of a crime or otherwise to profit from a crime.

18   “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
19   cution under subsection (a) (1) (C), and to a prosecution under any 20   section incorporating by reference the provisions of subparagraph (C) 21   of subsection (a) (1), that warning was made solely in an effort to 22   bring the other person into compliance with the law.

23   “(c) DEFENSE PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution under 24   this section that the record, document, or other object would have been
25   legally privileged or would have been inadmissible in evidence.

26   “(d) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is :

27       “(1) a Class D felony if the other person’s crime is a Class A,
28       B, or C felony, and the actor knows the general nature of the 29       crime or is reckless with regard to the general nature of the crime ;

30       “(2) a Class E felony if :

31           “(A) the other person’s crime is a Class D felony, and 32           the actor knows the general nature of the conduct constitut-
33           ing such crime or is reckless with regard to the general
34           nature of such conduct ; or

35           “(B) the defendant committed the offense as consideration
36           for the receipt, or in expectation of the receipt, of anything
37           of pecuniary value ;

38       “(3) a Class A misdemeanor in any other case.

39   “(e) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
40   described in this section if the crime that the other person has committed, is charged with, is being sought for, or is seeking to profit from, is a crime over which federal jurisdiction exists.

3 “§ 1312. Bail Jumping

4 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, after having been 5 released pursuant to the provisions of subchapter A of chapter 35 or 6 of subchapter A of chapter 36:

7 “(1) he fails to appear before a court as required by the 8 conditions of his release; or

9 “(2) he fails to surrender for service of sentence pursuant to 10 a court order.

11 “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a
12 prosecution under this section that uncontrollable circumstances
13 prevented the defendant from appearing or surrendering and that 14 the defendant did not contribute to the creation of such circumstances
15 in reckless disregard of the requirement that he appear or surrender.

16 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

17 “(1) a Class D felony if the person was released:

18 “(A) in connection with a charge of a Class A, B, C, or D 19 felony; or

20 “(B) while awaiting sentence or pending review of sen-
21 tence, appeal, or certiorari after conviction of any crime;

22 “(2) a Class E felony if the person was released in connection
23 with a charge of a Class E felony; or

24 “(3) a Class A misdemeanor if the person was released in 25 connection with a charge of a misdemeanor or for appearance as a 26 material witness.

27 “§ 1313. Escape

28 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

29 “(1) escapes from official detention; or

30 “(2) fails to return to official detention following temporary
31 leave, granted for a specified purpose or a limited period, pur-
32 suant to the terms under which such leave was granted.

33 “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
34 cution under this section that the bringing about or maintaining of the 35 official detention was illegal, or that the committing or detaining au-
36 thority lacked jurisdiction, if:

37 “(1) the offense did not involve escape from a prison or other
38 facility used for official detention;

39 “(2) the offense did not involve a substantial risk of harm to the 40 person or property of another; and

1 “(3) the official detention was not in good faith.

2 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

3 “(1) a Class D felony if the actor was in official detention:

4 “(A) on a charge of, or as a result of an arrest for, a felony;

5 or

6 “(B) pursuant to his conviction of an offense other than an
7 adjudication of juvenile delinquency;

8 “(2) a Class A misdemeanor in any other case.

9 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
10 described in this section if:

11 “(1) the official detention resulted from an arrest made, or an 12 order or process issued, under the laws of the United States;

13 “(2) the escape is from official detention by a federal public
14 servant; or

15 “(3) the escape is from official detention in a federal facility.

16 “§ 1314. Providing or Possessing Contraband in a Prison

17 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, in violation of a 18 statute, or a regulation, rule, or order issued pursuant thereto:

19 “(1) he provides to an inmate of an official detention facility,
20 or introduces into an official detention facility:

21 “(A) a firearm or destructive device;

22 “(B) any other weapon or object that may be used as a
23 weapon or as a means of facilitating escape;

24 “(C) a narcotic drug as defined in section 102 of the Con-
25 trolled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802); or

26 “(D) a controlled substance, other than a narcotic drug,
27 as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act
28 (21 U.S.C. 802), or an alcoholic beverage; or

29 “(E) United States currency; or

30 “(2) being an inmate of an official detention facility, he makes,
31 possesses, procures, or otherwise provides himself with

32 “(A) anything described in paragraph (1); or

33 “(B) any other object.

34 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

35 “(1) a Class C felony if the object is anything set forth in 36 paragraph (1)(A);

37 “(2) a Class D felony if the object is anything set forth in 38 paragraph (1)(B) or (1)(C);

39 “(3) a Class A misdemeanor if the object is anything set forth
40 in paragraph (1)(D) or (1)(E);

1           “(4) a Class B misdemeanor if the object is any other object.

2           “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
3 described in this section if the official detention facility is a federal 4 facility.

5           “§ 1315. Flight to Avoid Prosecution or Appearance as a Witness

6           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he leaves a state
7 or local jurisdiction with intent to avoid :

8           “(1) criminal prosecution, or official detention after conviction,
9 for an attempt to commit, a conspiracy to commit, or the commis-
10 sion of a state or local felony in such jurisdiction ;

11           “(2) appearing as a witness, giving testimony, or producing a 12 record, document, or other object in an official proceeding in which 13 a state or local felony in such jurisdiction is charged or being in-14 vestigated ; or

15           “(3) contempt proceedings, or criminal prosecution, or official 16 detention after conviction, for failure to appear as a witness, to 17 give testimony, or to produce a record, document, or other object 18 in an official proceeding in which a state or local felony in such 19 jurisdiction is charged or being investigated.

20           “(b) DEFENSE PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution
21 under this section that the testimony, or the record, document, or other 22 object, would have been legally privileged or would have been inadmis-
23 sible in evidence.

24           “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
25 felony.

26           “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
27 described in this section if movement of the actor across a state or 28 United States boundary occurs in the commission of the offense.

29           “Subchapter C.—Obstructions of Justice

“Sec.

“1321. Witness bribery.

“1322. Corrupting a Witness or an Informant.

“1323. Tampering with a Witness or an Informant.

“1324. Retaliating against a Witness or an Informant.

“1325. Tampering with Physical Evidence.

“1326. Improperly Influencing a Juror.

“1327. Monitoring Jury Deliberations.

“1328. Demonstrating to Influence a Judicial Proceeding.

30           “§ 1321. Witness Bribery

31           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he :

32           “(1) offers, gives, or agrees to give to another person ; or 33           “(2) solicits, demands, accepts, or agrees to accept from another

34 person ;

1 anything of value in return for an agreement or understanding that
 2 the testimony of the recipient will be influenced in an official pro-
 3 ceeding.

4 “(b) DEFENSES PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution
 5 under this section that:

6 “(1) an official proceeding was not pending or about to be
 7 instituted; or

8 “(2) the defendant, or other recipient or proposed recipient of 9 the thing of value, by the same conduct also committed an offense
 10 described in section 1722 (Extortion), 1723 (Blackmail), or 1731
 11 (Theft).

12 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class C
 13 felony.

14 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
 15 described in this section if:

16 “(1) the official proceeding is or would be a federal official
 17 proceeding;

18 “(2) the United States mail or a facility of interstate or foreign
 19 commerce is used in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
 20 tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the dis-
 21 tribution of the proceeds of the offense; or

22 “(3) movement of a person across a state or United States
 23 boundary occurs in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
 24 tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the dis-
 25 tribution of the proceeds of the offense.

26 “§ 1322. Corrupting a Witness or an Informant

27 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

28 “(1) offers, gives, or agrees to give to another person, or solicits, 29 demands, accepts, or agrees to accept from another person, any-
 30 thing of value for or because of any person’s:

31 “(A) testimony in an official proceeding;

32 “(B) withholding testimony, or withholding a record,
 33 document, or other object, from an official proceeding;

34 “(C) engaging in conduct constituting an offense under
 35 section 1325 (Tampering with Physical Evidence);

36 “(D) evading legal process summoning him to appear as a 37 witness, or to produce a record, document, or other object, in 38 an official proceeding;

39 “(E) absenting himself from an official proceeding to 40 which he has been summoned by legal process; or

1           “(2) offers, gives, or agrees to give anything of value to another
2           person for or because of any person’s hindering, delaying, or pre-3           venting the communication to a law enforcement officer of in-
4           formation relating to an offense or a possible offense.

5           “(b) DEFENSE PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution
6           under this section that:

7           “(1) an official proceeding was not pending or about to be
8           instituted;

9           “(2) the testimony, or the record, document, or other object,
10          would have been legally privileged or would have been inad-
11          missible in evidence; or

12          “(3) the defendant, or other recipient or proposed recipient 13          of the thing of value, by the same conduct also committed an of-14          fense described in section 1722 (Extortion), 1723 (Blackmail),
15          or 1731 (Theft).

16          “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
17          felony.

18          “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
19          described in this section if:

20          “(1) the official proceeding is or would be a federal official
21          proceeding;

22          “(2) the law enforcement officer is a federal public servant
23          and the information relates to a federal offense or a possible fed-
24          eral offense;

25          “(3) the United States mail or a facility of interstate or for-
26          eign commerce is used in the planning, promotion, management,
27          execution, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in 28          the distribution of the proceeds of the offense; or

29          “(4) movement of a person across a state or United States
30          boundary occurs in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
31          tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the dis-
32          tribution of the proceeds of the offense.

33        “§ 1323. Tampering with a Witness or an Informant

34        “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

35        “(1) uses force, threat, intimidation, or deception with intent to:

36           “(A) influence the testimony of another person in an of-37           ficial proceeding; or

38           “(B) cause or induce another person to:

39           “(i) withhold testimony, or withhold a record, docu-
40           ment, or other object, from an official proceeding;

1                   “(ii) engage in conduct constituting an offense under
2                   section 1325 (Tampering with Physical Evidence);

3                   “(iii) evade legal process summoning him to appear as 4                   a witness, or to produce a record, document, or other 5                   object, in an official proceeding; or

6                   “(iv) absent himself from an official proceeding to 7                   which he has been summoned by legal process; or

8                   “(C) hinder, delay, or prevent the communication to a law
9                   enforcement officer of information relating to an offense or a 10                  possible offense; or

11                 “(2) does any other act with intent to influence improperly, or 12                 to obstruct or impair, the:

13                         “(A) administration of justice;

14                         “(B) administration of a law under which an official pro-
15                         ceeding is being or may be conducted; or 16                         “(C) exercise of a legislative power of inquiry.

17                 “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
18                 cution under subsection (a)(1)(A) that the conduct engaged in to 19                 threaten or to intimidate consisted solely of lawful conduct and that 20                 the defendant’s sole intention was to compel or induce the other per-
21                 son to testify truthfully.

22                 “(c) DEFENSE PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution under 23                 this section that:

24                         “(1) an official proceeding was not pending or about to be insti-
25                         tuted; or

26                         “(2) the testimony, or the record, document, or other object,
27                         would have been legally privileged or would have been inadmissi-
28                         ble in evidence.

29                 “(d) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

30                         “(1) a Class D felony in the circumstances set forth in sub-
31                         section (a)(1);

32                         “(2) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in sub-
33                         section (a)(2).

34                 “(e) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
35                 described in this section if:

36                         “(1) the official proceeding is or would be a federal official
37                         proceeding;

38                         “(2) the law enforcement officer is a federal public servant and
39                         the information relates to a federal offense or a possible federal
40                         offense;

1 “(3) the administration of justice, administration of a law, or
2 exercise of a legislative power of inquiry relates to a federal
3 government function;

4 “(4) the United States mail or a facility of interstate or foreign
5 commerce is used in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
6 tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the distri-
7 bution of the proceeds of the offense; or

8 “(5) movement of a person across a state or United States
9 boundary occurs in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
10 tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense or in the distri-
11 bution of the proceeds of the offense.

12 “§ 1324. Retaliating against a Witness or an Informant

13 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

14 “(1) engages in conduct that causes bodily injury to another
15 person or damages the property of another person because of:

16 “(A) any testimony given, or any record, document, or other 17 object produced, by a witness in an official proceeding; or

18 “(B) any information relating to an offense or a possible
19 offense given by a person to a law enforcement officer; or

20 “(2) improperly subjects another person to economic loss or 21 injury to his business or profession because of any matter de-
22 scribed in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1).

23 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
24 misdemeanor.

25 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
26 described in this section if:

27 “(1) the official proceeding is a federal official proceeding;

28 “(2) the law enforcement officer is a federal public servant and 29 the information relates to a federal offense or a possible federal
30 offense;

31 “(3) the United States mail or a facility of interstate or foreign
32 commerce is used in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
33 tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the 34 distribution of the proceeds of the offense; or

35 “(4) movement of a person across a state or United States
36 boundary occurs in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
37 tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the distri-
38 bution of the proceeds of the offense.

39 “§ 1325. Tampering with Physical Evidence

40 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he alters, de-
41 stroys, mutilates, conceals, or removes a record, document, or other

1 object, with intent to impair its integrity or its availability for use in
2 an official proceeding.

3 “(b) DEFENSE PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution un-
4 der this section that :

5 “(1) an official proceeding was not pending or about to be
6 instituted; or

7 “(2) the record, document, or other object would have been
8 legally privileged or would have been inadmissible in evidence.

9 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
10 felony.

11 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
12 described in this section if the official proceeding is or would be a fed-
13 eral official proceeding.

14 “§ 1326. Improperly Influencing a Juror

15 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he communicates
16 in any way with a juror, or a member of a juror’s immediate family,
17 with intent to influence improperly the official action of the juror.

18 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
19 misdemeanor.

20 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
21 described in this section if the juror is a federal juror.

22 “§ 1327. Monitoring Jury Deliberations

23 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he intentionally :

24 “(1) records the proceedings of a grand or petit jury while the 25 jury is deliberating or voting; or

26 “(2) listens to or observes the proceedings of a grand or petit
27 jury, of which he is not a member, while the jury is deliberating
28 or voting.

29 “(b) DEFENSE.—It is a defense to a prosecution under subsection
30 (a) (1) that the actor was a juror of the jury that was deliberating or 31 voting and that he was taking notes in connection with, and solely for 32 the purpose of facilitating his performance of, his official duties.

33 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class B
34 misdemeanor.

35 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
36 described in this section if the grand or petit jury is a federal jury.

37 “§ 1328. Demonstrating to Influence a Judicial Proceeding

38 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent to 39 influence another person in the discharge of his duties in a judicial

1 proceeding, he pickets, parades, displays a sign, uses a sound amplify-
2 ing device, or otherwise engages in a demonstration:

3 “(1) in a building housing a court of the United States;

4 “(2) after being advised that such conduct is an offense, on the 5 grounds of, or within 200 feet of, a building housing a court of the 6 United States; or

7 “(3) in, or on the grounds of, or after being advised that such 8 conduct is an offense, within 200 feet of, a building occupied or 9 used by such other person.

10 “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
11 cution under subsection (a) (2) that the defendant’s conduct:

12 “(1) did not occur while any judicial proceeding was in progress 13 or within one-half hour before or after such proceedings; and

14 “(2) did not constitute:

15 “(A) making unreasonable noise;

16 “(B) obstructing the entry to or exit from a building hous-
17 ing a court of the United States; or

18 “(C) threatening or placing another person in fear that 19 any person would be subjected to bodily injury or kidnap-
20 ping, or that any property would be damaged.

21 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class B
22 misdemeanor.

23 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
24 described in this section if the judicial proceeding is a federal judicial
25 proceeding.

26 “Subchapter D.—Contempt Offenses

“Sec.

“1331. Criminal Contempt.

“1332. Failing to Appear as a Witness.

“1333. Refusing to Testify or to Produce Information.

“1334. Obstructing a Proceeding by Disorderly Conduct.

“1335. Disobeying a Judicial Order.

27 “§ 1331. Criminal Contempt

28 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

29 “(1) misbehaves in the presence of a court or so near to it as to 30 obstruct the administration of justice;

31 “(2) disobeys or resists a writ, process, order, rule, decree, or 32 command of a court; or

33 “(3) as an officer of a court, misbehaves in an official trans-
34 action.

35 “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
36 cution under subsection (a) (2) that the writ, process, order, rule,

1 decree, or command was clearly invalid and that the defendant did
2 not have a reasonable opportunity to obtain a judicial review or a
3 stay thereof prior to the disobedience or resistance charged.

4 “(c) POWER TO PROSECUTE.—A prosecution for an offense described
5 in this section may be commenced by the court, the authority of which 6 was the subject of the contempt, or by the Attorney General with the 7 concurrence of the court.

8 “(d) SUCCESSIVE PROSECUTIONS.—A prosecution for an offense under 9 this section is not a bar to a subsequent prosecution for an offense un-
10 der another federal statute if the conduct charged as criminal con-
11 tempt under this section also constitutes an offense under such other
12 statute, or a regulation, rule, or order issued pursuant thereto. In a 13 subsequent prosecution the defendant shall receive credit for any time
14 spent in custody and any fine paid by him as a result of the prior 15 criminal contempt proceeding.

16 “(e) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class B
17 misdemeanor. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 2201, the de-18 fendant may be sentenced to pay a fine in any amount deemed just 19 by the court if the offense involves disobedience of or resistance to 20 the court’s temporary restraining order, preliminary injunction,
21 or final order other than an order for the payment of money.

22 “(f) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
23 described in this section if the court is a court of the United States.

24 “§ 1332. Failing to Appear as a Witness

25 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he fails to comply
26 with an order :

27 “(1) to appear at a specified time and place as a witness in an
28 official proceeding ;

29 “(2) to remain at a specified place where he is to appear as a
30 witness in an official proceeding ; or

31 “(3) to be sworn or to make an equivalent affirmation as a wit-
32 ness in an official proceeding.

33 “(b) BAR TO PROSECUTION.—It is a bar to a prosecution under this 34 section that the official proceeding was conducted under the authority
35 of Congress or of either House of Congress and that a certification
36 pursuant to the provisions of section 104 of the Revised Statutes, as 37 amended (2 U.S.C. 194), had not been issued.

38 “(c) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a pros-
39 ecution under subsection (a) (1) or (a) (2) that uncontrollable cir-

1 cumstances prevented the defendant from appearing at the specified
 2 time and place or from remaining at the specified place, and that the 3 defendant did not contribute to the creation of such circumstances in 4 reckless disregard of the requirement to appear or remain.

5 “(d) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
 6 felony.

7 “(e) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
 8 described in this section if the official proceeding is a federal official
 9 proceeding.

10 “§ 1333. Refusing to Testify or to Produce Information

11 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if:

12 “(1) in an official proceeding that is conducted under the 13 authority of Congress or of either House of Congress, he:

14 “(A) refuses to answer a question, after the presiding
 15 officer has directed him to answer and advised him that his 16 refusal to do so might subject him to criminal prosecution; or

17 “(B) fails to comply with an order to produce a record,
 18 document, or other object;

19 and the question or object is in fact pertinent to the subject
 20 under inquiry; or

21 “(2) in any other official proceeding, he:

22 “(A) refuses to answer a question after a federal court or 23 federal judge, or, in a proceeding that is conducted before a
 24 United States magistrate or referee in bankruptcy, the presid-
 25 ing officer, has directed him to answer and advised him that 26 his refusal to do so might subject him to criminal prosecution;
 27 or

28 “(B) fails to comply with an order to produce a record,
 29 document, or other object.

30 “(b) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

31 “(1) ‘federal court’ includes a court martial, military commis-
 32 sion, court of inquiry, provost court, and any other military court
 33 of the United States;

34 “(2) ‘federal judge’ includes a military judge as defined in 35 section 801(10) of title 10.

36 “(c) BAR TO PROSECUTION.—It is a bar to a prosecution under sub-
 37 section (a) (1) that a certification pursuant to the provisions of sec-
 38 tion 104 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (2 U.S.C. 194), had not 39 been issued.

1 “(d) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
2 cution:

3 “(1) under this section that the defendant was legally privileged
4 to refuse to answer the question or to produce the record, docu-
5 ment, or other object; or

6 “(2) under subsection (a)(1)(B) or (a)(2)(B) that uncon-
7 trollable circumstances prevented the defendant from producing
8 the record, document, or other object, and that the defendant
9 did not contribute to the creation of such circumstances in reck-
10 less disregard of the requirement to produce the record, document,
11 or other object.

12 “(e) PROOF.—In a prosecution under this section, whether a matter
13 is pertinent under subsection (a)(1) is a question of law.

14 “(f) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
15 felony.

16 “(g) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
17 described in this section if the official proceeding is a federal official
18 proceeding.

19 “§ 1334. Obstructing a Proceeding by Disorderly Conduct

20 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he obstructs
21 or impairs an official proceeding by means of unreasonable noise, by 22 means of violent or tumultuous behavior or disturbance, or by similar 23 means.

24 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class B
25 misdemeanor.

26 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
27 described in this section if the official proceeding is a federal official
28 proceeding.

29 “§ 1335. Disobeying a Judicial Order

30 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he disobeys or 31 resists a court’s temporary restraining order, preliminary injunction,
32 or final order other than an order for the payment of money.

33 “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a pros-
34 ecution under this section that the temporary restraining order, pre-35 liminary injunction, or final order was clearly invalid and that the 36 defendant did not have a reasonable opportunity to obtain a judicial 37 review or a stay thereof prior to the disobedience or resistance charged.

38 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
39 felony. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 2201, the defendant 40 may be sentenced to pay a fine in any amount deemed just by the court.

1 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
2 described in this section if the court is a court of the United States.

3 “Subchapter E.—Perjury, False Statements, and Related
4 Offenses

“Sec.

“1341. Perjury.

“1342. False Swearing.

“1343. Making a False Statement.

“1344. Tampering With a Government Record.

“1345. General Provisions for Subchapter E.

5 “§ 1341. Perjury

6 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, under oath or
7 equivalent affirmation in an official proceeding, he:

8 “(1) makes a material statement that is false; or 9 “(2) affirms the truth of a previously made material statement

10 that is false.

11 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
12 felony.

13 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
14 described in this section if the official proceeding is a federal official
15 proceeding.

16 “§ 1342. False Swearing

17 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, under oath or 18 equivalent affirmation in an official proceeding, he:

19 “(1) makes a statement that is false; or 20 “(2) affirms the truth of a previously made statement that is 21 false.

22 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
23 misdemeanor.

24 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
25 described in this section if the official proceeding is a federal official
26 proceeding.

27 “§ 1343. Making a False Statement

28 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if:

29 “(1) in a government matter, he:

30 “(A) makes a material oral statement that is false to a
31 person who he knows is:

32 “(i) a law enforcement officer; or

33 “(ii) a person assigned investigative responsibility
34 by statute, or by a regulation, rule, or order issued pur-
35 suant thereto, or by the head of a government agency;
36 and such statement is volunteered or is made after the

1 person has been advised that making such a statement
2 is an offense;

3 “(B) makes a material written statement that is false;

4 “(C) omits or conceals a material fact in a written state-
5 ment;

6 “(D) submits or invites reliance on a material writing or 7 recording that is false, forged, altered, or otherwise lacking
8 in authenticity;

9 “(E) submits or invites reliance on a sample, specimen,
10 map, photograph, boundary-mark, or other object that is mis-
11 leading in a material respect; or

12 “(F) fraudulently uses a trick, scheme, or device that is 13 misleading in a material respect;

14 “(2) in a credit institution record, with intent to deceive or 15 harm the government or a person, he, as an agent of such credit
16 institution, engages in any conduct described in subparagraphs
17 (B) through (F) of paragraph (1); or

18 “(3) with intent to influence the action of a credit institution,
19 he engages in any conduct described in subparagraphs (B)
20 through (F) of paragraph (1).

21 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

22 “(1) a Class E felony, except as provided in paragraph (2);

23 “(2) a Class A misdemeanor if the statement was given to a law
24 enforcement officer during the course of an investigation of an 25 offense or a possible offense and the statement consisted of a 26 denial, unaccompanied by any other false statement, that the 27 declarant committed or participated in the commission of such
28 offense.

29 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
30 described in this section if:

31 “(1) the government is the government of the United States;

32 “(2) the government is a state, local, or foreign government
33 and the falsity constituting the offense is that the declarant is a
34 citizen of the United States; or

35 “(3) the credit institution is a national credit institution.

36 “§ 1344. Tampering with a Government Record

37 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he alters, destroys,
38 mutilates, conceals, removes, or otherwise impairs the integrity or 39 availability of a government record.

1 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

2 “(1) a Class E felony, except as provided in paragraph (2);

3 “(2) a Class A misdemeanor if the government record is of 4 the kind described in section 1345(a)(3)(B).

5 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
6 described in this section if the government record is a federal govern-
7 ment record.

8 “§ 1345. General Provisions for Subchapter E

9 “(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this subchapter:

10 “(1) ‘credit institution record’ means a record, book, or state-
11 ment of a credit institution that is kept in the usual course of 12 business by an agent of such institution;

13 “(2) ‘oath or equivalent affirmation’ includes a written unsworn
14 declaration, certificate, verification, or statement described in sec-
15 tion 1746 of title 28, United States Code;

16 “(3) ‘government matter’ means a matter within the jurisdic-
17 tion, including investigative jurisdiction, of a government agency,
18 and includes a government record;

19 “(4) ‘government record’ means a record, document, or other
20 object: (A) belonging to, or received or kept by, a government
21 for information or record purposes; or (B) required to be kept
22 by a person pursuant to a statute, or a regulation, rule, or order
23 issued pursuant thereto;

24 “(5) ‘official proceeding’ means a proceeding in which a federal 25 law authorizes an oath to be administered; and 26 “(6) ‘statement’ means an oral or written declaration or repre-

27 sentation, including a declaration or representation of opinion, 28 belief, or other state of mind; for purposes of sections 1341 and 29 1342, a written statement made ‘under oath or equivalent affirma-
30 tion’ includes a written statement that, with the declarant’s knowl-
31 edge, purports to have been made under oath or equivalent affirma-
32 tion.

33 “(b) PROOF.—

34 “(1) In a prosecution under section 1341 or 1342, proof of 35 the falsity of a statement need not be made by any particular 36 number of witnesses or by documentary, direct, or any other
37 particular kind of evidence.

38 “(2) In a prosecution under section 1341 or 1343, or under any 39 section incorporating by reference any provision of section 1343,
40 a falsification, omission, concealment, forgery, alteration, or other

1 misleading matter is material, regardless of the admissibility of 2 the statement or object under the rules of evidence, if it could 3 have impaired, affected, impeded, or otherwise influenced the 4 course, outcome, or disposition of the matter in which it is made,
 5 or, in the case of a record, if it could have impaired the integrity
 6 of the record in question. Whether a matter is material under 7 the circumstances is a question of law.

8 “(3) In a prosecution under:

9 “(A) section 1341 or 1342, if, in one or more official pro-
 10 ceedings, a person under oath or equivalent affirmation makes 11 or affirms; or

12 “(B) section 1343(a)(1)(B), if, in one or more govern-
 13 ment matters, a person makes;

14 statements which are inconsistent to the degree that one of them
 15 is necessarily false, both having been made within the applicable
 16 period of time limitations, the indictment, information, or other
 17 charge may set forth the statements in a single count alleging
 18 that the defendant knew or was aware of the risk that one or 19 the other of the statements was false. Proof that the defendant
 20 made such statements constitutes prima facie evidence that he 21 knew, or was aware of the risk, that one or the other of the state-
 22 ments was false, and such proof is sufficient for conviction. Under 23 section 1341 or 1343, both such statements must be material.

24 “(c) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
 25 cution under:

26 “(1) section 1341 or 1342 that the actor clearly and expressly
 27 retracted the falsification in the course of the same official proceed-28 ing in which it was made if he did so before it became manifest
 29 that the falsification had been or would be exposed and before the 30 falsification substantially impaired, affected, impeded, or other-
 31 wise influenced the course, outcome, or disposition of the official
 32 proceeding or of a related government matter:

33 “(2) section 1343 (a)(1) or (a)(3) that the actor clearly and 34 expressly retracted the falsification and communicated the retrac-
 35 tion to the same individual, agency, or institution to which the 36 falsification had been communicated, if he did so within seven
 37 calendar days after the falsification had been received by the indi-
 38 vidual, agency, or institution, and if he did so before it became 39 manifest that the falsification had been or would be exposed and 40 before the falsification substantially impaired, affected, impeded,

1 or otherwise influenced the course, outcome, or disposition of the 2 government matter or credit institution action, or of a related
3 government matter or official proceeding.

4 “(d) DEFENSE PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution
5 under section 1341 or 1342 that the oath or affirmation was adminis-
6 tered or taken in an irregular manner or that the declarant was not 7 authorized to make the statement.

8 “Subchapter F.—Official Corruption and Intimidation

“Sec.

“1351. Bribery.

“1352. Graft.

“1353. Trading in Government Assistance.

“1354. Trading in Special Influence.

“1355. Trading in Public Office.

“1356. Speculating on Official Action or Information.

“1357. Tampering with a Public Servant.

“1358. Retaliating against a Public Servant.

“1359. General Provisions for Subchapter F.

9 “§ 1351. Bribery

10 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if :

11 “(1) he offers, gives, or agrees to give to a public servant ; or

12 “(2) as a public servant, he solicits, demands, accepts, or agrees
13 to accept from another person ;

14 anything of value in return for an agreement or understanding that 15 the recipient’s official action as a public servant will be influenced 16 thereby, or that the recipient will violate a legal duty as a public
17 servant.

18 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class C
19 felony.

20 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
21 described in this section if :

22 “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
23 the United States ;

24 “(2) the official action or legal duty involved is that of a federal
25 public servant ;

26 “(3) the United States mail or a facility of interstate or foreign
27 commerce is used in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
28 tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the dis-
29 tribution of the proceeds of the offense ;

30 “(4) movement of a person across a state or United States
31 boundary occurs in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
32 tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the dis-
33 tribution of the proceeds of the offense ; or

1           “(5) the offense occurs during the commission of an offense,
2 over which federal jurisdiction exists, that is described in section
3 1403 (Alcohol and Tobacco Tax Offenses), 1722 (Extortion), 1804
4 (Loansharking), 1811 (Trafficking in an Opiate), 1812 (Traffick-
5 ing in Drugs), 1841 (Engaging in a Gambling Business), or 1843
6 (Conducting a Prostitution Business).

7 “§ 1352. Graft

8           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if:

9           “(1) he offers, gives, or agrees to give to a public servant or 10 former public servant; or

11           “(2) as a public servant, or former public servant, he solicits,
12 demands, accepts, or agrees to accept from another person;
13 anything of pecuniary value for or because of an official action taken 14 or to be taken, a legal duty performed or to be performed, or a legal 15 duty violated or to be violated by the public servant or former public
16 servant.

17           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
18 felony.

19           “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
20 described in this section if a circumstance specified in section 1351(c)
21 exists or has occurred.

22 “§ 1353. Trading in Government Assistance

23           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if:

24           “(1) he offers, gives, or agrees to give to a public servant; or

25           “(2) as a public servant he solicits, demands, accepts, or agrees
26 to accept from another person;

27 anything of pecuniary value intended as consideration for advice or 28 other assistance in preparing or promoting a bill, contract, claim, or 29 other matter that is or may become subject to official action by such 30 public servant.

31           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
32 felony.

33           “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
34 described in this section if the public servant is a federal public servant.

35 “§ 1354. Trading in Special Influence

36           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

37           “(1) offers, gives, or agrees to give to another person; or 38           “(2) solicits, demands, accepts, or agrees to accept from an-

39 other person;

1 anything of pecuniary value intended as consideration for exerting,
 2 or causing another person to exert, special influence upon a public
 3 servant with respect to his taking an official action or his performing 4 a legal duty as a public servant.

5 “(b) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term ‘special in-
 6 fluence’ means influence by reason of a relationship to the public
 7 servant by common ancestry or by marriage, or by reason of position
 8 as a public servant or as a political party official.

9 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
 10 felony.

11 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
 12 described in this section if the official action or legal duty involved
 13 is that of a federal public servant.

14 “§ 1355. Trading in Public Office

15 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

16 “(1) offers, gives, or agrees to give to another person; or

17 “(2) solicits, demands, accepts, or agrees to accept from an-
 18 other person;

19 anything of pecuniary value intended as consideration for approval,
 20 disapproval, or assistance by a public servant or political party of-
 21 ficial in the appointment, employment, advancement, or retention
 22 of any person as a public servant.

23 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
 24 felony.

25 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
 26 described in this section if the appointment, employment, advance-
 27 ment, or retention involved is that of a federal public servant.

28 “§ 1356. Speculating on Official Action or Information

29 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if as a public servant,
 30 or within one year after his service as a public servant terminates, and 31 in contemplation of the taking of an official action by himself as a 32 public servant or by an agency with which he is or has been serving 33 as a public servant, or in reliance on information to which he has or 34 had access only in his capacity as a public servant, he:

35 “(1) acquires or disposes of a pecuniary interest in any prop-
 36 erty, transaction, or enterprise that may be affected by such of-37 ficial action or information; or

38 “(2) provides information with intent to aid another person
 39 in acquiring or disposing of such an interest.

1     “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
2 misdemeanor.

3     “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
4 described in this section if:

5         “(1) the public servant is or was a federal public servant; or

6         “(2) the agency is a federal government agency.

7     “§ 1357. Tampering with a Public Servant

8     “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

9         “(1) uses force, threat, intimidation, or deception with intent
10 to influence a public servant with respect to his taking an official 11 action or performing a legal duty as a public servant; or 12         “(2) communicates:

13             “(A) a threat to commit a crime of violence upon the 14 person of the President or a potential successor to the Presi-
15 dency; or

16             “(B) information, that he knows to be false, that a crime
17 described in subparagraph (A) is imminent or in progress;
18 under circumstances in which the threat or information may rea-
19 sonably be understood as an expression or reflection of serious
20 purpose.

21     “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a pros-
22 ecution under subsection (a) (1) that the conduct used to threaten or 23 to intimidate consisted solely of lawful conduct and that the defend-24 ant’s sole intention was to compel or induce the public servant to take 25 official action properly or to perform his legal duty properly.

26     “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
27 felony.

28     “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
29 described in:

30         “(1) subsection (a) (1) if the public servant is a federal public
31 servant; or

32         “(2) subsection (a) (2) if the offense is committed within:

33             “(A) the general jurisdiction of the United States;

34             “(B) the special jurisdiction of the United States; or

35             “(C) the extraterritorial jurisdiction of the United States
36 to the extent applicable under section 204.

37     “§ 1358. Retaliating Against a Public Servant

38     “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

39         “(1) engages in conduct that causes bodily injury to another 40 person or damages the property of another person; or

1           “(2) improperly subjects another person to economic loss or
2           injury to his business or profession;
3           because of an official action taken or a legal duty performed by a public
4           servant, or because of the status of a person as a public servant.

5           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

6           “(1) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in sub-
7           section (a) (1);

8           “(2) a Class A misdemeanor in the circumstances set forth in
9           subsection (a) (2).

10          “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
11          described in this section if the public servant is a federal public
12          servant.

13          “§ 1359. General Provisions for Subchapter F

14          “(a) DEFINITIONS.—

15          “(1) As used in this subchapter:

16               “(A) ‘anything of value’ and ‘anything of pecuniary value’
17               do not include (i) concurrence in official action in the course
18               of legitimate compromise between public servants; or (ii)
19               support, including a vote, in any primary, general, or special 20               election campaign solicited by a candidate solely by means of 21               representation of his position on a public issue;

22               “(B) ‘political party official’ means a person who holds a 23               position or office in a political party, whether by election, ap-
24               pointment, or otherwise;

25               “(C) ‘potential successor to the Presidency’ means (i) the 26               President-elect; (ii) the Vice President; (iii) if there is no
27               Vice President, the person next in order of succession to the 28               office of President; or (iv) the Vice President-elect;

29               “(D) ‘public servant’ includes a person who has been offi-
30               cially informed that he will be nominated or appointed to be 31               a public servant.

32          “(2) As used in sections 1351 through 1356, ‘federal public
33          servant’ includes a District of Columbia public servant.

34          “(b) DEFENSES PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution
35          under:

36               “(1) section 1351, 1352, 1354, or 1356 that the recipient was not 37               qualified to act, whether because he had not yet assumed office,
38               because he lacked authority or jurisdiction, or because of any other 39               reason; or

1           “(2) sections 1351 through 1355 that the defendant, or other
2           recipient or proposed recipient of the thing of value, by the same
3           conduct also committed an offense described in section 1722 (Ex-
4           tortion), 1723 (Blackmail), or 1731 (Theft).

5           “Chapter 14.—OFFENSES INVOLVING TAXATION

          “Subchapter

          “A. Internal Revenue Offenses.

          “B. Customs Offenses.

6           “Subchapter A.—Internal Revenue Offenses

          “Sec.

          “1401. Tax Evasion.

          “1402. Disregarding a Tax Obligation.

          “1403. Alcohol and Tobacco Tax Offenses.

          “1404. Definitions for Subchapter A.

7           “§ 1401. Tax Evasion

8           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent to 9           evade liability for a tax or the payment of a tax, he :

10           “(1) files a tax return that understates the tax ;

11           “(2) removes or conceals an asset, knowing that the tax is due
12           or may become due ;

13           “(3) fails to account for, or to pay over when due, a tax pre-14           viously collected or withheld, or a payment received from or on 15           behalf of another person with the understanding that it would be 16           turned over to the United States for tax purposes ;

17           “(4) alters, destroys, mutilates, conceals, or removes any prop-
18           erty under the care, custody, or control of the United States ; or

19           “(5) otherwise acts in any manner to evade liability for, or 20           payment of, the tax.

21           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is :

22           “(1) a Class C felony if the tax liability involved is in excess
23           of $100,000 ;

24           “(2) a Class D felony if the tax liability involved is $100,000 or 25           less ;

26           “(3) a Class E felony if no tax liability is involved.

27           “§ 1402. Disregarding a Tax Obligation

28           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he :

29           “(1) fails to file when due a tax return or an information return
30           that he is required to file ;

31           “(2) engages in an occupation or enterprise without having 32           registered, or without having purchased a stamp, as required
33           under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended ;

34           “(3) fails to withhold or collect a tax that he is required to 35           withhold or collect under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as 36           amended ;

1           “(4) fails to furnish to an employee a true statement regarding
2 a tax withheld from the employee’s remuneration, as required
3 under section 6051 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as 4 amended (26 U.S.C. 6051);

5           “(5) claims a personal exemption, to which he knows he is not 6 entitled, in an income tax return; or

7           “(6) fails to deposit collected taxes in a special bank account
8 as required, after notice, under section 7512 of the Internal Reve-
9 nue Code of 1954, as amended (26 U.S.C. 7512), or, after having 10 deposited funds in such an account, pays any of them to any per-
11 son other than an authorized agent of the United States.

12       “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

13           “(1) a Class A misdemeanor in the circumstances set forth in 14 subsection (a) (1) through (a) (4);

15           “(2) a Class B misdemeanor in the circumstances set forth in 16 subsection (a) (5) or (a) (6).

17       “§ 1403. Alcohol and Tobacco Tax Offenses

18       “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he violates any 19 of the following provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as 20 amended:

21           “(1) section 5601(a) (26 U.S.C. 5601(a)) (relating to unregis-
22 tered stills, the application and bonding of distillers, and unlawful 23 conduct in the production or use of distilled spirits);

24           “(2) section 5602 (26 U.S.C. 5602) (relating to evasion of tax
25 imposed on distilled spirits);

26           “(3) section 5603(a) (26 U.S.C. 5603(a)) (relating to mainte-27 nance of required documents or alteration or destruction of such 28 documents);

29           “(4) section 5607 (26 U.S.C. 5607) (relating to unlawful con-
30 duct concerning any denatured distilled spirits withdrawn free 31 of tax);

32           “(5) section 5661(a) (26 U.S.C. 5661(a)) (relating to failure
33 to pay tax imposed on wine and failure to comply with other
34 statutes and regulations concerning bonding and gallonage taxes
35 on wine);

36           “(6) section 5671 (26 U.S.C. 5671) (relating to evasion of tax
37 imposed on beer and failure to keep and file required brewers’ 38 records);

39           “(7) section 5604(a) (26 U.S.C. 5604(a)) (relating to un-
40 stamped containers of distilled spirits and unlawful conduct
41 involving stamps, stamped containers, or distilled spirits);

1           “(8) section 5605 (26 U.S.C. 5605) (relating to return of mate-
2           rials used in the manufacture of distilled spirits or from which dis-
3           tilled spirits may be recovered) ;

4           “(9) section 5608 (26 U.S.C. 5608) (relating to fraudulent
5           claims for an allowance of drawback on distilled spirits and re-
6           landing of distilled spirits shipped for exportation) ;

7           “(10) section 5682 (26 U.S.C. 5682) (relating to breaking of 8           locks or gaining of access to any place under the lock or seal of 9           an internal revenue agent) ;

10           “(11) section 5691(a) (26 U.S.C. 5691(a)) (relating to non-
11           payment of special taxes concerning liquor, beer, or manufacture 12           of stills) ; or

13           “(12) section 5762(a) (26 U.S.C. 5762(a)) (relating to refusal
14           to pay or evasion of a tax imposed on tobacco related products,
15           maintenance of true and accurate records, and unlawful conduct 16           concerning tobacco-related products, stamps, or packages).

17           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

18           “(1) a Class D felony in the circumstances set forth in sub-
19           section (a) (1) through (a) (6) ;

20           “(2) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in subsec-
21           tion (a) (7) through (a) (12).

22           “§ 1404. Definitions for Subchapter A

23           “As used in this subchapter :

24           “(a) ‘liability for a tax or the payment of a tax’ means liability
25           for, or payment of, the entire tax or any part thereof ;

26           “(b) ‘payment’ includes collection ;

27           “(c) ‘tax’ means a tax imposed by a federal statute, an exaction
28           denominated a ‘tax’ by a federal statute, and any penalty, addition 29           to tax, additional amount, or interest thereon ; but does not include
30           a tariff or customs duty, or a toll, levy, or charge that is not de-
31           nominated a ‘tax’ by a federal statute ;

32           “(d) ‘tax return’ means a written report of a taxpayer’s tax
33           obligation that is required to be filed by a federal statute, or a 34           regulation, rule, or order issued pursuant thereto ; and includes a 35           report of taxes withheld or collected, an income tax return, an 36           estate or gift tax return, an excise tax return, and any other tax
37           return of an individual or organization required to file a return
38           or to pay a tax in conjunction with a tax return ; but does not 39           include an interim report, an information return, or a return of 40           estimated tax.

1           “Subchapter B.—Customs Offenses

“Sec.

“1411. Smuggling.

“1412. Trafficking in Smuggled Property.

“1413. Receiving Smuggled Property.

“1414. General Provisions for Subchapter B.

2           “§ 1411. Smuggling

3           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he :

4                   “(1) introduces into the United States an object, the introduc-
5                   tion of which a federal statute, or a regulation, rule, or order
6                   issued pursuant thereto :

7                           “(A) prohibits absolutely ; or

8                           “(B) prohibits conditionally and all conditions for its in-
9                   troduction into the United States have not been complied 10                   with ; or

11                   “(2) evades assessment or payment when due of the customs
12                   duty upon an object being introduced into the United States ; or 13                   “(3) evades an examination by the government of an object be-

14                   ing introduced into the United States.

15           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is :

16                   “(1) a Class D felony if the value of the object, or the duty 17                   that was due or that would have been due on the object, exceeds 18                   $500 ;

19                   “(2) a Class E felony if introduction of the object is prohibited,
20                   either absolutely or conditionally, because it may cause, or may be 21                   used to cause, bodily injury or property damage ;

22                   “(3) a Class A misdemeanor if the value of the object, or the 23                   duty that was due or that would have been due on the object, ex-
24                   ceeds $100 but is not more than $500 ;

25                   “(4) a Class B misdemeanor in any other case in which duty
26                   was due or would have been due on the object ;

27                   “(5) a Class C misdemeanor in any other case.

28           “§ 1412. Trafficking in Smuggled Property

29           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he traffics in an 30           object that has been unlawfully introduced into the United States, such 31           introduction having been in violation of section 1411.

32           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is an offense of 33           the same class as that specified in section 1411(b) for the smuggling
34           of the same kind of object.

35           “§ 1413. Receiving Smuggled Property

36           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he buys, receives,
37           possesses, or obtains control of an object that has been unlawfully in-

1 introduced into the United States, such introduction having been in
2 violation of section 1411.

3 “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
4 cution under this section that the defendant bought, received, pos-
5 sessed, or obtained control of the object with intent to report the matter
6 to an appropriate law enforcement officer.

7 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is an offense of 8 the class next below that specified in section 1411 (b) for the smuggling
9 of the same kind of object.

10 “§ 1414. General Provisions for Subchapter B

11 “(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this subchapter:

12 “(1) ‘customs territory of the United States’ has the meaning
13 set forth in general headnote 2 to the Tariff Schedules of the 14 United States;

15 “(2) ‘introduce’ means import, transport, bring into the United
16 States from any place outside the United States, or into the cus-
17 toms territory of the United States from any place outside the 18 customs territory of the United States but within the United
19 States;

20 “(3) ‘object’ includes any article, good, ware, and merchandise,
21 whether animate or inanimate;

22 “(b) PROOF.—In a prosecution under section 1412 or 1413:

23 “(1) possession of an object recently smuggled into the United
24 States, unless satisfactorily explained, constitutes prima facie evi-
25 dence that the person in possession was aware of the risk that it
26 had been smuggled or in some way participated in its smuggling;

27 “(2) the purchase or sale of an object recently smuggled into 28 the United States at a price substantially below its fair market
29 value, unless satisfactorily explained, constitutes prima facie evi-
30 dence that the person buying or selling the property was aware of 31 the risk that it had been smuggled.

32 “(c) DETERMINING DUTY.—Smugglings committed pursuant to one
33 scheme or course of conduct may be charged as one offense, and the 34 value of, or the duty owing on, the objects introduced may be aggre-
35 gated in determining the grade of the offense.

36 “Chapter 15.—OFFENSES INVOLVING INDIVIDUAL
37 RIGHTS

“Subchapter

“A. Offenses Involving Civil Rights.

“B. Offenses Involving Political Rights.

“C. Offenses Involving Privacy.

1           “Subchapter A.—Offenses Involving Civil Rights

“Sec.

“1501. Interfering with Civil Rights.

“1502. Interfering with Civil Rights under Color of Law.

“1503. Interfering with a Federal Benefit.

“1504. Unlawful Discrimination.

“1505. Interfering with Speech or Assembly Related to Civil Rights Activities.

“1506. Strikebreaking.

2           “§ 1501. Interfering with Civil Rights

3           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he intentionally :

4                 “(1) deprives another person of; or

5                 “(2) injures, oppresses, threatens, or intimidates another per-
6                 son :

7                         “(A) in the free exercise or enjoyment of; or

8                         “(B) because of his having exercised ;

9           a right, privilege, or immunity in fact secured to such other person
10           by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

11           “(b) PROOF.—In a prosecution under this section, whether the dep-
12           privation, injury, oppression, threat, or intimidation concerns a right,
13           privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution or laws of the 14           United States is a question of law.

15           “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
16           misdemeanor.

17           “§ 1502. Interfering with Civil Rights under Color of Law

18           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, acting under 19           color of law, he engages in any conduct constituting an offense de-
20           scribed in a section in chapter 16 or 17, and thereby deprives another 21           person of a right, privilege, or immunity in fact secured to such other
22           person by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

23           “(b) PROOF.—In a prosecution under this section, whether the dep-
24           privation concerns a right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Con-
25           stitution or laws of the United States is a question of law.

26           “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
27           misdemeanor.

28           “§ 1503. Interfering with a Federal Benefit

29           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, by force or 30           threat of force, he intentionally injures, intimidates, or interferes 31           with another person because such other person is or has been, or in 32           order to intimidate any person from :

33                 “(1) applying for, participating in, or enjoying a benefit, privi-
34                 lege, service, program, facility, or activity provided by, adminis-
35                 tered by, or wholly or partly financed by, the United States ;

1           “(2) applying for or enjoying employment, or a perquisite
2 thereof, by a federal government agency;

3           “(3) serving as a grand or petit juror in a court of the United 4 States or attending court in connection with possible service as 5 such a grand or petit juror;

6           “(4) voting or qualifying to vote, qualifying or campaigning
7 as a candidate for elective office, or qualifying or acting as a
8 poll watcher or other election official, in a primary, general, or 9 special election;

10          “(5) affording another person or class of persons opportunity
11 to participate, or protection in order to participate, in any benefit 12 or activity described in this section; or

13          “(6) aiding or encouraging another person or class of persons 14 to participate in any benefit or activity described in this section.

15          “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
16 misdemeanor.

17          “§ 1504. Unlawful Discrimination

18          “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, by force or threat
19 of force, he intentionally injures, intimidates, or interferes with an-
20 other person:

21           “(1) because of such other person’s race, color, sex, religion, or 22 national origin and because such other person is or has been, or in 23 order to intimidate any person from:

24           “(A) applying for, participating in, or enjoying, a benefit,
25 privilege, service, program, facility, or activity provided or 26 administered by a state or locality;

27           “(B) applying for or enjoying employment, or a perqui-
28 site thereof, by a state or local government agency;

29           “(C) serving as a grand or petit juror in a state or locality 30 or attending court in connection with possible service as such 31 a grand or petit juror;

32           “(D) enrolling in or attending a public school or public
33 college;

34           “(E) applying for or enjoying the goods, services, privi-
35 leges, facilities, or accommodations of:

36           “(i) an inn, hotel, motel, or other establishment that 37 provides lodging to transient guests;

38           “(ii) a restaurant, cafeteria, lunchroom, lunch
39 counter, soda fountain, or other facility that serves the 40 public and that is principally engaged in selling food
41 or beverages for consumption on the premises;

1                   “(iii) a gasoline station;

2                   “(iv) a motion picture house, theater, concert hall,
3 sports arena, stadium, or other place of exhibition or 4 entertainment that serves the public; or

5                   “(v) any other establishment that serves the public,
6 that is located within the premises of an establishment
7 described in this subparagraph or that has located within
8 its premises such an establishment, and that holds itself
9 out as serving patrons of such an establishment;

10                  “(F) applying for or enjoying the services, privileges, fa-
11 cilities, or accommodations of a common carrier utilizing any 12 kind of vehicle;

13                  “(G) traveling in or using a facility of interstate com-
14 merce;

15                  “(H) applying for or enjoying employment, or a perqui-16 site thereof, by a private employer or joining or using the 17 services or advantages of a labor organization, hiring hall, or 18 employment agency; or

19                  “(I) selling, purchasing, renting, financing, or occupying a 20 dwelling; contracting or negotiating for the sale, purchase,
21 rental, financing or occupation of a dwelling; or applying for 22 or participating in a service, organization, or facility relating 23 to the business of selling or renting dwellings; or

24                  “(2) because such other person is or has been, or in order to in-
25 timidate any person from:

26                   “(A) affording another person or class of persons oppor-
27 tunity to participate, or protection in order to participate,
28 without discrimination on account of race, color, sex, re-
29 ligious, or national origin, in any benefit or activity described 30 in this section; or

31                   “(B) aiding or encouraging another person or class of per-
32 sons to participate, without discrimination on account of race,
33 color, sex, religion, or national origin, in any benefit or ac-
34 tivity described in this section.

35                  “(b) DEFENSE.—It is a defense to a prosecution under subsection
36 (a) (1) (E) (i) that:

37                   “(1) the defendant was the proprietor of the establishment in-
38 volved or an agent acting on behalf of the proprietor;

39                   “(2) the establishment was located within a building containing 40 not more than five rooms for rent or hire; and

1           “(3) the building was occupied by the proprietor as his resi-
2           dence.

3           “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
4           misdemeanor.

5           “§ 1505. Interfering with Speech or Assembly Related to Civil
6           Rights Activities

7           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, by force or threat
8           of force, he intentionally injures, intimidates, or interferes with an-
9           other person because he is or has been, or in order to intimidate him or 10          any other person from, participating in speech or assembly opposing 11          a denial of opportunity to participate :

12           “(1) in a benefit or activity described in section 1503; or 13           “(2) in a benefit or activity described in section 1504, without 14          discrimination on account of race, color, sex, religion, or national 15          origin.

16          “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
17          misdemeanor.

18          “§ 1506. Strikebreaking

19          “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, by force or threat
20          or force, he intentionally obstructs or interferes with :

21           “(1) peaceful picketing by employees in the course of a bona 22          fide labor dispute affecting wages, hours, or conditions of labor ; or

23           “(2) the exercise by employees of rights of self-organization or 24          collective bargaining.

25          “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
26          misdemeanor.

27          “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
28          described in this section if movement of any person across a state or 29          United States boundary occurs in the commission of the offense.

30          “Subchapter B.—Offenses Involving Political Rights

“Sec.

“1511. Obstructing an Election.

“1512. Obstructing Registration.

“1513. Obstructing a Political Campaign.

“1514. Interfering with a Federal Benefit for a Political Purpose.

“1515. Misusing Authority over Personnel for a Political Purpose.

“1516. Soliciting a Political Contribution as a Federal Public Servant or in a Federal Building.

“1517. Making a Political Contribution as a Foreign National.

“1518. Making an Excess Campaign Expenditure.

“1519. Definitions for Subchapter B.

31          “§ 1511. Obstructing an Election

32          “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, in connection
33          with a primary, general, or special election to nominate or elect a 34          candidate for a federal office, he :

1           “(1) obstructs or impairs the lawful conduct of such election ;

2           “(2) offers, gives, or agrees to give anything of value to an-
3           other person for or because of any person’s voting, refraining 4           from voting, or voting for or against such candidate; or

5           “(3) solicits, demands, accepts, or agrees to accept anything of 6           value for or because of any person’s voting, refraining from vot-
7           ing, or voting for or against such candidate.

8           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
9           felony.

10       “§ 1512. Obstructing Registration

11       “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, in connection 12       with registration to vote at a primary, general, or special election to 13       nominate or elect a candidate for a federal office, he :

14           “(1) obstructs or impairs the lawful conduct of such registra-
15           tion;

16           “(2) offers, gives, or agrees to give anything of value to an-
17           other person for or because of any person’s registering to vote;

18           “(3) solicits, demands, accepts, or agrees to accept anything of 19           value for or because of any person’s registering to vote; or 20           “(4) gives information, that he knows to be false, to estab-

21           lish his eligibility to vote.

22       “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
23       misdemeanor.

24       “§ 1513. Obstructing a Political Campaign

25       “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, during a cam-
26       paign preceding a primary, general, or special election to nominate
27       or elect a candidate for a federal office, and with intent to influence 28       the outcome of such election, he :

29           “(1) engages in conduct constituting a crime under any section
30           of this title;

31           “(2) engages in conduct constituting a felony under a law of 32           the state in which the conduct occurs; or

33           “(3) publishes or distributes a statement concerning a candi-
34           date for federal office that does not contain, or that misrepresents,
35           the name of the person or organization responsible for the pub-
36           lication or distribution.

37       “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is :

38           “(1) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in sub-
39           section (a) (1) or (a) (2) ;

1           “(2) a Class A misdemeanor in the circumstances set forth in
2 subsection (a) (3).

3 “§ 1514. Interfering With a Federal Benefit for a Political Purpose

4           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent to 5 interfere with, restrain, or coerce another person in the exercise of 6 his right to vote at a primary, general, or special election to nominate 7 or elect a candidate for a federal, state, or local office, he:

8           “(1) grants or threatens to grant to any other person;

9           “(2) withholds or threatens to withhold from any other per-10 son; or

11           “(3) deprives or threatens to deprive any other person of;
12 the benefit of a federal program or a federally supported program
13 or a federal government contract.

14           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
15 misdemeanor.

16 “§ 1515. Misusing Authority over Personnel for a Political
17 Purpose

18           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, as a federal 19 public servant, he:

20           “(1) promotes, fails to promote, demotes, or discharges;

21           “(2) recommends the promotion, non-promotion, demotion, or 22 discharge of; or

23           “(3) changes in any manner, or promises or threatens to change, 24 the official position or compensation of;
25 another federal public servant, for or because of any person's giving,
26 withholding, or neglecting to make a political contribution.

27           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
28 misdemeanor.

29 “§ 1516. Soliciting a Political Contribution as a Federal Public
30 Servant or in a Federal Building

31           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if:

32           “(1) as a federal public servant, he:

33           “(A) solicits a political contribution from another person
34 whom he knows to be a federal public servant; or

35           “(B) makes a political contribution to another person
36 whom he knows to be a federal public servant, in response to 37 a solicitation; or

38           “(2) he solicits or receives a political contribution in a federal 39 building or facility.

1     “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
 2 cution under this section that both the public servant soliciting the 3 political contribution or making the political contribution in response
 4 to a solicitation and the public servant solicited for or receiving such 5 contribution are members of, members-elect of, or candidates for,
 6 Congress.

7     “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
 8 misdemeanor.

9     “§ 1517. Making a Political Contribution as a Foreign National

10     “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if:

11         “(1) as a foreign national, he makes or promises to make a po-
 12 litical contribution; or

13         “(2) he solicits, accepts, or receives a political contribution from 14 a foreign national or from a foreign power.

15     “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
 16 felony.

17     “§ 1518. Making an Excess Campaign Expenditure

18     “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if:

19         “(1) he violates section 9035 of the Presidential Primary 20 Matching Payment Account Act (26 U.S.C. 9035) (relating to 21 campaign expense limitations); or

22         “(2) as an officer or member of a ‘political committee’, as defined
 23 in the Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account Act
 24 (26 U.S.C. 9032(8)), he consents to an expenditure in violation of 25 section 9035 (relating to campaign expense limitations) of that 26 Act.

27     “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
 28 felony.

29     “§ 1519. Definitions for Subchapter B

30     “As used in this subchapter:

31         “(a) ‘anything of value’ does not include nonpartisan physical 32 activities or services to facilitate registration or voting;

33         “(b) ‘federal office’ means the office of President or Vice-Presi-
 34 dent of the United States, or Senator or Representative in, or 35 Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United
 36 States;

37         “(c) ‘foreign national’ means:

38             “(1) a ‘foreign principal’ as defined in section 1 of the 39 Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended (22

1 U.S.C. 611), but does not include a person who is a citizen of
2 the United States; or

3 “(2) a person who is not a citizen of the United States and 4 who is not lawfully admitted for permanent residence within 5 the meaning set forth in section 101 of the Immigration and 6 Nationality Act, as amended (8 U.S.C. 1101);

7 “(d) ‘political contribution’ means:

8 “(1) as used in section 1515 and 1517, anything of value
9 used or to be used for the nomination or election of any 10 person to federal, state, or local office; and

11 “(2) as used in section 1516, a ‘contribution’ as defined in 12 the Federal Election Campaign Act (2 U.S.C. 431(e)).

13 “Subchapter C.—Offenses Involving Privacy

“Sec.

“1521. Eavesdropping.

“1522. Trafficking in an Eavesdropping Device.

“1523. Possessing an Eavesdropping Device.

“1524. Intercepting Correspondence.

“1525. Revealing Private Information Submitted for a Government Purpose.

“1526. Definition for Subchapter C.

14 “§ 1521. Eavesdropping

15 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he intentionally:

16 “(1) intercepts a private oral communication by means of an 17 eavesdropping device without the prior consent of a party to the 18 communication; or

19 “(2) discloses to another person, or uses, the contents of a
20 private oral communication, knowing that such contents were ob-
21 tained by conduct described in paragraph (1).

22 “(b) DEFENSE.—It is a defense to a prosecution under this section
23 that the private oral communication was being transmitted over the 24 facilities of a communications common carrier; and

25 “(1) the defendant was an agent of the carrier, acting in the 26 usual course of his employment, who was engaged in:

27 “(A) service observing for mechanical or service quality
28 control checks; or

29 “(B) any other activity necessarily incident to the rendi-
30 tion of service by the carrier or relating to the discovery of 31 theft or the carrier’s service; or

32 “(2) the defendant was acting in the usual course of his employ-
33 ment and was engaged in supervisory service observing.

34 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
35 felony.

1   “§ 1522. Trafficking in an Eavesdropping Device

2    “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he intentionally :

3       “(1) produces, manufactures, imports, or traffics in an eaves-
4       dropping device, knowing that its design renders it primarily use-
5       ful for surreptitious interception of private oral communications;
6       or

7       “(2) advertises an eavesdropping device, knowing that :

8           “(A) its design renders it primarily useful for surrepti-
9           tious interception of private oral communications, or10          “(B) such advertising promotes the use of such device for 11          surreptitious interception of private oral communications.12   “(b) DEFENSES.—It is a defense to a prosecution under this section 13   that the defendant was :14          “(1) a communications common carrier, an agent of such 15          a carrier, or a person under contract with such a carrier, and was 16          acting for a purpose set forth in section 1521(b) (2) ; or17          “(2) a person acting within the scope of a federal, state, or local 18          government contract.

19   “(c) GRADING.—An offense under this section is a Class D felony.

20   “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
21   described in this section if :22          “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of 23          the United States ;24          “(2) the device is sent through the United States mail, or is 25          moved across a state or United States boundary, in the commis-
26          sion of the offense ; or27          “(3) the advertisement is sent through the United States mail,
28          or is moved across a state or United States boundary, or is trans-
29          mitted by a communications facility that operates in interstate or 30          foreign commerce, in the commission of the offense.31   “§ 1523. Possessing an Eavesdropping Device32   “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent that
33   it be used in the course of conduct constituting an offense under section
34   1521 or 1522, he possesses an eavesdropping device.35   “(b) DEFENSES.—It is a defense to a prosecution under this section 36   that the defendant was :37          “(1) a communications common carrier, an agent of such a 38          carrier, or a person under contract with such a carrier, and was 39          in possession of the eavesdropping device for a purpose set forth 40          in section 1521(b) (2) ; or

1           “(2) a person in possession of the eavesdropping device within 2           the scope of a federal, state, or local government contract.

3           “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
4           misdemeanor.

5           “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
6           described in this section if a circumstance specified in section 1522
7           (d) (1) or (d) (2) exists or has occurred.

8           “§ 1524. Intercepting Correspondence

9           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he intentionally:

10           “(1) intercepts private correspondence without the prior con-
11           sent of the sender or the intended recipient; or 12           “(2) discloses to another person, or uses, the contents of private 13           correspondence, knowing that such contents were obtained by 14           conduct described in paragraph (1).

15           “(b) DEFENSE.—It is a defense to a prosecution under this section
16           that the private correspondence was being transmitted over the facili-
17           ties of a communications common carrier; and

18           “(1) the defendant was an agent of the carrier, acting in the 19           usual course of his employment, who was engaged in:

20           “(A) service observing for mechanical or service quality
21           control checks; or

22           “(B) any other activity necessarily incident to the ren-
23           dition of service by the carrier or relating to the discovery 24           of theft of the carrier’s service; or

25           “(2) the defendant was acting in the usual course of his em-
26           ployment and was engaged in supervisory service observing.

27           “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
28           felony.

29           “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
30           described in this section if:

31           “(1) the private correspondence is mail; or

32           “(2) the private correspondence is being transmitted over the 33           facilities of a communications common carrier.

34           “§ 1525. Revealing Private Information Submitted for a Govern-
35           ment Purpose

36           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, in violation of 37           a specific duty imposed upon him as a public servant or former public 38           servant by a statute, or by a regulation, rule, or order issued pursuant 39           thereto, he discloses information, to which he has or had access only 40           in his capacity as a public servant, that had been provided to the

1 government by another person, other than a public servant acting in 2 his official capacity, solely in order to comply with :

3       “(1) a requirement of an application for a patent, copyright,
4       license, employment, or benefit ; or

5       “(2) a specific duty imposed by law upon such other person.

6       “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
7.       misdemeanor.

8       “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
9       described in this section if the public servant or former public servant
10       acquired the information as a federal public servant.

11       “§ 1526. Definitions for Subchapter C

12       “As used in this subchapter :

13       “(a) ‘communications common carrier’ has the meaning set
14       forth for the term ‘common carrier’ in section 3(h) of the Act of
15       June 19, 1934, as amended (47 U.S.C. 153(h)) ;

16       “(b) ‘contents’, when used with respect to a communication,
17       includes information, obtained from the communication itself,
18       that concerns the existence, substance, purport, or meaning of 19       the communication, or the identity of a party to the communi-
20       cation ;

21       “(c) ‘eavesdropping device’ means an electronic, mechanical, or 22       other device or apparatus that can be used to intercept a private 23       oral communication, other than a telephone or telegraph instru-
24       ment or facility or any associated component or equipment, fur-
25       nished to a subscriber or user by a communications common
26       carrier in the usual course of its business and being used in a man-
27       ner for which it was designed ;

28       “(d) ‘intercept’ means to acquire the contents of a communi-
29       cation in the course of its transmission to a party to the communi-
30       cation or before its receipt by the intended recipient, and includes 31       the acquisition of such contents by simultaneous transmission or 32       by recording ;

33       “(e) ‘private correspondence’ means a communication, other 34       than speech, sent by a person exhibiting an expectation, under 35       circumstances reasonably justifying the expectation, that such 36       communication is not subject to being intercepted, opened, or 37       read, other than by an agent of a communications common car-
38       rier acting in the usual course of the business of such carrier,
39       until received by the intended recipient, and includes telecom-

1           communications and mail other than a post card, postal card, news-
2           paper, magazine, circular, or advertising matter:

3           “(f) ‘private oral communication’ means speech uttered by a
4           person exhibiting an expectation, under circumstances reasonably 5           justifying the expectation, that such speech is not subject to 6           overhearing;

7           “(g) ‘record’ means to register sound by an electronic, mechan-
8           ical, or other device in a manner that will permit its reproduction.

9           “Chapter 16.--OFFENSES INVOLVING THE PERSON

          “Subchapter

          “A. Homicide Offenses.

          “B. Assault Offenses.

          “C. Kidnapping and Related Offenses.

          “D. Hijacking Offenses.

          “E. Sex Offenses.

10           “Subchapter A.—Homicide Offenses

          “Sec.

          “1601. Murder.

          “1602. Manslaughter.

          “1603. Negligent Homicide.

11           “§ 1601. Murder

12           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if:

13           “(1) he engages in conduct by which he knowingly causes the 14           death of another person;

15           “(2) he engages in conduct by which he causes the death of 16           another person under circumstances in fact manifesting extreme 17           indifference to human life; or

18           “(3) in fact during the commission of an offense described in 19           section 1101 (Treason), 1102 (Armed Rebellion or Insurrection),
20           1111 (Sabotage), 1121 (Espionage), 1313 (Escape), 1601(a) (1)
21           or (a) (2) (Murder), 1611 (Maiming), 1621 (Kidnapping), 1622
22           (Aggravated Restraint), 1631 (Aircraft Hijacking), 1641 (Rape),
23           1701 (Arson), 1711 (Burglary), or 1721 (Robbery) that he com-
24           mits either alone or with one or more other participants, he or 25           another person engages in conduct that in fact causes the death 26           of a person other than one of the participants in such underlying
27           offense.

28           “(b) DEFENSE.—It is a defense to a prosecution under subsection
29           (a) (1) that the death was caused under circumstances, for which the 30           defendant was not responsible, that:

31           “(1) caused the defendant to lose his self-control; and 32           “(2) would be likely to cause an ordinary person to lose his 33           self-control to at least the same extent.

1       “(c) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a pros-
2 ecution under subsection (a) (3) that the death was not a reasonably
3 foreseeable consequence of:

4             “(1) the underlying offense; or

5             “(2) the particular circumstances under which the underlying 6 offense was committed.

7       “(d) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
8 felony.

9       “(e) JURISDICTION.—There is a federal jurisdiction over an offense
10 described in this section if:

11            “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
12 the United States;

13            “(2) the offense is committed against:

14               “(A) a United States official;

15               “(B) a federal public servant who is engaged in the per-
16 formance of his official duties and who is a judge, a juror, a
17 law enforcement officer, an employee of an official detention
18 facility, an employee of the United States Probation Service,
19 or a person designated for coverage under this section in
20 regulations issued by the Attorney General;

21               “(C) a foreign dignitary, or a member of his immediate
22 family, who is in the United States;

23               “(D) a foreign official who is in the United States on of-24 ficial business, or a member of his immediate family who is in 25 the United States in connection with the visit of such official;
26 or

27               “(E) an official guest of the United States; or

28               “(F) an internationally protected person;

29            “(3) the offense is committed by transmitting a dangerous
30 weapon through the United States mail; or

31            “(4) the offense occurs during the commission of an offense, over
32 which federal jurisdiction exists, that is described in section 1101
33 (Treason), 1102 (Armed Rebellion or Insurrection), 1111 (Sabo-
34 tage), 1112 (Impairing Military Effectiveness), 1121 (Espionage),
35 1302 (Obstructing a Government Function by Physical Interfer-
36 ence), 1313 (Escape), 1323 (Tampering with a Witness or an In-
37 formant), 1324 (Retaliating against a Witness or an Informant),
38 1357 (Tampering with a Public Servant), 1358 (Retaliating
39 against a Public Servant), 1501 (Interfering with Civil Rights),
40 1502 (Interfering with Civil Rights under Color of Law), 1503

1 (Interfering with a Federal Benefit), 1504 (Unlawful Discrimination), 1505 (Interfering with Speech or Assembly Related to
2 Civil Rights Activities), 1621 (Kidnapping), 1622 (Aggravated
3 Criminal Restraint), 1631 (Aircraft Hijacking), 1701 (Arson),
4 1702 (Aggravated Property Destruction), 1711 (Burglary), 1712
5 (Criminal Entry), 1713 (Criminal Trespass), 1721 (Robbery),
6 1722 (Extortion), or 1804 (Loansharking).

8 “§ 1602. Manslaughter

9 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if :

10 “(1) he engages in conduct by which he causes the death of an-
11 other person ; or

12 “(2) he engages in conduct by which he knowingly causes the 13 death of another person under circumstances that would consti-
14 tute an offense under section 1601(a)(1) except for the existence
15 of circumstances in fact constituting a defense under section
16 1601(b).

17 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class C
18 felony.

19 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
20 described in this section if a circumstance specified in section 1601(e)
21 exists or has occurred.

22 “§ 1603. Negligent Homicide

23 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he engages in 24 conduct by which he negligently causes the death of another person.

25 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
26 felony.

27 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
28 described in this section if a circumstance specified in section 1601
29 (e) exists or has occurred.

30 “Subchapter B.—Assault Offenses

“Sec.

“1611. Maiming.

“1612. Aggravated Battery.

“1613. Battery.

“1614. Menacing.

“1615. Terrorizing.

“1616. Communicating a Threat.

“1617. Reckless Endangerment.

“1618. General Provisions for Subchapter B.

31 “§ 1611. Maiming

32 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, by physical 33 force, he intentionally causes serious bodily injury, that is permanent 34 or likely to be permanent, to another person.

1     “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class C
2 felony.

3     “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
4 described in this section if:

5         “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
6 the United States;

7         “(2) the offense is committed against:

8             “(A) a United States official;

9             “(B) a federal public servant who is engaged in the per-
10 formance of his official duties and who is a judge, a juror, a
11 law enforcement officer, an employee of an official detention
12 facility, an employee of the United States Probation Service,
13 or a person designated for coverage under this section in
14 regulations issued by the Attorney General;

15             “(C) a foreign dignitary, or a member of his immediate
16 family, who is in the United States;

17             “(D) a foreign official who is in the United States on offi-
18 cial business, or a member of his immediate family who is in 19 the United States in connection with the visit of such official;
20 or

21             “(E) an official guest of the United States; or

22             “(F) an internationally protected person;

23         “(3) the offense is committed by transmitting through the 24 United States mail a dangerous weapon; or

25         “(4) the offense occurs during the commission of an offense,
26 over which federal jurisdiction exists, that is described in section
27 1101 (Treason), 1102 (Armed Rebellion or Insurrection), 1111
28 (Sabotage), 1112 (Impairing Military Effectiveness), 1121 (Es-
29 pionage), 1302 (Obstructing a Government Function by Physical 30 Interference), 1313 (Escape), 1323 (Tampering with a Witness
31 or an Informant), 1324 (Retaliating against a Witness or an 32 Informant), 1357 (Tampering with a Public Servant), 1358 (Re-
33 taliating against a Public Servant), 1501 (Interfering with Civil 34 Rights), 1502 (Interfering with Civil Rights under Color of 35 Law), 1503 (Interfering with a Federal Benefit), 1504 (Unlawful 36 Discrimination), 1505 (Interfering with Speech or Assembly
37 Related to Civil Rights Activities), 1621 (Kidnapping), 1622
38 (Aggravated Criminal Restraint), 1631 (Aircraft Hijacking),
39 1701 (Arson), 1702 (Aggravated Property Destruction), 1711
40 (Burglary), 1712 (Criminal Entry), 1713 (Criminal Trespass),
41 1721 (Robbery), 1722 (Extortion), or 1804 (Loansharking).

1 “§ 1612. Aggravated Battery

2 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, by physical force,
3 he causes serious bodily injury to another person.

4 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
5 felony.

6 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
7 described in this section if a circumstance specified in section 1611(c)
8 exists or has occurred.

9 “§ 1613. Battery

10 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, by physical force,
11 he causes bodily injury to another person.

12 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

13 “(1) a Class A misdemeanor unless it is committed in the course
14 of an unarmed fight or affray that was entered into mutually;

15 “(2) a Class C misdemeanor in any other case.

16 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
17 described in this section if a circumstance specified in section 1611
18 (c) (1), (c) (2), or (c) (3) exists or has occurred.

19 “§1614. Menacing

20 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he engages in 21 physical conduct by which he intentionally places another person in 22 fear of imminent bodily injury.

23 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
24 misdemeanor.

25 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
26 described in this section if a circumstance specified in section 1611(c)
27 (1) or (c) (2) existed or has occurred.

28 “§ 1615. Terrorizing

29 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he communicates:

30 “(1) a threat to commit, or to continue to commit, a crime of 31 violence or unlawful conduct dangerous to human life; or

32 “(2) information, that he knows to be false, that the commis-
33 sion of a crime of violence is imminent or in progress or that a cir-
34 cumstance dangerous to human life exists or is about to exist;
35 and thereby causes any person to be in sustained fear for his or another 36 person’s safety; causes evacuation of a building, a public structure, or 37 a facility of transportation; or causes other serious disruption to the 38 public.

1 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

2 “(1) a Class D felony in the circumstances set forth in sub-
3 section (a) (1) if it causes any person to be in sustained fear that 4 he or another will be killed, maimed, kidnaped, or raped;

5 “(2) a Class E felony in any other case.

6 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
7 described in this section if:

8 “(1) a circumstance specified in section 1611(c) exists or has
9 occurred;

10 “(2) the United States mail is used in the commission of the
11 offense;

12 “(3) the threat or information is transmitted in interstate or 13 foreign commerce;

14 “(4) the threat or information concerns property that is owned
15 by, or is under the care, custody, or control of, a public facility
16 that operates in interstate or foreign commerce; or

17 “(5) the threat or information concerns property that is owned
18 by, or is under the care, custody, or control of, the United States.

19 “§1616. Communicating a Threat

20 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent
21 to alarm or harass another person, he communicates:

22 “(1) a threat to commit or to continue to commit a crime of 23 violence, or unlawful conduct dangerous to human life; or

24 “(2) information, that he knows to be false, that the commis-
25 sion of a crime is imminent or in progress or that a circumstance
26 dangerous to human life exists or is about to exist.

27 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

28 “(1) a Class A misdemeanor if the threat or information con-
29 cerns a crime, conduct, or circumstance dangerous to human life;

30 “(2) a Class B misdemeanor in any other case.

31 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
32 described in this section if:

33 “(1) a circumstance specified in section 1615 (c) (2), (c) (3), 34 (c) (4), or (c) (5) exists or has occurred; or

35 “(2) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
36 the United States.

37 “§ 1617. Reckless Endangerment

38 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he engages in 39 conduct by which he places or may place another person in danger of 40 death or serious bodily injury.

1 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

2 “(1) a Class D felony if the circumstances manifest extreme
3 indifference to human life;

4 “(2) a Class E felony in any other case.

5 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
6 described in this section if:

7 “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
8 the United States; or

9 “(2) the offense occurs during the commission of any other
10 offense over which federal jurisdiction exists.

11 “§ 1618. General Provisions for Subchapter B

12 “(a) DEFINITION.—As used in this subchapter, ‘public structure’
13 means a structure, whether or not enclosed, where persons assemble
14 for purposes of government, an occupation or a business or a profes-
15 sion, education, religion, or entertainment.

16 “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
17 cution under:

18 “(1) section 1613 or 1614 that the conduct charged was consented
19 to by the person injured or placed in fear; and 20 “(2) section 1611, 1612, or 1617 that the conduct charged was 21 consented to by the person injured or endangered and that the 22 injury and conduct charged were:

23 “(A) reasonably foreseeable hazards of joint participation
24 by the actor and such other person in a lawful athletic con-
25 test or competitive sport; or

26 “(B) reasonably foreseeable hazards of:

27 “(i) an occupation, a business, or a profession; or

28 “(ii) medical treatment or medical or scientific experi-
29 mentation conducted by professionally approved methods
30 and such other person had been made aware of the risks
31 involved prior to giving consent.

32 “Subchapter C.—Kidnapping and Related Offenses

“Sec.

“1621. Kidnapping.

“1622. Aggravated Criminal Restraint.

“1623. Criminal Restraint.

“1624. General Provisions for Subchapter C.

33 “§ 1621. Kidnapping

34 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he restrains
35 another person with intent to:

36 “(1) hold him for ransom or reward;

37 “(2) use him as a shield or hostage;

- 1           “(3) commit a felony; or
2           “(4) interfere with the performance of a government function.
3       “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:
4           “(1) a Class A felony if the actor does not voluntarily release
5           the victim alive and in a safe place prior to trial;
6           “(2) a Class C felony in any other case.
7       “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
8 described in this section if:
9           “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
10          the United States;
11          “(2) the offense is committed against:
12               “(A) a United States official;
13               “(B) a federal public servant who is engaged in the per-
14               formance of his official duties and who is a judge, a juror, a
15               law enforcement officer, an employee of an official detention
16               facility, an employee of the United States Probation Service,
17               or a person designated for coverage under this section in
18               regulations issued by the Attorney General;
19               “(C) a foreign dignitary or a member of his immediate
20               family, who is in the United States;
21               “(D) a foreign official who is in the United States on offi-
22               cial business, or a member of his immediate family who is in 23               the United States in connection with the visit of such offi-
24               cial; or
25               “(E) an official guest of the United States; or 26               “(F) an internationally protected person;
27          “(3) movement of the victim across a state or United States 28          boundary occurs in the commission of the offense; or 29          “(4) the offense occurs during the commission of an offense,
30          over which federal jurisdiction exists, that is described in section
31          1101 (Treason), 1102 (Armed Rebellion or Insurrection), 1111
32          Sabotage), 1121 (Espionage), 1203 (Entering or Recruiting for a
33          Foreign Armed Force), 1213 (Hindering Discovery of an Alien
34          Unlawfully in the United States), 1302 (Obstructing a Govern-
35          ment Function by Physical Interference), 1313 (Escape), 1323
36          (Tampering with a Witness or an Informant), 1324 (Retaliating
37          against a Witness or an Informant), 1357 (Tampering with a
38          Public Servant), 1358 (Retaliating against a Public Servant),
39          1501 (Interfering with Civil Rights), 1502 (Interfering with 40          Civil Rights under Color of Law), 1503 (Interfering with a Fed-

1 eral Benefit), 1504 (Unlawful Discrimination), 1505 (Interfering
2 with Speech or Assembly Related to Civil Rights Activities), 1701
3 (Arson), 1702 (Aggravated Property Destruction), 1711 (Bur-
4 glary), 1712 (Criminal Entry), 1713 (Criminal Trespass), 1721
5 (Robbery), 1722 (Extortion), or 1804 (Loansharking).

6 “§ 1622. Aggravated Criminal Restraint

7 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he restrains an-
8 other person:

9 “(1) under circumstances that in fact expose him to a risk of 10 serious bodily injury;

11 “(2) by secreting and holding him in a place where he is not 12 likely to be found;

13 “(3) by endangering or threatening to endanger the safety
14 of any person; or

15 “(4) by holding him in a condition of involuntary servitude,
16 slavery, or peonage.

17 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
18 felony.

19 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
20 described in:

21 “(1) subsection (a) (1), (a) (2), or (a) (3), if a circumstance
22 specified in section 1621(c) exists or has occurred;

23 “(2) subsection (a) (4), if the offense is committed within the 24 general jurisdiction of the United States or within the special
25 jurisdiction of the United States.

26 “§ 1623. Criminal Restraint

27 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he restrains an-
28 other person.

29 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
30 misdemeanor.

31 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
32 described in this section if a circumstance specified in section 1621(c)
33 (1), (c) (2), or (c) (3) exists or has occurred.

34 “§ 1624. General Provisions for Subchapter C

35 “(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this subchapter:

36 “(1) ‘consent’ does not include assent given by the victim
37 if in fact he is less than fourteen years old or is incompetent and 38 if his parent, guardian, or other person responsible for his wel-
39 fare, has not acquiesced in the movement or confinement;

1           “(2) ‘restrain’ means to restrict the movement of a person un-
2 lawfully and without consent, so as to interfere with his liberty,
3 by:

4           “(A) removing him from his place of residence or busi-
5 ness; or

6           “(B) confining him in any place or moving him from one
7 place to another, unless such confinement or movement is 8 trivial.

9           “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a
10 prosecution under sections 1621 through 1623 that the actor is a
11 parent or guardian of the person restrained and that the person re-
12 strained is less than eighteen years old.

13           “Subchapter D.—Hijacking Offenses

“Sec.

“1631. Aircraft Hijacking.

“1632. Commandeering a Vessel.

14           “§ 1631. Aircraft Hijacking

15           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he seizes or 16 exercises control over an aircraft by force, threat, intimidation, or 17 deception.

18           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class B
19 felony.

20           “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
21 described in this section if:

22           “(1) the offense is committed within the special aircraft juris-
23 diction of the United States; or

24           “(2) the offense is committed, by means other than deception,
25 outside the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States, and:

26           “(A) the offense is committed aboard an aircraft ‘in flight’,
27 as defined in section 203(c);

28           “(B) the place of take-off or the place of landing of the 29 aircraft is situated outside the territory of the nation in which 30 the aircraft is registered; and

31           “(C) the actor is afterwards found in the United States.

32           “§ 1632. Commandeering a Vessel

33           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he seizes or exer-
34 cises control over a vessel by force, threat, intimidation, or deception.

35           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

36           “(1) a Class D felony if the defendant is a member of the crew
37 of the vessel or the offense is committed on the high seas;

1           “(2) a Class E felony in any other case.

2           “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
3 described in this section if the offense is committed within the special
4 maritime jurisdiction of the United States.

5           “Subchapter E.—Sex Offenses

“Sec.

“1641. Rape.

“1642. Sexual Assault.

“1643. Sexual Abuse of a Minor.

“1644. Sexual Abuse of a Ward.

“1645. Unlawful Sexual Contact.

“1646. General Provisions for Subchapter E.

6           “§ 1641. Rape

7           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he engages in a
8 sexual act with another person who is not his spouse, and :

9           “(1) compels the other person to participate in such act :

10           “(A) by force ; or

11           “(B) by threatening or placing the other person in fear
12 that any person will imminently be subjected to death, seri-
13 ous bodily injury, or kidnapping ;

14           “(2) has substantially impaired the ability of the other person
15 to appraise or control conduct by administering or employing a 16 drug or intoxicant, or by other means, without the knowledge or 17 against the will of such other person ; or

18           “(3) the other person is, in fact, less than twelve years old.

19           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class C
20 felony.

21           “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense de-
22 scribed in this section if :

23           “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
24 the United States ; or

25           “(2) the offense occurs during the commission of an offense, over
26 which federal jurisdiction exists, that is described in section 1323
27 (Tampering with a Witness or an Informant), 1324 (Retaliating
28 against a Witness or an Informant), 1357 (Tampering with a
29 Public Servant), 1358 (Retaliating against a Public Servant),
30 1501 (Interfering with Civil Rights), 1502 (Interfering with 31 Civil Rights under Color of Law), 1601 (Murder), 1602 (Man-
32 slaughter), 1611 (Maiming), 1612 (Aggravated Battery), 1613
33 (Battery), 1621 (Kidnapping), 1622 (Aggravated Criminal Re-34 straint), 1623 (Criminal Restraint), 1631 (Aircraft Hijacking), 35 1644 (Sexual Abuse of a Ward), 1711 (Burglary), 1712 (Criminal

1 Entry), 1713 (Criminal Trespass), 1721 (Robbery), 1722 (Extor-
2 tion), or 1843 (Conducting a Prostitution Business).

3 “§ 1642. Sexual Assault

4 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he engages in a
5 sexual act with another person who is not his spouse, and:

6 “(1) knows that the other person is incapable of understanding
7 the nature of the conduct;

8 “(2) knows that the other person is physically incapable of 9 resisting, or of declining consent to, the sexual act;

10 “(3) knows that the other person is unaware that a sexual act
11 is being committed;

12 “(4) knows that the other person participates because of a mis-
13 taken belief that the actor is married to the other person; or 14 “(5) compels the other person to participate by any threat or 15 by placing the other person in fear.

16 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
17 felony.

18 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
19 described in this section if the offense is committed:

20 “(1) within the special jurisdiction of the United States;

21 “(2) in the circumstances set forth in subsection (a) (1), (a)
22 (2), or (a) (3), and occurs during the commission of an offense,
23 over which federal jurisdiction exists, that is described in section
24 1621 (Kidnapping), 1622 (Aggravated Criminal Restraint), 1623
25 (Criminal Restraint), 1644 (Sexual Abuse of a Ward), 1711
26 (Burglary), 1712 (Criminal Entry), 1713 (Criminal Trespass),
27 or 1843 (Conducting a Prostitution Business); or

28 “(3) in the circumstances set forth in subsection (a) (5), and a
29 circumstance specified in section 1641 (c) (2) exists or has occurred.

30 “§ 1643. Sexual Abuse of a Minor

31 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he engages in a 32 sexual act with another person who is not his spouse, who in fact is 33 less than sixteen years old, and who in fact is at least five years
34 younger than the actor.

35 “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
36 cution under this section that the actor reasonably believed the other
37 person to be sixteen years old or older.

38 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

39 “(1) a Class E felony if the actor is twenty-one years old or 40 older;

41 “(2) a Class A misdemeanor in any other case.

1 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
2 described in this section if:

3 “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction
4 of the United States; or

5 “(2) the offense occurs during the commission of an offense
6 over which federal jurisdiction exists, that is described in section
7 1621 (Kidnapping), 1622 (Aggravated Criminal Restraint), 1623
8 (Criminal Restraint), 1644 (Sexual Abuse of a Ward), 1711
9 (Burglary), 1712 (Criminal Entry), 1713 (Criminal Trespass),
10 or 1843 (Conducting a Prostitution Business).

11 “§ 1644. Sexual Abuse of a Ward

12 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he engages in a
13 sexual act with another person who is not his spouse, who is in official 14 detention, and who is under the custodial, supervisory, or disciplinary 15 authority of the actor.

16 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
17 misdemeanor.

18 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
19 described in this section if:

20 “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction
21 of the United States;

22 “(2) the official detention is under the laws of the United
23 States;

24 “(3) the official detention is in a federal facility; or 25 “(4) the actor is a federal public servant.

26 “§ 1645. Unlawful Sexual Contact

27 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he engages in 28 sexual contact with another person who is not his spouse, or causes
29 such other person to engage in sexual contact with him, under circum-
30 stances that would constitute an offense under section 1641, 1642, 1643,
31 or 1644 if such contact involved a sexual act.

32 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is of a class
33 two grades below that of the corresponding offense in section 1641,
34 1642, 1643, or 1644.

35 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
36 described in this section if there would be federal jurisdiction over 37 the corresponding offense described in section 1641, 1642, 1643, or 1644.

38 “§ 1646. General Provisions for Subchapter E

39 “(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this subchapter:

40 “(1) ‘sexual act’ means conduct between human beings consist-
41 ing of contact between the penis and the vulva, the penis and the

1 anus, the mouth and the penis, or the mouth and the vulva; for
2 purposes of this paragraph, contact involving the penis occurs
3 upon penetration, however slight;

4 “(2) ‘sexual contact’ means a touching of the sexual or other
5 intimate parts of a person to arouse or gratify the sexual desire
6 of any person;

7 “(3) ‘spouse’ means a person with whom the actor is living as 8 husband and wife, regardless of the legal status of their relation-9 ship, and does not include a husband or wife living apart under 10 a judicial decree of separation.

11 “(b) PROOF.—In a prosecution under section 1641 through 1645:

12 “(1) corroboration of the victim’s testimony is not required;
13 and

14 “(2) except as otherwise required by the Constitution, evidence 15 relating to the victim’s prior or subsequent sexual behavior is not 16 admissible.

17 “Chapter 17.—OFFENSES INVOLVING PROPERTY

“Subchapter

“A. Arson and Other Property Destruction Offenses.

“B. Burglary and Other Criminal Intrusion Offenses.

“C. Robbery, Extortion, and Blackmail.

“D. Theft and Related Offenses.

“E. Counterfeiting, Forgery, and Related Offenses.

“F. Commercial Bribery and Related Offenses.

“G. Investment, Monetary, and Antitrust Offenses.

18 “Subchapter A.—Arson and Other Property Destruction
19 Offenses

“Sec.

“1701. Arson.

“1702. Aggravated Property Destruction.

“1703. Property Destruction.

“1704. General Provisions for Subchapter A.

20 “§ 1701. Arson

21 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, by fire or explo-22 sion, he:

23 “(1) damages a public facility; or

24 “(2) damages substantially a building or a public structure.

25 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class C
26 felony.

27 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
28 described in this section if:

29 “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
30 the United States;

31 “(2) the property that is the subject of the offense is owned by,
32 or is under the care, custody, or control of, the United States; is

1 being produced, manufactured, constructed, or stored for the 2 United States; or is subject to a security interest held by the
3 United States;

4 “(3) the property that is the subject of the offense is located
5 within the United States and is owned by, or is under the care,
6 custody, or control of:

7 “(A) a foreign power;

8 “(B) a foreign dignitary, or a member of his immediate
9 family, who is in the United States;

10 “(C) a foreign official who is in the United States on 11 official business, or a member of his immediate family who 12 is in the United States in connection with the visit of such 13 official; or

14 “(D) an official guest of the United States; or 15 “(E) an internationally protected person;

16 “(4) the property that is the subject of the offense is moving in 17 interstate or foreign commerce, or constitutes or is a part of an 18 interstate or foreign shipment;

19 “(5) the property that is the subject of the offense is used in 20 an activity affecting interstate or foreign commerce, and is dam-
21 aged by a destructive device;

22 “(6) the property that is the subject of the offense is owned by,
23 or is under the care, custody, or control of, an organization receiv-
24 ing financial assistance from the United States, and is damaged
25 by a destructive device;

26 “(7) the property that is the subject of the offense is owned
27 by, or is under the care, custody, or control of, a public facility
28 that operates in interstate or foreign commerce;

29 “(8) the United States mail or a facility of interstate or for-
30 eign commerce is used in the planning, promotion, management,
31 execution, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the 32 distribution of the proceeds of the offense;

33 “(9) movement of a person across a state or United States
34 boundary occurs in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
35 tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the dis-
36 tribution of the proceeds of the offense; or

37 “(10) the offense occurs during the commission of an offense,
38 over which federal jurisdiction exists, that is described in section
39 1302 (Obstructing a Government Function by Physical Interfer-
40 ence), 1313 (Escape), 1323 (Tampering with a Witness or an In-

1 formant), 1324 (Retaliating against a Witness or an Informant),
 2 1357 (Tampering with a Public Servant), 1358 (Retaliating
 3 against a Public Servant), 1501 (Interfering with Civil Rights),
 4 1502 (Interfering with Civil Rights under Color of Law), 1503
 5 (Interfering with a Federal Benefit), 1504 (Unlawful Discrimi-
 6 nation), 1505 (Interfering with Speech or Assembly Related to 7 Civil Rights Activities); 1722 (Extortion); or 1804 (Loan-
 8 sharking).

9 “§ 1702. Aggravated Property Destruction

10 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

11 “(1) damages a public facility;

12 “(2) damages property and thereby causes a significant inter-
 13 ruption or impairment of a function of a public facility; or 14 “(3) damages property in an amount that in fact exceeds $500.

15 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

16 “(1) a Class D felony:

17 “(A) in the circumstances set forth in subsection (a) (1)
 18 or (a) (2); or

19 “(B) in the circumstances set forth in subsection (a) (3)
 20 if the damage exceeds $100,000;

21 “(2) a Class E felony in any other case.

22 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
 23 described in this section if:

24 “(1) a circumstance specified in section 1701(c) exists or has 25 occurred; or

26 “(2) the property is mail.

27 “§ 1703. Property Destruction

28 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he damages
 29 property.

30 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

31 “(1) a Class A misdemeanor if:

32 “(A) the damage exceeds $100; or

33 “(B) the property is mail other than a newspaper, maga-
 34 zine, advertising matter, or circular;

35 “(2) a Class B misdemeanor in any other case.

36 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
 37 described in this section if:

38 “(1) a circumstance specified in section 1701(c) (1) through 39 (c) (9) exists or has occurred; or

40 “(2) the property is mail.

1 “§ 1704. General Provisions for Subchapter A

2 “(a) DEFINITION.—As used in this subchapter, ‘public structure’
 3 means a structure, whether or not enclosed, where persons assemble
 4 for purposes of government, an occupation or a business or a pro-
 5 fession, education, religion, or entertainment.

6 “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
 7 cution under section 1701, 1702, or 1703 that the actor believed that 8 his conduct was consented to by all holders of a legal interest in all
 9 property damaged and that he was not reckless in so believing.

10 “(c) PROOF.—In a prosecution under section 1701, 1702, or 1703,
 11 in establishing that property constitutes or is part of an interstate or 12 foreign shipment within the meaning of section 1701(c)(4), proof
 13 of the designation in a way bill or other shipping document of the 14 places from which and to which a shipment was made creates a 15 presumption that the property was shipped or was being shipped as 16 indicated by such document.

17 “Subchapter B.—Burglary and Other Criminal Intrusion
 18 Offenses

“Sec.

“1711. Burglary.

“1712. Criminal Entry.

“1713. Criminal Trepass.

“1714. Stowing Away.

“1715. Possessing Burglar’s Tools.

“1716. Definitions for Subchapter B.

19 “§ 1711. Burglary

20 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if at night, with 21 intent to engage in conduct constituting a crime other than a crime
 22 set forth in this subchapter, and without privilege, he enters or remains
 23 surreptitiously within, a dwelling that is the property of another.

24 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class C
 25 felony.

26 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
 27 described in this section if:

28 “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction
 29 of the United States;

30 “(2) the dwelling is owned by, or is under the care, custody,
 31 or control of, the United States; or

32 “(3) the dwelling is located within the United States and is 33 owned by, or is under the care, custody, or control of:

34 “(A) a foreign power;

35 “(B) a foreign dignitary who is in the United States; or

36 “(C) an official guest of the United States.

1 “§ 1712. Criminal Entry

2 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent to
3 engage in conduct constituting a crime other than a crime set forth
4 in this subchapter, and without privilege, he enters or remains sur-
5 repetitiously within, a building or vehicle that is the property of 6 another.

7 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
8 felony.

9 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
10 described in this section if:

11 “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction
12 of the United States;

13 “(2) the building or vehicle is owned by, or is under the care,
14 custody, or control of, the United States;

15 “(3) the building contains a United States post office or postal 16 facility, and, if the actor’s entering or remaining was in a part
17 of the building other than that in which the post office was located, 18 the conduct intended would have affected the post office itself or 19 something therein;

20 “(4) the building contains a national credit institution, and,
21 if the actor’s entering or remaining was in a part of the build-
22 ing other than that in which the credit institution was located,
23 the conduct intended would have affected the credit institution
24 itself or something therein;

25 “(5) the vehicle contains mail, or property that is moving in 26 interstate or foreign commerce, or property that constitutes or 27 is a part of an interstate or foreign shipment; or

28 “(6) the building or vehicle is located within the United States
29 and is owned by, or is under the care, custody, or control of:

30 “(A) a foreign power;

31 “(B) a foreign dignitary who is in the United States; or

32 “(C) an official guest of the United States.

33 “§ 1713. Criminal Trespass

34 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, knowing that 35 he is not privileged to do so, he enters, or remains within or on,
36 premises that are the property of another.

37 “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
38 cution under this section that the actor’s conduct was consented to by 39 a holder of a possessory interest in the premises.

1 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

2 “(1) a Class A misdemeanor if the premises are highly secured
3 government premises, or consist of a dwelling;

4 “(2) a Class B misdemeanor if the premises are so enclosed or 5 secured as manifestly to exclude intruders, or consist of a building
6 other than a dwelling;

7 “(3) a Class C misdemeanor if the premises consist of a place as 8 to which notice prohibiting trespass is:

9 “(A) communicated to the actor by a person in charge of 10 the premises or by another authorized person; or

11 “(B) posted in a manner reasonably likely to come to the 12 attention of intruders;

13 “(4) an infraction in any other case.

14 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
15 described in this section if:

16 “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
17 the United States;

18 “(2) the premises are owned by, or are under the care, custody,
19 or control of, the United States;

20 “(3) the premises are located within the United States and are 21 owned by, or are under the care, custody, or control of:

22 “(A) a foreign power;

23 “(B) a foreign dignitary who is in the United States; or

24 “(C) an official guest of the United States;

25 “(4) the premises consist of a vehicle that contains mail, or 26 property that is moving in interstate or foreign commerce, or 27 property that constitutes or is a part of an interstate or foreign 28 shipment; or

29 “(5) the premises consist of public domain land, National Park
30 System land, or National Wildlife Refuge System land, that has 31 been closed to the public pursuant to a regulation issued by the 32 Secretary of the Interior, or consist of national forest land that 33 has been closed to the public pursuant to a regulation issued by 34 the Secretary of Agriculture.

35 “§ 1714. Stowing Away

36 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent to 37 obtain transportation, he secretes himself aboard a vessel or aircraft
38 that is the property of another and he is aboard the vessel or aircraft
39 when it leaves the point of embarkation.

1       “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
2 misdemeanor.

3       “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
4 described in this section if:

5               “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
6 the United States; or

7               “(2) movement of the actor across a state or United States
8 boundary occurs in the commission of the offense.

9       “§ 1715. Possessing Burglar’s Tools

10       “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent that
11 it be used in the course of conduct constituting an offense under section
12 1711, 1712, 1713, or 1714, he possesses an object that is designed for, or 13 commonly used for, the facilitation of a forcible entry in the course of 14 such an offense.

15       “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
16 misdemeanor.

17       “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
18 described in this section if the offense is committed within the special
19 jurisdiction of the United States.

20       “§ 1716. Definitions for Subchapter B

21       “As used in this subchapter:

22               “(a) ‘highly secured’ premises means continuously guarded
23 premises where display of visible identification is required of per-24 sons while they are on the premises;

25               “(b) ‘night’ means the period between thirty minutes after 26 sunset and thirty minutes before sunrise;

27               “(c) ‘premises’ includes a building, a structure, other real prop-
28 erty, and a vehicle.

29       “Subchapter C.—Robbery, Extortion, and Blackmail

“Sec.

“1721. Robbery.

“1722. Extortion.

“1723. Blackmail.

“1724. General Provisions for Subchapter C.

30       “§ 1721. Robbery

31       “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he takes property
32 of another from the person or presence of another by force and vio-
33 lence, or by threatening or placing another person in fear that any 34 person will imminently be subjected to bodily injury.

35       “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class C
36 felony.

1     “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense de-
2     scribed in this section if:

3             “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction
4             of the United States;

5             “(2) the property is owned by, or is under the care, custody, or
6             control of, the United States; is being produced, manufactured,
7             constructed, or stored for the United States; or is subject to a
8             security interest held by the United States;

9             “(3) the property is owned by, or is under the care, custody,
10            or control of, a national credit institution;

11            “(4) the property is mail;

12            “(5) the offense in any way or degree affects, delays, or ob-13            structs interstate or foreign commerce or the movement of an 14            article or commodity in interstate or foreign commerce;

15            “(6) the property is moving in interstate or foreign commerce,
16            constitutes or is a part of an interstate or foreign shipment, or is
17            in a pipeline system that extends across a state or United States
18            boundary or in a storage facility of such a system;

19            “(7) movement of a person across a state or United States
20            boundary occurs in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
21            tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the dis-
22            tribution of the proceeds of the offense; or

23            “(8) the offense is committed against:

24                “(A) a foreign dignitary, or a member of his immediate
25                family, who is in the United States;

26                “(B) a foreign official who is in the United States on offi-
27                cial business, or a member of his immediate family who is in
28                the United States in connection with the visit of such official;

29                or

30                “(C) an official guest of the United States.

31     “§ 1722. Extortion

32            “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he obtains prop-
33            erty of another:

34                “(1) by threatening or placing another person in fear that any 35                person will be subjected to bodily injury or kidnapping or that 36                any property will be damaged; or

37                “(2) under color of official right.

38            “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a pros-
39            ecution under subsection (a)(1) that the threatened or feared in-

1 jury or damage was minor and was incidental to peaceful picketing or 2 other concerted activity in the course of a bona fide labor dispute.

3 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

4 “(1) a Class C felony in the circumstances set forth in subsection
5 (a) (1);

6 “(2) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in subsection
7 (a) (2).

8 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
9 described in this section if:

10 “(1) a circumstance specified in section 1721(c) exists or has
11 occurred;

12 “(2) the United States mail or a facility of interstate or for-
13 eign commerce is used in the planning, promotion, management,
14 execution, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the 15 distribution of the proceeds of the offense;

16 “(3) the offense is committed by a federal public servant acting
17 under color of office;

18 “(4) the offense is committed by a person pretending to be a
19 federal public servant, a former federal public servant, or a for-
20 eign official;

21 “(5) the offense is committed to collect an extension of credit,
22 as defined in section 1806(c);

23 “(6) the property consists of any part of the compensation of
24 a person employed in the construction, completion, repair, or re-
25 furbishing of a federal public building, federal public work, or 26 building financed in whole or in part by a loan or grant from the 27 United States, and is obtained by threatening or placing any 28 person in fear in relation to that person’s employment; or

29 “(7) the property is obtained by threatening or placing a per-
30 son in fear in relation to any person’s employment under a grant
31 or contract of assistance pursuant to the Economic Opportunity
32 Act of 1964, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2701 et seq.).

33 “§ 1723. Blackmail

34 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he obtains prop-
35 erty of another by threatening or placing another person in fear that 36 any person will:

37 “(1) engage in conduct constituting a crime other than a crime
38 described in section 1722;

39 “(2) accuse any person of a crime;

1           “(3) procure the dismissal of any person from employment,
2 or refuse to employ or renew a contract of employment of any
3 person;

4           “(4) improperly subject any person to economic loss or injury
5 to his business or profession;

6           “(5) expose a secret or publicize an asserted fact, whether 7 true or false, with intent to subject any person, living or dead,
8 to hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or to impair his personal, finan-
9 cial, professional, or business reputation; or

10           “(6) take or withhold official action as a public servant, or 11 cause a public servant to take or withhold official action.

12           “(b) DEFENSE.—It is a defense to a prosecution under this section,
13 other than a prosecution under subsection (a) (1), that the defendant:

14           “(1) reasonably believed his conduct to be justified; and 15           “(2) intended solely to compel or induce the other person to 16 take lawful and reasonable action to prevent or remedy the as-

17 serted wrong that prompted the defendant’s conduct; and

18           “(3) with respect to an offense under subsection (a) (2), reason-
19 ably believed that the threatened accusation was true.

20           “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

21           “(1) a Class C felony if the property has a value in excess of 22 $100,000;

23           “(2) a Class D felony if:

24           “(A) the property has a value in excess of $500 but not more 25 than $100,000; or

26           “(B) regardless of its monetary value, the property consists 27 of:

28           “(i) a firearm, ammunition, or a destructive device;

29           “(ii) a vehicle;

30           “(iii) a record or other document owned by, or under
31 the care, custody, or control of, the United States;

32           “(iv) a counterfeiting implement designed for the 33 making of a written instrument of the United States;

34           “(v) a key or other implement designed to provide ac-
35 cess to mail or to property owned by, or under the care,
36 custody, or control of, the United States; or

37           “(vi) mail other than a newspaper, magazine, circular,
38 or advertising matter;

39           “(3) a Class A misdemeanor if the property has a value in
40 excess of $100 but not more than $500;

1 “(4) a Class B misdemeanor in any other case.

2 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
3 described in this section if:

4 “(1) a circumstance specified in section 1721(c) or section 1722
5 (c)(2) through (c)(7) exists or has occurred;

6 “(2) the fear in subsection (a)(1) or (a)(2) involves a federal 7 crime; or

8 “(3) the fear in subsection (a)(6) involves federal official
9 action.

10 “§ 1724. General Provisions for Subchapter C

11 “(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this subchapter:

12 “(1) ‘counterfeiting implement’ has the meaning set forth in 13 section 1746(b);

14 “(2) ‘written instrument’ has the meaning set forth in section
15 1746(i).

16 “(b) PROOF.—In a prosecution under section 1722 or 1723(a)(1), 17 (a)(3), or (a)(4), for the purpose of showing that words or other
18 methods of communication employed as a means of obtaining the prop-
19 erty in fact carried a threat, the court may permit the introduction of 20 evidence concerning the reputation of the defendant in any community
21 of which the victim was a member at the time of the offense charged.

22 “(c) DEFENSE PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution under 23 section 1722 or 1723 that the defendant, by the same conduct, also 24 committed an offense described in section 1321 (Witness Bribery),
25 1322 (Corrupting a Witness or an Informant), 1351 (Bribery), 1352
26 (Graft), 1353 (Trading in Government Assistance), 1354 (Trading 27 in Special Influence), 1355 (Trading in Public Office), or 1731
28 (Theft).

29 “Subchapter D.—Theft and Related Offenses

“Sec.

“1731. Theft.

“1732. Trafficking in Stolen Property.

“1733. Receiving Stolen Property.

“1734. Executing a Fraudulent Scheme.

“1735. Bankruptcy Fraud.

“1736. Interfering with a Security Interest.

“1737. Fraud in a Regulated Industry.

“1738. General Provisions for Subchapter D.

30 “§ 1731. Theft

31 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he obtains or uses 32 the property of another with intent:

33 “(1) to deprive the other of a right to the property or a benefit
34 of the property; or

1           “(2) to appropriate the property to his own use or to the use of 2 another person.

3           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

4           “(1) a Class C felony if the property has a value in excess of 5 $100,000;

6           “(2) a Class D felony if:

7           “(A) the property has a value in excess of $500 but not 8 more than $100,000; or

9           “(B) regardless of its monetary value, the property con-
10 sists of:

11           “(i) a firearm, ammunition, or a destructive device;

12           “(ii) a vehicle, except as provided in paragraph (4);

13           “(iii) a record or other document owned by, or under
14 the care, custody, or control of, the United States;

15           “(iv) a counterfeiting or forging implement designed 16 for the making of a written instrument of the United
17 States;

18           “(v) a key or other implement designed to provide
19 access to mail or to property owned by, or under the care,
20 custody, or control of, the United States; or

21           “(vi) mail other than a newspaper, magazine, circular,
22 or advertising matter;

23           “(3) a Class A misdemeanor if the property has a value in
24 excess of $100 but not more than $500;

25           “(4) a Class B misdemeanor if:

26           “(A) the property has a value of $100 or less; or

27           “(B) the property is a motor vehicle or a vessel, the de-
28 fendant is less than eighteen years old, and the defendant’s
29 intent involved deprivation or appropriation of a temporary
30 rather than a permanent nature.

31           “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
32 described in this section if:

33           “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
34 the United States;

35           “(2) the property is owned by, or is under the care, custody,
36 or control of, the United States; is being produced, manufactured,
37 constructed, or stored for the United States; or is subject to a
38 security interest held by the United States;

39           “(3) the offense is committed by a federal public servant acting
40 under color of office;

1           “(4) the offense is committed by a person pretending to be a
2 federal public servant, a former federal public servant, or a for-
3 eign official;

4           “(5) the property is obtained upon a representation that it will 5 be used to cause a federal public servant to take or withhold of-
6 ficial action;

7           “(6) the property has a value of $2,500 or more and is obtained
8 through the use of one or more counterfeited, fictitious, altered,
9 forged, lost, or stolen credit cards in a transaction or series of 10 transactions affecting interstate or foreign commerce;

11          “(7) the property is mail;

12          “(8) the property is moving in interstate or foreign commerce,
13 constitutes or is a part of an interstate or foreign shipment, or is
14 in a pipeline system that extends across a state or United States
15 boundary or in a storage facility of such a system;

16          “(9) the property has a value of $5,000 or more, or is a vehicle,
17 and is moved across a state or United States boundary in the com-
18 mission of the offense;

19          “(10) the property is owned by, or is under the care, custody,
20 or control of, a national credit institution;

21          “(11) the offense is committed by a misrepresentation of United 22 States ownership, guarantee, insurance, or other interest of the 23 United States with respect to the property involved;

24          “(12) the offense is committed by impersonation of a creditor
25 of the United States;

26          “(13) the property: (A) is owned by, or is under the care,
27 custody, or control of, an Indian tribe, band, community, group,
28 or pueblo that is subject to a federal statute relating to Indian 29 affairs, or a corporation, association, or group organized under 30 any such statute; or (B) is the subject of a grant, subgrant, con-
31 tract, or subcontract pursuant to the Indian Self-Determination
32 and Education Assistance Act (88 Stat. 2203) or the Act of 33 April 16, 1934, as amended (25 U.S.C. 452 et seq.), and the offense
34 is committed by an agent of a recipient of such a grant, subgrant,
35 contract, or subcontract;

36          “(14) the property is owned by, or is under the care, custody,
37 or control of, an employee benefit plan subject to a provision of 38 title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974
39 (29 U.S.C. 1001 et seq.);

1       “(15) the property is owned by, or is under the care, custody, or
2 control of, a trust fund established by an employer or by an em-
3 ployee organization as defined in section 3(4) of the Employee
4 Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1002(4))
5 to provide a benefit to the members of an employee organization
6 or to their families;

7       “(16) the property is owned by, or is under the care, custody, or
8 control of, a labor organization as defined in section 3(i) and (j)
9 of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959
10 (29 U.S.C. 402(i) and (j)), and the offense is committed by an 11 officer, member, or employee of, or a person connected in any 12 capacity with, such organization;

13       “(17) the offense is committed in connection with a loan,
14 advance of credit, or mortgage insured by the United States
15 Department of Housing and Urban Development;

16       “(18) the offense is committed by an agent or receiver of, or a
17 person connected in any capacity with, a small business investment
18 company, as defined in section 103 of the Small Business Invest-
19 ment Act of 1958, as amended (15 U.S.C. 662), and the property
20 is owned by, or is under the care, custody, or control of, such 21 small business investment company;

22       “(19) the property is owned by, or is under the care, custody, or 23 control of, a registered investment company, as defined in section
24 3(a) of the Investment Company Act of 1940, as amended (15
25 U.S.C. 80a-3(a));

26       “(20) the offense is committed by a futures commission mer-
27 chant as defined in section 2(a) of the Commodity Exchange Act,
28 as amended (7 U.S.C. 2), or by an agent thereof, and (A) the 29 property is that of a customer and is received by such futures
30 commission merchant to margin, guarantee, or secure trades or 31 contracts of any customer; or (B) the property has accrued to a
32 customer as the result of trades or contracts;

33       “(21) the property is owned by, or is under the care, custody, or 34 control of, an organization engaged in interstate commerce as a
35 common carrier, and the offense is committed (A) by a president,
36 director, officer, or manager of such common carrier; or (B) by 37 an agent of such common carrier riding in a vehicle of such 38 common carrier that is moving in interstate commerce;

39       “(22) the offense is committed by an agent of, or a person con-
40 nected in any capacity with, an agency receiving financial assist-

1       ance under the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, as amended
2       (42 U.S.C. 2701 et seq.), and the property is the subject of a grant
3       or contract of assistance pursuant to such Act;

4       “(23) the property consists of any part of the compensation of
5       a person employed in the construction, completion, repair, or re-
6       furbishing of a federal public building, federal public work, or
7       building financed in whole or in part by a loan or grant from the 8       United States, and is obtained or retained by fraud in relation to 9       that person’s employment;

10       “(24) the offense is committed by a trustee, receiver, custodian,
11       marshal, or other court officer and the property consists of a part
12       of the estate of a bankrupt against whom a petition has been filed 13       under the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, as amended (11 U.S.C. 1 et 14       seq.);

15       “(25) the property consists of a part of a grant, contract, or 16       other form of assistance received, directly or indirectly, from the 17       Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, pursuant to title I
18       of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, as 19       amended (42 U.S.C. 3701 et seq.);

20       “(26) the property (A) consists of a coupon, or of an authoriza-
21       tion to purchase card, defined in section 3(c) and (m) of the Food
22       Stamp Act of 1964, as amended (7 U.S.C. 2012(c) and (m)); or 23       (B) is obtained by the use of such a coupon that has been obtained
24       in violation of this section, that has been counterfeited in viola-
25       tion of section 1741, or that has been forged in violation of section
26       1742;

27       “(27) the property consists of agricultural products stored or 28       to be stored in a licensed warehouse pursuant to the United States
29       Warehouse Act (7 U.S.C. 241 et seq.), and licensed receipts have 30       been or are to be issued for such products;

31       “(28) the property consists of money paid under a law admin-
32       istered by the Veterans’ Administration for the benefit of a minor,
33       an incompetent, or another beneficiary, and the offense is com-
34       mitted by a fiduciary of such beneficiary;

35       “(29) the property consists of money, a security, or another
36       asset of the Securities Investor Protection Corporation;

37       “(30) the property consists of a note, stock certificate, treasury
38       stock certificate, bond, debenture, or interest coupon, or a blank
39       certificate of any of the foregoing, and is under the care, custody,

1 or control of a member of, or an organization insured by, the
2 Securities Investor Protection Corporation; or

3 “(31) the property is a payment made pursuant to section
4 801 of the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act, as amended
5 (26 U.S.C. 9001 et seq.) or pursuant to section 9037 of the Presi-
6 dential Primary Matching Payment Account Act (26 U.S.C.
7 9037), and the offense is committed by a person to whom such pay-
8 ment is made or to whom a portion of such payment is transferred.

9 “(32) the property is provided or insured under part B of title
10 IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965, as amended (20 U.S.C.
11 1071 et seq.)

12 “§ 1732. Trafficking in Stolen Property

13 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he traffics in 14 property of another that has been stolen.

15 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is an offense of 16 the same class as that specified in section 1731(b) for the theft of the 17 same kind of property.

18 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
19 described in this section if a circumstance specified in section 1731(c)
20 exists or has occurred.

21 “§ 1733. Receiving Stolen Property

22 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he buys, receives,
23 possesses, or obtains control of property of another that has been 24 stolen.

25 “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prose-
26 cution under this section that the defendant bought, received, pos-
27 sessed, or obtained control of the property with intent to report the 28 matter to an appropriate law enforcement officer or to the owner of 29 the property.

30 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is an offense of 31 the class next below that specified in section 1731(b) for the theft of 32 the same kind of property.

33 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
34 described in this section if a circumstance specified in section 1731(c)
35 exists or has occurred.

36 “§ 1734. Executing a Fraudulent Scheme

37 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if:

38 “(1) having devised a scheme or artifice:

39 “(A) to defraud; or

40 “(B) to obtain property of another by means of a false or 41 fraudulent pretense, representation, or promise;

1 he engages in conduct with intent to execute such scheme or
2 artifice; or

3 “(2) he transfers, or receives anything of value for, a right to 4 participate in a pyramid sales scheme, or receives compensation
5 from a pyramid sales scheme.

6 “(b) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section :

7 “(1) ‘anything of value’ does not include :

8 “(A) payment made for sales demonstration equipment ;

9 “(B) material furnished on a non-profit basis for use in 10 making sales and not for resale ;

11 “(C) time or effort spent in pursuit of sales or recruiting
12 activities ; or

13 “(D) payment having an aggregate value of $100 or less
14 when calculated on an annual basis ;

15 “(2) ‘compensation’ includes payment based on a sale or dis-
16 tribution made to a person who is a participant in a pyramid
17 sales scheme or who, upon such payment, obtains the right to 18 become a participant, but does not include payment based on a
19 retail sale to an ultimate consumer ;

20 “(3) ‘conduct’ includes a failure to state a fact necessary to 21 avoid making a statement misleading ;

22 “(4) ‘pyramid sales scheme’ means a plan or operation, whether 23 or not involving the sale or distribution of property, that includes 24 a means of increasing participation in the plan or operation under 25 which a participant, upon payment of anything of value, obtains
26 a right to receive compensation :

27 “(A) for his introduction of another person into par-
28 ticipation in such plan or operation ; or

29 “(B) for such other person’s introduction of another per-
30 son into participation in such plan or operation ;

31 “(5) ‘sale or distribution’ includes a lease, rental, or consign-
32 ment.

33 “(c) DEFENSE PRECLUDED.—It is not a defense to a prosecution under 34 subsection (a) (2) that :

35 “(1) the plan or operation limits the number of persons who
36 may participate, or imposes conditions with respect to the eligibil-
37 ity of participants ; or

38 “(2) upon payment of anything of value a participant obtains,
39 in addition to the right to receive compensation as described in 40 subsection (b) (2), any other property.

1 “(d) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

2 “(1) a Class D felony in the circumstances set forth in sub-
3 section (a) (1);

4 “(2) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in sub-
5 section (a) (2).

6 “(e) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense de-
7 scribed in this section if, in the commission of the offense, the actor:

8 “(1) uses or causes the use of the United States mail;

9 “(2) uses or causes the use of any interstate or foreign com-
10 munication facility, including a facility of wire, radio, or tele-
11 vision communication; or

12 “(3) travels in, or causes or induces any other person to travel
13 in, or to be transported in, interstate or foreign commerce.

14 “§ 1735. Bankruptcy Fraud

15 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent to 16 deceive a court or an officer thereof or to deceive or harm a creditor of 17 a bankrupt, he:

18 “(1) transfers or conceals property belonging to the estate of 19 a bankrupt;

20 “(2) receives a material amount of property from a bankrupt
21 after the filing of a bankruptcy proceeding;

22 “(3) transfers or conceals, in contemplation of a bankruptcy
23 proceeding, his own property or the property of another;

24 “(4) transfers or conceals, in contemplation of a state insol-
25 vency proceeding, his own property or the property of another;

26 “(5) alters, destroys, mutilates, conceals, or makes a false entry
27 in a document affecting or relating to the property or affairs of a
28 bankrupt, or withholds such a document from the receiver,
29 trustee, or other officer of the court entitled to its possession; or 30 “(6) offers, gives, or agrees to give, or solicits, demands, accepts,

31 or agrees to accept, anything of value for or because of acting 32 or forbearing to act, or having acted or forborne to act, in a
33 bankruptcy proceeding.

34 “(b) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

35 “(1) ‘bankrupt’ means a debtor by or against whom a petition
36 has been filed pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, as amended
37 (11 U.S.C. 1 et seq.), and, for purposes of subsection (a) (4), a
38 debtor who is the subject of a state insolvency proceeding;

39 “(2) ‘bankruptcy proceeding’ means a proceeding, arrangement,
40 or plan pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act of 1898, as amended (11
41 U.S.C. 1 et seq.);

1 “(3) ‘harm’ means to cause loss, deprivation, or reduction in
2 value, with respect to any economic benefit.

3 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

4 “(1) a Class D felony if the property has a value in excess of 5 $500;

6 “(2) a Class E felony in any other case.

7 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
8 described in:

9 “(1) subsection (a)(4) if the offense in any way or degree
10 affects, delays, or obstructs interstate or foreign commerce or the 11 movement of an article or commodity in interstate or foreign 12 commerce;

13 “(2) subsection (a)(1), (a)(2), (a)(3), (a)(5), or (a)(6) if
14 the offense is committed within:

15 “(A) the general jurisdiction of the United States;

16 “(B) the special jurisdiction of the United States; or

17 “(C) the extraterritorial jurisdiction of the United States
18 to the extent applicable under section 204.

19 “§ 1736. Interfering With a Security Interest

20 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, holding a legal 21 interest in property subject to a security interest, he deprives the holder 22 of the security interest of a right to the property or a benefit of the 23 property by removing, concealing, encumbering, transferring, or con-
24 verting such property.

25 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

26 “(1) a Class D felony if the value of the deprivation of the 27 right or benefit exceeds $100,000;

28 “(2) a Class E felony if the value of the deprivation of the 29 right or benefit exceeds $500 but is not more than $100,000;

30 “(3) a Class A misdemeanor in any other case.

31 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
32 described in this section if:

33 “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction
34 of the United States; or

35 “(2) the property is subject to a security interest held by the
36 United States.

37 “§ 1737. Fraud in a Regulated Industry

38 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent to 39 defraud, he:

40 “(1) uses or reveals information relative to a formula of a prod-
41 uct in fact acquired under the authority of section 3 of the Fed-

1 eral Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act of 1972, as
2 amended (7 U.S.C. 1361(b));

3 “(2) violates section 912 of the Housing and Urban Develop-
4 ment Act of 1970 (12 U.S.C. 1709-2) or section 239(b) of the 5 National Housing Act, as added by section 302 of the Act of 6 August 1, 1968 (12 U.S.C. 1715z-4(b) (relating to equity skim-
7 ming in federally insured mortgages of single or multiple family
8 dwellings); or

9 “(3) violates the provisions of section 1404 of the Interstate 10 Land Sales Full Disclosure Act (15 U.S.C. 1703) (relating to the 11 sale or lease of lots in real estate subdivisions), or a regulation,
12 rule, or order issued pursuant thereto;

13 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
14 felony.

15 “§ 1738. Consumer Fraud

16 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent to 17 deceive or defraud a purchaser, he:

18 “(1) offers or advertises property for sale to a purchaser,
19 knowing that such property will not be sold as so offered or 20 advertised; or

21 “(2) makes a material statement that is false, concerning 22 property that he offers or advertises for sale, sells, or has sold to 23 a purchaser, with respect to:

24 “(A) the purchaser’s need for the property;

25 “(B) the nature of the property, including its origin; its 26 age; its grade, quality, style, or model; its ingredients or 27 components; its quantity; its performance or safety charac-
28 teristics; or its uses or benefits;

29 “(C) the sponsorship or approval of the property;

30 “(D) the comparison between the price or quality of the 31 property and that of similar property offered or advertised
32 for sale by the same or another person;

33 “(E) the prior ownership of the property;

34 “(F) the purchaser’s need for the repair or replacement of 35 the property;

36 “(G) the person’s completion of the repair or replacement
37 of the property; or

38 “(H) the purchaser’s rights, privileges, or remedies with 39 regard to the property.

1 “(b) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section :

2 “(1) ‘purchaser’ includes a potential purchaser and an actual
3 or potential lessee, assignee, or other transferee of property in 4 exchange for anything of value ; and

5 “(2) ‘sale’, or a variant thereof, includes a lease, assignment,
6 or other transfer of property in exchange for anything of value.

7 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a class A
8 misdemeanor.

9 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
10 described in this section if :

11 “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
12 the United States ; or

13 “(2) a circumstance specified in section 1734(e) exists or has 14 occurred and the property offered or advertised for sale, or as 15 to which a false statement is made, has a value of $10,000 or more
16 when considered either alone or as one of a series of such offerings,
17 advertisements, or statements.

18 “§ 1739. General Provisions for Subchapter D

19 “(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this subchapter :

20 “(1) ‘counterfeiting implement’ and ‘forging implement’ have 21 the meanings set forth in section 1746 (b) and (d) ;

22 “(2) ‘obtains or uses’ means any manner of :

23 “(A) taking or exercising control over property ;

24 “(B) making an unauthorized use, disposition, or transfer
25 of property ; or

26 “(C) obtaining property by fraud ;

27 and includes conduct heretofore known as theft, stealing, larceny,
28 purloining, abstracting, embezzlement, misapplication, misap-
29 propriation, conversion, obtaining money or property by false
30 pretenses, fraud, deception, and all other conduct similar in 31 nature ;

32 “(3) ‘written instrument’ has the meaning set forth in section
33 1746(i).

34 “(b) PROOF.—In a prosecution under section 1731, 1732, or 1733 :

35 “(1) possession of property recently stolen, unless satisfactor-
36 ily explained, constitutes prima facie evidence that the person
37 in possession of the property was aware of the risk that it had 38 been stolen or that he in some way participated in its theft ;

39 “(2) the purchase or sale of stolen property at a price sub-
40 stantially below its fair market value, unless satisfactorily ex-

1 plained, constitutes prima facie evidence that the person buying
2 or selling the property was aware of the risk that it had been
3 stolen;

4 “(3) in establishing that property constitutes or is part of an
5 interstate or foreign shipment within the meaning of section
6 1731(c) (8), proof of the designation in a way bill or other ship-
7 ping document of the places from which and to which a ship-
8 ment was made creates a presumption that the property was 9 shipped or was being shipped as indicated by such document.

10 “(c) BAR TO PROSECUTION.—It is a bar to prosecution under sec-
11 tions 1731, 1732, and 1733 that :

12 “(1) the subject of the offense was intangible property owned
13 by, or under the care, custody, or control of, the United States;

14 “(2) the defendant obtained or used the property solely for 15 the purpose of disseminating it to the public, and did not derive 16 anything of value from obtaining, using, or disseminating it;
17 and

18 “(3) the property was not obtained by means of conduct con-
19 stituting an offense under section 1521 (Eavesdropping), 1524
20 Intercepting Correspondence), 1711 (Burglary), 1712 (Criminal
21 Entry, or 1713 (Criminal Trespass), or constituting a trespass
22 under civil law.

23 “Subchapter E.—Counterfeiting, Forgery, and Related
24 Offenses

“Sec.

“1741. Counterfeiting.

“1742. Forgery.

“1743. Criminal Endorsement of a Written Instrument.

“1744. Criminal Issuance of a Written Instrument.

“1745. Trafficking in a Counterfeiting Implement.

“1746. Definitions for Subchapter E.

25 “§ 1741. Counterfeiting

26 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent to 27 deceive or harm another person or a government, he makes, utters, or 28 possesses a counterfeited written instrument.

29 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

30 “(1) a Class C felony if the written instrument is or purports
31 to be:

32 “(A) a written instrument of the United States; or 33 “(B) a security;

34 “(2) a Class D felony in any other case.

35 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
36 described in this section if :

1           “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
2 the United States;

3           “(2) the written instrument is or purports to be:

4               “(A) made or issued by or under the authority of, or guar-
5 anteed by, the United States;

6               “(B) a security made or issued by or under the authority of 7 a foreign government;

8               “(C) a security or a tax stamp, and is moved across a state
9 or United States boundary in the commission of the offense;

10              “(D) a security issued by a national credit institution, and 11 the offense is committed by an agent of such institution; or

12              “(E) a security that is a note, stock certificate, treasury
13 stock certificate, bond debenture, or interest coupon, made or 14 issued by an organization or by a state or local government; or

15           “(3) the government intended to be deceived or harmed is the 16 government of the United States.

17 “§ 1742. Forgery

18           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent to 19 deceive or harm another person or a government, he makes, utters, or 20 possesses a forged written instrument.

21           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

22               “(1) a Class C felony if the written instrument is or purports
23 to be:

24                   “(A) an obligation of the United States; or

25                   “(B) an instrument that has a value in excess of $100,000;

26               “(2) A Class D felony if the written instrument is or purports
27 to be:

28                   “(A) made or issued by or under the authority of, or guar-
29 anteed by, the United States, a state or local government, or 30 a foreign government; or

31                   “(B) an instrument that has a value in excess of $500 but
32 not more than $100,000;

33               “(3) a Class E felony in any other case.

34           “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
35 described in this section if:

36               “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction
37 of the United States;

38               “(2) the written instrument is or purports to be:

39                   “(A) made or issued by or under the authority of, or
40 guaranteed by, the United States;

1           “(B) a security made or issued by or under the authority
2 of a foreign government;

3           “(C) a security or a tax stamp, and is moved across a state
4 or United States boundary in the commission of the offense; or

5           “(D) a security issued by a national credit institution, and
6 the offense is committed by an agent of such institution; or

7           “(E) a security that is a note, stock certificate, treasury
8 stock certificate, bond, debenture, or interest coupon, made or
9 issued by an organization or by a state or local government; or

10          “(3) the government intended to be deceived or harmed is the 11 government of the United States.

12   “§ 1743. Criminal Endorsement of a Written Instrument

13   “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent to 14 deceive or harm another person or a government, he:

15          “(1) signs or endorses a written instrument purportedly on be-16 half of another person or a government without authority to do
17 so; or

18          “(2) utters or possesses a written instrument that has been so
19 signed or endorsed.

20   “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

21          “(1) a Class C felony if the written instrument is or purports
22 to be:

23                  “(A) an obligation of the United States; or

24                  “(B) an instrument that has a value in excess of $100,000;

25          “(2) a Class D felony if the written instrument is or purports
26 to be:

27                  “(A) made or issued by or under the authority of, or guar-
28 anteed by, the United States, a state or local government, or a 29 foreign government; or

30                  “(B) an instrument that has a value in excess of $500 but
31 not more than $100,000;

32          “(3) a Class E felony in any other case.

33   “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
34 described in this section if:

35          “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
36 the United States;

37          “(2) the written instrument is or purports to be:

38                  “(A) made or issued by or under the authority of, or guar-
39 anteed by, the United States;

1           “(B) a security made or issued by or under the authority
2 of a foreign government;

3           “(C) a security or a tax stamp, and is moved across a
4 state or United States boundary in the commission of the
5 offense;

6           “(D) a security issued by a national credit institution, and
7 the offense is committed by an agent of such institution; or

8           “(E) a security that is a note, stock certificate, treasury
9 stock certificate, bond, debenture, or interest coupon, made
10 or issued by an organization or by a state or local govern-
11 ment; or

12           “(3) the government intended to be deceived or harmed is the 13 government of the United States.

14 “§ 1744. Criminal Issuance of a Written Instrument

15           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent to 16 deceive or harm another person or a government, he:

17           “(1) issues a written instrument without authority; or

18           “(2) utters or possesses a written instrument that has been so
19 issued.

20           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
21 felony.

22           “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
23 described in this section if:

24           “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
25 the United States;

26           “(2) the written instrument is or purports to be:

27           “(A) made or issued by or under the authority of, or
28 guaranteed by, the United States;

29           “(B) a security made or issued by or under the authority of
30 a foreign government;

31           “(C) a security issued by a national credit institution,
32 and the offense is committed by an agent of such institution;

33           or

34           “(3) the government intended to be deceived or harmed is the
35 government of the United States.

36 “§ 1745. Trafficking in a Counterfeiting Implement

37           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

38           “(1) makes or traffics in a counterfeiting or forging implement;

39           or

1           “(2) possesses a counterfeiting or forging implement with in-
2           tent that it be used in making a counterfeited or forged written
3           instrument.

4           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

5           “(1) a Class C felony if the implement is designed for or suited 6           for the making of a counterfeited or forged obligation of the
7           United States;

8           “(2) a Class D felony in any other case.

9           “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
10          described in this section if:

11          “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction
12          of the United States;

13          “(2) the implement is designed for or suited for the making of:

14               “(A) a written instrument purporting to be made or issued 15               by or under the authority of, or guaranteed by, the United
16               States;

17               “(B) a security purporting to be made or issued by or 18               under the authority of a foreign government; or

19               “(C) a security that is a note, stock certificate, treasury
20               stock certificate, bond, debenture, or interest coupon, made or 21               issued by an organization or by a state or local government;
22               or

23          “(3) the implement which is the subject of the offense is moved 24          across a state or United States boundary in the commission of 25          the offense.

26          “§ 1746. Definitions for Subchapter E

27          “As used in this subchapter:

28               “(a) ‘counterfeited written instrument’ means a written instru-
29               ment that purports to be genuine but is not, because it has been 30               falsely made or manufactured in its entirety;

31               “(b) ‘counterfeiting implement’ means an engraving, plate,
32               hub, stone, paper, tool, die, mold, ink, photograph, negative, or 33               other implement or impression designed for or suited for the mak-
34               ing of a counterfeited written instrument;

35               “(c) ‘forged written instrument’ means a written instrument 36               that purports to be genuine but is not because it: (1) has been 37               falsely altered, completed, signed, or endorsed; (2) contains a 38               false addition thereto or insertion therein; or (3) is a combina-
39               tion of parts of two or more genuine written instruments;

1           “(d) ‘forging implement’ means an engraving, plate, hub,
2 stone, paper, tool, die, mold, ink, photograph, negative, or other
3 implement or impression designed for or suited for the making of 4 a forged written instrument;

5           “(e) ‘obligation of the United States’ means a bond, certificate
6 of indebtedness, national bank currency, Federal Reserve note,
7 Federal Reserve bank note, coupon, United States note,
8 Treasury note, gold certificate, silver certificate, fractional note,
9 certificate of deposit, stamp, canceled stamp, postage meter
10 stamp, coin, gold or silver bar coined or stamped at a mint or 11 assay office of the United States, or other representation of value
12 of any denomination, issued pursuant to a federal statute, except 13 a bill, money order, check, or draft for money, drawn by or upon
14 an authorized officer of the United States;

15           “(f) ‘security’ means (1) an obligation of the United States;
16 (2) a note, stock certificate, treasury stock certificate, bond,
17 debenture, interest coupon; bill, check, draft, warrant, money
18 order, money order blank, traveler’s check, letter of credit, ware-
19 house receipt, negotiable bill of lading, evidence of indebtedness,
20 certificate of interest in or participation in any profit-sharing
21 agreement, collateral-trust certificate, preorganization certificate
22 or subscription, transferable share, investment contract, voting-
23 trust certificate, or certificate of interest in tangible or intangible
24 property; (3) an instrument evidencing ownership of goods,
25 wares, or merchandise; (4) a certificate for, receipt for, or 26 warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase any of the fore-
27 going; (5) an obligation, bank note, bill, coin, or bar issued by 28 a foreign government and intended by the law or usage of such 29 government to circulate as money; (6) a security of a foreign gov-
30 ernment; (7) a postage stamp, revenue stamp, or uncanceled
31 stamp, whether or not demonetized, issued by a foreign govern-
32 ment; or (8) any other written instrument commonly known as 33 a security;

34           “(g) ‘tax stamp’ includes a tax stamp, tax token, tax meter im-
35 print, or any similar evidence of an obligation running to a gov-
36 ernment or of the discharge of such an obligation;

37           “(h) ‘utter’ means to issue, authenticate, transfer, publish, sell,
38 deliver, transmit, present, display, use, certify, or otherwise give 39 currency to;

1           “(C) a bank holding company, a savings and loan holding
2 company, or a person controlling a financial institution in
3 such a manner as to be a bank holding company or a savings
4 and loan holding company under the Bank Holding Com-
5 pany Act Amendments of 1956, as amended (12 U.S.C.
6 1841), or the Savings and Loan Holding Company Amend-
7 ments of 1967 (12 U.S.C. 1730a);

8           “(D) a prime contractor holding a negotiated contract
9 entered into by the United States government for the fur-
10 nishing of supplies, materials, equipment, or services of any
11 kind, or a subcontractor, as defined in section 2 of the Act
12 of March 8, 1946, as amended (41 U.S.C. 52), holding a sub-
13 contract under such a prime contract;

14           “(E) an authorized committee or an eligible candidate, as 15 defined in the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act
16 (26 U.S.C. 9002 (1) and (4)), and the conduct relates to a
17 qualified campaign expenses, as defined in such Act (26 U.S.C.
18 9002(11)); or

19           “(F) an authorized committee or candidate, as defined in 20 the Presidential Primary Matching Payment Account Act
21 (26 U.S.C. 9032 (1) and (2)), and the conduct relates to a
22 qualified campaign expense, as defined in such Act (26
23 U.S.C. 9032(9));

24           “(2) movement of a person across a state or United States
25 boundary occurs in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
26 tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the 27 distribution of the proceeds of the offense; or

28           “(3) the United States mail or a facility of interstate or foreign
29 commerce is used in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
30 tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the 31 distribution of the proceeds of the offense.

32 “§ 1752. Labor Bribery

33           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if:

34           “(1) being an employer, he offers, gives, or agrees to give any-35 thing of value to a labor organization, or to an officer, agent, or 36 counsel of a labor organization, for or because of the recipient’s
37 conduct in any transaction or matter concerning such organiza-
38 tion;

39           “(2) he offers, gives, or agrees to give anything of value to:

40           “(A) an administrator, agent, trustee, or counsel of an 41 employee benefit plan;

1           “(B) an employer, agent, or counsel of an employer, any
2           of whose employees are covered by such a plan;

3           “(C) an agent or counsel of an employee organization, any 4           of whose members are covered by such a plan; or

5           “(D) a person who, or an agent or counsel of an organiza-
6           tion that, provides benefit plan services;
7           for or because of the recipient’s conduct relating to any trans-
8           action or matter concerning such plan;

9           “(3) he offers, gives, or agrees to give anything of value to an 10          officer, agent, trustee, or counsel of a labor organization for or be-11          cause of the recipient’s conduct relating to:

12          “(A) the admission of any person to membership or to a 13          class of membership, or the issuance to any person of the 14          indicia of membership or of a class of membership, in the 15          labor organization;

16          “(B) the work placement of any person by the labor or-
17          ganization; or

18          “(C) any transaction or matter concerning the expenditure,
19          transfer, investment, or other use of the funds, money, secu-20          rities, property, or other assets of the labor organization; or

21          “(4) he solicits, demands, accepts, or agrees to accept anything
22          of value, the offering of which constitutes an offense described 23          in subsection (a) (1), (a) (2), or (a) (3).

24          “(b) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

25          “(1) ‘administrator’ has the meaning set forth in section (3)
26          (16) (A) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 27          1974 (29 U.S.C. 1002(16) (A));

28          “(2) ‘anything of value’ does not include bona fide salary, 29          wages, fees, or other compensation paid in the usual course of 30          business;

31          “(3) ‘employee organization’ has the meaning set forth in 32          section 3(4) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act
33          of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1002(4));

34          “(4) ‘employee benefit plan’ includes (A) the meaning set
35          forth in section 3(3) of the Employee Retirement Income Secu-
36          rity Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1002(3)); and (B) any trust fund
37          established by an employer or by an employee organization, or by 38          both, to provide any benefit to the members of the organization
39          or to their families;

1           “(5) ‘employer’ includes a group or association of employers,
2           and a person acting directly or indirectly as an employer or as an
3           agent of or in the interest of an employer;

4           “(6) ‘labor organization’ has the meaning set forth in section 3
5           of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959
6           (29 U.S.C. 402(i));

7           “(7) ‘officer’, when used with respect to a labor organization,
8           has the meaning set forth in section 3(n) of the Labor-Management
9           Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 (29 U.S.C. 402(n));

10          “(8) ‘work placement’ means a scheme, system, or method
11          whereby members of a labor organization or other persons gain 12          employment or are referred for employment, and includes any
13          such scheme, system, or method that establishes a priority or preference
14          upon the basis of (A) seniority within the labor organization; (B) experience or competency in a particular trade or 15          field of employment; (C) length of employment in a particular 16          trade or field of employment or with specified employers or within
17          a particular geographical area; (D) performance on an examination relating to an individual’s ability to perform work in 18          a particular trade or field of employment; (E) the date of registration on a list of persons available for work.

19          “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
20          felony.

21          “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
22          described in this section if the employer or labor organization is engaged in, or the employee benefit plan covers employees engaged in, an 23          industry that affects interstate or foreign commerce.

24          “§ 1753. Sports Bribery

25          “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent improperly to affect the outcome, result, or margin of victory of a publicly exhibited sporting contest:

26                 “(1) he offers, gives, or agrees to give anything of value to a 27                 participant, official, or other person associated with the contest; or

28                 “(2) as a participant, official, or other person associated with 29                 the contest, he solicits, demands, accepts, or agrees to accept anything of value.

30          “(b) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, ‘publicly exhibited
31          sporting contest’ means a contest open to the public in any sport involving human beings or animals, whether as individual participants

1 or teams of participants, the occurrence of which is publicly an-
2 nounced in advance of the event.

3 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
4 felony.

5 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
6 described in this section if:

7 “(1) the United States mail or a facility of interstate or for-
8 eign commerce is used in the planning, promotion, management,
9 execution, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the 10 distribution of the proceeds of the offense; or

11 “(2) movement across a state or United States boundary by the 12 actor, or by a participant, official, or other person associated with 13 the sporting contest, occurs in the planning, promotion, manage-
14 ment, execution, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or 15 in the distribution of the proceeds of the offense.

16 “Subchapter G.—Investment, Monetary, and Antitrust
17 Offenses

“Sec.

“1761. Securities Offenses.

“1762. Monetary Offenses.

“1763. Commodities Exchange Offenses.

“1764. Antitrust Offenses.

18 “§ 1761. Securities Offenses

19 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

20 “(1) violates any of the following provisions of:

21 “(A) the Securities Act of 1933, as amended:

22 “(i) section 5, as amended (15 U.S.C. 77e) (relating 23 to the sale of unregistered securities);

24 “(ii) section 17, as amended (15 U.S.C. 77q) (relat-25 ing to fraud in the offer and sale of securities); or 26 “(iii) section 23 (15 U.S.C. 77w) (relating to unlaw-

27 ful representations);

28 “(B) the Trust Indenture Act of 1939, as amended:

29 “(i) section 306, as added by the Act of August 3, 30 1939, as amended (15 U.S.C. 77fff) (relating to the sale
31 of unregistered debt securities without qualified trust 32 indentures); or

33 “(ii) section 324, as added by the Act of August 3, 34 1939, as amended (15 U.S.C. 77xxx) (relating to un-35 lawful representations); or

1           “(v) section 14(e), as amended (15 U.S.C. 78n(e))
2           (relating to fraudulent tender offers for securities); or

3           “(vi) section 16(c), as amended (15 U.S.C. 78p(c))
4           (relating to short sales of securities by officers, directors,
5           and principal shareholders);

6           “(B) section 12(h) of the Public Utility Holding Com-
7           pany Act of 1935 (15 U.S.C. 79l(h)) (relating to the pro-
8           hibition of political contributions by public utility holding 9           companies and their subsidiaries);

10          “(C) any of the following provisions of the Investment
11          Company Act of 1940, as amended:

12           “(i) section 7 (15 U.S.C. 80a-7) (relating to trans-
13           actions by unregistered investment companies);

14           “(ii) section 17(a), (d), or (e) (15 U.S.C. 80a-17(a),
15           (d), or (e)), or a rule thereunder (relating to conflicts
16           of interest in the acquisition or disposition of property
17           and securities by registered investment companies and 18           their affiliates and by joint enterprises and profit sharing 19           plans involving such persons);

20           “(iii) section 21, as amended (15 U.S.C. 80a-21)
21           (relating to loans by registered investment companies to 22           controlling shareholders or to others contrary to the 23           policies of such companies);

24           “(iv) section 206 (1), (2), or (3) of the Investment
25           Advisers Act of 1940, as amended (15 U.S.C. 80b-6 (1), 26           (2), or (3)) (relating to fraud by investment advisers);

27           or

28          “(4) fails to file a report or document required to be filed under:

29           “(A) section 16(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934,
30           as amended (15 U.S.C. 78p(a)) (relating to ownership re-
31           ports by officers, directors, and major shareholders of regis-32           tered corporations);

33           “(B) section 17(a) of the Public Utility Holding Company
34           Act of 1935 (15 U.S.C. 79q) (relating to ownership reports
35           of officers, directors, and major shareholders of registered 36           public utility holding companies); or

37           “(C) section 30(f) of the Investment Company Act of 38           1940, as amended (15 U.S.C. 80a-29(f)) (relating to owner-39           ship reports of officers, directors, and major shareholders of 40           registered closed end investment companies).

1     “(b) PROOF.—The provisions of section 1345 that apply to section
2 1343 (Making a False Statement) apply also to this section.

3     “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

4         “(1) a Class D felony in the circumstances set forth in subsec-
5 tion (a) (1);

6         “(2) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in subsec-
7 tion (a) (2), (a) (3), or (a) (4);

8     “§ 1762. Monetary Offenses

9     “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he fails to file a 10 report, or to make or maintain a record, as required under:

11         “(1) section 411 of the National Housing Act, as added by 12 section 102 of the Act of October 26, 1970 (12 U.S.C. 1730d) (re-
13 lating to records and reports by institutions insured by the Federal 14 Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation);

15         “(2) section 21 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as added
16 by section 101 of the Act of October 26, 1970 (12 U.S.C. 1829b)
17 (relating to records and reports by banks insured by the Federal 18 Deposit Insurance Corporation);

19         “(3) chapter 2 of title I of the Act of October 26, 1970 (12
20 U.S.C. 1951 et seq.) (relating to records and reports by uninsured 21 banks and institutions); or

22         “(4) the Currency and Foreign Transactions Reporting Act
23 (31 U.S.C. 1051 et seq.) (relating to records and reports con-
24 cerning domestic currency transactions, exports and imports of 25 monetary instruments, and foreign monetary transactions).

26     “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

27         “(1) a Class D felony if the offense is committed:

28             “(A) in furtherance of any other violation of federal law;
29             or

30             “(B) as part of a pattern of illegal activity involving 31 transactions exceeding $100,000 in any twelve-month period;

32         “(2) a Class A misdemeanor in any other case.

33 Notwithstanding the provisions of section 2201(b) (1), the authorized 34 fine is $500,000 if the offense is a Class D felony and $100,000 if the 35 offense is a Class A misdemeanor.

36     “§ 1763. Commodities Exchange Offenses

37     “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he violates:

38         (1) section 9(a) of the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended
39 (7 U.S.C. 13(b)) (relating to the manipulation of the price of a 40 commodity in interstate commerce), or section 9(c) or (d) of that

1 Act (7 U.S.C. 13(d) or (e)) (relating to transactions in commod-
 2 ity futures by commissioners, employees, or agents of the Com-
 3 modity Futures Trading Commission); or

4 “(2) the eleventh paragraph of section 25(a) of the Act of
 5 December 23, 1913, as added by the Act of December 24, 1919 (12
 6 U.S.C. 617) (relating to the prohibition on the use of corporate
 7 funds to manipulate the price of a commodity by an agent of a
 8 corporation organized to do foreign banking).

9 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
 10 felony.

11 “§ 1764. Antitrust Offenses

12 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he violates sec-
 13 tion 1, 2, or 3 of the Sherman Act of July 2, 1890, as amended (15
 14 U.S.C. 1, 2, or 3) (relating to agreements in restraint of trade and 15 monopolizing trade).

16 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
 17 felony. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 2201(b)(2), the 18 authorized fine for a corporation is $1,000,000, or the alternative au-
 19 thorized fine set forth in section 2201(c).

20 “Chapter 18.—OFFENSES INVOLVING PUBLIC ORDER, 21 SAFETY, HEALTH, AND WELFARE

“Subchapter

“A. Organized Crime Offenses.

“B. Drug Offenses.

“C. Explosives and Firearms Offenses.

“D. Riot Offenses.

“E. Gambling, Obscenity, and Prostitution Offenses.

“F. Public Health Offenses.

“G. Miscellaneous Offenses.

22 “Subchapter A.—Organized Crime Offenses

“Sec.

“1801. Operating a Racketeering Syndicate.

“1802. Racketeering.

“1803. Washing Racketeering Proceeds.

“1804. Loansharking.

“1805. Facilitating a Racketeering Activity by Violence.

“1806. Definitions for Subchapter A.

23 “§ 1801. Operating a Racketeering Syndicate

24 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he organizes, 25 owns, controls, manages, directs, finances, or otherwise participates in 26 a supervisory capacity in a racketeering syndicate.

27 “(b) PROOF.—In a prosecution under this section, proof that a per-28 son has shared in the proceeds from a racketeering syndicate to the 29 extent of $5,000 or more in any thirty day period constitutes prima
 30 facie evidence that the person has organized, owned, controlled, man-

1 aged, directed, financed, or otherwise participated in a supervisory
2 capacity in such syndicate.

3 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class B
4 felony.

5 “§ 1802. Racketeering

6 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, through a pat-
7 tern of racketeering activity, he acquires or maintains an interest in,
8 or conducts, an enterprise.

9 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class B
10 felony.

11 “§ 1803. Washing Racketeering Proceeds

12 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, by using or in-
13 vesting proceeds from a pattern of racketeering activity, he acquires
14 or maintains an interest in, or establishes or conducts, an enterprise.

15 “(b) DEFENSE.—It is a defense to a prosecution under this section
16 that the proceeds were used to purchase securities of the enterprise on 17 the open market without intent to control or participate in the control
18 of the enterprise, or to assist another person to do so, if the securities 19 of the enterprise held by the purchaser, the members of his immediate 20 family, and his or their accomplices in any pattern of racketeering ac-
21 tivity after such purchase do not amount in the aggregate to one per-22 cent or more of the outstanding securities of any one class, and do not 23 confer, either in law or in fact, the power to elect one or more directors
24 of the enterprise.

25 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class C
26 felony.

27 “§ 1804. Loansharking

28 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

29 “(1) makes or finances an extortionate extension of credit;

30 “(2) makes or finances an extension of credit:

31 “(A) having, in fact, an aggregate value in excess of $100,
32 including unpaid interest or similar charges and any other
33 outstanding extensions of credit to the same debtor;

34 “(B) carrying a rate of interest that exceeds an annual rate
35 of forty-five percent, calculated according to the actuarial
36 method of allocating payments between principal and interest
37 under which a payment is applied first to the accumulated
38 interest and the balance is applied to the unpaid principal;
39 and

1           “(C) concerning which the repayment, or the performance
2 of any promise given in return, would not in fact be enforce-
3 able through civil judicial process against the debtor:

4           “(i) in the jurisdiction within which the debtor, if an 5 individual, resided at the time the extension of credit was 6 made; or

7           “(ii) in every jurisdiction within which the debtor, if 8 an organization, was incorporated or qualified to do busi-
9 ness at the time the extension of credit was made;

10          “(3) collects a repayment of an extension of credit that was 11 made or financed unlawfully, such making or financing having 12 been in violation of subsection (a) (1) or (a) (2); or

13          “(4) retaliates against any person for failing to repay an exten-
14 sion of credit made or financed in violation of subsection (a) (1)
15 or (a) (2) by subjecting any person to bodily injury, kidnapping,
16 or injury to reputation, or by damaging property.

17          “(b) PROOF.—In a prosecution under subsection (a) (1), if evidence
18 is introduced tending to show the existence of the circumstances de-
19 scribed in subsection (a) (2) (B) or (a) (2) (C), and direct evidence 20 is not available to show the understanding of the creditor and the 21 debtor concerning the possible consequences of a delay in making re-
22 payment or a failure to make repayment, for the purpose of showing
23 that understanding the court may permit the introduction of evidence 24 concerning the reputation as to collection practices of the creditor in 25 any community of which the debtor was a member at the time of the 26 extension of credit.

27          “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

28           “(1) a Class C felony in the circumstances set forth in subsection
29 (a) (1);

30           “(2) a Class D felony in the circumstances set forth in subsec-
31 tion (a) (2);

32           “(3) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in subsec-
33 tion (a) (3) or (a) (4).

34          “§ 1805. Facilitating a Racketeering Activity by Violence

35           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent to 36 facilitate a racketeering activity, he engages in any conduct constitut-
37 ing an offense under a section in subchapter A or B of chapter 16.

38           “(b) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, ‘racketeering activity’
39 does not include conduct constituting a felony under section 1601 (Mur-
40 der, 1602 (Manslaughter), 1611 (Maiming), 1612 (Aggravated Bat-

1 tery), or 1615 (Terrorizing), or under a state statute relating to
2 murder.

3 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class D
4 felony.

5 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
6 described in this section if:

7 “(1) the United States mail or a facility of interstate or foreign
8 commerce is used in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
9 tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the 10 distribution of the proceeds of the offense; or

11 “(2) movement of a person across a state or United States
12 boundary occurs in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
13 tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense or in the dis-
14 tribution of the proceeds of the offense.

15 “§ 1806. Definitions for Subchapter A

16 “As used in this subchapter:

17 “(a) ‘creditor’ means a person who makes an extension of 18 credit, or who claims by, under, or through a person making an
19 extension of credit;

20 “(b) ‘debtor’ means a person to whom an extension of credit
21 is made, or a person who guarantees the repayment of an exten-
22 sion of credit or who undertakes to indemnify the creditor against 23 loss from a failure to repay the extension of credit;

24 “(c) ‘extension of credit’ means a loan, a renewal of a loan, or 25 a tacit or express agreement concerning the deferment of the 26 repayment or satisfaction of a debt or claim, however the loan
27 or renewal or agreement arose, whether it is acknowledged or 28 disputed, and whether it is valid or invalid;

29 “(d) ‘extortionate extension of credit’ means an extension of 30 credit with respect to which it is the understanding of the creditor
31 and the debtor, at the time it is made, that delay in making re-
32 payment or failure to make repayment could result in the use of 33 force, or in threatening or placing any person in fear that any 34 person will be subjected to bodily injury, kidnapping, or injury
35 to reputation, or that any property will be damaged;

36 “(e) ‘pattern of racketeering activity’ means two or more sep-
37 arate acts of racketeering activity, at least one of which oc-
38 curred after the effective date of this subchapter, that 39 have the same or similar purposes, results, participants, victims,

1 or methods of commission, or otherwise are interrelated by dis-
2 tinguishing characteristics and are not isolated events;

3 “(f) ‘racketeering activity’ means:

4 “(1) conduct constituting a felony under section 1321
5 (Witness Bribery), 1322 (Corrupting a Witness or an In-
6 formant), 1323 (Tampering with a Witness or an Informant), 7 1351 (Bribery), 1352 (Graft), 1403 (Alcohol and To-
8 bacco Tax Offenses), 1411 (Smuggling), 1412 (Trafficking in 9 Smuggled Property), 1601 (Murder), 1602 (Manslaughter),
10 1611 (Maiming), 1612 (Aggravated Battery), 1615 (Ter-
11 rorizing), 1621 (Kidnapping), 1701 (Arson), 1711 (Bur-
12 glary), 1712 (Criminal Entry), 1721 (Robbery), 1722 (Extor-
13 tion), 1723 (Blackmail), 1731 (Theft), 1732 (Trafficking
14 in Stolen Property), 1734 (Executing a Fraudulent Scheme),
15 1735 (Bankruptcy Fraud), 1741 (Counterfeiting), 1742
16 (Forgery), 1745 (Trafficking in a Counterfeiting Imple-
17 ment), 1751 (Commercial Bribery), 1752 (Labor Bribery),
18 1753 (Sports Bribery), 1761 (Securities Offenses), 1762
19 (Monetary Offenses), 1804 (Loansharking), 1811 (Traffick-
20 ing in an Opiate), 1812 (Trafficking in Drugs), 1821 (Explo-
21 sives Offenses), 1822 (Firearms Offenses), 1841 (Engaging
22 in a Gambling Business), or 1843 (Conducting a Prostitution
23 Business);

24 “(2) conduct constituting a felony under a state statute
25 relating to murder, kidnapping, arson, robbery, bribery, ex-
26 tortion, trafficking in narcotics or other dangerous drugs, or 27 engaging in a gambling business; or

28 “(3) conduct defined as ‘racketeering activity’ in former 29 18 U.S.C. 1961(1) (B), (C), or (D) (part of section 901(a)
30 of the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970).

31 “(g) ‘racketeering syndicate’ means a group of five or more per-
32 sons who, individually or collectively, engage on a continuing 33 basis in conduct constituting racketeering activity, other than 34 racketeering activity consisting solely of conduct constituting a 35 felony under section 1841 (Engaging in a Gambling Business) or 36 1843 (Conducting a Prostitution Business) or under the law of a
37 state relating to engaging in a gambling business;

38 “(h) ‘repayment’ includes (1) a return, in whole or in part, of 39 an extension of credit, and (2) a payment of interest on, or of a
40 charge for, an extension of credit.

1           “Subchapter B.—Drug Offenses

“Sec.

“1811. Trafficking in an Opiate.

“1812. Trafficking in Drugs.

“1813. Possessing Drugs.

“1814. Violating a Drug Regulation.

“1815. General Provisions for Subchapter B.

2           “§ 1811. Trafficking in an Opiate

3           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

4                 “(1) manufactures or traffics in an opiate;

5                 “(2) creates or traffics in a counterfeit substance containing an 6                 opiate;

7                 “(3) imports or exports an opiate, or possesses an opiate aboard
8                 a vehicle arriving in or departing from the United States or the 9                 customs territory of the United States; or

10                “(4) manufactures or traffics in an opiate for import into the
11                United States.

12           “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

13                “(1) a Class B felony if:

14                   “(A) the opiate weighs 100 grams or more;

15                   “(B) the offense consists of distributing the opiate to a 16                   person who is less than eighteen years old and who is at least 17                   five years younger than the defendant; or

18                   “(C) the offense is committed after the defendant had been 19                   convicted of a felony under federal, state, or foreign law
20                   relating to an opiate, or while he was on release pending trial
21                   for an offense described in subsection (a);

22                “(2) a Class C felony in any other case.

23           Notwithstanding the provisions of part III of this title, the court
24           may not sentence the defendant to probation but shall sentence him 25           to a term of imprisonment of not less than two years and to a term of 26           parole ineligibility of not less than two years, with the sentence to 27           run consecutively to any other term of imprisonment imposed upon 28           the defendant, unless the court finds that, at the time of the offense, 29           the defendant was less than eighteen years old; the defendant’s mental 30           capacity was significantly impaired, although the impairment was not 31           such as to constitute a defense to prosecution; the defendant was under 32           unusual and substantial duress, although not such duress as would con-
33           stitute a defense to prosecution; or the defendant was an accomplice, 34           the conduct constituting the offense was principally the conduct of 35           another person, and the defendant’s participation was relatively minor.

1 “§ 1812. Trafficking in Drugs

2 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

3 “(1) manufactures or traffics in a controlled substance other
4 than an opiate;5 “(2) creates or traffics in a counterfeit substance other than a 6 counterfeit substance containing an opiate;7 “(3) imports or exports a controlled substance other than an 8 opiate, or possesses a controlled substance other than an opiate
9 aboard a vehicle arriving in or departing from the United States
10 or the customs territory of the United States; or11 “(4) manufactures or traffics in a controlled substance other
12 than an opiate, and other than a substance listed in Schedule III,
13 IV, or V, for import into the United States.

14 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

15 “(1) a Class C felony if the controlled substance is a narcotic
16 drug listed in Schedule I or II other than an opiate;

17 “(2) a Class D felony if the controlled substance is:

18 “(A) a substance listed in Schedule I or II other than:

19 “(i) a narcotic drug; or

20 “(ii) 300 grams or less of marihuana; or

21 “(B) a substance listed in Schedule III;

22 “(3) a Class E felony if the controlled substance is a substance
23 listed in Schedule IV;

24 “(4) a Class A misdemeanor if the controlled substance is:

25 “(A) a substance listed in Schedule V; or

26 “(B) 100 to 300 grams of marijuana;

27 “(5) a Class B misdemeanor if the controlled substance is less
28 than 100 grams of marijuana;29 unless the offense consists of distributing the controlled substance to 30 a person who is less than eighteen years old and who is at least five 31 years younger than the defendant, in which case the offense is of the 32 class next above that otherwise specified.33 “§ 1813. Possessing Drugs34 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he possesses a
35 controlled substance, other than 10 grams or less of marihuana.36 “(b) DEFENSE.—It is a defense to a prosecution under this section 37 that the controlled substance was obtained by the defendant from,
38 or pursuant to a valid prescription or order issued by, a practitioner
39 acting in the course of his professional practice.

1 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

2 “(1) a Class D felony if the controlled substance is 100 grams
3 or more of an opiate;

4 “(2) a Class A misdemeanor if the controlled substance is:

5 “(A) less than 100 grams of an opiate; or

6 “(B) a substance other than an opiate or marihuana;

7 “(3) a Class C misdemeanor in any other case, but, notwith-
8 standing the provisions of section 2201 (b) or (c), the authorized
9 fine is $500.

10 “§ 1814. Violating a Drug Regulation

11 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he violates:

12 “(1) section 402 (a) or (b) of the Controlled Substances Act
13 (21 U.S.C. 842(a) or (b)) (relating to the dispensing and manu-
14 facturing of controlled substances by registered manufacturers,
15 distributors, and dispensers of controlled substances);

16 “(2) section 403(a) (1), (2), (3), or (5) of the Controlled Sub-17 stances Act (21 U.S.C. 843(a) (1), (2), (3), or (5)) (relating to 18 the distribution of controlled substances by registrants and the 19 use of labeling implements to render a drug a counterfeit sub-20 stance); or

21 “(3) section 1004 of the Controlled Substances Import and 22 Export Act (21 U.S.C. 954) (relating to the importation for 23 transshipment to another country of controlled substances).

24 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

25 “(1) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in sub-
26 section (a) (2);

27 “(2) a Class A misdemeanor in the circumstances set forth in
28 subsection (a) (1) or (a) (3).

29 “§ 1815. General Provisions for Subchapter B

30 “(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this subchapter:

31 “(1) ‘controlled substance’, ‘counterfeit substance’, ‘distribute’
32 (incorporated through the definition of the term ‘traffic’ in section 33 111), ‘manufacture’, ‘marihuana’, ‘narcotic drug’, and ‘practi-
34 tioner’ have the meanings set forth in section 102 of the Controlled
35 Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802);

36 “(2) ‘customs territory of the United States’ has the meaning
37 set forth in section 1001 of the Controlled Substances Import and 38 Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951);

39 “(3) ‘dispense’ (incorporated through the definition of the 40 term ‘traffic’ in section 111) means to deliver a controlled sub-

1 stance to an ultimate user or research subject by, or pursuant to
 2 the order of, a practitioner, and includes the prescribing or ad-
 3 ministering of a controlled substance and the packaging, labelling,
 4 or compounding necessary to prepare the substance for such 5 delivery;

6 “(4) ‘import’ means to import into the United States from any
 7 place outside the United States, or into the customs territory
 8 of the United States from any place outside the customs territory
 9 of the United States but within the United States;

10 “(5) ‘opiate’ means a mixture or substance containing a detect-
 11 able amount of any narcotic drug that is a controlled substance
 12 listed in Schedule I or II, other than a narcotic drug consisting 13 of (A) coca leaves; (B) a compound, manufacture, salt, deriva-
 14 tive, or preparation of coca leaves; or (C) a substance chemically
 15 identical thereto;

16 “(6) ‘Schedule I’, ‘Schedule II’, ‘Schedule III’, ‘Schedule IV’,
 17 and ‘Schedule V’ refer to the schedules of controlled substances
 18 established by section 202 of the Controlled Substances Act (21
 19 U.S.C. 812).

20 “(b) DEFENSE.—It is a defense to a prosecution under section 1811,
 21 1812, or 1813 that the actor’s conduct was authorized by the provisions
 22 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.) or the Con-
 23 trolled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951 et seq.).

24 “Subchapter C.—Explosives and Firearms Offenses

“See.

“1821. Explosives Offenses.

“1822. Firearms Offenses.

“1823. Using a Weapon in the Course of a Crime.

“1824. Possessing a Weapon aboard an Aircraft.

25 “§ 1821. Explosives Offenses

26 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

27 “(1) transports or possesses an explosive with intent that it be 28 used, or with knowledge that it may be used, to commit a felony;

29 “(2) violates a provision included in subsection (a) through
 30 (k) of section 1103 of the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970,
 31 as amended by section 201 of the Criminal Code Reform Act of 32 1977 (15 U.S.C. —) (relating to the regulation and licensing
 33 of the business of importing, manufacturing, or dealing in ex-
 34 plosive materials);

35 “(3) violates:

36 “(A) section 4472(14) of the Revised Statutes of the 37 United States, as amended (46 U.S.C. 170 (14));

1           “(B) section 902(h)(2) of the Federal Aviation Act of 2           1958, as amended (49 U.S.C. 1472(h)(2)); or

3           “(C) section 110(b) of the Hazardous Materials Trans-
4           portation Act (49 U.S.C. 1809(b)); or

5           “(4) possesses an explosive in a government building.

6           “(b) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, ‘explosive’ includes a
7           destructive device; gunpowder, smokeless powder, or powder used
8           for blasting material; and a fuze; detonator, or other detonating
9           agent.

10          “(c) DEFENSE.—It is a defense to a prosecution under subsection
11          (a)(4) that the possession was in conformity with the written con-
12          sent of the government agency or person responsible for the manage-
13          ment of such building.

14          “(d) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

15           “(1) a Class D felony in the circumstances set forth in:

16           “(A) subsection (a)(1); or

17           “(B) subsection (a)(2) if the violation is of a provision 18           set forth in subsection (a) through (i) of section 1103 of the 19           Organized Crime Control Act of 1970, as amended (15
20           U.S.C. —);

21           “(2) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in sub-
22           section (a)(3);

23           “(3) a Class A misdemeanor in the circumstances set forth in:

24           “(A) subsection (a)(2) if the violation is of a provision
25           set forth in subsection (j) or (k) of section 1103 of the Orga-
26           nized Crime Control Act of 1970, as amended (15 U.S.C. —);

27           or

28           “(B) subsection (a)(4).

29          “(e) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
30          described in:

31           “(1) subsection (a)(1) if the explosive is being transported,
32           or has been transported, in interstate or foreign commerce;

33           “(2) subsection (a)(4) if the building is owned by, or is under
34           the care, custody, or control of the United States.

35          “§ 1822. Firearms Offenses

36          “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

37           “(1) transports or possesses a firearm or ammunition with in-38           tent that it be used, or with knowledge that it may be used, to 39           commit a felony;

40           “(2) violates section 103 or 104 of the Gun Control Act of 1968,
41           as amended by section 202 of the Criminal Code Reform Act of

1 1977 (15 U.S.C. —) (relating to the regulation and licensing of the 2 business of importing, manufacturing, or dealing in firearms or 3 ammunition);

4 “(3) violates section 5861 of the Internal Revenue Code of 5 1954, as amended (26 U.S.C. 5861) (relating to the registration
6 of importers, manufacturers, and dealers in firearms and the pay-
7 ment of a special occupational tax); or

8 “(4) violates section 1202 of the Omnibus Crime Control and 9 Safe Streets Act of 1968 (15 U.S.C. —) (relating to the receipt,
10 possession, or transportation of firearms by persons prohibited
11 from engaging in such conduct).

12 “(b) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, ‘firearm’ includes a
13 frame or receiver of a firearm and a firearm silencer or muffler.

14 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

15 “(1) a Class D felony in the circumstances set forth in subsec-
16 tion (a) (1), (a) (2), or (a) (3);

17 “(2) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in subsec-
18 tion (a) (4).

19 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
20 described in subsection (a) (1) if the firearm or ammunition is being 21 transported, or has been transported, in interstate or foreign commerce.

22 “§ 1823. Using a Weapon in the Course of a Crime

23 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, during the com-
24 mission of a crime, he:

25 “(1) displays or otherwise uses a firearm or a destructive device;

26 “(2) possesses a firearm or a destructive device; or

27 “(3) displays or otherwise uses:

28 “(A) a dangerous weapon other than a firearm or a destruc-
29 tive device; or

30 “(B) an imitation of a firearm or a destructive device.

31 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

32 “(1) a Class D felony in the circumstances set forth in subsec-
33 tion (a) (1);

34 “(2) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in subsec-
35 tion (a) (2) or (a) (3).

36 Notwithstanding the provisions of part III of this title, if the offense
37 is committed in the circumstance set forth in subsection (a) (1) or 38 (a) (2) the court may not sentence the defendant to probation but shall 39 sentence him to a term of imprisonment of not less than two years
40 for an offense described in subsection (a) (1) or one year for an

1 offense described in subsection (a) (2) and to a term of parole ineligi-
 2 bility of not less than two years for an offense described in subsection
 3 (a) (1) or one year for an offense described in subsection (a) (2), with 4 the sentence to run consecutively to any other term of imprisonment
 5 imposed upon the defendant, unless the court finds that, at the time
 6 of the offense, the defendant was less than eighteen years old; the 7 defendant's mental capacity was significantly impaired, although the 8 impairment was not such as to constitute a defense to prosecution; the 9 defendant was under unusual and substantial duress, although not 10 such duress as would constitute a defense to prosecution; or the de-11 fendant was an accomplice, the conduct constituting the offense was 12 principally the conduct of another person, and the defendant's partici-
 13 pation was relatively minor.

14 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
 15 described in this section if the offense occurs during the commission 16 of any other offense described in this title over which federal jurisdic-
 17 tion exists.

18 “§ 1824. Possessing a Weapon aboard an Aircraft

19 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he possesses or 20 secretes aboard an aircraft :

21 “(1) a dangerous weapon, other than a destructive device, that 22 in fact is concealed and that is, or that would be, accessible to such 23 person in flight ; or

24 “(2) a destructive device that in fact is concealed.

25 “(b) DEFENSE.—It is a defense to a prosecution under this section
 26 that the actor's conduct was authorized under a regulation issued by 27 the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency.

28 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
 29 misdemeanor.

30 “(d) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
 31 described in this section if the offense is committed on an aircraft in,
 32 or intended for operation in, air transportation or intrastate air trans-
 33 portation as defined in section 101 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958,
 34 as amended (49 U.S.C. 1301).

35 “Subchapter D.—Riot Offenses

“Sec.

“1831. Leading a Riot.

“1832. Providing Arms for a Riot.

“1833. Engaging in a Riot.

“1834. Definitions for Subchapter D.

1   “§ 1831. Leading a Riot

2    “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if:

3       “(1) he causes a riot by incitement, or during a riot he incites
4       participation in the riot; or5       “(2) during a riot he urges participation in, leads, or gives 6       commands, instructions, or directions in furtherance of, the riot.

7    “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

8       “(1) a Class D felony if the riot involves persons in a facility
9       used for official detention;

10       “(2) a Class E felony in any other case.

11   “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
12   described in this section if:13       “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of 14       the United States;15       “(2) the riot involves persons in a federal facility used for 16       official detention; or17       “(3) movement of a person across a state or United States
18       boundary occurs in the execution or consummation of the offense.19   “§ 1832. Providing Arms for a Riot20   “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense, if, with intent to 21   promote a riot, he supplies, or teaches the preparation or use of, a
22   firearm, a destructive device, or another dangerous weapon.

23   “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

24       “(1) a Class D felony if it involves the supplying of a firearm
25       or a destructive device;

26       “(2) a Class E felony in any other case.

27   “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
28   described in this section if:29       “(1) a circumstance specified in section 1831(c) exists or has oc-
30       curred; or31       “(2) the firearm, destructive device, or other dangerous weapon
32       supplied is moved across a state or United States boundary in the 33       commission of the offense.34   “§ 1833. Engaging in a Riot35   “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he engages in 36   a riot.

37   “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

38       “(1) a Class A misdemeanor if the riot involves persons in a
39       facility used for official detention;

40       “(2) a Class B misdemeanor in any other case.

1     “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
2 described in this section if:

3         “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction
4 of the United States;

5         “(2) the offense is committed in a federal facility used for of-
6 ficial detention; or

7         “(3) the riot obstructs a federal government function.

8     “§ 1834. Definition for Subchapter D

9         “As used in this subchapter, ‘riot’ means a public disturbance (a) 10 that involves ten or more persons as participants; (b) that involves 11 violent and tumultuous conduct on the part of the participants; and 12 (c) that causes, or creates a grave danger of imminently causing,
13 injury to persons or damage to property. ‘Riot’ does not include or-
14 derly and lawful conduct for the purpose of pursuing the legitimate
15 objectives of organized labor.

16     “Subchapter E.—Gambling, Obscenity, and Prostitution Offenses

“Sec.

“1841. Engaging in a Gambling Business.

“1842. Disseminating Obscene Material.

“1843. Conducting a Prostitution Business.

17     “§ 1841. Engaging in a Gambling Business

18         “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

19             “(1) owns, controls, manages, supervises, directs, conducts,
20 finances, or otherwise engages in a gambling business;

21             “(2) receives lay-off wagers or otherwise provides reinsurance
22 in relation to persons engaged in gambling;

23             “(3) carries or sends:

24                 “(A) a gambling device;

25                 “(B) gambling information; or

26                 “(C) gambling proceeds;

27 from within a state to any place outside the state; or

28             “(4) otherwise establishes, promotes, manages, or carries on an 29 enterprise involving gambling.

30         “(b) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

31             “(1) ‘gambling business’ means a business involving gambling
32 of any kind that, in fact:

33                 “(A) has five or more persons engaged in the business; and 34                 “(B) has been in substantially continuous operation for a 35 period of thirty days or more, or has taken in $2,000 or more

36 in any single day;

1           “(2) ‘gambling device’ means:

2           “(A) any device covered by section 1 of the Act of January
3           2, 1951, as amended (15 U.S.C. 1171), and not excluded by 4           section 9 (2) or (3) of the Act of January 2, 1951, as added
5           by section 6 of the Gambling Devices Act of 1962 (15 U.S.C.
6           1178 (2) or (3)); or

7           “(B) any record, paraphernalia, ticket, certificate, bill,
8           slip, token, writing, scratch sheet, or other means of carry-
9           ing on bookmaking, wagering pools, bingo or keno games, lot-
10          teries, policy, bolita, numbers, or similar games, or any equip-11          ment for carrying on card or dice games other than cards or 12          dice used in such games;

13          “(3) ‘gambling information’ means information consisting of,
14          or assisting in, the placing of a bet or wager, or the purchase of a
15          ticket in a lottery or similar game of chance.

16          “(c) DEFENSE.—It is a defense to a prosecution:

17          “(1) under subsection (a) (1), (a) (2), or (a) (4) that the kind
18          of gambling business or enterprise, the manner in which the busi-
19          ness or enterprise was operated, and the defendant’s participation 20          therein, were legal in all states and localities in which it was 21          carried on, including any state and locality from which a customer
22          placed a wager with, or otherwise patronized, the gambling busi-
23          ness or enterprise, and any state and locality in which the wager
24          was received or to which it was transmitted.

25          “(2) under subsection (a) (3) that:

26          “(A) the gambling device was carried or sent into, or was 27          en route to, solely a state and locality in which the use of 28          such a device was legal;

29          “(B) the defendant was a common or public contract car-
30          rier, or an employee thereof, and was carrying the gambling
31          device in the usual course of business;

32          “(C) the defendant was a player or bettor and the gambling
33          device he was carrying or sending was solely a ticket or other 34          embodiment of his claim;

35          “(D) the transmission of the gambling information was 36          made solely in connection with news reporting;

37          “(E) the transmission of the gambling information was 38          solely from a state and locality in which such gambling was 39          legal into a state and locality in which such gambling was 40          legal; or

1           “(F) the gambling proceeds were obtained by the defendant
2 as a result of his lawful participation in gambling which was
3 legal in all states and localities in which it was carried on,
4 including any state and locality from which the defendant
5 placed a wager or otherwise participated in gambling activity,
6 and any state and locality in which his wager was received
7 or to which it was transmitted.

8           “(d) ESTABLISHING PROBABLE CAUSE.—If five or more persons are 9 engaged in a gambling business, and such business operates for two 10 or more successive days, then, solely for the purpose of obtaining war-
11 rants for arrests, interceptions of communications, and other searches 12 and seizures, probable cause that the business has taken in $2,000 or 13 more in any single day shall be considered to be established.

14           “(e) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

15           “(1) a Class D felony in the circumstances set forth in subsec-
16 tion (a) (1) or (a) (2);

17           “(2) a Class E felony in the circumstances set forth in subsec-
18 tion (a) (3) or (a) (4).

19           “(f) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
20 described in:

21           “(1) subsection (a) (1) or (a) (2) if the offense is committed:

22           “(A) within the general jurisdiction of the United States;

23           “(B) within the special jurisdiction of the United States;

24           or

25           “(C) within the extraterritorial jurisdiction of the United 26 States to the extent applicable under section 204;

27           “(2) subsection (a) (3) or (a) (4) if:

28           “(A) the United States mail or a facility of interstate or 29 foreign commerce is used in the planning, promotion, man-
30 agement, execution, consummation, or concealment of the of-31 fense, or in the distribution of the proceeds of the offense; or

32           “(B) movement of any person across a state or United 33 States boundary occurs in the planning, promotion, manage-
34 ment, execution, consummation, or concealment of the offense,
35 or in the distribution of the proceeds of the offense.

36           “§ 1842. Disseminating Obscene Material

37           “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he:

38           “(1) disseminates obscene material:

39           “(A) to a minor; or

1           “(B) to any person in a manner affording no immediately
2           effective opportunity to avoid exposure to such material; or 3           “(2) commercially disseminates obscene material to any person.

4 (b) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

5           “(1) ‘commercially disseminate’ means to disseminate for 6           profit;

7           “(2) ‘disseminate’ means:

8               “(A) to transfer, distribute, dispense, lend, display, ex-
9               hibit, send, or broadcast, whether for profit or otherwise; or

10               “(B) to produce, transport, or possess with intent to do any 11               of the foregoing;

12           “(3) ‘minor’ means an unmarried person less than seventeen
13           years old;

14           “(4) ‘obscene material’ means material that:

15               “(A) sets forth in a patently offensive way:

16                   “(i) an explicit representation, or a detailed written 17                   or verbal description, of an act of sexual intercourse, in-
18                   cluding genital-genital, anal-genital, or oral-genital
19                   intercourse, whether between human beings or between a 20                   human being and an animal; of masturbation; or of 21                   flagellation, torture, or other violence indicating a sado-
22                   masochistic sexual relationship; or

23                   “(ii) an explicit, close-up representation of a human 24                   genital organ;

25               “(B) taken as a whole, appeals predominantly to the pru-
26               rient interest of:

27                   “(i) the average person, applying contemporary com-
28                   munity standards; or

29                   “(ii) the average person within a sexually deviant 30                   class of persons, if such material is designed for, and is 31                   primarily disseminated to, such class of persons; and

32               “(C) taken as a whole, lacks serious artistic, scientific, lit-
33               erary, or political value.

34           “(c) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES.—It is an affirmative defense to a pros-35           ecution under this section that dissemination of the material was 36           restricted to:

37               “(1) a person associated with an institution of higher learn-
38               ing, either as a member of the faculty or as an enrolled student,
39               teaching or pursuing a bona fide course of study, or conducting or

1 engaging in a bona fide research program, to which such material
2 is pertinent; or

3 “(2) a person whose receipt of such material was authorized in 4 writing by a licensed or certified psychiatrist, psychologist, or 5 medical practitioner.

6 “(d) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
7 felony.

8 “(e) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
9 described in this section if:

10 “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
11 the United States;

12 “(2) the United States mail or a facility in interstate or for-
13 eign commerce is used in the commission of the offense; or 14 “(3) the material is moved across a state or United States

15 boundary.

16 “§ 1843. Conducting a Prostitution Business

17 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he owns, controls,
18 manages, supervises, directs, finances, procures patrons for, or recruits
19 participants in, a prostitution business.

20 “(b) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

21 “(1) ‘prostitution’ means engaging in a sexual act, as defined in 22 section 1646(a)(1), as consideration for anything of pecuniary
23 value;

24 “(2) ‘prostitution business’ means a business in which a person
25 controls, manages, supervises, or directs the prostitution of an-
26 other person.

27 “(c) DEFENSE.—It is a defense to a prosecution under this section
28 that the prostitution business and the prostitution involved was legal 29 in all states and localities in which it was carried on.

30 “(d) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

31 “(1) a Class D felony if the business involves prostitution, or 32 recruiting for prostitution, of a person less than eighteen years
33 old;

34 “(2) a Class E felony in any other case.

35 “(e) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
36 described in this section if:

37 “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
38 the United States;

1       “(2) the United States mail or a facility of interstate or foreign
2 commerce is used in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
3 tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the dis-
4 tribution of the proceeds of the offense; or

5       “(3) movement of any person across a state or United States
6 boundary occurs in the planning, promotion, management, execu-
7 tion, consummation, or concealment of the offense, or in the dis-
8 tribution of the proceeds of the offense.

9       “Subchapter F.—Public Health Offenses

“Sec.

“1851. Fraud in a Health Related Industry.

“1852. Distributing Adulterated Food.

“1853. Environmental Pollution.

10       “§ 1851. Fraud in a Health Related Industry

11       “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, with intent to 12 defraud, he violates:

13       “(1) section 9, 10, 11, 14, or 17 of the Poultry Products Inspec-
14 tion Act, as amended (21 U.S.C. 458, 459, 460, 463, or 466) 15 (relating to the marking, labeling, and packaging of poultry and 16 poultry products);

17       “(2) section 10, 11, 19, 20, 24, 201, 202, 203, or 204 of the Federal 18 Meat Inspection Act, as amended (21 U.S.C. 610, 611, 619, 620, 624,
19 641, 642, 643, or 644) (relating to the marking, labeling, and pack-
20 aging of meat and meat products);

21       “(3) section 8 of the Egg Products Inspection Act, as amended
22 (21 U.S.C. 1037) (relating to the marking, labeling, and pack-23 aging of eggs and egg products); or

24       “(4) section 301 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, 25 as amended (21 U.S.C. 331) (relating to the adulteration and mis-
26 branding of a food, drug, device, or cosmetic).

27       “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
28 felony.

29       “§ 1852. Distributing Adulterated Food

30       “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if in the distribu-
31 tion of an adulterated article he violates:

32       “(1) section 9, 10, 11, 14, or 17 of the Poultry Products Inspec-
33 tion Act, as amended (21 U.S.C. 458, 459, 460, 463, or 466) (relat-
34 ing to the distribution of adulterated poultry and poultry prod-35 ucts);

36       “(2) section 10, 11, 19, 20, 24, 201, 202, 203, or 204 of the Federal
37 Meat Inspection Act, as amended (21 U.S.C. 610, 611, 619, 620,

1 624, 641, 642, 643. or 644) (relating to the distribution of adulter-
 2 ated meat and meat products) ; or

3 “(3) section 8 of the Egg Products Inspection Act, as amended
 4 (21 U.S.C. 1037) (relating to the distribution of adulterated eggs
 5 and egg products).

6 “(b) DEFINITION.—The term ‘adulterated’, as used :

7 “(1) in subsection (a) (1) has the meaning set forth in section
 8 4(g) of the Poultry Products Inspection Act, as amended (21
 9 U.S.C. 453(g)), except for paragraph 8 thereof ;

10 “(2) in subsection (a) (2) has the meaning set forth in section
 11 2(m) of the Federal Meat Inspection Act, as amended (21 U.S.C.
 12 601(m)), except for paragraph 8 thereof ;

13 “(3) in subsection (a) (3) has the meaning set forth in section
 14 4(a) of the Egg Products Inspection Act, as amended (21 U.S.C.
 15 1033(a)), except for paragraph 8 thereof.

16 “(c) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class E
 17 felony.

18 “§ 1853. Environmental Pollution

19 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he violates :

20 “(1) section 309(c) (1) of the Federal Water Pollution Con-
 21 trol Act, as added by section 2 of the Act of October 18, 1972
 22 (33 U.S.C. 1319(c) (1)) (relating to the control of water pollu-
 23 tion and to permit conditions and limitations on water pollu-
 24 tion) ;

25 “(2) section 113(c) (1) of the Clean Air Act, as added by 26 section 4(a) of the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1970, and 27 amended (42 U.S.C. 1857c-8(c) (1)) (relating to clean air stand-
 28 ards and implementation plans and orders of the Administrator
 29 under the Clean Air Act) ;

30 “(3) section 11(a) of the Noise Control Act of 1972, as amended
 31 (42 U.S.C. 4910(a)) (relating to the manufacture, sale, and im-32 portation of products that violate noise emission standards) ; or 33 “(4) section 3008(d) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act (42

 34 U.S.C. 692(d)) (relating to transportation and disposal of haz-
 35 ardous waste).

36 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is a Class A
 37 misdemeanor in the circumstances set forth in :

38 “(1) subsection (a) (1), unless prior to the commission of the 39 offense the defendant has been convicted of an offense described

1 in subsection (a) (1), in which case the offense is a Class E felony.

2 “(2) subsection (a) (2), unless prior to the commission of the
3 offense the defendant has been convicted of an offense described
4 in subsection (a) (2), in which case the offense is a Class E felony;

5 “(3) subsection (a) (3), unless prior to the commission of the 6 offense the defendant has been convicted of an offense described
7 in subsection (a) (3), in which case the offense is a Class E felony;

8 “(4) subsection (a) (4), unless prior to the commission of the 9 offense the defendant has been convicted of an offense described in 10 subsection (a) (4), in which case the offense is a Class E felony.

11 Notwithstanding the provisions of section 2201(b), the maximum
12 fine for a Class A misdemeanor described in this section is $25,000
13 per day of violation or the maximum fine otherwise available under 14 section 2201 (b) or (c), whichever is higher, and the maximum fine
15 for a Class E felony described in this section is $50,000 per day of 16 violation or the maximum fine otherwise available under section 2201
17 (b) or (c), whichever is higher.

18 “Subchapter G.—Miscellaneous Offenses

“Sec.

“1861. Failing to Obey a Public Safety Order.

“1862. Violating State or Local Law in an Enclave.

19 “§ 1861. Failing to Obey a Public Safety Order

20 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if he disobeys an 21 order of a public servant to move, disperse, or refrain from specified
22 activity in a particular place, and the order:

23 “(1) is issued in response to a fire, flood, riot, or other condition
24 that creates a risk of serious injury to a person or serious damage
25 to property; and

26 “(2) is, in fact, lawful and reasonably designed to prevent 27 serious bodily injury to a person or serious damage to property.

28 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is an infraction.

29 “(c) JURISDICTION.—There is federal jurisdiction over an offense
30 described in this section if:

31 “(1) the offense is committed within the special jurisdiction of
32 the United States; or

33 “(2) the public servant is a federal public servant.

34 “§ 1862. Violating State or Local Law in an Enclave

35 “(a) OFFENSE.—A person is guilty of an offense if, in a place within 36 the special territorial jurisdiction of the United States as described in 37 section 203(a) (1), (a) (2), or (a) (3), he engages in conduct:

38 “(1) that constitutes an offense under the law then in force
39 in the state or locality in which such place is located;

1 “(2) that does not otherwise constitute an offense under a fed-
2 eral statute applicable in such place; and

3 “(3) that, in light of other federal statutes relating to similar
4 conduct, was not intended to be excluded from the application
5 of this section.

6 “(b) GRADING.—An offense described in this section is:

7 “(1) a Class A misdemeanor if the maximum term of imprison-
8 ment authorized by the state or local law is one year or more; or 9 “(2) a misdemeanor or infraction of the lowest class for which 10 there is authorized under chapter 23 a term of imprisonment

11 equal to or exceeding the maximum term authorized by the state
12 or local law if the maximum term of imprisonment authorized
13 by the state or local law is less than one year.

14 Notwithstanding the classification provided in this section, the term 15 of imprisonment and the fine that may be imposed may not exceed the 16 maximum authorized by the state or local law.

17 “(c) PROOF. In a prosecution under this section whether a law
18 is ‘then in force’ under subsection (a) (1), or an issue under subsec-
19 tion (a) (2) or (a) (3), is a question of law.

20 “PART III.—SENTENCES

“Chapter

“20. General Provisions.

“21. Probation.

“22. Fines.

“23. Imprisonment.

21 “Chapter 20.—GENERAL PROVISIONS

“Sec.

“2001. Authorized Sentences.

“2002. Presentence Reports.

“2003. Imposition of a Sentence.

“2004. Order of Criminal Forfeiture.

“2005. Order of Notice to Victims.

“2006. Order of Restitution.

“2007. Review of a Sentence.

“2008. Implementation of a Sentence.

22 “§ 2001. Authorized Sentences

23 “(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise specifically provided, a 24 defendant who has been found guilty of an offense described in any 25 federal statute shall be sentenced in accordance with the provisions
26 of this chapter so as to achieve the purposes set forth in paragraphs (1)
27 through (4) of section 101 (b).

28 “(b) INDIVIDUALS.—An individual found guilty of an offense shall 29 be sentenced, in accordance with the provisions of section 2003, to:

30 “(1) probation as authorized by chapter 21;

31 “(2) a fine as authorized by chapter 22; or

32 “(3) a term of imprisonment as authorized by chapter 23.

1 A sentence to pay a fine may be imposed in addition to any other
2 sentence.

3 “(c) ORGANIZATIONS.—An organization found guilty of an offense
4 shall be sentenced, in accordance with the provisions of section
5 2003, to:

6 “(1) probation as authorized by chapter 21; or

7 “(2) a fine as authorized by chapter 22.

8 A sentence to pay a fine may be imposed in addition to a sentence to 9 probation.

10 “§ 2002. Presentence Reports

11 “(a) PRESENTENCE INVESTIGATION AND REPORT BY PROBATION OFFI-
12 CER.—A probation officer appointed by the court shall make a presen-13 tence investigation of a defendant found guilty of an offense and 14 shall report the results of the investigation to the court before the 15 imposition of sentence, pursuant to the provisions of Rule 32(c) of 16 the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

17 “(b) PRESENTENCE STUDY AND REPORT BY BUREAU OF PRISONS.—If 18 the court, before or after its receipt of a report specified in subsection 19 (a) or (c), desires more information than is otherwise available to 20 it as a basis for determining the sentence to be imposed on a defendant
21 found guilty of a felony, it may order that the defendant be com-
22 mitted to the custody of the Bureau of Prisons for a period of 23 not more than sixty days. Such an order constitutes a provisional
24 sentence of imprisonment for the maximum term authorized by sec-
25 tion 2301(b) for the offense committed. The Bureau shall conduct a 26 complete study of the defendant during such period, inquiring into 27 such matters as the defendant’s previous delinquency or criminal ex-
28 periences; his social background; his capabilities; his mental, emo-
29 tional, and physical health; and the rehabilitative resources or pro-
30 grams that may be available to suit his needs. The period of com-
31 mitment may, in the discretion of the court, be extended for an 32 additional period of not more than sixty days. By the expiration 33 of the period of commitment, or by the expiration of any extension
34 granted by the court, the Bureau shall return the defendant to the 35 court for final sentencing, shall provide the court with a written report
36 of the results of the study, and shall make to the court whatever rec-
37 ommendations the Bureau believes will be helpful to a proper reso-
38 lution of the case. The report may include recommendations of the 39 Bureau concerning the category of offense and category of offender
40 set forth in the guidelines issued by the Sentencing Commission pur-

1 suant to 28 U.S.C. 994(a) (1) that it believes are applicable to the de-
2 fendant's case. After receiving the report and the recommendations,
3 the court shall proceed finally to sentence the defendant in accord-
4 ance with the sentencing alternatives available under this chapter.

5 “(c) PRESENTENCE EXAMINATION AND REPORT BY PSYCHIATRIC
6 EXAMINERS.—If the court, before or after its receipt of a report speci-
7 fied in subsection (a) or (b), desires more information than is other-
8 wise available to it as a basis for determining the mental condition
9 of the defendant, it may order that the defendant undergo a psychi-
10 atric examination by two or more examiners, and that the examiners
11 provide the court with a written report, pursuant to the provisions
12 of section 3614.

13 “§ 2003. Imposition of a Sentence

14 “(a) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED IN IMPOSING A SENTENCE.—The 15 court, in determining the particular sentence to be imposed, shall 16 consider:

17 “(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense and the history
18 and characteristics of the defendant;

19 “(2) the need for the sentence imposed:

20 “(A) to afford adequate deterrence to criminal conduct;

21 “(B) to protect the public from further crimes of the 22 defendant;

23 “(C) to reflect the seriousness of the offense, to promote 24 respect for law, and to provide just punishment for the 25 offense; and

26 “(D) to provide the defendant with needed educational or 27 vocational training, medical care, or other correctional treat-
28 ment in the most effective manner;

29 “(3) the sentencing range established for the applicable category
30 of offense committed by the applicable category of defendant as 31 set forth in the guidelines that are issued by the Sentencing Com-
32 mission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(a) (1) and that are in effect
33 on the date the defendant committed the offense; and

34 “(4) any pertinent policy statement issued by the Sentencing
35 Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(a) (2).

36 “(b) STATEMENT OF REASONS FOR IMPOSING A SENTENCE.—The court,
37 at the time of sentencing, shall state in open court the general reasons
38 for its imposition of the particular sentence, and, if the sentence is 39 outside the range described in subsection (a) (3), the reason for the 40 imposition of a sentence outside such range.

1   “§ 2004. Order of a Criminal Forfeiture

2       “(a) FORFEITURE.—The court, in imposing a sentence on a defendant
3 who has been found guilty of an offense described in section 1801
4 (Operating a Racketeering Syndicate), 1802 (Racketeering), or 1803
5 (Washing Racketeering Proceeds), shall order, in addition to the 6 sentence that is imposed pursuant to the provisions of section 2001,
7 that the defendant forfeit to the United States any property constitut-
8 ing his interest in the racketeering syndicate or enterprise involved.

9       “(b) PROTECTIVE ORDERS.—At any time after the arrest of the de-
10 fendant for, or after the filing of an indictment or information charg-11 ing, an offense for which a criminal forfeiture may be ordered under 12 subsection (a), the court may enter a restraining order or injunction, 13 may require a performance bond, and may take such other action as is 14 in the interest of justice, with respect to any property subject to 15 criminal forfeiture.

16       “(c) EXECUTION.—The Attorney General, upon such terms and con-
17 ditions as are in the interest of justice, shall seize property that a 18 defendant has been ordered to forfeit to the United States, and shall 19 dispose of such property as soon as commercially feasible, making due
20 provision for the rights of any innocent person. If any property can-21 not be disposed of for value the rights to such property shall not revert
22 to the defendant.

23       “(d) APPLICABILITY OF CIVIL FORFEITURE PROVISIONS.—Except to 24 the extent that they are inconsistent with the provisions of this sec-25 tion, all provisions of law relating to the remission or mitigation of 26 civil forfeitures of property for violation of the customs laws, the com-27 promise of claims with respect to such property, the disposition of such 28 property, the proceeds from the sale of such property, and the award 29 of compensation to informants with respect to such property, shall 30 apply to criminal forfeitures ordered under this section. The duties
31 imposed upon a customs officer or any other person with respect
32 to the civil seizure, forfeiture, and disposition of property under the 33 customs laws shall, with respect to property that has been ordered 34 forfeited to the United States under this section, be performed by 35 the Attorney General.

36   “§ 2005. Order of Notice to Victims

37       “The Court, in imposing a sentence on an individual who has been 38 found guilty of an offense involving fraud or other deceptive prac-
39 tices, or on an organization that has been found guilty of any offense, 40 may order, in addition to the sentence that is imposed pursuant to the 41 provisions of section 2001, that the defendant give notice and explana-

1 tion of the conviction, in such form as the court may approve, to the 2 class of persons or to the sector of the public affected by the conviction
 3 or financially interested in the subject matter of the offense, by mail,
 4 by advertising in designated areas or through designated media, or 5 by other appropriate means. In determining whether to require the 6 defendant to give such notice, the court shall consider the factors set
 7 forth in section 2003(a) to the extent that they are applicable.

8 “§ 2006. Order of Restitution

9 The court, in imposing a sentence on a defendant who has been
 10 found guilty of an offense causing bodily injury or property damage
 11 or other loss, may order, in addition to the sentence that is imposed 12 pursuant to the provisions of section 2001, that the defendant make 13 direct restitution to a victim of the offense in an amount and manner
 14 set by the court. The provisions of section 2202, 2203, 3812, and 3813
 15 apply to an order to pay restitution as they apply to a sentence to 16 pay a fine.

17 “§ 2007. Review of a Sentence

18 “The review of a sentence imposed pursuant to section 2001 is gov-
 19 erned by the provisions of section 3725 and by the Federal Rules of 20 Appellate Procedure.

21 “§ 2008 Implementation of a Sentence

22 “The implementation of a sentence imposed pursuant to section 2001
 23 is governed by the provisions of chapter 38.

24 “Chapter 21.—PROBATION

“Sec.

“2101. Sentence of Probation.

“2102. Imposition of a Sentence of Probation.

“2103. Conditions of Probation.

“2104. Running of a Term of Probation.

“2105. Revocation of Probation.

“2106. Implementation of a Sentence of Probation.

25 “§ 2101. Sentence of Probation

26 “(a) IN GENERAL.—A defendant who has been found guilty of an 27 offense may be sentenced to a term of probation unless:

28 “(1) the offense is a Class A felony;

29 “(2) the offense is an offense for which probation has been 30 expressly precluded; or

31 “(3) the defendant is sentenced at the same time to a term
 32 of imprisonment for the same or a different offense.

33 “(b) AUTHORIZED TERMS.—The authorized terms of probation are:

34 “(1) for a felony, not less than one nor more than five years;

35 “(2) for a misdemeanor, not more than two years;

36 “(3) for an infraction, not more than one year.

1   “§ 2102. Imposition of a Sentence of Probation

2       “(a) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED IN IMPOSING A TERM OF PROBA-
3   TION.—The court, in determining whether to impose a term of proba-
4   tion, and, if a term of probation is to be imposed, in determining the 5   length of the term and the conditions of probation, shall consider the 6   factors set forth in section 2003(a) to the extent that they are
7   applicable.

8       “(b) EFFECT ON FINALITY OF JUDGMENT.—Notwithstanding the fact
9   that a sentence of probation can subsequently be modified or revoked,
10   a judgment of conviction that includes such a sentence constitutes a 11   final judgment for all other purposes.

12   “§ 2103. Conditions of Probation

13       “(a) MANDATORY CONDITION.—The court shall provide, as an ex-
14   plicit condition of a sentence of probation, that the defendant not com-
15   mit another federal, state, or local crime during the term of probation.

16       “(b) DISCRETIONARY CONDITIONS.—The court may provide, as fur-17   ther conditions of a sentence to probation to the extent that such 18   conditions are reasonably related to the factors set forth in section 19   2003 (a) (1) and (a) (2) and to the extent that such conditions in-
20   volve such deprivations of liberty or property as are reasonably 21   necessary for the purposes indicated in section 2003(a) (2), that the 22   defendant:

23           “(1) support his dependents and meet other family responsi-
24       bilities;

25           “(2) pay a fine imposed pursuant to the provisions of chapter
26       22;

27           “(3) make direct restitution to a victim of the offense pursuant 28       to the provisions of section 2006;

29           “(4) give to the victims of the offense the notice ordered pur-
30       suant to the provisions of section 2005;

31           “(5) work conscientiously at suitable employment or pursue 32       conscientiously a course of study or of vocational training that 33       will equip him for suitable employment;

34           “(6) refrain from engaging in a specified occupation, business,
35       or profession bearing a reasonable relationship to the offense, or 36       engage in such a specified occupation, business, or profession only 37       under stated circumstances;

1           “(7) refrain from frequenting specified kinds of places or
2 from associating unnecessarily with specified persons;

3           “(8) refrain from excessive use of alcohol, or any use of a
4 narcotic drug or other controlled substance, as defined in section
5 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802), without a
6 prescription by a licensed medical practitioner;

7           “(9) refrain from possessing a firearm, destructive device, or 8 other dangerous weapon;

9           “(10) undergo available medical or psychiatric treatment as 10 specified by the court and remain in a specified institution if re-
11 quired for that purpose;

12           “(11) remain in the custody of the Bureau of Prisons for any 13 time or intervals of time, totaling no more than the lesser of 14 six months or the term of imprisonment authorized for the 15 offense in section 2301(b), during the term of probation;

16           “(12) reside at, or participate in the program of, a community
17 treatment facility for all or part of the term of probation;

18           “(13) work in community service as directed by the court;

19           “(14) reside in a specified place or area, or refrain from residing 20 in a specified place or area;

21           “(15) remain within the jurisdiction of the court, unless granted
22 permission to leave by the court or a probation officer;

23           “(16) report to a probation officer as directed by the court or 24 the probation officer;

25           “(17) permit a probation officer to visit him at his home or else-
26 where as specified by the court;

27           “(18) answer inquiries by a probation officer and promptly
28 notify the probation officer of any change in address or employ-
29 ment; or

30           “(19) satisfy such other conditions as the court may impose.

31           “(c) MODIFICATION OF CONDITIONS.—The court may modify, re-
32 duce, or enlarge the conditions of a sentence of probation at any time
33 prior to the expiration or termination of the term of probation.

34           “(d) WRITTEN STATEMENT OF CONDITIONS.—The court shall direct 35 that the probation officer provide to a defendant sentenced to probation
36 a written statement setting forth all the conditions to which the sen-
37 tence is subject with sufficient clarity and specificity to serve as a guide
38 for the defendant's conduct and for such supervision as is required.

1 “§ 2104. Running of a Term of Probation

2 “(a) COMMENCEMENT.—A term of probation commences on the day
3 that the sentence of probation is imposed, unless otherwise ordered
4 by the court.

5 “(b) CONCURRENCE WITH OTHER SENTENCES.—Multiple terms of 6 probation, whether imposed at the same time or at different times,
7 run concurrently with each other. A term of probation runs con-
8 currently with any federal, state, or local term of probation or pa-
9 role for another offense to which the defendant is subject or becomes 10 subject during the term of probation, except that it does not run dur-
11 ing any period in which the defendant is imprisoned in connection with 12 a conviction for a federal, state, or local crime.

13 “(c) EARLY TERMINATION.—The court may terminate a term of proba-14 tion previously ordered and discharge the defendant at any time in 15 the case of a misdemeanor or an infraction or at any time after the ex-
16 piration of one year of probation in the case of a felony, if it is satisfied 17 that such action is warranted by the conduct of the defendant and the 18 interest of justice.

19 “(d) EXTENSION.—The court may extend a term of probation, if less 20 than the authorized term was previously imposed, at any time prior to 21 the expiration or termination of the term of probation.

22 “(e) SUBJECT TO REVOCATION.—A sentence of probation remains con-
23 ditional and subject to revocation until its expiration or termination.

24 “§ 2105. Revocation of Probation

25 “(a) CONTINUATION OR REVOCATION.—If the defendant violates a
26 condition of probation at any time prior to the expiration or termina-
27 tion of the term of probation, the court may :

28 “(1) continue him on probation, with or without extending the 29 term or modifying or enlarging the conditions; or.

30 “(2) revoke the sentence of probation and impose any other
31 sentence that was available under chapter 20 at the time of the 32 initial sentencing.

33 “(b) DELAYED REVOCATION.—The power of the court to revoke a sen-34 tence of probation for violation of a condition of probation extends be-35 yond the expiration of the term of probation for any period reasonably 36 necessary for the adjudication of matters arising before its expiration 37 if, prior to its expiration, a warrant or summons has been issued on the 38 basis of an allegation of such a violation.

39 “§ 2106. Implementation of a Sentence of Probation

40 “The implementation of a sentence of probation is governed by the 41 provisions of subchapter A of chapter 38.

1 “Chapter 22.—FINES

“Sec.

“2201. Sentence of Fine.

“2202. Imposition of a Sentence of Fine.

“2203. Modification or Remission of Fine.

“2204. Implementation of a Sentence of Fine.

2 “§ 2201. Sentence of Fine

3 “(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the provisions of section 2202, a
4 defendant who has been found guilty of an offense may be sentenced
5 to pay a fine.

6 “(b) AUTHORIZED FINES.—Except as otherwise provided in sub-
7 section (c) or any other provision of law, the authorized fines are:

8 “(1) if the defendant is an individual:

9 “(A) for a felony, not more than $100,000;

10 “(B) for a misdemeanor, not more than $10,000;

11 “(C) for an infraction, not more than $1,000;

12 “(2) if the defendant is an organization:

13 “(A) for a felony, not more than $500,000;

14 “(B) for a misdemeanor, not more than $100,000;

15 “(C) for an infraction, not more than $10,000.

16 “(c) ALTERNATIVE AUTHORIZED FINE.—In lieu of a fine authorized 17 by subsection (b) or any other provision of law, a defendant who has 18 been found guilty of an offense through which pecuniary gain was 19 directly or indirectly derived, or by which bodily injury or property
20 damage or other loss was caused, may be sentenced to pay a fine that 21 does not exceed twice the gross gain derived or twice the gross loss 22 caused, whichever is the greater.

23 “§ 2202. Imposition of a Sentence of Fine

24 “(a) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED IN IMPOSING A FINE.—The court, in 25 determining whether to impose a fine, and, if a fine is to be imposed, 26 in determining the amount of the fine, the time for payment, and the 27 method of payment, shall consider the factors set forth in section 2003
28 (a), to the extent they are applicable, including, with regard to the 29 characteristics of the defendant under section 2003(a)(1), the ability 30 of the defendant to pay the fine in view of:

31 “(1) the defendant’s income, earning capacity, and financial 32 resources;

33 “(2) the nature of the burden that payment of the fine will im-
34 pose on the defendant, and on any person who is financially de-
35 pendent upon the defendant;

36 “(3) any requirement imposed upon the defendant to make 37 direct restitution or reparation to the victim of the offense; and 38 “(4) any other pertinent equitable consideration.

1     “(b) TIME AND METHOD OF PAYMENT.—At the time a defendant is
2 sentenced to pay a fine, the court may provide for the payment to be
3 made within a specified period of time or in specified installments. If 4 no such provision is made a part of the sentence, payment is due
5 immediately.

6     “(c) ALTERNATIVE SENTENCE PRECLUDED.—At the time a defendant
7 is sentenced to pay a fine, the court may not impose an alternative
8 sentence to be served in the event that the fine is not paid.

9     “(d) INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR PAYMENT BY ORGANIZATION.—
10 If a fine is imposed on an organization, it is the duty of the individuals 11 authorized to make disbursement of the assets of the organization to 12 pay the fine from assets of the organization.

13     “§ 2203. Modification or Remission of Fine

14     “(a) PETITION FOR MODIFICATION OR REMISSION.—A defendant who 15 has been sentenced to pay a fine, and who has paid part but not all 16 thereof, may petition the court for:

17         “(1) an extension of the time for payment;

18         “(2) a modification in the method of payment; or 19         “(3) a remission of all or part of the unpaid portion.

20     “(b) ORDER OF MODIFICATION OR REMISSION.—If, after the filing of 21 a petition as provided in subsection (a), the court finds that the cir-
22 cumstances no longer exist that warranted the imposition of the fine
23 in the amount imposed or payment by the time or method specified,
24 or that it would otherwise be unjust to require payment of the fine
25 in the amount imposed or by the time or method specified, the court
26 may enter an order:

27         “(1) extending the time for payment;

28         “(2) modifying the method of payment; or

29         “(3) remitting all or part of the unpaid portion.

30     “§ 2204. Implementation of a Sentence of Fine

31     “The implementation of a sentence to pay a fine is governed by the 32 provisions of subchapter B of chapter 38.

33     “Chapter 23.—IMPRISONMENT

“Sec.

“2301. Sentence of Imprisonment.

“2302. Imposition of a Sentence of Imprisonment.

“2303. Parole Term and Contingent Prison Term Included in Sentence of Imprisonment.

“2304. Multiple Sentences of Imprisonment.

“2305. Calculation of Term of Imprisonment.

“2306. Implementation of a Sentence of Imprisonment and Parole Therefrom.

34     “§ 2301. Sentence of Imprisonment

35     “(a) IN GENERAL.—A defendant who has been found guilty of 36 an offense may be sentenced to a term of imprisonment.

1     “(b) AUTHORIZED TERMS.—The authorized terms of imprisonment
2 are:

3             “(1) for a Class A felony, the duration of the defendant’s life
4 or any period of time;

5             “(2) for a Class B felony, not more than twenty-five years;

6             “(3) for a Class C felony, not more than twelve years;

7             “(4) for a Class D felony, not more than six years;

8             “(5) for a Class E felony, not more than three years;

9             “(6) for a Class A misdemeanor, not more than one year;

10            “(7) for a Class B misdemeanor, not more than six months;

11            “(8) for a Class C misdemeanor, not more than thirty days;

12            “(9) for an infraction, not more than five days.

13     “(c) AUTHORIZED TERMS OF PAROLE INELIGIBILITY.—The authorized
14 term of imprisonment that may be required to be served prior to eligi-
15 bility for parole is any term found appropriate by the court in light
16 of the provisions of section 2302(b), but no term of parole ineligibility
17 may extend into the last one-tenth of the sentence imposed.

18     “§ 2302. Imposition of a Sentence of Imprisonment

19     “(a) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED IN IMPOSING A TERM OF IMPRISON-
20 MENT.—The court, in determining whether to impose a term of im-
21 prisonment, and, if a term of imprisonment is to be imposed, in deter-22 mining the length of the term, shall consider the factors set forth in 23 section 2003(a) to the extent that they are applicable. In determining 24 whether to make a recommendation concerning the type of prison
25 facility appropriate for the defendant, the court shall consider any 26 pertinent policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission pur-
27 suant to 28 U.S.C. 994(a)(2). If the court imposes a term of imprison-28 ment it shall designate the portion, if any, of the term to be served as 29 a term of parole ineligibility.

30     “(b) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED IN IMPOSING A TERM OF PAROLE
31 INELIGIBILITY.—The court, in determining whether to impose a term 32 of parole ineligibility, and, if a term of parole ineligibility is to be 33 imposed, in determining the length of the term, shall consider the 34 factors set forth in section 2003(a) to the extent that they are 35 applicable.

36     “(c) MODIFICATION OF AN IMPOSED TERM OF IMPRISONMENT OR TERM
37 OF PAROLE INELIGIBILITY.—The court may not modify a term of im-
38 prisonment or a term of parole ineligibility once it has been imposed 39 except that:

40             “(1) upon motion of the Director of the Bureau of Prisons
41 and upon notice to the attorney for the government, the court,

1 for extraordinary and compelling reasons, may reduce an im-
 2 posed term of imprisonment or term of parole ineligibility to the 3 time that the defendant has served in imprisonment; and

4 “(2) the court may modify an imposed term of imprisonment
 5 or term of parole ineligibility to the extent otherwise expressly
 6 permitted by statute or by Rule 35 of the Federal Rules of Crim-
 7 inal Procedure.

8 “§ 2303. Parole Term and Contingent Imprisonment Term In-
 9 cluded in Sentence of Imprisonment

10 “A sentence to a term of imprisonment in the case of a felony or of a
 11 Class A misdemeanor automatically includes, in addition to the speci-
 12 fied term of imprisonment, a separate:

13 “(a) term of parole, the incidents of which are governed by the 14 provisions of subchapter D of chapter 38; and 15 “(b) contingent term of imprisonment of:

16 “(1) ninety days in the case of a felony; or

17 “(2) thirty days in the case of a Class A misdemeanor;
 18 that may, in the event of recommitment for violation of a condi-
 19 tion of parole, be ordered to be served in lieu of the term of the 20 original sentence minus the portion of the original sentence served
 21 in confinement prior to the parole, if the contingent term of im-
 22 prisonment is longer.

23 “§ 2304. Multiple Sentences of Imprisonment

24 “(a) IMPOSITION OF CONCURRENT OR CONSECUTIVE TERMS.—If mul-
 25 tiple terms of imprisonment are imposed on a defendant at the same
 26 time, or if a term of imprisonment is imposed on a defendant who is al-
 27 ready subject to an undischarged term of imprisonment, the terms may 28 run concurrently or consecutively, except that the terms may not run
 29 consecutively:

30 “(1) for an offense described in section 1001 (Criminal At-
 31 tempt), 1002 (Criminal Conspiracy), or 1003 (Criminal Solicita-32 tion), and for another offense that was the sole objective of the 33 attempt, conspiracy, or solicitation;

34 “(2) for an offense involving a violation of a general prohibi-
 35 tion and for an offense involving a violation of a specific pro-
 36 hibition encompassed within the general prohibition.

37 Multiple terms of imprisonment run concurrently unless the court

1 orders that the terms are to run consecutively. If multiple terms of 2 imprisonment are ordered to run consecutively, any included terms of 3 parole ineligibility also run consecutively.

4 “(b) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED IN IMPOSING CONCURRENT OR CON-
5 SECUTIVE TERMS.— The court, in determining whether the terms im-
6 posed are to be ordered to run concurrently or consecutively, shall con-
7 sider, as to each offense for which a term of imprisonment is being 8 imposed, the factors set forth in section 2003 (a).

9 “(c) LIMIT ON AGGREGATE OF CONSECUTIVE TERMS.—The aggre-
10 gate of consecutive terms of imprisonment to which a defendant may 11 be sentenced may not exceed such term as is authorized by section 2301
12 for an offense one grade higher than the most serious offense of which 13 he was found guilty.

14 “(d) TREATMENT OF MULTIPLE SENTENCES AS AN AGGREGATE.—
15 Multiple terms of imprisonment ordered to run consecutively shall be 16 treated for administrative purposes as a single, aggregate term of 17 imprisonment, and any included terms of parole ineligibility shall be 18 treated as a single, aggregate term of parole ineligibility.

19 “§ 2305. Calculation of Term of Imprisonment

20 “(a) COMMENCEMENT OF SENTENCE.—A sentence to a term of im-
21 prisonment commences on the date the defendant is received in custody
22 awaiting transportation to, or is received at, the official detention facil-
23 ity at which the sentence is to be served.

24 “(b) CREDIT FOR PRIOR CUSTODY.—A defendant shall be given credit 25 toward the service of a term of imprisonment for any time he has 26 spent in official detention prior to the date the sentence commences:

27 “(1) as a result of the offense for which the sentence was im-
28 posed; or

29 “(2) as a result of any other charge for which the defendant
30 was arrested after the commission of the offense for which the 31 sentence was imposed;

32 that has not been credited against another sentence.

33 “§ 2306. Implementation of a Sentence of Imprisonment and 34 Parole therefrom

35 “The implementation of a sentence to imprisonment is governed by 36 the provisions of subchapter C of chapter 38. Parole from imprison-
37 ment is governed by the provisions of subchapter D of chapter 38.

1                   “PART IV.—ADMINISTRATION AND
 2                   PROCEDURE

“Chapter

“30. Investigative and Law Enforcement Authority.

“31. Ancillary Investigative Authority.

“32. Rendition and Extradition.

“33. Jurisdiction and Venue.

“34. Appointment of Counsel.

“35. Release and Confinement Pending Judicial Proceedings.

“36. Disposition of Juvenile or Incompetent Offenders.

“37. Pretrial and Trial Procedure, Evidence, and Appellate Review.

“38. Postsentence Administration.

3                   “Chapter 30.—INVESTIGATIVE AND LAW ENFORCEMENT
 4                   AUTHORITY

“Subchapter

“A. Investigative Authority.

“B. Law Enforcement Authority.

5                   “Subchapter A.—Investigative Authority

“Sec.

“3001. Investigative Authority over Offenses within this Title.

“3002. Investigative Authority over Offenses outside this Title.

6                   “§ 3001. Investigative Authority over Offenses within this Title

7                   “(a) SPECIFIC DESIGNATIONS.—Primary responsibility for detect-
 8                   ing and investigating the commission of offenses described in this title
 9                   is vested as follows:

10                   “(1) offenses described in sections 1211, 1212, 1213, and 1214, 11                   and offenses arising from the administration or enforcement of 12                   the laws relating to immigration and nationality, are within the 13                   primary responsibility of the Immigration and Naturalization
 14                   Service;

15                   “(2) offenses described in subchapter A of chapter 14; offenses 16                   described in sections 1731, 1732, and 1733, if there is or may be
 17                   jurisdiction over the offense as set forth in section 1731(c)(8)
 18                   and the property consists of ammunition, a firearm, or a destruc-
 19                   tive device; offenses described in sections 1821(a)(2) and 1822;
 20                   and offenses arising from the administration or enforcement of the 21                   laws relating to internal revenue; are within the primary re-
 22                   sponsibility of officers and employees of the Department of the 23                   Treasury assigned such responsibility by the Secretary of the 24                   Treasury;

25                   “(3) offenses described in sections 1701, 1702, and 1703, if there
 26                   is or may be federal jurisdiction over the offenses as set forth in 27                   section 1701(c)(5) or (c)(6), and offenses described in sections
 28                   1821(a)(1), 1821(a)(4), and 1823, are within the primary re-
 29                   sponsibility of officers and employees of the Department of the

1 Treasury assigned such responsibility by the Secretary of the
2 Treasury, and, concurrently, are within the primary responsibil-
3 ity of the Federal Bureau of Investigation;

4 “(4) offenses described in subchapter B of chapter 14, and
5 offenses arising from the administration or enforcement of the 6 laws relating to customs, are within the primary responsibility of 7 officers of the customs, as defined in section 401(i) of the Tariff
8 Act of 1930, as amended (19 U.S.C. 1401(i));

9 “(5) offenses described in sections 1731, 1732, and 1733, if there
10 is or may be federal jurisdiction over the offense as set forth in 11 section 1731(c)(27) or (c)(28); offenses described in sections 1851
12 (a)(1), (a)(2), and (a)(3), and 1852; and offenses arising from 13 the administration or enforcement of the laws relating to agricul-
14 ture; are within the primary responsibility of officers and employ-
15 ees of the Department of Agriculture assigned such responsibility
16 by the Secretary of Agriculture;

17 “(6) offenses described in subchapter E of chapter 17, other
18 than offenses for which jurisdiction is based on section 1741(c)(2)
19 (C), 1742(c)(2)(C), or 1743(c)(2)(C), if the tax stamp involved
20 is a state or local tax stamp or if the security involved is described 21 in section 1746(f)(2), (f)(3), (f)(4), or (f)(8), and offenses
22 arising from the administration or enforcement of the laws relat-
23 ing to counterfeiting and forgery, other than those specifically
24 excepted by this paragraph, are within the primary responsibility
25 of the United States Secret Service;

26 “(7) offenses described in subchapter B of chapter 18; and
27 offenses arising from the administration or enforcement of the 28 laws relating to controlled substances, are within the primary
29 responsibility of the Drug Enforcement Administration;

30 “(8) offenses in which the subject of the offense is mail or prop-
31 erty of the United States Postal Service; offenses described in sec-32 tion 1734(a) if there is or may be federal jurisdiction over the 33 offense as set forth in subsection 1734(e)(1); and offenses arising 34 from the administration or enforcement of the laws relating to 35 mail; are within the primary responsibility of officers and em-
36 ployees of the United States Postal Service assigned such responsi-
37 bility by the Board of Governors of the United States Postal
38 Service;

39 “(9) offenses committed within the national park system that 40 are not within the designated primary responsibility of another

1 federal agency are within the primary responsibility of the
2 Department of the Interior;

3 “(10) offenses described in section 1731, if there is or may be
4 jurisdiction over the offense as set forth in section 1731(c)(21),
5 and offenses described in section 1763, are within the primary
6 responsibility of officers and employees of the Commodity Futures
7 Trading Commission assigned such responsibility by the 8 Commission;

9 “(11) offenses described in section 1737(a)(1) are within the 10 primary responsibility of officers and employees of the Environ-
11 mental Protection Agency assigned such responsibility by the 12 Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency;

13 “(12) offenses described in section 1762(a)(4) are within the 14 primary responsibility of officers and employees of the Department
15 of the Treasury and of the Securities and Exchange Commission
16 assigned or delegated such responsibility by the Secretary of the 17 Treasury;

18 “(13) offenses described in section 1851(a)(4) are within the 19 primary responsibility of the officers and employees of the De-
20 partment of Health, Education, and Welfare assigned such 21 responsibility by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Wel-
22 fare;

23 “(14) offenses described in section 1131; offenses described in 24 sections 1601, 1602, 1603, 1611, 1612, 1613, 1614, 1621, 1622, and 25 1623, if the victim of the offense is a United States official; offenses
26 described in section 1631; and offenses described in sections 1601,
27 1602, 1603, 1611, 1612, 1613, 1614, 1615, 1616, 1641, 1642, 1643,
28 1644, 1645, 1721, 1731, 1732, 1733, 1824, and 1861, if the offense
29 is committed within the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United 30 States; are within the primary responsibility of the Federal 31 Bureau of Investigation; and

32 “(15) all other offenses are within the primary responsibility
33 of those law enforcement agencies designated by regulation, rule,
34 or order issued by the Attorney General, except an offense that 35 incorporates by reference a statute outside this title concerning 36 which another agency is specifically assigned such responsibility
37 by law.

38 “(b) REDESIGNATION.—A responsibility set forth in subsection (a)
39 may be transferred to another law enforcement agency upon the writ-

1 ten consent of the head of both agencies involved and of the Attorney
2 General.

3 “§ 3002. Investigative Authority Over Offenses Outside This Title

4 “(a) SPECIFIC DESIGNATIONS.—Primary responsibility for detect-
5 ing and investigating the commission of offenses described outside this 6 title is vested in :

7 “(1) the law enforcement agency specifically assigned such 8 responsibility by law ; or

9 “(2) the law enforcement agency designated by regulation,
10 rule, or order issued by the Attorney General if no other agency
11 is specifically assigned such responsibility by law.

12 “(b) REDESIGNATION.—A responsibility set forth in subsection (a)
13 may be transferred to another law enforcement agency upon the writ-
14 ten consent of the head of both agencies involved and of the Attorney
15 General.

16 “Subchapter B.—Law Enforcement Authority

“Sec.

“3011. Federal Bureau of Investigation.

“3012. Drug Enforcement Administration.

“3013. Department of the Treasury.

“3014. Postal Service.

“3015. United States Marshals Service.

“3016. United States Probation Service.

“3017. Bureau of Prisons.

“3018. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

“3019. Department of the Interior.

17 “§ 3011. Federal Bureau of Investigation

18 “The Director, Associate Director, Assistant to the Director, an 19 Assistant Director, an inspector, and an agent of the Federal Bureau
20 of Investigation of the Department of Justice may :

21 “(a) carry a firearm ;

22 “(b) execute an order, warrant, subpoena, or other process issued
23 under the authority of the United States for arrest, search or
24 seizure, or production of evidence ;

25 “(c) make an arrest without a warrant for an offense com-
26 mitted in his presence, or for a felony committed outside his pres-
27 ence if he has reasonable grounds to believe that the person to be
28 arrested has committed or is committing a felony ;

29 “(d) offer and pay a reward for services or information assist-
30 ing in the detection or investigation of the commission of an 31 offense or in the apprehension of an offender ; and

32 “(e) perform any other law enforcement duty that the Attorney
33 General may designate.

1 “§ 3012. Drug Enforcement Administration

2 “Subject to the direction of the Attorney General, an officer or em-
3 ployee of the Drug Enforcement Administration may:

4 “(a) carry a firearm;

5 “(b) execute an order, warrant, administrative inspection war-
6 rant, subpoena, or other process issued under the authority of the 7 United States for arrest, search or seizure, inspection, or produc-
8 tion of evidence;

9 “(c) make an arrest without a warrant for an offense committed
10 in his presence, or for a felony committed outside his presence, if
11 he has reasonable grounds to believe that the person to be arrested
12 has committed or is committing a felony;

13 “(d) offer and pay a reward for services or information assist-
14 ing in the detection or investigation of the commission of an
15 offense or in the apprehension of an offender;

16 “(e) make a seizure of property pursuant to the provisions of 17 the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.); and 18 “(f) perform any other law enforcement duty that the Attorney

19 General may designate.

20 “§ 3013. Department of the Treasury

21 “(a) AUTHORITY.—Subject to the direction of the Secretary of the 22 Treasury:

23 “(1) an agent of the United States Secret Service;

24 “(2) an officer of the customs, as defined in section 401(i) of 25 the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (19 U.S.C. 1401(i));

26 “(3) an agent of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Fire-
27 arms whom the Secretary of the Treasury has charged with the 28 duty of enforcing any criminal, seizure, or forfeiture provision 29 of the laws relating to internal revenue; or

30 “(4) a criminal investigator of the Intelligence Division or of 31 the Internal Security Division of the Internal Revenue Service
32 whom the Secretary has charged with the duty of enforcing a
33 criminal provision of the internal revenue laws or another crim-
34 inal provision of the laws relating to the internal revenue;

35 may perform any of the functions and duties enumerated in subsection
36 (b).

37 “(b) FUNCTIONS AND DUTIES.—Except as otherwise provided, an 38 agent, officer, or investigator described in subsection (a) may:

1           “(1) carry a firearm;

2           “(2) execute an order, warrant, subpoena, or other process
3 issued under the authority of the United States for arrest, search
4 or seizure, or production of evidence;

5           “(3) make an arrest without warrant for an offense committed 6 in his presence, or for a felony committed outside his presence if
7 he has reasonable grounds to believe that the person to be arrested
8 has committed or is committing a felony;

9           “(4) offer and pay a reward for services or information assist-
10 ing in the detection or investigation of the commission of an
11 offense or in the apprehension of an offender; and

12           “(5) perform any other law enforcement duty that the Secre-
13 tary of the Treasury may designate.

14       “(c) SPECIAL PROTECTION FUNCTION.—Subject to the direction of 15 the Secretary of the Treasury, the United States Secret Service shall 16 protect the person of:

17           “(1) the President and the members of his immediate family;

18           “(2) the President-elect and, unless such protection is declined,
19 the members of his immediate family;

20           “(3) the Vice President, or other person next in the order of 21 succession to the office of President, and, unless such protec-
22 tion is declined, the members of his immediate family;

23           “(4) the Vice President-elect and, unless such protection is 24 declined, the members of his immediate family;

25           “(5) a person who is determined by the Secretary of the Treas-26 ury, after consultation with the advisory committee set forth in 27 Public Law 90-331 (82 Stat. 170), to be a major candidate for 28 President or Vice President, unless such protection is declined by 29 such person;

30           “(6) a former President and his spouse, unless such protection
31 is declined by such former President;

32           “(7) the spouse of a deceased former President until remar-
33 riage, unless such protection is declined by such spouse;

34           “(8) a minor child of a former President, until he reaches 16
35 years of age, unless such protection is declined by a parent or 36 guardian of such minor child;

37           “(9) the chief of state or head of government, or the political 38 equivalent, of a foreign power, who is in the United States;

1           “(10) an official guest of the United States who is ordered pro-
2           tected at the direction of the President, and

3           “(11) a federal public servant or other official representative
4           of the United States who is performing a special mission outside
5           the United States and who is ordered protected at the direction
6           of the President.

7   “§ 3014. Postal Service

8           “Subject to the direction of the Board of Governors of the United 9   States Postal Service, an officer or employee of the Postal Service
10   who is performing a duty related to the inspection of a postal matter,
11   related to the enforcement of a law regarding property of the Postal
12   Service or federal property in the custody of the Postal Service, re-13   lated to the use of the mails, or related to an offense arising from the 14   administration or enforcement of the laws relating to the mails, may :

15           “(a) carry a firearm ;

16           “(b) execute an order, warrant, subpoena, or other process
17           issued under the authority of the United States for arrest, search,
18           or seizure, or production of evidence ;

19           “(c) make an arrest without a warrant for an offense com-
20           mitted in his presence, or for a felony committed outside his 21           presence if he has reasonable grounds to believe that the person
22           to be arrested has committed or is committing a felony ;

23           “(d) offer and pay a reward for services or information assist-
24           ing in the detection or investigation of the commission of an
25           offense or in the apprehension of an offender ; and

26           “(e) perform any other law enforcement duty that the Board
27           of Governors may designate.

28   “§ 3015. United States Marshals Service

29           “(a) AUTHORITY.—A United States marshal and a deputy United 30   States marshal may :

31           “(1) carry a firearm ;

32           “(2) execute an order, warrant, subpoena, or other process is-
33           sued under the authority of the United States for arrest, search
34           or seizure, or production of evidence ;

35           “(3) make an arrest without warrant for an offense committed
36           in his presence, or for a felony committed outside his presence 37           if he has reasonable grounds to believe that the person to be
38           arrested has committed or is committing a felony ;

1           “(4) offer and pay a reward for services or information assist-
2           ing in the detection or investigation of the commission of an
3           offense or in the apprehension of an offender; and

4           “(5) perform any other law enforcement duty that the Attorney
5           General may designate.

6           “(b) TEMPORARY CUSTODY OF PERSONS.—United States marshals
7           shall provide for the safe-keeping of a person:

8           “(1) arrested;

9           “(2) held pending commitment to an official detention facility;

10          “(3) removed from a federal official detention facility to comply
11          with an order or writ issuing from a court of competent jurisdic-
12          tion; or

13          “(4) held under an order of transfer to a community treat-
14          ment facility.

15        “§ 3016. United States Probation Service

16        “An officer of the United States Probation Service may:

17        “(a) carry a firearm pursuant to regulations issued by the 18        Judicial Conference of the United States;

19        “(b) execute a warrant for the arrest of a probationer or 20        parolee:

21           “(1) in the judicial district in which the officer was ap-22           pointed; or

23           “(2) in any judicial district if the warrant was issued in 24           the judicial district in which the officer was appointed; and 25        “(c) make an arrest without a warrant of a probationer or 26        parolee in the judicial district in which the officer was appointed 27        if the officer has reasonable grounds to believe that the person to 28        be arrested has violated a condition of his probation or parole.

29        “§ 3017. Bureau of Prisons

30        Subject to the direction of the Attorney General:

31        “(a) an officer or employee of the Bureau of Prisons or of 32        the Parole Commission may carry a firearm;

33        “(b) an officer or employee of the Bureau of Prisons may:

34           “(1) execute a warrant for the arrest of a parolee; and 35           “(2) make an arrest without a warrant for an offense

36           described in section 1313 (Escape), 1314 (Providing or Pos-
37           sessing Contraband in a Prison), 1831 (Leading a Riot), 38           1832 (Providing Arms for a Riot), or 1833 (Engaging in a

1           Riot), if he has reasonable grounds to believe that the person
2           to be arrested has committed or is committing the offense;
3           and

4           “(c) the chief executive officer of a federal official detention
5           facility and those members of his staff whom he designates may,
6           without fee, administer an oath to and take an acknowledgment
7           of an officer, employee, or inmate of such facility.

8   “§ 3018. Immigration and Naturalization Service

9           “Subject to the direction of the Attorney General, an officer or 10          employee of the Immigration and Naturalization Service may :

11          “(a) carry a firearm;

12          “(b) execute an order, warrant, subpoena, or other process
13          issued under authority of the United States for arrest, search or 14          seizure, or production of evidence;

15          “(c) make an arrest without warrant for an offense committed 16          in his presence, or for a felony committed outside his presence if
17          he has reasonable grounds to believe that the person to be arrested
18          has committed or is committing a felony;

19          “(d) offer and pay a reward for services or information assist-
20          ing in the detection or investigation of the commission of an 21          offense or in the apprehension of an offender; and

22          “(e) perform any other law enforcement duty that the Attor-
23          ney General may designate.

24   “§ 3019. Department of the Interior

25          “Subject to the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, an officer
26          or employee of the Department of the Interior, charged with law
27          enforcement responsibilities by the Secretary of the Interior may :

28          “(a) carry a firearm;

29          “(b) execute an order, warrant, subpoena, or other process
30          issued under the authority of the United States for arrest, search
31          or seizure, or production of evidence;

32          “(c) make an arrest without a warrant for an offense com-
33          mitted in his presence, or for a felony committed outside his pres-
34          ence, if he has reasonable grounds to believe that the person to be
35          arrested has committed or is committing a felony;

36          “(d) offer and pay a reward for services or information assist-
37          ing in the detection or investigation of the commission of an of-38          fense or in the apprehension of an offender; and

39          “(e) perform any other law enforcement duty that the Secre-
40          tary of the Interior may designate.

1 “Chapter 31.—ANCILLARY INVESTIGATIVE AUTHORITY

“Subchapter

“A. Interception of Communications.

“B. Compulsory of Testimony of Witnesses.

“C. Protection of Witnesses.

“D. Payment of Rewards.

2 “Subchapter A.—Interception of Communications

“Sec.

“3101. Authorization for Interception.

“3102. Application for an Order for Interception.

“3103. Issuance of an Order for Interception.

“3104. Interception without Prior Authorization.

“3105. Records and Notice of Interception.

“3106. Use of Information Obtained from an Interception.

“3107. Report of Interception.

“3108. Definitions for Subchapter A.

3 “§ 3101. Authorization for Interception

4 “(a) FEDERAL.—The interception of a private oral communication
5 may be authorized or approved by order of a federal court of com-
6 petent jurisdiction, pursuant to the provisions of section 3103, if:

7 “(1) the filing of an application for such an order is authorized
8 by:

9 “(A) the Attorney General; or

10 “(B) an Assistant Attorney General specifically designated
11 by the Attorney General;

12 “(2) the application is filed, pursuant to the provisions of 13 section 3102, by a law enforcement officer of a government agency
14 having responsibility for the investigation of the offense concern- 15 ing which the application is made; and

16 “(3) the interception may provide or has provided evidence
17 of the commission of an offense described in:

18 “(A) section 1101 (Treason), 1102 (Armed Rebellion or
19 Insurrection), 1111 (Sabotage), 1112 (Impairing Military
20 Effectiveness), 1118 (Aiding Escape of a Prisoner of War or 21 an Enemy Alien), 1121 (Espionage), 1122 (Disseminating
22 National Defense Information), 1123 (Disseminating Clas-
23 sified Information), 1124 (Receiving Classified Infor-
24 mation), 1131 (Atomic Energy Offenses), 1321 (Witness
25 Bribery), 1322 (Corrupting a Witness or an Informant), 26 1323 (Tampering with a Witness or an Informant), 1324 (Re-
27 taliating Against a Witness or an Informant), 1351 (Brib-
28 ery), 1352 (Graft), 1601 (Murder), 1602 (Manslaughter), 29 1611 (Maiming), 1612 (Aggravated Battery), 1615 (Terror-
30 izing), 1621 (Kidnapping), 1622 (Aggravated Criminal Re-

1           strait), 1631 (Aircraft Hijacking), 1701 (Arson), 1702
2           (Aggravated Property Destruction), 1721 (Robbery), 1722
3           (Extortion), 1723 (Blackmail), 1731 (Theft), 1732 (Traf-
4           ficking in Stolen Property), 1735 (Bankruptcy Fraud), 1741
5           (Counterfeiting), 1742 (Forgery), 1752 (Labor Bribery),
6           1801 (Operating a Racketeering Syndicate), 1802 (Racke-
7           teering), 1803 (Washing Racketeering Proceeds), 1804
8           (Loansharking), 1805 (Facilitating a Racketeering Activity
9           by Violence), 1811 (Trafficking in an Opiate), 1812 (Traf-
10          ficking in Drugs), 1821 (Explosives Offenses), 1831 (Leading 11          a Riot), 1832 (Providing Arms for a Riot), or 1841 (Engag-
12          ing in a Gambling Business), or

13           “(B) section 1002 (Criminal Conspiracy) or 1003 (Crimi-
14          nal Solicitation), if an objective of the conspiracy or the crime
15          solicited is an offense set forth in subparagraph (A).

16          “(b) STATE.—To the extent permitted by a state statute, the inter-
17          ception of a private oral communication may be authorized or ap-18          proved by order of a state court of competent jurisdiction, pursuant 19          to the provisions of applicable state law and in substantial conformity 20          with the provisions of section 3102, if:

21           “(1) an application for such an order is filed, pursuant to the 22          provisions of applicable state law and in substantial compliance
23          with the provisions of section 3102, by the principal prosecuting
24          attorney of the state or locality acting on behalf of a government
25          agency having responsibility for the investigation of the offense
26          concerning which the application is made; and

27           “(2) the interception may provide or has provided evidence 28          of the commission of an offense involving:

29           “(A) bribery, murder, kidnapping, robbery, extortion,
30          trafficking in a drug that is a controlled substance as defined
31          in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C.
32          802), or gambling;

33           “(B) theft, fraud, or a crime of violence that is a felony,
34          that is designated in an applicable state statute as an offense
35          for which interception may be ordered; or

36           “(C) a conspiracy or solicitation if an objective of the con-
37          spiracy or the crime solicited is an offense set forth in sub-
38          paragraph (A) or (B).

1 “§ 3102. Application for an Order for Interception

2 “(a) APPLICATION.—An application for an order, or an extension
3 of an order, authorizing or approving the interception of a private
4 oral communication shall be made in writing under oath or equivalent
5 affirmation to a court of competent jurisdiction and shall include the 6 following information:

7 “(1) the identity of the law enforcement officer making the 8 application and of the officer authorizing the application;

9 “(2) the authority of the applicant to make the application;

10 “(3) a complete statement of the facts relied upon by the 11 applicant to justify his belief that an order should be issued,
12 including:

13 “(A) details as to the particular offense that has been, is 14 being, or is about to be committed;

15 “(B) the identity, if known, of the person involved in the 16 commission of the offense whose communication is to be inter-
17 cepted;

18 “(C) a particular description of the character and loca-
19 tion of the facilities from which, or the place at which, the 20 communication is to be intercepted; and

21 “(D) a particular description of the kind of communica-
22 tion sought to be intercepted;

23 “(4) a complete statement of other investigative procedures
24 that have been tried in the investigation and that have failed, or 25 that have not been tried in the investigation because they reason-
26 ably appear to be unlikely to succeed or to be too dangerous;

27 “(5) a statement of the period of time for which the intercep-
28 tion is required to be maintained, and, if the character of the 29 investigation is such that the authorization for interception should 30 not automatically terminate when the described kind of com-
31 munication has been first obtained, a particular description of 32 facts establishing probable cause to believe that an additional 33 communication of the same kind will occur thereafter;

34 “(6) a complete statement of the facts concerning all previous 35 applications known to the applicant that have been made to any 36 court for issuance of an order authorizing or approving the inter-
37 ception of a private oral communication involving any of the

1 same persons, facilities, or places specified in the application, and 2 the action taken by the court on each such application; and

3 “(7) if the application is for the extension of an order, a state-
4 ment setting forth the results thus far obtained from the inter-
5 ception, or a reasonable explanation of the failure to obtain such 6 results.

7 “(b) ADDITIONAL EVIDENCE.—The court may require the applicant
8 to furnish additional testimony or documentary evidence in support
9 of the application.

10 “§ 3103. Issuance of an Order for Interception

11 “(a) FINDINGS.—Upon an application made pursuant to section
12 3102, the court may issue an ex parte order, as requested in the appli-
13 cation or as found warranted by the court, authorizing or approving 14 interception of a private oral communication within the geographic 15 jurisdiction of such court if the court determines on the basis of the 16 facts submitted by the applicant that:

17 “(1) there is probable cause to believe that a person is com-
18 mitting, has committed, or is about to commit a particular offense
19 set forth in section 3101;

20 “(2) there is probable cause to believe that a particular com-
21 munication concerning the offense will be obtained through such 22 interception;

23 “(3) other investigative procedures have been tried and have 24 failed, or have not been tried because they reasonably appear to be 25 unlikely to succeed or to be too dangerous; and 26 “(4) there is probable cause to believe that a facility from which,

27 or the place at which, the communication is to be intercepted:

28 “(A) is being used, or is about to be used, in connection with 29 the commission of the offense; or

30 “(B) is leased to, listed in the name of, or commonly used
31 by a person who is committing, has committed, or is about to 32 commit the offense.

33 “(b) ORDER.—An order issued under this section:

34 “(1) shall specify:

35 “(A) the identity, if known, of the person whose com-
36 munication is to be intercepted;

37 “(B) the character and location of the facilities from 38 which, or the place at which, the communication is to be
39 intercepted;

1           “(C) a particular description of the kind of communica-
2           tion sought to be intercepted, and a statement of the partic-
3           ular offense to which it relates;

4           “(D) the identity of the government agency authorized
5           to intercept the communication and of the person authorizing 6           the application; and

7           “(E) the period of time during which the interception is 8           authorized, and whether the interception must automatically 9           terminate when the described communication has been first 10          obtained; and

11         “(2) shall direct, upon the request of the applicant :

12           “(A) that a communications common carrier, landlord,
13           custodian, or other person furnish the applicant forthwith
14           all information, facilities, and technical assistance necessary
15           to accomplish the interception unobtrusively and with a mini-
16           mum of interference with the services that such carrier, land-17           lord, custodian, or other person is according the person whose 18           communication is to be intercepted; and

19           “(B) that the applicant compensate, at the prevailing 20           rates, such carrier, landlord, custodian, or other person for 21           furnishing such facilities or technical assistance.

22         “(c) PERIOD AND MANNER OF INTERCEPTION.—An order issued under 23         this section may authorize or approve the interception of a private 24         oral communication for the period necessary to achieve the purposes
25         of the authorization, or for thirty days, whichever is less. Extensions
26         of an order may be granted, after an application for an extension made 27         in accordance with the provisions of section 3102(a) and after find-
28         ings concerning an extension in accordance with the provisions of sub-
29         section (a). The period of extension may be for the period neces-
30         sary to achieve the purposes for which it was granted, or for thirty
31         days, whichever is less. An order and extension of an order shall direct 32         that the interception be executed as soon as practicable, be conducted in 33         such a way as to minimize the interception of communications not 34         otherwise subject to interception under this subchapter, and be termi-
35         nated upon attainment of the authorized objective, or in thirty days,
36         whichever is less.

37         “(d) PERIODIC REPORTS.—An order issued under this section may 38         require that periodic reports be made to the court that issued the

1 order stating the progress made toward achievement of the authorized
2 objective and the need for continued interception.

3 “§ 3104. Interception Without Prior Authorization

4 “(a) UNRELATED INTERCEPTION IN THE COURSE OF AN AUTHORIZED
5 INTERCEPTION.—If a law enforcement officer, while engaged in in-
6 tercepting a private oral communication in accordance with the pro-
7 visions of this subchapter, intercepts a private oral communication
8 that relates to an offense other than an offense specified in the order
9 of authorization or approval, he may, in order to permit the disclo-
10 sure or use of its contents or evidence derived from its contents dur-
11 ing testimony in an official proceeding, make an application, in accord-12 ance with section 3102, for an order approving such interception as 13 soon as practicable after the unrelated interception. The court shall 14 enter such an order if it finds that the communication was otherwise
15 intercepted in accordance with the provisions of this subchapter.

16 “(b) EMERGENCY INTERCEPTION.—Notwithstanding any other pro-
17 vision of this subchapter, a law enforcement officer may intercept a 18 private oral communication without a court order if:

19 “(1) he is specially authorized to do so by the Attorney Gen-
20 eral, or by the principal prosecuting attorney of a state or locality
21 acting pursuant to a statute of that state;

22 “(2) he reasonably determines that:

23 “(A) an emergency situation exists with respect to an of-
24 fense described in section 1101 (Treason), 1111 (Sabotage),
25 or 1121 (Espionage), or an offense that involves a risk of 26 death;

27 “(B) the emergency situation requires a private oral com-
28 munication to be intercepted before an order authorizing such 29 interception can, with due diligence, be obtained; and

30 “(C) there are grounds upon which an order could be en-
31 tered under this subchapter to authorize such interception;
32 and

33 “(3) an application for an order approving the interception is 34 made in accordance with section 3102 as soon as practicable, but 35 not more than forty-eight hours, after the interception has oc-
36 curred or commenced.

37 In the absence of an order approving the interception, the interception
38 shall terminate immediately when the communication sought is ob-
39 tained or when the application for the order is denied, whichever is 40 earlier. If the application for approval is denied, the contents of any

1 private oral communication intercepted shall be treated as having been
2 obtained in violation of this subchapter, and a notice shall be served
3 as provided in section 3105(b).

4 “§ 3105. Records and Notice of Interception

5 “(a) MAINTENANCE OF RECORDS.—

6 “(1) The contents of a private oral communication intercepted 7 by any means authorized by law shall, unless impracticable, be
8 recorded on a sound recording device, and be recorded in a manner
9 that will protect the recording from editing or other alteration.
10 As soon as practicable after the expiration of the period set forth
11 in the order, or in an extension of an order, the recording shall be 12 made available to the court issuing the order, shall be sealed under 13 its direction, and shall be placed under such custody as the court
14 may order. The recording may not be destroyed for a period of 15 ten years, and may not be destroyed after that period except upon
16 an order of the court. A duplicate recording may be made for use
17 or disclosure to the extent that such use or disclosure is appropriate
18 to the proper performance of official duties.

19 “(2) An application made and an order issued under this sub-
20 chapter shall be sealed by the court issuing the order, and shall be 21 placed under such custody as the court may direct, and shall be
22 disclosed only upon a showing of good cause. The application
23 and order may not be destroyed for a period of ten years, and may 24 not be destroyed after that period except upon an order of the 25 court.

26 “(b) SERVICE OF NOTICE TO PARTIES.—

27 “(1) Within a reasonable time, but not more than ninety days, 28 after the termination of the period for which an interception is 29 authorized by an order or an extension of an order, or after the 30 filing of an application, that is subsequently denied, for an order 31 of approval under section 3104(b), the court shall order notice to 32 be served on the person named in the order or in the application,
33 and on such other person who is a party to an intercepted private 34 oral communication as the court may determine to be in the in-
35 terest of justice. The notice shall include :

36 “(A) the fact and date of the issuance of the order or of the 37 filing and denial of the application ;

38 “(B) the period of the authorized, approved, or disap-
39 proved interception ;

1           “(C) the fact that during the period a private oral com-
2           munication was or was not intercepted.

3           “(2) The court, upon the filing of a motion by a person upon 4           whom the notice is served, may make available for inspection by 5           such person or his counsel any portion of the contents of an inter-
6           cepted private oral communication, the evidence derived from 7           such contents, the application, or the order, that the court deter-
8           mines to be in the interest of justice.

9           “(3) On an ex parte showing of good cause to the court, the 10          serving of the notice may be postponed.

11       “§ 3106. Use of Information Obtained from an Interception

12       “(a) DISCLOSURE AND USE.—

13           “(1) A law enforcement officer who, in accordance with the 14           provisions of this subchapter, has obtained knowledge of the con-15           tents of a private oral communication, including the contents of 16           an unrelated interception as set forth in section 3104(a), or evi-
17           dence derived from such contents, may disclose or use such con-
18           tents to the extent that disclosure is appropriate to the proper
19           performance of his official duties.

20           “(2) A person who, in accordance with the provisions of this
21           subchapter, has received information concerning the contents of a
22           private oral communication, including the contents of an unre-
23           lated interception for which an order has been issued as set forth in 24           section 3104(a), or evidence derived from such contents, may dis-
25           close or use such contents while giving testimony under oath or 26           affirmation in an official proceeding.

27           “(3) A privileged private oral communication that is inter-
28           cepted in accordance with, or in violation of, the provisions of this 29           chapter does not lose its privileged character because of its being 30           intercepted.

31       “(b) SEAL.—The presence of the seal provided for by section 3105
32       (a), or a satisfactory explanation for the absence of such seal, is a pre-
33       requisite to the use or disclosure of the contents of an intercepted pri-34       vate oral communication, or evidence derived from such contents, in an 35       official proceeding.

36       “(c) PRE-TRIAL NOTICE.—The contents of an intercepted private oral 37       communication, or evidence derived from such contents, may not be 38       received in evidence or otherwise disclosed in an official proceeding in 39       a court unless each aggrieved person who is a party in the official
40       proceeding has, not less than ten days before the official proceeding,
41       been furnished with a copy of the court order, and the accompanying

1 application, under which the interception was authorized or approved.
2 The ten day period may be waived by the court if it finds that it was not
3 possible to furnish such person with the information ten days before
4 the official proceeding, and that the person will not be prejudiced by 5 delay in receiving the information.

6 “(d) SUPPRESSION OF EVIDENCE.—

7 “(1) An aggrieved person in an official proceeding before a
8 government agency of the United States, a state, or a locality,
9 may make a motion to suppress the contents of an intercepted
10 private oral communication, or evidence derived from such con-
11 tents, on the ground that:

12 “(A) the communication was unlawfully intercepted;

13 “(B) the order of authorization or approval under which 14 it was intercepted is insufficient on its face; or 15 “(C) the interception was not made in conformity with 16 the order of authorization or approval.

17 If the motion alleges that the evidence sought to be suppressed has 18 been derived from the contents of an unlawfully intercepted pri-
19 vate oral communication, and if the aggrieved person has not been 20 served with notice of such an interception as provided by section 21 3105(b), the opponent of the allegation shall affirm or deny the 22 occurrence of the alleged unlawful interception, but no such 23 motion shall be considered if the alleged unlawful interception
24 took place more than five years before the event to which the 25 evidence relates.

26 “(2) The motion shall be made prior to the official proceeding
27 unless there was no opportunity to make the motion or unless 28 the aggrieved person was not aware of the grounds for the 29 motion.

30 “(3) A court of competent jurisdiction, upon the filing of a
31 motion by an aggrieved person, may make available for inspec-
32 tion by the aggrieved person or his counsel any portion of the 33 contents of an intercepted private oral communication, or the evi-
34 dence derived from such contents, the court determines to be 35 in the interest of justice.

36 “(4) No part of the contents of a private oral communication
37 that has been unlawfully intercepted, and no evidence derived
38 from such contents, may be received in evidence in an official pro-
39 ceeding before a government agency of the United States, a state,
40 or a locality.

1   “§ 3107. Report of Interception

2   “(a) JUDICIAL REPORT.—Within thirty days after the expiration of 3 the period of interception authorized in an order, or extension of an 4 order, entered under section 3103, or after the denial of an applica-
5 tion for an order approving an interception, the court shall report to 6 the Administrative Office of the United States Courts:

7       “(1) the fact that an order or extension was applied for;

8       “(2) the identity of the law enforcement officer and the govern-
9 ment agency making the application and the person authorizing
10 the application;

11       “(3) the kind of order or extension applied for;

12       “(4) the offense specified in the application for the order or 13 extension;

14       “(5) the fact that the application for the order or extension was 15 granted as applied for, was granted in a modified form, or was 16 denied;

17       “(6) the period of interception authorized by the order or 18 extension;

19       “(7) the nature of the facilities from which, or the place at 20 which, the private oral communication was to be intercepted; and

21       “(8) any related information that the Administrative Office
22 of the United States Courts may by regulation require.

23   “(b) PROSECUTIVE REPORT.—In January of each year, the Attorney
24 General, or the principal prosecuting attorney of a state or locality,
25 shall report to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts:

26       “(1) the information required by subsection (a) with respect
27 to each application for an order, or extension of an order, made
28 during the preceding calendar year;

29       “(2) a general description of the interceptions made under such 30 orders or extensions, including:

31           “(A) the approximate nature and frequency of incrimi-
32 nating communications intercepted;

33           “(B) the approximate nature and frequency of other com-
34 munications intercepted;

35           “(C) the approximate number of persons whose communi-
36 cations were intercepted; and

37           “(D) the approximate nature, amount, and cost of the 38 manpower and other resources used in the interceptions;

39       “(3) the number of arrests and summonses in lieu of arrests
40 resulting from the interceptions, and the offenses which were the 41 subjects of such arrests and summonses;

1           “(4) the number of trials resulting from the interceptions;

2           “(5) the number of motions to suppress made with respect to
3 the interceptions, and the number granted or denied;

4           “(6) the number of convictions resulting from the intercep-
5 tions, the offenses for which the convictions were obtained, and a
6 general assessment of the importance of the interceptions in ob-
7 taining the convictions; and

8           “(7) any related information that the Administrative Office of 9 the United States Courts may by regulation require.

10          “(c) ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE REPORT.—In April of each year, the 11 Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts shall 12 transmit to the Congress a complete report concerning the number of 13 applications made for orders and extensions of orders authorizing or 14 approving the interception of private oral communications and the 15 number of such orders and extensions granted or denied during the 16 preceding calendar year. The report shall include a summary and 17 analysis of the data required to be filed with the Administrative Office
18 under subsection (a) and (b).

19          “(d) REGULATIONS CONCERNING REPORTS.—The Director of the Ad-
20 ministrative Office of the United States Courts is authorized to issue
21 regulations dealing with the content and form of the reports required
22 to be filed pursuant to subsections (a) and (b).

23          “§ 3108. Definitions for Chapter A

24          “As used in this subchapter:

25               “(a) ‘aggrieved person’ means a person who was a party to an 26 intercepted private oral communication or a person against whom 27 an interception was directed;

28               “(b) ‘communications common carrier’ has the meaning set
29 forth for the term ‘common carrier’ in section 3(h) of the Act of 30 June 19, 1934, as amended (47 U.S.C. 153(h));

31               “(c) ‘contents’, when used with respect to a private oral com-
32 munication, has the meaning set forth in section 1526(b);

33               “(d) ‘court of competent jurisdiction’ means:

34                       “(1) a district court of the United States or a United 35 States Court of Appeals; or

36                       “(2) a state court of general criminal jurisdiction author-
37 ized by a statute of that state to enter an order authorizing
38 interception of a private oral communication;

39               “(e) ‘eavesdropping device’ has the meaning set forth in section
40 1525(c);

1           “(f) ‘intercept’ means to acquire the contents of a communica-
2           tion through the use of an eavesdropping device and includes the 3           acquisition of such contents by simultaneous transmission or by 4           recording;

5           “(g) ‘private oral communication’ has the meaning set forth in 6           section 1525(f).

7           “Subchapter B.—Compulsion of Testimony of Witnesses

“Sec.

“3111. Compulsion of Testimony Generally.

“3112. Court or Grand Jury Proceedings.

“3113. Administrative Proceedings.

“3114. Congressional Proceedings.

“3115. Definitions for Subchapter B.

8           “§ 3111. Compulsion of Testimony Generally

9           “(a) SELF-INCRIMINATION CLAIM PRECLUDED.—If a person refuses,
10          on the basis of his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or to 11          produce a record, document, or other object in an official proceeding 12          conducted under the authority of:

13               “(1) a court or grand jury of the United States;

14               “(2) an agency of the United States; or 15               “(3) Congress or either House of Congress;

16          and the presiding officer informs the person of an order issued under 17          this subchapter, the person may not refuse to comply with the order
18          on the basis of his privilege against self-incrimination.

19          “(b) USE OF TESTIMONY AGAINST WITNESS PRECLUDED.—The testi-
20          mony or production that is compelled under the order, and any infor-
21          mation directly or indirectly derived from the testimony or produc-
22          tion, may not be used against the person in any manner a criminal 23          case, except in a prosecution for:

24               “(1) an offense described in section 1341 (Perjury), 1342
25               (False Swearing), or 1343 (Making a False Statement) that is 26               committed in the course of the testimony or production; or

27               “(2) an offense involving a failure to comply with the order.

28          “§ 3112. Court or Grand Jury Proceedings

29          “(a) ISSUANCE OF ORDER.—If a person has been or may be sub-
30          poenaed to testify or to produce a record, document, or other object
31          in an official proceeding conducted under the authority of a court or 32          grand jury of the United States, the district court for the judicial 33          district in which the official proceeding is or may be held shall, upon 34          the application of the United States attorney for the district pursuant 35          to subsection (b), issue an order requiring the person to testify or to 36          produce the record, document, or other object notwithstanding his

1 refusal to do so on the basis of his privilege against self-incrimination.

2 The order shall become effective as provided in section 3111.

3 “(b) CRITERIA FOR ORDER.—A United States attorney may, with 4 the approval of the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General,
5 or any designated Assistant Attorney General, apply for an order under 6 subsection (a) if in his judgment :

7 “(1) the testimony or the record, document, or other object
8 may be necessary to the public interest; and

9 “(2) the person has refused or is likely to refuse to testify or 10 to produce the record, document, or other object on the basis of his 11 privilege against self-incrimination.

12 “§ 3113. Administrative Proceedings

13 “(a) ISSUANCE OF ORDER.—If a person has been or may be sub-
14 poenaed to testify or to produce a record, document, or other object
15 in an official proceeding conducted under the authority of an agency
16 of the United States, the agency may, pursuant to subsection (b), issue
17 an order requiring the person to testify or to produce the record, docu-
18 ment, or other object notwithstanding his refusal to do so on the basis
19 of his privilege against self-incrimination. The order shall become 20 effective as provided in section 3111.

21 “(b) CRITERIA FOR ORDER.—An agency of the United States may,
22 with the approval of the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney Gen-
23 eral, or any designated Assistant Attorney General, issue an order
24 under subsection (a) if in its judgment :

25 “(1) the testimony or the record, document, or other object may 26 be necessary to the public interest; and

27 “(2) the person has refused or is likely to refuse to testify or 28 to produce the record, document, or other object on the basis of 29 his privilege against self-incrimination.

30 “§ 3114. Congressional Proceedings

31 “(a) ISSUANCE OF ORDER.—If a person has been or may be subpoenaed
32 to testify or to produce a record, document, or other object in an offi-
33 cial proceeding conducted under the authority of Congress or of 34 either House of Congress, the district court of the United States for the 35 judicial district in which the official proceeding is or may be held shall,
36 upon the application of a duly authorized representative of the House
37 of Congress or the concerned subcommittee, committee, or joint com-
38 mittee of Congress pursuant to subsection (b), issue an order requiring 39 the person to testify or to produce the record, document, or other object
40 notwithstanding his refusal to do so on the basis of his privilege

1 against self-incrimination. The order shall become effective as provided
2 in section 3111.

3 “(b) CRITERIA FOR ORDER.—A request for an order under subsection
4 (a) may be made if:

5 “(1) the application for the order has been approved:

6 “(A) in the case of an official proceeding before a House
7 of Congress by an affirmative vote of a majority of the mem-
8 bers present in that House; or

9 “(B) in the case of an official proceeding before a com-
10 mittee, subcommittee, or joint committee of Congress by an 11 affirmative vote of two-thirds of the members of the full 12 committee; and

13 “(2) ten days or more prior to the day on which the application
14 for the order was made, the Attorney General was served with 15 notice of an intention to request the order.

16 “(c) POSTPONEMENT OF ORDER.—Upon application of the Attorney
17 General, the court shall defer the issuance of an order under subsection 18 (a) for a period of twenty days from the date of the application for the 19 order, or for such lesser period as the Attorney General may specify.

20 “§ 3115. Definitions for Subchapter B

21 “As used in this subchapter:

22 “(a) ‘agency of the United States’ means an executive depart-
23 ment, as defined in 5 U.S.C. 101; a military department, as defined
24 in 5 U.S.C. 102; the Atomic Energy Commission; the China Trade
25 Act registrar appointed under section 3 of that Act (15 U.S.C.
26 143); the Civil Aeronautics Board; the Commodity Futures
27 Trading Commission; the Federal Communications Commission;
28 the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; the Federal Maritime 29 Commission; the Federal Power Commission; the Federal Trade
30 Commission; the Interstate Commerce Commission; the National 31 Credit Union Administration; the National Labor Relations
32 Board; the National Transportation Safety Board, the Railroad
33 Retirement Board; the Securities and Exchange Commission; the 34 United States Victim Compensation Board; an arbitration board
35 established under section 7 of the Railway Labor Act, as amended
36 (45 U.S.C. 157); or a board established under section 5 of the 37 Act of February 22, 1935 (15 U.S.C. 715d);

38 “(b) ‘court of the United States’ includes the Superior Court
39 and the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

1           “Subchapter C.—Protection of Witnesses

“Sec.

“3121. Facilities for Witness Protection.

“3122. Reimbursement for Witness Protection Expenses.

“3123. Definitions for Subchapter C.

2           “§ 3121. Facilities for Witness Protection

3           “The Attorney General may provide for the security of govern-
4 ment witnesses, potential government witnesses, and their immediate 5 families, in official proceedings instituted against a person alleged 6 to have engaged in racketeering activity or other offenses similar in 7 nature, or involving offenses the investigation or prosecution of which 8 is likely under the circumstances to cause the commission of an offense
9 described in section 1324 (Retaliating against a Witness or an In-10 formant). The Attorney General may provide housing facilities and 11 otherwise provide for the health, safety, and welfare of such govern-
12 ment witnesses and potential government witnesses, and their im-
13 mediate families, if, in his judgment, testimony by such a witness
14 might subject the witness or a member of his immediate family to a 15 danger of bodily injury, and may continue to make such provision for 16 as long as, in his judgment, such danger exists. The Attorney General
17 is authorized to purchase, rent, or modify protected housing facilities
18 for the purposes of this section.

19           “§ 3122. Reimbursement for Witness Protection Expenses

20           “The offer of facilities to a person under section 3121 may be con-
21 ditioned by the Attorney General upon reimbursement in whole or in 22 part to the United States by a state or local government of the cost
23 of maintaining and protecting such person.

24           “§ 3123. Definitions for Subchapter C

25           “As used in this subchapter :

26           “(a) ‘government’ includes the federal government and a state
27 or local government ;

28           “(b) ‘racketeering activity’ has the meaning set forth in sec-
29 tion 1806(f).

30           “Subchapter D.—Payment of Rewards

“Sec.

“3131. Rewards for Apprehending Offenders.

31           “§ 3131. Rewards for Apprehending Offenders

32           “The Attorney General may offer and pay an amount not to exceed 33 $100,000 as a reward for the capture of, or for information leading to 34 the arrest or conviction of, a person charged with the commission of a 35 federal or state offense. Except as otherwise provided, no more than

1 $100,000 may be expended as a reward for the capture of, or for in-
 2 formation leading to the arrest or conviction of, any one person. If the 3 person charged is killed while resisting arrest, the Attorney General
 4 may pay all or part of the reward to the person who assisted in the 5 capture or provided the information. A reward may not be paid to a
 6 public servant who has rendered services or furnished information
 7 while performing his official duties.

8 “Chapter 32.—RENDITION AND EXTRADITION

“Subchapter

“A. Rendition.

“B. Extradition.

9 “Subchapter A.—Rendition

“Sec.

“3201. Interstate Agreement on Detainers.

“3202. Rendition of a Fugitive.

“3203. General Provisions for Subchapter A.

10 “§ 3201. Interstate Agreement on Detainers

11 “(a) Adoption of Agreement by the United States.—The United 12 States, as a ‘sending State’ for purposes of Article III and IV, but as a 13 ‘receiving State’ for purposes of Article III only, and the District of 14 Columbia are parties to the Interstate Agreement on Detainers, as set 15 forth in subsection (b), together with all jurisdictions joining the 16 agreement in substantially the same form. All government agencies
 17 and public servants of the United States and of the District of Colum-
 18 bia shall cooperate with the party States in enforcing the agreement
 19 and in effectuating its purpose.

20 “(b) TEXT OF AGREEMENT.

21 “The contracting States solemnly agree that:

22 “ ‘ARTICLE I

23 “ ‘The party States find that charges outstanding against a prisoner,
 24 detainers based on untried indictments, informations, or complaints
 25 and difficulties in securing speedy trial of persons already incarcerated
 26 in other jurisdictions, produce uncertainties which obstruct programs
 27 of prisoner treatment and rehabilitation. Accordingly, it is the policy
 28 of the party States and the purpose of this agreement to encourage 29 the expeditious and orderly disposition of such charges and determina-30 tion of the proper status of any and all detainers based on untried in-
 31 dictments, informations, or complaints. The party States also find that 32 proceedings with reference to such charges and detainers, when ema-
 33 nating from another jurisdiction, cannot properly be had in the ab-
 34 sence of cooperative procedures. It is the further purpose of this 35 agreement to provide such cooperative procedures.

1       “(c) The warden, commissioner of corrections, or other official
2 having custody of the prisoner shall promptly inform him of the 3 source and contents of any detainer lodged against him and shall 4 also inform him of his right to make a request for final disposition
5 of the indictment, information, or complaint on which the detainer is 6 based.

7       “(d) Any request for final disposition made by a prisoner pursu-
8 ant to paragraph (a) hereof shall operate as a request for final dis-9 position of all untried indictments, information, or complaints on the 10 basis of which detainees have been lodged against the prisoner from 11 the State to whose prosecuting official the request for final disposition
12 is specifically directed. The warden, commissioner of corrections, or 13 other official having custody of the prisoner shall forthwith notify all
14 appropriate prosecuting officers and courts in the several jurisdictions
15 within the State to which the prisoner's request for final disposition
16 is being sent of the proceeding being initiated by the prisoner. Any 17 notification sent pursuant to this paragraph shall be accompanied by 18 copies of the prisoner's written notice, request, and the certificate. If 19 trial is not had on any indictment, information, or complaint contem-
20 plated hereby prior to the return of the prisoner to the original place
21 of imprisonment, such indictment, information, or complaint shall not 22 be of any further force or effect, and the court shall enter an order
23 dismissing the same with prejudice.

24       “(e) Any request for final disposition made by a prisoner pursu-25 ant to paragraph (a) hereof shall also be deemed to be a waiver of 26 extradition with respect to any charge or proceeding contemplated
27 thereby or included therein by reason of paragraph (d) hereof, and a
28 waiver of extradition to the receiving State to serve any sentence
29 there imposed upon him, after completion of his term of imprisonment
30 in the sending State. The request for final disposition shall also con-31 stitute a consent by the prisoner to the production of his body in any 32 court where his presence may be required in order to effectuate the 33 purposes of this agreement and a further consent voluntarily to be 34 returned to the original place of imprisonment in accordance with the 35 provisions of this agreement. Nothing in this paragraph shall prevent 36 the imposition of a concurrent sentence if otherwise permitted by law.

37       “(f) Escape from custody by the prisoner subsequent to his execu-
38 tion of the request for final disposition referred to in paragraph (a)
39 hereof shall void the request.

“ARTICLE IV

1
2 “(a) The appropriate officer of the jurisdiction in which an un-
3 tried indictment, information, or complaint is pending shall be en-
4 titled to have a prisoner against whom he has lodged a detainer and
5 who is serving a term of imprisonment in any party State made avail-
6 able in accordance with article V(a) hereof upon presentation of a
7 written request for temporary custody or availability to the appro-
8 priate authorities of the State in which the prisoner is incarcerated:
9 Provided, That the court having jurisdiction of such indictment, in-
10 formation, or complaint shall have duly approved, recorded, and trans-
11 mitted the request: And provided further, That there shall be a period 12 of thirty days after receipt by the appropriate authorities before the 13 request be honored, within which period the Governor of the sending 14 State may disapprove the request for temporary custody or availabil-
15 ity, either upon his own motion or upon motion of the prisoner.

16 “(b) Upon request of the officer’s written request as provided in 17 paragraph (a) hereof, the appropriate authorities having the pris-
18 oner in custody shall furnish the officer with a certificate stating the 19 term of commitment under which the prisoner is being held, the time
20 already served, the time remaining to be served on the sentence, the 21 amount of good time earned, the time of parole eligibility of the pris-
22 oner, and any decisions of the State parole agency relating to the 23 prisoner. Said authorities simultaneously shall furnish all other officers
24 and appropriate courts in the receiving State who has lodged detain-25 ers against the prisoner with similar certificates and with notices in-26 forming them of the request for custody or availability and of the 27 reasons therefor.

28 “(c) In respect of any proceeding made possible by this article, 29 trial shall be commenced within one hundred and twenty days of the 30 arrival of the prisoner in the receiving State, but for good cause
31 shown in open court, the prisoner or his counsel being present, the 32 court having jurisdiction of the matter may grant any necessary or 33 reasonable continuance.

34 “(d) Nothing contained in this article shall be construed to de-35 prive any prisoner of any right which he may have to contest the 36 legality of his delivery as provided in paragraph (a) hereof, but 37 such delivery may not be opposed or denied on the ground that the 38 executive authority of the sending State has not affirmatively con-
39 sented to or ordered such delivery.

1 for prosecution on any other charge or charges arising out of the same
2 transaction. Except for his attendance at court and while being
3 transported to or from any place at which his presence may be required,
4 the prisoner shall be held in a suitable jail or other facility regularly
5 used for persons awaiting prosecution.

6 “(e) At the earliest practicable time consonant with the purposes
7 of this agreement, the prisoner shall be returned to the sending State.

8 “(f) During the continuance of temporary custody or while the 9 prisoner is otherwise being made available for trial as required by 10 this agreement, time being served on the sentence shall continue to 11 run but good time shall be earned by the prisoner only if, and to the 12 extent that, the law and practice of the jurisdiction which imposed
13 the sentence may allow.

14 “(g) For all purposes other than that for which temporary custody
15 as provided in this agreement is exercised, the prisoner shall be 16 deemed to remain in the custody of and subject to the jurisdiction
17 of the sending State and any escape from temporary custody may be 18 dealt with in the same manner as an escape from the original place
19 of imprisonment or in any other manner permitted by law.

20 “(h) From the time that a party State receives custody of a pris-
21 oner pursuant to this agreement until such prisoner is returned to 22 the territory and custody of the sending State, the State in which 23 the one or more untried indictments, informations, or complaints are 24 pending or in which trial is being had shall be responsible for the 25 prisoner and shall also pay all costs of transporting, caring for,
26 keeping, and returning the prisoner. The provisions of this para-
27 graph shall govern unless the States concerned shall have entered 28 into a supplementary agreement providing for a different allocation
29 of costs and responsibilities as between or among themselves. Noth-
30 ing herein contained shall be construed to alter or affect any in-31 ternal relationship among the departments, agencies, and officers of 32 and in the government of a party State, or between a party State
33 and its subdivisions, as to the payment of costs, or responsibilities 34 therefor.

35 “ARTICLE VI

36 “(a) In determining the duration and expiration dates of the time
37 periods provided in articles III and IV of this agreement, the run-
38 ning of said time periods shall be tolled whenever and for as long
39 as the prisoner is unable to stand trial, as determined by the court
40 having jurisdiction of the matter.

1     “(b) No provision of this agreement, and no remedy made avail-
2     able by this agreement shall apply to any person who is adjudged
3     to be mentally ill.

4                                                             “ARTICLE VII

5     “Each State party to this agreement shall designate an officer who,
6     acting jointly with like officers of other party States, shall promulgate
7     rules and regulations to carry out more effectively the terms and provi-
8     sions of this agreement, and who shall provide, within and without 9     the State, information necessary to the effective operation of this
10    agreement.

11                                                            “ARTICLE VIII

12    “‘This agreement shall enter into full force and effect as to a party
13    State when such State has enacted the same into law. A State party
14    to this agreement may withdraw herefrom by enacting a statute
15    repealing the same. However, the withdrawal of any State shall not 16    affect the status of any proceedings already initiated by inmates or 17    by State officers at the time such withdrawal takes effect, nor shall 18    it affect their rights in respect thereof.

19                                                            “ARTICLE IX

20    “‘This agreement shall be liberally construed so as to effectuate its 21    purposes. The provisions of this agreement shall be severable and if 22    any phrase, clause, sentence, or provision of this agreement is declared
23    to be contrary to the constitution of any party State or of the United 24    States or the applicability thereof to any government, agency, per-25    son, or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of 26    this agreement and the applicability thereof to any government,
27    agency, person, or circumstance shall not be affected thereby. If this 28    agreement shall be held contrary to the constitution of any State party 29    hereto, the agreement shall remain in full force and effect as to the 30    remaining States and in full force and effect as to the State affected as 31    to all severable matters.’

32    “§ 3202. Rendition of a Fugitive

33    “‘If the executive authority of a state demands the return of a per-
34    son, as a fugitive from justice, from the executive authority of a state
35    to which the person has fled, the demand must be accompanied by a
36    copy of an indictment returned before a judge of the demanding state, 37    or of an affidavit made before such a judge, charging such person with 38    the commission of a state or local crime. The copy must be certified as 39    authentic by the governor or chief magistrate of the state from which 40    the person charged has fled. Upon receipt of the demand and accom-

1 panying documents, the executive authority of the state to which the 2 person has fled shall:

3       “(a) cause the person to be arrested and held in official
4 detention;

5       “(b) notify the executive authority of the demanding state, or 6 his agent if one has been appointed to receive the fugitive; and

7       “(c) deliver the fugitive to the agent when the agent appears.

8 If no agent of the demanding state appears within thirty days of the 9 date of arrest to take the fugitive into his custody, the person may be 10 discharged. An agent who receives a fugitive into his custody may 11 transport him to the state from which he has fled.

12 “§ 3203. General Provisions for Subchapter A

13       “(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in section 3201:

14       “(1) ‘Governor’ means, with respect to the United States, the 15 Attorney General, and with respect to the District of Columbia,
16 the Mayor of the District of Columbia;

17       “(2) ‘appropriate court’ means, with respect to the United 18 States, a court of the United States, and with respect to the Dis-
19 trict of Columbia, the Superior Court of the District of Columbia,
20 in which there is pending an indictment, information, or com-
21 plaint, for which disposition is sought.

22       “(b) REGULATIONS, FORMS, AND INSTRUCTIONS.—The Attorney Gen-
23 eral, acting for the United States, and the Mayor of the District of 24 Columbia, acting for the District of Columbia, shall issue regulations,
25 forms, and instructions, and shall perform any other act necessary
26 for carrying out the provisions of this subchapter.

27       “(c) RESERVATION OF RIGHT TO ALTER, AMEND, OR REPEAL.—The 28 United States reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal the Agree-
29 ment set forth in section 3201(b).

30       “Subchapter B.—Extradition

“Sec.

“3211. Scope and Limitation of Extradition Provisions.

“3212. Extradition Procedure.

“3213. Warrant of Surrender.

“3214. Waiver.

“3215. Appeal.

“3216. Return to the United States.

“3217. General Provisions for Subchapter B.

31 “§ 3211. Scope and Limitation of Extradition Provisions

32       “(a) APPLICATION.—Extradition may be granted only pursuant to 33 the provisions of an applicable treaty or other international agree-
34 ment and of this subchapter.

1       “(b) LIMITATION.—The provisions of this subchapter relating to 2 the surrender of a person who has been convicted of or charged with 3 an offense by a foreign nation shall continue in force only during the 4 existence in force of a treaty or other international agreement, bilateral
5 or multilateral, concerning extradition between the United States and 6 the foreign nation.

7       “(c) CONVICTIONS IN ABSENTIA.—Extradition may not be granted
8 for a person convicted in absentia, unless:

9               “(1) the demanding government assures the Secretary of State 10 that the proceeding will be reopened upon the request of the per-
11 son to be surrendered; or

12               “(2) the person fled after having been present when his trial 13 commenced.

14       “(d) AUTHORIZING EXTRADITION.—If an extradition treaty or other
15 international agreement provides that the United States may extradite
16 its own citizens or nationals, but does not require such extradition,
17 the Secretary of State has authority to authorize the extradition of 18 a United States citizen or national who has been found extraditable
19 pursuant to the provisions of this subchapter.

20       “§ 3212. Extradition Procedure

21       “(a) ARRESTS WITH DOCUMENTATION.—

22               “(1) Upon the filing of a complaint under oath or affirmation
23 charging that a person believed to be within the jurisdiction of 24 the court has committed, within the jurisdiction of a demanding
25 foreign government, an offense made estraditable in an applicable
26 extradition treaty or other international agreement with the
27 United States:

28                       “(A) a court of the United States; or

29                       “(B) a magistrate specially authorized by a court of the 30 United States;

31 may issue a warrant for the arrest of the person charged.

32               “(2) The complaint may be filed only by:

33                       “(A) the Attorney General:

34                               “(i) pursuant to the provisions of an applicable treaty
35 or other international agreement; or

36                               “(ii) at the request of the demanding government; or 37                       “(B) persons authorized by an appropriate authority of the 38 demanding government to act on behalf of that government.

39 A complaint shall be accompanied by the documents required by 40 the provisions of the applicable treaty or other international agree-
41 ment, a copy of the diplomatic note to the Secretary of State re-

1       requesting extradition, an acknowledgement from the Department
2       of State of the diplomatic note requesting extradition, and a copy
3       of the applicable treaty or other international agreement.

4       “(3) Upon arrest, the person shall be brought either to the 5       court issuing the warrant of arrest or to the nearest federal dis-
6       trict court. The extradition hearing shall be conducted by the 7       court to which the person arrested is brought. If the person ar-
8       rested is brought before a court other than the one that issued the 9       warrant of arrest, the complaint and other documents filed with 10      that court shall be forwarded by the issuing court to the court in 11      which the hearing is to be conducted.

12      “(b) ARREST WITHOUT DOCUMENTATION.—

13      “(1) Upon the filing of a complaint under oath or affirmation
14      by a person authorized to do so under subsection (a) (2) :

15          “(A) a court of the United States; or 16          “(B) a magistrate specifically authorized by a court of the

17          United States;

18      may issue a warrant for the provisional apprehension of the per-
19      son sought.

20      “(2) The complaint shall state that a warrant of arrest or order 21      of detention exists for the person in the foreign nation, shall 22      specify the offense for which extradition is being sought, shall 23      describe the circumstances that necessitate such arrest, and shall 24      state, if the complaint is not filed by the Attorney General, that 25      reasonable notice of the intention to make the complaint has been 26      given to the Secretary of State.

27      “(3) The limitation period established by the applicable treaty 28      or other international agreement, or by this subchapter, for the 29      presentation of the documents required by the applicable treaty
30      or other international agreement, shall be tolled by presentation
31      of the documents to the Secretary of State. The failure to pre-
32      sent the documents within the period prescribed by the applicable
33      treaty or other international agreement, or by this subchapter,
34      shall authorize the court to release the person from official deten-
35      tion, but such release does not terminate the proceeding.

36      “(c) OFFICIAL DETENTION.—

37      “(1) A person arrested under the provisions of subsection (a)
38      shall be held in official detention until the completion of extradi-39      tion proceedings unless good cause for his release is presented to 40      the court. Release shall be granted only upon :

41          “(A) the posting of appropriate security;

1           “(B) the surrender of any travel documents, including a
2           passport or a visa, in the possession of the person; and

3           “(C) the imposition of appropriate restrictions on his 4           movements.

5           “(2) Unless unusual cause is presented to the court, a person
6           arrested pursuant to the provisions of subsection (b) shall be held 7           in official detention for the period, if any, specified in the appli-
8           cable treaty or other international agreement, or for ninety days,
9           whichever is less. If release is approved by the court, it may be 10          granted only under the restrictions set forth in paragraph (1).
11          Upon receipt by the Secretary of State of the documents specified
12          in subsection (a), the person arrested shall be subject to the provi-
13          sions of paragraph (1).

14          “(d) EXTRADITION HEARING.—

15           “(1) A person may not be extradited unless:

16           “(A) a hearing is held in which his extraditability is 17           established; or

18           “(B) a hearing is waived pursuant to section 3214.

19           “(2) Unless otherwise specified by the applicable treaty or 20           other international agreement, or by this subchapter, extradit-
21           ability shall be found upon proof that:

22           “(A) the applicable treaty or other international agree-
23           ment of extradition is in full force and effect;

24           “(B) the offense for which extradition is requested is 25           made extraditable in the applicable treaty or other interna-
26           tional agreement;

27           “(C) a criminal charge is pending against the person
28           sought, or the person sought has been convicted of an offense
29           in a court of the foreign nation but has not completed service
30           of the sentence imposed;

31           “(D) the pending criminal charge, or the prosecution for 32           the offense for which the person sought was convicted, was 33           commenced within the period required by any applicable
34           statute of limitations;

35           “(E) a warrant of arrest or order of detention is outstand-
36           ing in the foreign nation against the person sought;

37           “(F) evidence exists that establishes probable cause to 38           believe that the person sought and the person arrested are 39           identical; and

1           “(G) evidence exists that establishes probable cause to be-
2           lieve that the person sought has committed, or has been con-
3           victed of, the alleged offense.

4           “(3) Defenses against extradition are limited to those provided
5           by the applicable treaty or other international agreement, or by 6           international law, or by this title.

7           “(e) PROOF AND ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.—

8           “(1) Testimony of witnesses is not required in order to estab-
9           lish that the person is extraditable; extraditability may be estab-
10          lished by properly certified documents alone.

11          “(2) A deposition, warrant, or other document, or a copy
12          thereof, offered in evidence on behalf of the foreign nation upon 13          the hearing of an extradition case, is admissible as evidence at 14          the hearing for all the purposes of the hearing if:

15               “(A) it has been properly authenticated so as to entitle it to 16               be received for similar purposes by the courts of the foreign 17               nation from which the person is declared to be a fugitive;

18               “(B) a certificate to this effect has been executed by an ap-
19               propriate official of the foreign nation;

20               “(C) the certificate of the foreign official has been certified
21               by a diplomat or consular officer of the United States assigned 22               to such foreign nation; and

23               “(D) the signature of such diplomatic or consular officer
24               has been certified by the Secretary of State.

25          “(3) A certification or affidavit by the Secretary of State con-
26          cerning the existence of a treaty or other international agreement, 27          and concerning its status and effect, is admissible as evidence at the 28          hearing and is conclusive proof of such matters. A certification or 29          affidavit by the Secretary of State concerning the interpretation
30          of a treaty or other international agreement is admissible as evi-
31          dence at the hearing.

32          “(4) Hearsay evidence is admissible to establish the probable
33          cause required by subsection (d) (2) (G), and probable cause may 34          be established by hearsay evidence alone.

35          “(f) APPLICABLE LAWS.—The proof required by subsection (d) (2)
36          (B), may be found sufficient only if the court determines that the 37          basic elements of the offense in question substantially compare to the 38          basic elements of an offense that is a federal offense or that is generally
39          considered to be a crime under the criminal laws of the states. If the

1 applicable treaty or international agreement requires that the statute
2 of limitations in the United States be considered, the time limitations
3 set forth in section 511 are applicable to such offenses for purposes of 4 this subchapter. The Federal Rules of Criminal Procedures are not
5 applicable to this subchapter.

6 “(g) RESULTS OF HEARING.—

7 “(1) If, at the conclusion of the extradition hearing, the court
8 conducting the hearing finds the evidence presented to be sufficient 9 to meet the requirements of subsection (d) (2) and to sustain the 10 charge under the provisions of the applicable treaty or other inter-
11 national agreement, it shall certify the record of the proceeding, 12 including the finding as to extraditability on each charge for 13 which extradition was requested as required by subsection (d) (2),
14 to the Secretary of State. The certification shall be forwarded
15 to the Secretary of State by the clerk of the court within ten days
16 from the date of the finding and the order of committal.

17 “(2) If, at the conclusion of the extradition hearing, the court
18 conducting the hearing finds the evidence presented to be in-
19 sufficient to sustain any charge under the provisions of 20 the applicable treaty or other international agreement, it shall 21 state the reasons for the findings as to each such charge and cer-
22 tify the findings to the Secretary of State.

23 “(3) A person found extraditable shall be committed to the 24 custody of the Attorney General until he is surrendered to a duly
25 appointed agent of the demanding government or until the Secre-
26 tary of State declines to issue a warrant of surrender.

27 “(h) NEW PROCEEDING FOR SAME FUGITIVE.—If the requisition of 28 the foreign nation is denied, in whole or in part, by a court of the 29 United States, that nation may, after notification to the Secretary of 30 State, request the Attorney General to commence a new action in 31 conformity with the court’s decision required by section 3212(g) (2).

32 “§ 3213. Warrant of Surrender

33 “(a) ISSUANCE OF WARRANT.—Upon receipt of the record of the 34 proceeding pursuant to the provisions of section 3212(g) (1), the Sec-
35 retary of State may issue, pursuant to the request of the proper au-36 thorities of the demanding government, a warrant authorizing the 37 surrender of a person committed under section 3212 to an authorized 38 agent of the demanding government. The Secretary of State shall 39 issue the warrant to surrender and forward it to the embassy of the 40 foreign nation within thirty days of his receipt of the record of the 41 proceedings unless an appeal is taken by the person sought and a

1 stay is granted by a court having jurisdiction. The Secretary of State's 2 decision shall be based upon the provisions of the applicable treaty
3 and this subchapter. The foreign embassy shall be advised of the 4 limitations in section 3213(c) by the Secretary of State. If a request
5 for extradition is denied, in whole or in part, the decision shall be 6 forwarded expeditiously by the Secretary of State to the court of the 7 district where the fugitive is detained and and to the foreign nation's 8 ambassador.

9 “(b) WARRANT AS AUTHORITY.—Possession of a warrant of sur-
10 render by an agent of the foreign nation, duly appointed and desig-
11 nated to receive custody from the United States of a person ordered
12 surrendered, constitutes authority for the agent to hold the surren-
13 dered person in his custody and safekeeping in any state through 14 which it may be necessary for him to pass with the surrendered person
15 en route to the nation to which extradition has been ordered.

16 “(c) TIME LIMITATION.—A person committed pursuant to section
17 3212(g)(3) :

18 “(1) who is not surrendered to, and conveyed out of the United
19 States by, a duly authorized agent of the demanding nation
20 within :

21 “(A) sixty days after the commitment ; plus

22 “(B) the time actually required expeditiously to convey 23 the person out of the United States from the facility in which 24 he was held in official detention ; plus

25 “(C) the time, if any, during which the execution of the 26 warrant had been stayed pursuant to the provisions of sub-
27 section (d) ; and

28 “(2) who gives reasonable notice to the Secretary of State, of 29 his intention to apply for release ;
30 may be ordered by a court of the United States to be released from 31 official detention unless good cause is shown why such release should 32 not be ordered.

33 “(d) STAY OF EXECUTION OF WARRANT.—The execution of the war-
34 rant of surrender may not be stayed by an appellate court of the 35 United States unless good cause is shown.

36 “§ 3214. Waiver

37 “A person who is arrested for extradition to a foreign nation may 38 waive the requirements of formal extradition proceedings, including
39 the necessity of the issuance of a warrant of surrender by the Secre-
40 tary of State, if, orally and in writing, he so advises the court before 41 which an extradition hearing would be held that he knows of and

1 waives all rights guaranteed by the applicable treaty or other inter-
2 national agreement, and by this subchapter, in order that he might
3 be returned as soon as practicable to such foreign nation. Such a
4 waiver is irrevocable. If the demanding government and the court
5 accept the waiver, the person shall be removed from the United States
6 within fifteen days by an agent appointed by the demanding govern-
7 ment. Possession of a certified copy of the waiver by the agent con-
8 stitutes the same authority for the agent as that granted in section
9 3213(b). Except as otherwise provided by the applicable treaty or 10 other international agreement, or by this subchapter, all rights avail-
11 able to a person extradited pursuant to such treaty or other interna-
12 tional agreement are available to a person waiving extradition pur-
13 suant to this subsection. A person not removed from the United 14 States within the fifteen day period prescribed in this section shall be 15 released from official detention, but such release does not terminate 16 the proceeding.

17 “§ 3215. Appeal

18 “The person sought, or the demanding government, may appeal
19 to the appropriate United States Court of Appeals from a judgment
20 on a request for extradition. A notice of appeal may be filed within 21 seven days after the district court’s decision regarding extraditability.
22 The brief on behalf of the appellant shall be filed within ten days
23 of the notice of appeal. The brief on behalf of the appellee shall be 24 filed within ten days of the receipt of appellant’s brief. An appeal
25 under this section shall be decided expeditiously. No stay of the 26 requirements of section 3212(g) (1) or (g) (2) may be granted except 27 by the court of appeals before which the appeal is pending. No stay of 28 the requirements of section 3212(g) (3) shall be granted.

29 “§ 3216. Return to the United States

30 “If a person is delivered, pursuant to an extradition request, by a 31 foreign nation to a person who has been designated as an agent of the 32 United States by the Secretary of State, the President has the power 33 to take all necessary measures for the transportation and safekeeping 34 of the surrendered person until he is returned to the jurisdiction that 35 sought his return.

36 “§ 3217. General Provisions for Subchapter B

37 “(a) TRANSIT OF EXTRADITED PERSONS.—Except as otherwise pro-
38 vided, a person being escorted from the jurisdiction of one foreign na-
39 tion to the jurisdiction of another as a result of his surrender for ex-
40 tradition shall be denied entry into the United States by the Immigra-
41 tion and Naturalization Service. If the person is required to transit

1 the United States, he may be permitted by the Immigration and
 2 Naturalization Service to enter the United States for the sole purpose
 3 of continuous transit, if prior notice of the required transit is given to 4 the Secretary of State by a competent diplomatic official of the foreign 5 nation seeking the transit.

6 “(b) PAYMENT OF FEES AND COSTS.—All costs and expenses incurred
 7 in connection with the extradition or return of a person at the request
 8 of:

9 “(1) a foreign nation, shall be borne by:

10 “(A) such nation, upon request made by the Secretary of 11 State, if the demanding government is not represented by the 12 Attorney General;

13 “(B) the United States, if the demanding government is 14 represented by the Attorney General, except for costs and ex-
 15 penses for translations of extradition documents and for 16 transportation of the person sought to the foreign nation;

17 “(2) a state, shall be borne by such state; and 18 “(3) the United States, shall be borne by the United States.

19 “Chapter 33.—JURISDICTION AND VENUE

“Subchapter

“A. Jurisdiction.

“B. Venue.

20 “Subchapter A.—Jurisdiction

“Sec.

“3301. Jurisdiction of District Courts over Offenses.

“3302. Jurisdiction of United States Magistrates over Offenses.

“3303. Jurisdiction to Order Arrests for Offenses.

21 “§ 3301. Jurisdiction of District Courts Over Offenses

22 “(a) UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.—The United States District
 23 Courts have original jurisdiction, exclusive of the courts of the states,
 24 over all offenses committed within the general, special, or extraterri-
 25 torial jurisdiction of the United States.

26 “(b) DISTRICT COURTS OF THE CANAL ZONE, GUAM, AND THE VIRGIN
 27 ISLANDS.—The United States District Court for the District of the 28 Canal Zone, the District Court of Guam, and the District Court of the 29 Virgin Islands have original jurisdiction over all offenses committed 30 within the geographic jurisdiction of such courts or within the special
 31 or extraterritorial jurisdiction of the United States.

32 “§ 3302. Jurisdiction of United States Magistrates Over Offenses

33 “(a) JURISDICTION.—A United States magistrate has jurisdiction to 34 try persons accused of, and to sentence persons found guilty of, mis-
 35 demeanors and infractions committed within the judicial district or 36 districts in which he serves, if he is specially designated by the district

1 court or courts to exercise such jurisdiction, and if he proceeds under
2 such conditions as are imposed by the terms of the special designation.
3 Subject to the terms of the special designation, the magistrate may 4 exercise all authority of a district court with regard to trial, sentencing,
5 and modification of sentences.

6 “(b) ELECTION BY DEFENDANT.—A person charged with a Class A
7 misdemeanor may elect to be tried before a judge of the district
8 court for the district in which the offense was committed. The magis-
9 trate shall explain to such person that he has a right to a trial before a 10 judge of the district court, and that he has a right to a trial by 11 jury before such judge. A magistrate shall not proceed to try such case
12 unless the person, after such explanation, signs a written statement
13 consenting to be tried before the magistrate, waiving trial before a 14 judge of the district court, and waiving any right to a trial by jury that 15 such person may have.

16 “(c) APPEAL TO DISTRICT COURT.—A person convicted by a magis-
17 trate may appeal from the conviction to a judge of the district court
18 of the district in which the offense was committed.

19 “§ 3303. Jurisdiction to Order Arrests for Offenses

20 “(a) ARREST WITHIN THE UNITED STATES.—A person accused of an 21 offense may be arrested anywhere within the United States by order of 22 a federal judge, or of a judicial officer of the state in which the person 23 is found.

24 “(b) ARREST OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES.—A person accused of an
25 offense may be arrested if he is outside the United States and outside
26 the jurisdiction of any nation, and may be returned to the United 27 States, by order of a federal judge, if the person:

28 “(1) is a fugitive from justice who has been charged with or 29 convicted of any offense; or

30 “(2) is charged with an offense over which there is extra-
31 territorial jurisdiction as set forth in section 204.

32 An officer executing a warrant ordered pursuant to this subsection may 33 exercise all the powers of a United States marshal to the extent that 34 such powers are needed for the execution of the warrant and for the 35 safekeeping of the person arrested.

36 “(c) AUTHORITY OF A STATE JUDICIAL OFFICER.—A judicial officer of 37 a state acting under subsection (a) may proceed according to the usual 38 method of procedure in such state to the extent that such procedure is 39 not inconsistent with the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, but his 40 authority after the arrest is effected does not extend beyond determin-

1 ing whether to hold the person arrested, at the expense of the United
 2 States, for trial or to release him from official detention as provided by
 3 section 3502.

4 “Subchapter B.—Venue

“Sec.

“3311. Venue for an Offense Committed in More than one District.

“3312. Venue for an Offense Committed outside any District.

“3313. Venue if a New District or Division is Established.

5 “§ 3311. Venue for an Offense Committed in more than one District

6 “(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided, an offense begun
 7 in one judicial district and completed in another, or committed in 8 more than one district, may be prosecuted in any district in which the 9 offense was begun, continued, or completed.

10 “(b) CONSPIRACY OFFENSES.—A conspiracy offense, for purposes
 11 of subsection (a), is a continuing offense, and may be prosecuted in 12 any district in which the conspiracy was entered into or in which any 13 person engaged in any conduct to effect an objective of the conspiracy.
 14 A substantive offense that is committed pursuant to a conspiracy may 15 be prosecuted with the conspiracy offense in any district in which 16 the conspiracy offense may be prosecuted.

17 “(c) MAILS OR COMMERCE OFFENSES.—If federal jurisdiction to 18 prosecute an offense is based upon the use of the mails, the move-
 19 ment of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce or by 20 mail, or the importation of an object into the United States, the 21 offense, for purposes of subsection (a), is a continuing offense, and 22 may be prosecuted in any district described in subsection (a) or in any 23 district from, through, or into which the mail, commerce, or imported
 24 object moves.

25 “(d) TAX OFFENSES.—An offense:

26 “(1) described in section 1402(a)(1) (Disregarding a Tax 27 Obligation); or

28 “(2) involving the use of the mail and described in section:

29 “(A) 1343 (Making a False Statement), if the offense
 30 involves a tax return as defined in section 1404(d); or

31 “(B) section 1401(a)(1) or (a)(5) (Tax Evasion);

32 may be prosecuted in any district in which the offense was begun, con-
 33 tinued, or completed, unless the defendant, by motion filed within 34 twenty days after arraignment in the district in which the prosecution 35 is begun, requests to be tried in the district in which he was residing 36 at the time the offense was committed.

1       “(e) HOMICIDE OFFENSES.—An offense described in section 1601
2 (Murder), 1602 (Manslaughter), or 1603 (Negligent Homicide) may
3 be prosecuted only in the district in which the injury was inflicted,
4 or in which the means were employed that caused the death, without 5 regard to the place where the death occurred.

6       “(f) FLIGHT OFFENSES.—An offense described in section 1315
7 (Flight to Avoid Prosecution or Appearing as a Witness) may be 8 prosecuted only in the district in which:

9               “(1) the original offense was alleged to have been committed; or

10              “(2) the person was to appear as a witness, give testimony, or 11 produce a record, document, or other object.

12 “§ 3312. Venue for an Offense Committed outside any District

13       “(a) VENUE.—An offense begun or committed within:

14              “(1) any part of:

15                      “(A) the special territorial jurisdiction of the United 16 States as set forth in section 203(a);

17                      “(B) the special maritime jurisdiction of the United States
18 as set forth in section 203(b); or

19                      “(C) the special aircraft jurisdiction of the United States
20 as set forth in section 203(c);

21              that is outside of the jurisdiction of any judicial district; or

22              “(2) the extraterritorial jurisdiction of the United States as set
23 forth in section 204;

24 shall be prosecuted in the district in which the defendant, or any one 25 of two or more joint defendants, is arrested or is first brought after 26 arrest. If the defendant or defendants are not arrested or brought into 27 any district, an indictment or information may be filed in the district
28 of the last known residence of the defendant, or of any one of two or 29 more such defendants, or, if no such residence is known, the indictment
30 or information may be filed in the District of Columbia.

31       “(b) CHANGE OF VENUE.—If the defendant arrives in the judicial 32 district in which he is arrested, or to which he is first brought after 33 arrest, due to emergency, illness, or other exigent circumstances re-
34 sulting in an unscheduled arrival in that judicial district, the court 35 may, on motion of a party, and in the interest of justice, transfer the 36 proceeding to another judicial district.

37 “§ 3313. Venue if a New District or Division is Established

38       “(a) IN GENERAL.—If a new judicial district or division is estab-
39 lished, or if a county or territory is transferred from one district or 40 division to another district or division, a prosecution for an offense 41 committed within such district, division, county, or territory prior to

1 the establishment or transfer shall proceed in the same manner as if
 2 the new district or division had not been created, or as if the county
 3 or territory had not been transferred.

4 “(b) REMOVAL UPON MOTION OF DEFENDANT.—A case proceeding
 5 as prescribed in subsection (a) may be ordered by the court to be re-
 6 moved to the new district or division for trial if, within twenty days
 7 after arraignment of the defendant in the district or division in which 8 the indictment was returned or the information was filed, the defend-
 9 ant files a motion for such removal.

10 “Chapter 34.—APPOINTMENT OF COUNSEL

“Sec.

“3401. District Plans for Appointment of Counsel.

“3402. Appointment of Counsel.

“3403. Compensation of Counsel.

“3404. Defender Organizations.

“3405. General Provisions for Chapter 34.

11 “§ 3401. District Plans for Appointment of Counsel

12 “(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PLAN.—Each district court of the United 13 States with the approval of the judicial council of the circuit, shall 14 place in operation throughout the district a plan for furnishing repre-
 15 sentation for any person financially unable to obtain adequate repre-
 16 sentation:

17 “(1) who is charged:

18 “(A) with a felony or a Class A misdemeanor;

19 “(B) with an act of juvenile delinquency as defined in 20 section 3606(b) including representation at a hearing pur-
 21 suant to section 3603(a)(2)(C) or section 3603(a)(3)(C); or

22 “(C) with a violation of probation or parole;

23 “(2) who is under arrest, when such representation is required
 24 by law;

25 “(3) who is in custody as a material witness, or seeking col-
 26 lateral relief, as provided in section 3403(d); or

27 “(4) for whom the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution re-
 28 quires the appointment of counsel, or for whom, in a case in which 29 he faces loss of liberty, any federal law requires the appointment
 30 of counsel.

31 “(b) CHOICE OF PLAN.—Representation under the plan shall include 32 counsel and investigative, expert, and other services necessary for an 33 adequate defense. The plan shall include a provision for private attor-
 34 neys. The plan may include, in addition to a provision for private at-35 torneys in a substantial proportion of the cases, a provision for:

36 “(1) attorneys furnished by a bar association or a legal aid
 37 agency; and

“(2) attorneys furnished by a defender organization established in accordance with the provisions of section 3404.

Prior to approving the plan for a district, the judicial council of the circuit shall supplement the plan with provisions for representation on appeal. The district court may modify the plan at any time with the approval of the judicial council of the circuit, and shall modify the plan when directed to do so by the judicial council. The district court shall notify the Administrative Office of the United States Courts of its plan and of any modification.

“§ 3402. Appointment of Counsel

“(a) COURT APPOINTMENT.—Counsel furnishing representation under a plan established pursuant to this subchapter shall be selected from a panel of attorneys designated or approved by the court, or from a bar association, legal aid agency, or defender organization furnishing representation pursuant to the plan. In a case in which the defendant may be entitled to representation pursuant to a plan and appears without counsel, the court or magistrate shall advise the defendant that he has the right to be represented by counsel and that counsel will be appointed to represent him if he is financially unable to obtain counsel. Unless the defendant waives representation by counsel, the court or magistrate, if satisfied after appropriate inquiry that the defendant is financially unable to obtain counsel, shall appoint counsel to represent him. The appointment may be made retroactive to include any representation furnished pursuant to the plan prior to appointment. The court or magistrate shall appoint separate counsel for defendants having interests that cannot properly be represented by the same counsel, or for other good cause shown.

“(b) DURATION AND SUBSTITUTION OF APPOINTMENT.—A person for whom counsel is appointed shall be represented at every stage of the proceedings from his initial appearance before a court or a magistrate through appeal, including ancillary matters appropriate to the proceedings and a proceeding under section 3603(a). If at any time after the appointment of counsel the court or magistrate finds that the person is financially able to obtain counsel or to make partial payment for the representation, the court or magistrate may, in the interest of justice, terminate the appointment of counsel or direct payment as provided in section 3403(c). If at any stage of the proceedings, including an appeal, the court or magistrate finds that a person is financially unable to pay counsel whom he had retained, the court or magistrate may, in the interest of justice, appoint counsel as provided in subsection (a) and authorize payment as provided in section 3403. The court

1 or magistrate may, in the interest of justice, substitute one appointed
2 counsel for another at any stage of the proceedings.

3 “§ 3403. Compensation of Counsel

4 “(a) PAYMENT FOR REPRESENTATION.—

5 “(1) HOURLY RATE. An attorney appointed pursuant to section
6 3402, or a bar association, legal aid agency, or community de-
7 fender organization that has provided the appointed attorney,
8 shall, at the conclusion of the representation or any segment
9 thereof, be compensated at a rate not exceeding $30 per hour for 10 time expended before a court or a magistrate and $20 per hour
11 for time reasonably expended out of court, or shall be compen-
12 sated at such other hourly rate, fixed by the judicial council of 13 the circuit, not to exceed the usual minimum hourly rate in the 14 district for similar services. The attorney shall be reimbursed
15 for expenses reasonably incurred, including the costs of tran-
16 scripts authorized by the magistrate or court.

17 “(2) MAXIMUM AMOUNT.—For representation of a defendant
18 before a district court or a magistrate, or both, the compensation to 19 be paid to an attorney, or to a bar association, legal aid agency, or 20 community defender organization, may not exceed $1,000 for each 21 attorney in a case in which one or more felonies are charged, and 22 $400 for each attorney in a case in which only misdemeanors or 23 infractions are charged. For representation of a defendant in an 24 appellate court, the compensation to be paid to an attorney, or to 25 a bar association, legal aid agency, or community defender or-
26 ganization, may not exceed $1,000 for each attorney in each court.
27 For representation in connection with a posttrial motion made
28 after the entry of judgment or in a probation or parole revocation
29 proceeding, or for representation provided under section 3403(d)
30 or 3617(d), the compensation may not exceed $250 for each at-31 torney in each proceeding.

32 “(3) WAIVING MAXIMUM AMOUNT.—Payment in excess of any 33 maximum amount provided in paragraph (2) may be made for 34 extended or complex representation if:

35 “(A) the court in which the representation was rendered,
36 or the magistrate if the representation was furnished exclu-
37 sively before him, certifies that the amount of the excess pay-
38 ment is necessary to provide fair compensation; and

39 “(B) the payment is approved by the chief judge of the 40 circuit.

1           “(4) FILING CLAIM.—A separate claim for compensation and
2 reimbursement shall be made to the district court for representa-
3 tion before the court or a magistrate, and to each appellate court
4 for representation before that court. Each claim shall be sup-
5 ported by a sworn written statement specifying the time expended,
6 services rendered, and expenses incurred while the case was pend-
7 ing before the court or magistrate, and the compensation and 8 reimbursement applied for or received from any other source in 9 the same case. The court shall fix the compensation and reimburse-
10 ment to be paid to the attorney, or to the bar association, legal aid
11 agency, or community defender organization. In a case in which 12 representation is furnished exclusively before a United States
13 magistrate, the claim shall be submitted to the magistrate and he 14 shall fix the compensation and reimbursement to be paid. In a case
15 in which representation is furnished other than before a United 16 States magistrate, a district court, or an appellate court, the claim 17 shall be submitted to the district court, and the district court shall 18 fix the compensation and reimbursement to be paid.

19 “(b) SERVICES OTHER THAN COUNSEL.—

20           “(1) WITH PRIOR REQUEST.—Counsel for a person who is finan-
21 cially unable to obtain investigative, expert, or other services
22 necessary for an adequate defense may request them in an ex
23 parte application. Upon a finding, after appropriate inquiry in 24 an ex parte proceeding by the court or magistrate having juris-
25 diction over a matter, that the services are required in connection
26 with the matter and that the person is financially unable to obtain 27 them, the court or the magistrate shall authorize counsel to obtain 28 them.

29           “(2) WITHOUT PRIOR REQUEST.—Counsel appointed under this 30 chapter may obtain, subject to later review, investigative, expert, 31 or other services without prior authorization if necessary for an 32 adequate defense. The total cost of services obtained without prior 33 authorization may not exceed $150 and expenses reasonably in-34 curred.

35           “(3) MAXIMUM AMOUNT.—Compensation to be paid to a person
36 for services rendered by him under this subsection or to be paid
37 to an organization for services rendered by an employee thereof,
38 shall not exceed $300, exclusive of reimbursement for expenses
39 reasonably incurred, unless:

40           “(A) payment in excess of that limit is certified by the 41 court or the magistrate, if the services were rendered in con-

1 nection with a case disposed of entirely before him, as neces-
 2 sary to provide fair compensation for services of an unusual
 3 character or duration; and

4 “(B) the amount of the excess payment is approved by the 5 chief judge of the circuit.

6 “(c) RECEIPT OF OTHER PAYMENT.—If the court or magistrate finds
 7 that funds are available for payment by or on behalf of a person
 8 furnished representation, the court or magistrate may authorize or 9 direct that such funds be paid to:

10 “(1) the appointed attorney;

11 “(2) the bar association, legal aid agency, or community de-
 12 fender organization that provided the appointed attorney;

13 “(3) any person or organization authorized pursuant to sub-
 14 section (b) to render investigative, expert, or other services; or 15 “(4) the court for deposit in the Treasury as a reimbursement to 16 the appropriation, current at the time of payment, to carry out the 17 provisions of this section.

18 Except as so authorized or directed, no such person or organization
 19 may request or accept any payment or promise of payment for repre-
 20 senting a defendant.

21 “(d) DISCRETIONARY APPOINTMENT.—A person who is in custody as 22 a material witness, or who is seeking relief under 28 U.S.C. 2241, 2254, 23 or 2255, may be furnished representation pursuant to the plan when-
 24 ever the court or magistrate determines that the interest of justice so
 25 requires and that the person is financially unable to obtain representa-
 26 tion. Payment for such representation may be as provided in subsec-
 27 tions (a) and (b).

28 “§ 3404. Defender Organizations

29 “(a) QUALIFICATIONS.—A district or a part of a district in which at 30 least two hundred persons annually require the appointment of counsel
 31 may establish a defender organization as provided under subsection (b)
 32 (1) or (b) (2). Two adjacent districts or parts of districts may aggre-
 33 gate the number of persons required to be represented to establish 34 eligibility for a defender organization to serve both areas. If the ad-35 jacent districts or parts of districts are located in different circuits, the 36 plan for furnishing representation shall be approved by the judicial 37 council of each circuit.

38 “(b) TYPES OF DEFENSE ORGANIZATION.—

39 “(1) FEDERAL PUBLIC DEFENDER ORGANIZATION.—A Federal 40 Public Defender Organization shall consist of one or more full-
 41 time, salaried attorneys. An organization for a district or part of

1 a district or two adjacent districts or parts of districts shall be
2 supervised by a Federal Public Defender appointed by the ju-
3 dicial council of the circuit, without regard to the provisions of 4 title 5 governing appointments in the competitive service, after 5 considering recommendations from the district court or courts to 6 be served. Only one Federal Public Defender may be appointed
7 within a single judicial district. The Federal Public Defender
8 shall be appointed for a term of four years, subject to earlier re-
9 moval by the judicial council of the circuit for incompetency, mis-
10 conduct in office, or neglect of duty. The compensation of the Fed-
11 eral Public Defender shall be fixed by the judicial council of the 12 circuit at a rate not to exceed the compensation received by the 13 United States attorney for the district in which representation is 14 furnished, or, if two districts or parts of districts are involved, the 15 compensation of the United States attorney receiving the higher
16 compensation. The Federal Public Defender may appoint, with-17 out regard to the provisions of title 5 governing appointments in 18 the competitive service, full-time attorneys in such number as are 19 approved by the judicial council of the circuit, and other person-
20 nel in such number as are approved by the Director of the Admin-
21 istrative Office of the United States Courts. Compensation paid
22 to such attorneys and other personnel of the organization shall be 23 fixed by the Federal Public Defender at a rate not to exceed that 24 paid to attorneys and other personnel of similar qualifications and 25 experience in the office of the United States attorney in the dis-
26 trict in which representation is furnished, or, if two districts or 27 parts of districts are involved, the higher compensation paid to 28 persons of similar qualifications and experience in the districts.
29 Neither the Federal Public Defender nor an attorney appointed
30 by him may engage in the private practice of law. Each organiza-
31 tion shall submit to the Director of the Administrative Office of 32 the United States Courts, at the time and in the form prescribed
33 by him, reports of its activities, financial position, and proposed 34 budget. The Director of the Administrative Office of the United 35 States Courts shall submit, in a manner similar to and subject to 36 the conditions of 28 U.S.C. 605, a budget for each organization for 37 each fiscal year, and shall, out of the appropriations therefor,
38 make payments to and on behalf of each organization. Payments
39 under this paragraph to an organization shall be in lieu of pay-
40 ments under section 3403(a) or (b).

1           “(2) COMMUNITY DEFENDER ORGANIZATION.—A Community
2 Defender Organization shall be a nonprofit defense counsel serv-
3 ice established and administered by any group authorized by the 4 plan to provide representation. The organization shall be eligible
5 to furnish attorneys and receive payments under section 3403 if 6 its bylaws are set forth in the plan of the district or districts in 7 which it will serve. Each organization shall submit to the Judicial
8 Conference of the United States an annual report setting forth
9 its activities and financial position and its anticipated caseload
10 and expenses for the coming year. Upon application an organiza-
11 tion may, to the extent approved by the Judicial Conference of
12 the United States:

13           “(A) receive an initial grant for expenses necessary to 14 establish the organization; and

15           “(B) in lieu of payments under section 3403(a) or 3403
16 (b), receive periodic sustaining grants to provide represen-
17 tation and other expenses pursuant to this chapter.

18 “§ 3405. General Provisions for Chapter 34

19           “(a) RULES AND REPORTS.—Each district court and judicial council
20 of a circuit shall submit a report to the Administrative Office of the 21 United States Courts on the appointment of counsel within its juris-
22 diction in such form and at such times as the Judicial Conference of 23 the United States may specify. The Judicial Conference of the United 24 States may issue rules and regulations governing the operation of 25 plans for the appointment of counsel.

26           “(b) ADMINISTRATION.—The Director of the Administrative Office
27 of the United States Courts shall supervise the making of payments
28 under this chapter.

29           “(c) APPLICATION TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—The provisions
30 of this chapter, other than section 3404, shall apply in the United 31 States District Court for the District of Columbia and the United 32 States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. The 33 provisions of this chapter shall not apply to the Superior Court of the 34 District of Columbia or the District of Columbia Court of Appeals.

35           “(d) NEW TRIAL CONSIDERED NEW CASE.—For purposes of com-
36 pensation and other payments authorized by this chapter, an order
37 by a court granting a new trial shall be considered to initiate a new 38 case.

39           “(e) FEEES AND COSTS ON APPEAL WAIVED.—If a person for whom 40 counsel is appointed under this chapter appeals to an appellate court

1 or petitions for a writ of certiorari, he may do so without payment
 2 of fees and costs, or security therefor, and without filing the affidavit
 3 required by 28 U.S.C. 1915(a).

4 “Chapter 35.—RELEASE AND CONFINEMENT PENDING
 5 JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS

6 “Subchapter

7 “A. Release Pending Judicial Proceedings.

8 “B. Confinement Pending Judicial Proceedings.

9 “Subchapter A.—Release Pending Judicial Proceedings

“Sec.

“3501. Release Authority Generally.

“3502. Release Pending Trial in a Non-Capital Case.

“3503. Release Pending Trial In a Capital Case.

“3504. Release Pending Sentence or Appeal.

“3505. Release of a Material Witness.

“3506. Appeal from Denial of Release.

“3507. Release in a Case Removed from a State Court.

“3508. Surrender of an Offender by a Surety.

“3509. Security for Peace and Good Behavior.

9 “§ 3501. Release Authority Generally

10 “A person charged with an offense may be ordered released pursuant 11 to the provisions of this chapter by a judge authorized to order the 12 arrest and commitment of offenders, but a person charged with an 13 offense for which a sentence of death is authorized may be ordered
 14 released only by a judge of a court of the United States that has orig-
 15 inal jurisdiction in criminal cases.

16 “§ 3502. Release Pending Trial in a Non-Capital Case

17 “(a) RELEASE CONDITIONS.—A person charged with an offense, other 18 than an offense for which a sentence of death is authorized, shall, at 19 his appearance before a judge, be ordered released pending trial on his 20 personal recognizance or upon the execution of an unsecured appear-
 21 ance bond in an amount specified by the judge, unless the judge deter-
 22 mines, in the exercise of his discretion, that such a release will not 23 reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required. If such 24 a determination is made, the judge shall, either in lieu of or in addi-
 25 tion to the above methods of release, impose the first of the follow-
 26 ing conditions of release that will reasonably assure the appearance
 27 of the person for trial or, if no single condition will give that assur-
 28 ance, any combination of the following conditions:

29 “(1) a condition placing the person in the custody of a desig-
 30 ated person agreeing to supervise him;

31 “(2) a condition placing restrictions on the person’s travel,
 32 associations, or place of abode, during the period of release;

33 “(3) a condition requiring the execution of an appearance bond
 34 in a specified amount, and the deposit in the registry of the court,

1 in cash or other security as directed, of a sum not to exceed ten per-
2 cent of the amount of the bond, such deposit to be returned upon
3 the performance of the conditions of release;

4 “(4) a condition requiring the execution of a bail bond with 5 sufficient solvent sureties, or the deposit of cash in lieu thereof; or

6 “(5) any other condition reasonably necessary to assure appear-
7 ance as required, including a condition requiring that the person
8 return to custody after specified hours.

9 “(b) FACTORS IN DETERMINING RELEASE.—In determining which 10 conditions of release will reasonably assure the appearance of the per-
11 son as required, the judge shall, on the basis of available information,
12 take into account:

13 “(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense charged;

14 “(2) the weight of the evidence against the person; and 15 “(3) the history and characteristics of the person, including

16 his character, mental condition, family ties, employment, length
17 of residence in the community, financial resources, record of con-
18 victions, and record of appearance or nonappearance at court
19 proceedings.

20 “(c) ORDER.—A judge authorizing the release of a person pursuant 21 to this section shall issue an order containing a statement of the condi-
22 tions of release imposed, shall advise him of the penalties applicable to 23 a violation of a condition of his release, and shall advise him that a 24 warrant for his arrest will be issued immediately upon such a viola-
25 tion. A failure to advise the person of the penalties applicable for fail-26 ure to appear as required is not a bar or defense to a prosecution under 27 section 1312 (Bail Jumping).

28 “(d) RECONSIDERATION.—A person concerning whom conditions of 29 release are imposed, and who after twenty-four hours from the time
30 of the release hearing continues to be detained as a result of his in-31 ability to meet the conditions of release, may, upon application, have 32 the conditions reviewed by the judge who imposed them. A person who 33 is ordered released on a condition that requires him to return to custody
34 after specified hours may, upon application, have the condition re-
35 viewed by the judge who imposed it. Unless the conditions of release
36 are amended and the person is thereupon released on another condi-
37 tion, the judge shall set forth in writing the reasons for continuing 38 the conditions imposed. If the judge who imposed conditions of re-39 lease is not available, any other judge in the district may review such 40 conditions.

1     “(e) MODIFICATION.—A judge ordering the release of a person on
2 a condition specified in this section may at any time amend his order
3 to impose additional or different conditions of release. If the imposition 4 of such additional or different conditions results in the detention of the 5 person as a result of his inability to meet such conditions, the provi-
6 sions of subsection (d) are applicable.

7     “(f) EVIDENCE.—Any information may be presented and considered
8 in connection with an order entered pursuant to this section regardless 9 of its admissibility under the rules governing admission of evidence in 10 criminal trials.

11 “§ 3503. Release Pending Trial in a Capital Case

12     “A person who is charged with an offense for which a sentence of 13 death is authorized shall be treated in accordance with the provisions
14 of section 3502, unless the judge has reason to believe that no condi-
15 tions of release will reasonably assure that the person will not flee
16 or will not pose a danger to any other person or to the community.
17 If such a risk of flight or danger is believed to exist, the person shall 18 be ordered detained. Such an order is not appealable under section
19 3506, but may be reviewed under other provisions for review of condi-
20 tions of release or orders of detention.

21 “§ 3504. Release Pending Sentence or Appeal

22     “(a) PENDING SENTENCE OR APPEAL BY THE DEFENDANT.—A person
23 who has been found guilty of an offense and is awaiting sentence, or 24 who has filed an appeal or a petition for a writ of certiorari, shall be 25 treated in accordance with the provisions of section 3502, unless the 26 judge has reason to believe that no conditions of release will reason-27 ably assure that the person will not flee or will not pose a danger to 28 any other person or to the community. If such a risk of flight or danger
29 is believed to exist, or if it appears that an appeal is frivolous or taken 30 for purposes of delay, the person shall be ordered detained. Such an 31 order is not appealable under section 3506, but may be reviewed under 32 other provisions for review of conditions of release or orders of deten-
33 tion.

34     “(b) PENDING APPEAL BY THE GOVERNMENT.—A person who is a de-35 fendant in a case in which an appeal has been taken by the United 36 States pursuant to the provisions of section 3724 (a) or (b) shall be 37 treated in accordance with the provisions of section 3502.

38 “§ 3505. Release of a Material Witness

39     “If it appears from an affidavit filed by a party that the testimony
40 of a person is material in a criminal proceeding, and if it is shown

1 that it may become impracticable to secure his presence by subpoena,
2 a judge shall impose conditions of release pursuant to section 3502.
3 No material witness may be detained because of inability to comply
4 with any condition of release if the testimony of such witness can ade-
5 quately be secured by deposition, and if further detention is not neces-
6 sary to prevent a failure of justice. Release may be delayed for a rea-
7 sonable period of time until the deposition of the witness can be taken
8 pursuant to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

9 “§ 3506. Appeal from Denial of Release

10 “(a) REVIEW.—A person :

11 “(1) who is detained, or whose release on a condition requir-
12 ing him to return to custody after specified hours is continued ;
13 and

14 “(2) whose application pursuant to section 3502 (d) or (e)
15 has been reviewed by a judge other than :

16 “(A) a judge of the court having original jurisdiction over
17 the offense with which he is charged ;

18 “(B) a judge of a United States Court of Appeals ; or

19 or

20 “(C) a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States ;
21 may file a motion for an amendment of the order with the court having 22 original jurisdiction over the offense with which he is charged. Such 23 a motion shall be determined promptly.

24 “(b) APPEAL.—In a case in which a person is detained after :

25 “(1) a court denies a motion under subsection (a) to amend an 26 order imposing conditions of release ; or

27 “(2) conditions of release have been imposed or amended by 28 a judge of the court having original jurisdiction over the offense
29 charged ;

30 an appeal may be taken to the court having appellate jurisdiction
31 over such court. An order so appealed shall be affirmed if it is sup-
32 ported by the proceedings below. If the order is not so supported, the 33 court may remand the case for a further hearing, or may, with or 34 without additional evidence, order the person released pursuant to 35 section 3502. Such an appeal shall be determined promptly.

36 “§ 3507. Release in a Case Removed from a State Court

37 “If the judgment of a state court in a criminal proceeding is before
38 the Supreme Court of the United States for review, the defendant may 39 not be released from custody pending such review other than pursuant 40 to the laws of such state.

1 “§ 3508. Surrender of an Offender by a Surety

2 “A person charged with an offense, who is released upon the execu-
3 tion of an appearance bond with a surety, may be arrested by the 4 surety, delivered to a United States marshal, and brought before a
5 judge. At the request of the surety, the judge shall order the person
6 held in official detention, and shall endorse on the recognizance, or on 7 the certified copy of the recognizance, the discharge and exoneration of 8 the surety. The person so committed shall be held in official detention 9 until released pursuant to this chapter or to another provision of law.

10 “§ 3509. Security for Peace and Good Behavior

11 ‘A judge who may order an arrest pursuant to section 3303 may 12 require a person to give security for peace and good behavior in a
13 case arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States,
14 to the same extent that a judge of the state in which the case arises
15 would be authorized by state law if the case were a state case.

16 “Subchapter B.—Confinement Pending Judicial
17 Proceedings

“Sec.

“3511. Commitment of an Arrested Person.

“3512. Discharge of an Arrested but Unconvicted Person.

18 “§ 3511. Commitment of an Arrested Person

19 “(a) ORDER OF COMMITMENT.—A person who is arrested and charged
20 with an offense or held as a material witness and who is not ordered
21 released pursuant to the provisions of subchapter A, shall be ordered
22 committed to the custody of the Attorney General for confinement
23 in a facility for official detention. A copy of the order shall be 24 delivered to the person in charge of the facility as evidence of his 25 authority to hold the arrested person, and the original order, with 26 the return endorsed thereon, shall be returned to the court that issued 27 it.

28 “(b) DELIVERY OF ARRESTED PERSON FOR COURT APPEARANCE.—The 29 person in charge of an official detention facility to whom an arrested 30 person is delivered pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a) shall 31 deliver the person to a United States marshal for the purpose of a court
32 appearance on order of a court of the United States or on request of an 33 attorney for the government.

34 “§ 3512. Discharge of an Arrested but Unconvicted Person

35 “A court of the United States may direct the United States marshal 36 for the judicial district to furnish subsistence and transportation to 37 the place of arrest or to the place of bona fide residence, under regula-
38 tions promulgated by the Director of the Bureau of Prisons, to:

1           “(1) a person arrested for an offense but not charged with an
2 offense in an indictment or information;

3           “(2) a person charged with an offense in an indictment or in-
4 formation but not convicted; or

5           “(3) a person held as a material witness;
6 upon the release of such person from official detention.

7           “Chapter 36.—DISPOSITION OF JUVENILE OR 8                                   INCOMPETENT OFFENDERS

“Subchapter

“A. Juvenile Delinquency.

“B. Offenders with Mental Disease or Defect.

9           “Subchapter A.—Juvenile Delinquency

“Sec.

“3601. Surrender of a Juvenile Delinquent to State Authorities.

“3602. Arrest and Detention of a Juvenile Delinquent.

“3603. Juvenile Delinquency Proceedings.

“3604. Parole of a Juvenile Delinquent.

“3605. Use of Juvenile Delinquency Records.

“3606. Definitions for Subchapter A.

10          “§ 3601. Surrender of a Juvenile Delinquent to State Authorities

11          “(a) SURRENDER OF A JUVENILE.—If a juvenile is arrested and 12 charged with an offense, other than a Class B or Class C misdemeanor
13 or an infraction that is committed within the special territorial juris-
14 diction of the United States, the Attorney General shall forego prose-15 cution and surrender the person to state jurisdiction unless, after 16 investigation, he certifies that:

17           “(1) the state will not assume jurisdiction over the person, take 18 him into custody, and proceed against him in accordance with its 19 laws;

20           “(2) the state does not have available programs and services
21 adequate for the needs of the juvenile; or

22           “(3) the offense charged is a Class A, B, or C felony and that 23 federal prosecution is in the interest of justice.

24          “(b) SURRENDER OF A PERSON BETWEEN EIGHTEEN AND TWENTY-
25 ONE.—If a person who is between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one
26 years old, is arrested and charged with an offense, the Attorney
27 General may forego prosecution and surrender the person to state
28 jurisdiction if, after investigation, he determines that:

29           “(1) the person has committed an offense or is a juvenile delin-
30 quent under the laws of a state that will assume jurisdiction over 31 the person, take him into custody, and proceed against him in 32 accordance with its laws; and

33           “(2) such disposition will be in the interests of justice.

1 (c) TRANSPORTATION.—The United States marshal of the dis-
2 trict in which the person was arrested shall, upon written order of the 3 Attorney General, transfer the person to such state or, if he is already 4 in such state, to any other part of the state, and shall deliver him into 5 the custody of the proper state authority.

6 (d) CONSENT OR DEMAND REQUIRED.—Before a person is trans-
7 ferred from one state to another under this section :

8 “(1) the person must consent to the transfer ; or 9 “(2) a demand must be presented to the Attorney General from 10 the executive authority of the state to which the person is to be 11 returned, supported by an indictment or affidavit as prescribed by 12 section 3202.

13 § 3602. Arrest and Detention of a Juvenile Delinquent

14 “(a) ARREST.—If a juvenile is taken into custody for an act of 15 juvenile delinquency, the arresting officer shall immediately advise the 16 juvenile of his legal rights in clear and non-technical language, 17 shall immediately notify the Attorney General of such custody, and 18 shall make reasonable efforts to notify the juvenile’s parents, guardian, 19 or custodian of such custody. The arresting officer shall also advise the 20 parents, guardian, or custodian of the rights of the juvenile and of the 21 nature of the alleged offense.

22 “(b) DETENTION.—If the juvenile is not taken forthwith before a
23 judge, he may be detained in a juvenile home or other suitable place
24 of detention that the Attorney General may designate for such pur-
25 pose, but, insofar as possible, he shall not be detained in a facility for 26 official detention in which he has a regular contact with an adjudicated 27 juvenile delinquent or an adult convicted of an offense or awaiting 28 trial on a charge of an offense. If possible, the detention shall be in a
29 facility located in or near the juvenile’s home community. The juvenile 30 while in custody shall be provided with adequate food, heat, light, 31 sanitary facilities, bedding, clothing, recreation, education and medical 32 care, including any necessary psychiatric, psychological, or other care
33 or treatment. The juvenile shall not be detained for a period longer 34 than is necessary to produce the juvenile before a judge.

35 “(c) RELEASE.—The judge shall release the juvenile pending trial
36 upon any condition set forth in section 3502 that will reasonably assure 37 the presence of the juvenile before the appropriate court as required,
38 unless the judge determines, after a hearing, that official detention 39 pending trial of such juvenile is required to secure his safety or the 40 safety of another person. If a juvenile is held in official detention pend-41 ing trial pursuant to this subsection and is not brought to trial within

1 sixty days from the date upon which the detention was begun, the 2 information shall be dismissed on motion of the juvenile or at the 3 direction of the court, unless the Attorney General shows that addi-
 4 tional delay was caused by the juvenile or his counsel, or consented to 5 by the juvenile and his counsel, or would be in the interest of justice in 6 the particular case. Delays attributable solely to court calendar con-
 7 gestion may not be considered to be in the interest of justice. Except 8 in extraordinary circumstances, an information dismissed under this 9 section may not be reinstated.

10 “§ 3603. Juvenile Delinquency Proceeding

11 “(a) IN GENERAL.—A juvenile who is charged with committing an 12 offense and who is not surrendered to state authorities shall be pro-
 13 ceeded against as a juvenile delinquent:

14 “(1) unless, upon advice of counsel, he elects in a writing filed
 15 with the court to be treated as an adult and waives the bar to 16 prosecution, if applicable, in section 512; or

17 “(2) unless:

18 “(A) he is less than sixteen years old;

19 “(B) the offense charged is an offense described in section
 20 1601(a)(1) or (a)(2) (Murder); and

21 “(C) the court having jurisdiction over the offense
 22 charged, upon a motion filed by the Attorney General and
 23 after reasonable notice to:

24 “(i) the juvenile;

25 “(ii) his parents, guardian, or custodian; and

26 “(iii) counsel for the juvenile;

27 holds a hearing and determines that in the interest of justice
 28 the juvenile should be treated as an adult; or”.

29 “(3) unless:

30 “(A) he is sixteen years old or more;

31 “(B) the offense charged is a Class A, B, or C felony;
 32 and

33 “(C) the court having jurisdiction over the offense
 34 charged, upon a motion filed by the Attorney General and 35 after reasonable notice to:

36 “(i) the juvenile;

37 “(ii) his parents, guardian, or custodian; and

38 “(iii) counsel for the juvenile;

39 holds a hearing and determines that in the interest of justice
 40 the juvenile should be treated as an adult.

1       “(b) CRITERIA.—In making the determination required by subsection
2       (a) (2) (C) and (a) (3) (C) the court shall consider and shall 3       make findings of fact on the record with regard to:

4               “(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense;

5               “(2) the age and social background of the juvenile;

6               “(3) the extent and nature of the juvenile’s prior delinquency
7       record;

8               “(4) the likelihood of reform of the juvenile prior to his 9       majority;

10              “(5) the availability of programs designed to treat the juvenile’s 11       behavioral problems; and 12              “(6) whether juvenile disposition will reflect the seriousness of 13       the juvenile’s conduct, promote respect for the law, and provide a 14       just response to the conduct of the juvenile.

15       “(c) PROCEDURE.—Jurisdiction over juvenile delinquency proceedings
16       shall be exercised by the District Courts of the United States, or 17       alternatively, in the case of a misdemeanor or an infraction, by a 18       United States Magistrate pursuant to section 3302. A juvenile may be 19       proceed against for an act of juvenile delinquency only by information,
20       and no criminal prosecution may be instituted for the offense
21       charged. For purposes of a juvenile delinquency hearing, the court 22       may be convened at any time and place within the judicial district, in 23       chambers or otherwise. Prior to a juvenile delinquency hearing, a 24       juvenile may be committed for an inpatient study pursuant to subsection
25       (d) with the consent of the juvenile and his attorney.

26       “(d) COMMITMENT PENDING DISPOSITION.—If the court desires more 27       information than is otherwise available to it as a basis for determining 28       the appropriate disposition, the court may commit the juvenile to the 29       custody of the Bureau of Prisons for a period of not more than thirty 30       days for the purpose of observation and study at an appropriate classification
31       center or agency. Such observation and study shall be conducted on an 32       outpatient basis, unless the court determines that inpatient
33       study and observation are necessary to obtain the necessary information.
34       The Bureau of Prisons, under such regulations as the Attorney
35       General may issue, shall conduct a complete study of the juvenile 36       delinquent during such period, inquiring into such matters as the 37       juvenile’s previous juvenile delinquency or criminal experience, his 38       social background, his capabilities, his mental, emotional, and physical 39       health, the significant problem or problems involved in his juvenile 40       delinquency, the rehabilitative resources or programs that may be

1 available to suit his needs, and any other factor which the Bureau may 2 consider pertinent. By the expiration of the period of commitment the 3 Bureau shall return the juvenile delinquent to the court for final dis-
 4 position, shall provide the court and the attorney for the juvenile with 5 a written report of the results of the study, and shall make to the court
 6 whatever recommendations the Bureau believes will be helpful to a 7 proper resolution of the case. The court may grant additional time for 8 the preparation of the report or recommendation.

9 “(e) DISPOSITION.—If the court finds a juvenile to be a juvenile 10 delinquent, the court shall hold a hearing concerning the appropriate
 11 disposition. After the hearing the court may suspend the findings of 12 juvenile delinquency, place him on probation, or commit him to official
 13 detention.

14 “(f) PROBATION.—The term for which probation may be ordered
 15 for a juvenile found to be a juvenile delinquent may not extend:

16 “(1) in the case of a juvenile who is less than nineteen years old,
 17 beyond the date when the juvenile becomes twenty-one years
 18 old; or

19 “(2) in the case of a juvenile who is between nineteen and
 20 twenty-one years old, two years.

21 The provisions dealing with probation set forth in sections 2103 and 22 2104 are applicable to an order placing a juvenile on probation.

23 “(g) OFFICIAL DETENTION.—The term for which official detention
 24 may be ordered for a juvenile found to be a juvenile delinquent may 25 not extend:

26 “(1) in the case of a juvenile who is less than nineteen years old,
 27 beyond the lesser of:

28 “(A) the date when the juvenile becomes twenty-one years
 29 old; or

30 “(B) the maximum term that could have been imposed if 31 the juvenile had been tried and convicted as an adult; or

32 “(2) in the case of a juvenile who is between nineteen and 33 twenty-one years old, beyond the lesser of:

34 “(A) two years; or

35 “(B) the maximum term that could have been imposed if
 36 the juvenile had been tried and convicted as an adult.

37 “(h) PLACE OF OFFICIAL DETENTION.—The Bureau of Prisons may 38 designate as the place of official detention during the period of com-
 39 mitment a suitable public or private agency or foster home. No juve-
 40 nile found to be a juvenile delinquent shall be held, except as necessary

1 for purposes of transportation or medical care, in an official detention
2 facility in which an adult convicted of an offense or awaiting trial on 3 a charge of an offense is held in official detention. A juvenile who has 4 been committed shall be provided with adequate food, heat, light,
5 sanitary facilities, bedding, clothing, recreation, counseling, educa-
6 tion, training, and medical care, including any necessary psychiatric,
7 psychological, or other care and treatment. If possible, the Bureau of 8 Prisons shall commit a juvenile to a public or private agency or foster
9 home located in or near his home community.

10 “(i) CONTRACTING FOR NON-FEDERAL FACILITIES.—The Director
11 of the Bureau of Prisons may contract with a public or private agency
12 or foster home for the custody, care, subsistence, education, and train-
13 ing of juvenile delinquents.

14 “(j) STATEMENT BY JUVENILE.—A statement made by a juvenile 15 during or in connection with a proceeding held pursuant to section
16 3603(a) is not admissible against him in a subsequent criminal pro-
17 ceeding.

18 “§ 3604. Parole of a Juvenile Delinquent

19 “A juvenile delinquent who has been committed to official deten-
20 tion under section 3603(g) may be released on parole by the Parole
21 Commission at any time, under such conditions and regulations as the 22 Commission considers to be appropriate, if the Commission is of the 23 opinion that the criteria set forth in section 3831(c)(1) are satisfied.
24 The provisions dealing with parole set forth in sections 3834 (c)
25 through (h) and 3835 are applicable to an order releasing a juvenile 26 delinquent on parole.

27 “§ 3605. Use of Juvenile Delinquency Records

28 “(a) SEALING OF RECORDS.—Throughout the juvenile delinquency 29 proceeding, the court shall safeguard the record against disclosure to 30 a person not authorized to receive it. Upon the completion of a juve-
31 nile delinquency proceeding, whether or not there is a finding of juve-
32 nile delinquency, the court shall order the entire record of the pro-
33 ceeding sealed. The court may release information concerning the 34 sealed record to the extent necessary to comply with an inquiry in 35 writing from:

36 “(1) another court;

37 “(2) an agency preparing a presentence report for another
38 court;

39 “(3) the Director of a treatment agency or facility to which the 40 juvenile has been committed by the court;

1           “(4) a law enforcement agency if the request for information
2 is related to the investigation of an offense or a position within 3 the agency;

4           “(5) an agency considering the person for a position immedi-
5 ately and directly affecting the national security; or

6           “(6) the victim if the request for information is related to the 7 final disposition of the case.

8 The court may not release information concerning the sealed record
9 to comply with any other inquiry, and responses to such inquiries shall 10 be the same as responses made about persons who have never been the 11 subject of a juvenile delinquency proceeding.

12       “(b) NOTICE.—The court exercising jurisdiction over a juvenile 13 shall, in a written statement using clear and nontechnical language,
14 inform the juvenile, and his parents, guardian, or other person respon-15 sible for his welfare, of his rights relating to the sealing of his juvenile 16 record.

17       “(c) DUTY OF COURT OFFICERS.—An employee of the court or an 18 employee of any other governmental agency, who, during the course
19 of a juvenile delinquency proceeding, obtains or preserves information
20 or a record relating to the proceeding in the discharge of an official 21 duty, shall not disclose such information or record directly or in-22 directly to a person other than the judge, the counsel for the juvenile,
23 the attorney for the government, or another person entitled under this 24 section to receive sealed records.

25       “(d) FINGERPRINTS AND PHOTOGRAPHS.—Unless a juvenile who is 26 taken into custody is prosecuted as an adult:

27           “(1) the fingerprints or photograph of the juvenile shall not 28 be taken without the written consent of the judge; and 29           “(2) the name or photograph of the juvenile shall not be made 30 public in connection with a juvenile delinquency proceeding by 31 any medium of public information.

32 “§ 3606. Definitions for Subchapter A

33       “As used in this subchapter:

34           “(a) ‘juvenile’ means a person who is less than:

35               “(1) eighteen years old; or

36               “(2) twenty-one years old if he is charged with an act of 37 juvenile delinquency committed when he was less than 38 eighteen years old;

39           “(b) ‘juvenile delinquency’ means conduct constituting an 40 offense engaged in by a juvenile.

1                   “Subchapter B.—Offenders with Mental Disease or
2                                           Defect

“Sec.

“3611. Determination of Mental Competency to Stand Trial.

“3612. Determination of the Existence of Insanity at the Time of the Offense.

“3613. Hospitalization of a Person Acquitted by Reason of Insanity.

“3614. Hospitalization of a Convicted Person Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect.

“3615. Hospitalization of an Imprisoned Person Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect.

“3616. Hospitalization of a Person Due for Release but Suffering from Mental Disease or Defect.

“3617. General Provisions for Subchapter B.

3   § 3611. Determination of Mental Competency To Stand Trial

4       “(a) MOTION TO DETERMINE COMPETENCY OF DEFENDANT.—At any 5 time after the commencement of a prosecution for an offense and prior 6 to the sentencing of the defendant, the defendant or the attorney for 7 the government may file a motion for a hearing to determine the men-
8 tal competency of the defendant. The court shall grant the motion, or 9 shall order such a hearing on its own motion, if there is reasonable
10 cause to believe that the defendant may presently be suffering from a 11 mental disease or defect rendering him mentally incompetent to the 12 extent that he is unable to understand the nature and consequences of 13 the proceedings against him or to assist in his defense.

14       “(b) PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of 15 the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric examination of the 16 defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric report be filed with the 17 court, pursuant to the provisions of section 3617 (b) and (c).

18       “(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the 19 provisions of section 3617(d).

20       “(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the 21 court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant is 22 presently suffering from a mental disease or defect rendering him
23 mentally incompetent to the extent that he is unable to understand the 24 nature and consequences of the proceedings against him or to assist 25 properly in his defense, the court shall commit the defendant to the 26 custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall hospital-27 ize the defendant for treatment in a suitable mental hospital, or in an-
28 other facility designated by the court as suitable:

29               “(1) for such a reasonable period of time, not to exceed six 30 months, as is necessary to determine whether there is a substan-
31 tial probability that in the foreseeable future he will attain the 32 capacity to permit the trial to proceed; and

1           “(2) for an additional reasonable period of time, not to exceed 2 six months, until:

3           “(A) his mental condition is so improved that trial may 4 proceed, if the court finds that there is a substantial probabil-
5 ity that within such additional period of time he will attain
6 the capacity to permit the trial to proceed; or

7           “(B) the pending charges against him are disposed of ac-
8 cording to law.

9 If, at the end of the time period specified, it is determined that the de-
10 fendant’s mental condition has not so improved as to permit the trial
11 to proceed, the defendant is subject to the provisions of section 3616.

12       “(e) DISCHARGE FROM MENTAL HOSPITAL.—When the director of 13 the facility in which a defendant is hospitalized pursuant to subsec-
14 tion (d) determines that the defendant has recovered to such an extent
15 that he is able to understand the nature and consequences of the pro-16 ceedings against him and to assist properly in his defense, he shall 17 promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that 18 ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate 19 to the defendant’s counsel and to the attorney for the government. The 20 court shall hold a hearing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of 21 section 3617(d), to determine the competency of the defendant. If,
22 after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence 23 that the defendant has recovered to such an extent that he is able 24 to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against 25 him and to assist properly in his defense, the court shall order his 26 immediate discharge from the facility in which he is hospitalized and 27 shall set the date for trial. Upon discharge, the defendant is subject
28 to the provisions of chapter 35.

29       “(f) ADMISSIBILITY OF FINDING OF COMPETENCY.—A finding by the 30 court that the defendant is mentally competent to stand trial shall not 31 prejudice the defendant in raising the issue of his insanity as a defense
32 to the offense charged, and shall not be admissible as evidence in a 33 trial for the offense charged.

34       “§ 3612. Determination of the Existence of Insanity at the Time
35           of the Offense

36       “(a) MOTION FOR PRETRIAL PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATION.—Upon the 37 filing of a notice, as provided in Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of 38 Criminal Procedure, the court, upon motion of the attorney for the 39 government, may order that a psychiatric examination of the defend-

1 ant be conducted, and that a psychiatric report be filed with the court,
2 pursuant to the provisions of section 3617 (b) and (c).

3 “(b) SPECIAL VERDICT.—If the issue of insanity is raised by notice
4 as provided in Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure
5 on motion of the defendant or of the attorney for the government, or 6 on the court’s own motion, the jury shall be instructed to find, or, in 7 the event of a non-jury trial, the court shall find, the defendant :

8 “(1) guilty;

9 “(2) not guilty; or

10 “(3) not guilty by reason of insanity.

11 “§ 3613. Hospitalization of a Person Acquitted by Reason of 12 Insanity

13 “(a) DETERMINATION OF PRESENT MENTAL CONDITION OF ACQUITTED
14 PERSON.—If a person is found not guilty by reason of insanity at the 15 time of the offense charged, the court shall order a hearing to determine 16 whether the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or 17 defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial
18 risk of serious bodily injury to another person or serious damage to 19 property of another. The court may make any order reasonably neces-
20 sary to secure the appearance of the person at the hearing.

21 “(b) PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of
22 the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric examination of 23 the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric report be filed with 24 the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 3617 (b) and (c).

25 “(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the 26 provisions of section 3617(d).

27 “(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the 28 court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the acquitted person 29 is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of 30 which his release would create a substantial risk of serious bodily
31 injury to another person or serious damage to property of another,
32 the court shall commit the person to the custody of the Attorney Gen-
33 eral. The Attorney General shall release the person to the appropriate 34 official of the state in which the person is domiciled if such state will 35 assume responsibility for his custody, care, and treatment. If such 36 state will not then assume such responsibility, the Attorney General
37 shall hospitalize the person for treatment in a suitable mental hospital, 38 or in another facility designated by the court as suitable, until such 39 state will assume such responsibility or until the person’s mental con-
40 dition is so improved that his release would not create a substantial

1 risk of serious bodily injury to another person or serious damage to
2 property of another.

3 “(e) DISCHARGE FROM MENTAL HOSPITAL.—When the director of 4 the facility in which an acquitted person is hospitalized pursuant to 5 subsection (d) determines that the person has recovered from his 6 mental disease or defect to such an extent that his release would no
7 longer create a substantial risk of serious bodily injury to another
8 person or serious damage to property of another, he shall promptly
9 file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered
10 the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the 11 person’s counsel and to the attorney for the government. The court
12 shall order the discharge of the acquitted person or, on the motion of 13 the attorney for the government or on its own motion, shall hold a 14 hearing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 3617(d), to 15 determine whether he should be released. If, after the hearing, the 16 court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the person has 17 recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that his 18 release would no longer create a substantial risk of serious bodily 19 injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the 20 court shall order his immediate discharge.

21 “§ 3614. Hospitalization of a Convicted Person Suffering from
22 Mental Disease or Defect

23 “(a) MOTION TO DETERMINE PRESENT MENTAL CONDITION OF CON-
24 VICTED DEFENDANT.—A defendant found guilty of an offense, or the 25 attorney for the government, may, within ten days after the defendant
26 is found guilty, file a motion for a hearing on the present mental con-
27 dition of the defendant. The court shall grant the motion, or at any 28 time prior to the sentencing of the defendant shall order such a hearing
29 on its own motion, if there is reasonable cause to believe that the de-
30 fendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect
31 for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treat-
32 ment in a mental hospital.

33 “(b) PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of 34 the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric examination of the 35 defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric report be filed with the 36 court, pursuant to the provisions of section 3617 (b) and (c). In addi-37 tion to the information required to be included in the psychiatric 38 report pursuant to the provisions of section 3617(c), if the report
39 includes an opinion by the examiners that the defendant is presently 40 suffering from a mental disease or defect but that it is not such as to

1 require his custody for care or treatment in a mental hospital, the 2 report shall also include an opinion by the examiners concerning the 3 sentencing alternatives available under part III of this title that could 4 best accord the defendant the kind of treatment he does need.

5 “(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the
6 provisions of section 3617(d).

7 “(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the
8 court is of the opinion that the defendant is presently suffering from 9 a mental disease or defect and that he should, in lieu of being sen-
10 tenced to probation or imprisonment, be committed to a mental hospital
11 for care or treatment, the court shall commit the defendant to the cus-
12 tody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall hospitalize 13 the defendant for care or treatment in a suitable mental hospital, or 14 in another facility designated by the court as suitable. Such a com-
15 mitment constitutes a provisional sentence to the maximum term au-16 thorized by section 2301(b) and 2304 for the offense of which the 17 defendant was found guilty.

18 “(e) DISCHARGE FROM MENTAL HOSPITAL.—When the director of 19 the facility in which the defendant is hospitalized pursuant to subsec-20 tion (d) determines that the defendant has recovered from his mental 21 disease or defect to such an extent that he is no longer in need of cus-
22 tody for care or treatment in a mental hospital, he shall promptly file 23 a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the 24 commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the de-
25 fendant’s counsel and to the attorney for the government. If, at the 26 time of the filing of the certificate, the provisional sentence imposed
27 pursuant to subsection (d) has not expired, the court shall hold a hear-
28 ing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 3617(d), to deter-
29 mine whether the provisional sentence should be reduced. After the 30 hearing, the court may order that the defendant be released, be placed 31 on probation pursuant to chapter 21, or be imprisoned for the re-
32 mainder of the provisional sentence or for any lesser term, or may im-
33 pose any other sentence available under part III of this title.

34 “§ 3615. Hospitalization of an Imprisoned Person Suffering from
35 Mental Disease or Defect

36 “(a) MOTION TO DETERMINE PRESENT MENTAL CONDITION OF IM-
37 PRISONED DEFENDANT.—A defendant serving a sentence of imprison-
38 ment, or an attorney for the government at the request of the director
39 of the facility in which the defendant is imprisoned, may file a mo-40 tion with the court for the district in which the facility is located for 41 a hearing on the present mental condition of the defendant. The court

1 shall grant the motion if there is reasonable cause to believe that the
 2 defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect
 3 for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treat-
 4 ment in a mental hospital. A motion filed under this subsection shall 5 stay the release of the defendant pending completion of procedures
 6 contained in this section.

7 “(b) PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of 8 the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric examination of the 9 defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric report be filed with 10 the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 3617 (b) and (c).

11 “(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the 12 provisions of section 3617(d).

13 “(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the 14 court is of the opinion that the defendant is presently suffering from 15 a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need 16 of custody for care or treatment in a mental hospital, the court shall 17 commit the defendant to the custody of the Attorney General. The 18 Attorney General shall hospitalize the defendant for treatment in a
 19 suitable mental hospital, or in another facility designated by the court
 20 as suitable, until he is no longer in need of custody for care or treat-21 ment in a mental hospital or until the expiration of his sentence of 22 imprisonment, whichever occurs earlier.

23 “(e) DISCHARGE FROM MENTAL HOSPITAL.—When the director of 24 the facility in which the defendant is hospitalized pursuant to sub-
 25 section (d) determines that the defendant has recovered from his men-26 tal disease or defect to such an extent that he is no longer in need of 27 custody for care or treatment in a mental hospital, he shall promptly
 28 file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered
 29 the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the 30 defendant’s counsel and to the attorney for the government. If, at the 31 time of the filing of the certificate, the sentence imposed upon the de-32 fendant has not expired, the court shall order that the defendant be 33 reimprisoned.

34 § 3616. Hospitalization of a Person Due for Release but Suffer-
 35 ing from Mental Disease or Defect

36 “(a) INSTITUTION OF PROCEEDING.—If the director of a facility in 37 which a person is hospitalized pursuant to this subchapter certifies
 38 that a person whose sentence is about to expire, or who has been com-
 39 mitted to the custody of the Attorney General pursuant to section
 40 3611(d), or against whom all criminal charges have been dismissed
 41 for reasons related to the mental condition of the person, is presently

1 suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his
2 release would create a substantial risk of serious bodily injury to
3 another person or serious damage to property of another, and that 4 suitable arrangements for state custody and care of the person are not
5 available, he shall transmit the certificate to the clerk of the court
6 for the district in which the person is confined. The clerk shall send 7 a copy of the certificate to the person, and to the attorney for the 8 government, and, if the person was committed pursuant to section
9 3611(d), to the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment.
10 The court shall order a hearing to determine whether the person is 11 presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which 12 his release would create a substantial risk of serious bodily injury to 13 another person or serious damage to property of another. A certificate
14 filed under this subsection shall stay the release of the person pending
15 completion of procedures contained in this section.

16 “(b) PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of 17 the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric examination of 18 the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric report be filed with 19 the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 3617 (b) and (c).

20 “(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the 21 provisions of section 3617(d).

22 “(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the 23 court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the person is pres-24 ently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his 25 release would create a substantial risk of serious bodily injury to 26 another person or serious damage to property of another, the court
27 shall commit the person to the custody of the Attorney General. The 28 Attorney General shall release the person to the appropriate official 29 of the state in which the person is domiciled if such state will assume 30 responsibility for his custody, care, and treatment. If such state
31 will not then assume such responsibility, the Attorney General shall 32 hospitalize the person for treatment in a suitable mental hospital, or 33 in another facility designated by the court as suitable, until such 34 state will assume such responsibility or until the person’s mental con-
35 dition is so improved that his release would not create a substantial 36 risk of serious bodily injury to another person or serious damage to 37 property of another.

38 “(e) DISCHARGE FROM MENTAL HOSPITAL.—When the director of 39 the facility in which a person is hospitalized pursuant to subsec-
40 tion (d) determines that the person has recovered from his mental

1 disease or defect to such an extent that his release would no longer
2 create a substantial risk of serious bodily injury to another person
3 or serious damage to property of another, he shall promptly file a
4 certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the 5 commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the per-
6 son's counsel and to the attorney for the government. The court shall 7 order the discharge of the person or, on the motion of the attorney for 8 the government or on its own motion, shall hold a hearing, conducted 9 pursuant to the provisions of section 3617(d), to determine whether 10 he should be released. If, after the hearing, the court finds by prepon-11 derence of the evidence that the person has recovered from his mental 12 disease or defect to such an extent that his release would no longer
13 create a substantial risk of serious injury to another person or serious 14 damage to property of another, the court shall order his immediate 15 discharge.

16 “(f) RELEASE TO STATE OF CERTAIN OTHER PERSONS.—If the director
17 of a facility in which a person is hospitalized pursuant to this 18 subchapter certifies to the Attorney General that a person, against 19 whom all charges have been dismissed for reasons not related to the 20 mental condition of the person, is presently suffering from a mental 21 disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a sub-
22 stantial risk of serious bodily injury to another person or serious
23 damage to property of another, the Attorney General shall release the 24 person to the appropriate official of the state in which the person is 25 domiciled for the purpose of institution of state proceedings for civil 26 commitment. If such state will not assume such responsibility, the 27 Attorney General shall release the person upon receipt of notice from 28 the state that it will not assume such responsibility, but not later than 29 10 days after certification by the director of the facility.

30 “§ 3617. General Provisions for Subchapter B

31 “(a) DEFINITION.—As used in this subchapter, ‘insanity’ means
32 a menal disease or defect of a nature constituting a defense to a fed-
33 eral criminal prosecution.

34 “(b) PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATIONS.—A psychiatric examination
35 ordered pursuant to this subchapter shall be conducted by at least 36 two licensed or certified psychiatrists or clinical psychologists. They 37 shall be:

38 “(1) designated by the court if the examination is ordered
39 under section 3611, 3612, 3613, or 3614; or

1           “(2) designated by the court, and shall include one psychia-
2           trist or clinical psychologist selected by the defendant, if the exam-
3           ination is ordered under section 3615 or 3616.

4   For the purpose of an examination pursuant to an order under section
5   3611, 3612, 3613, or 3614, the court may commit the person to be 6   examined for a reasonable period, but not more than sixty days, to 7   the custody of the Attorney General for placement in a suitable mental 8   hospital or another facility designated by the court as suitable.

9   “(c) PSYCHIATRIC REPORTS.—A psychiatric report ordered pursuant 10   to this subchapter shall be prepared by the examiner designated to 11   conduct the psychiatric examination, shall be filed with the court 12   with copies provided to the counsel for the person examined and to 13   the attorney for the government, and shall include:

14           “(1) the person’s history and present symptoms;

15           “(2) a description of the psychological and medical tests em-
16           ployed and their results;

17           “(3) the examiners’ findings; and 18           “(4) the examiners’ opinions as to diagnosis, prognosis, and:

19           “(A) if the examination is ordered under section 3611,
20           whether the person is presently suffering from a mental 21           disease or defect rendering him mentally incompetent to the 22           extent that he is unable to understand the nature and conse-
23           quences of the proceedings against him or to assist properly in 24           his defense;

25           “(B) if the examination is ordered under section 3612,
26           whether the person was insane at the time of the offense
27           charged;

28           “(C) if the examination is ordered under section 3613 or 29           3616, whether the person is presently suffering from a mental 30           disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a 31           substantial risk of serious bodily injury to another person or 32           serious damage to property of another; or

33           “(D) if the examination is ordered under section 3614 or 34           3615, whether the person is presently suffering from a mental 35           disease or defect as a result of which he is in need of custody
36           for care or treatment in a mental hospital.

37   “(d) HEARING.—At a hearing ordered pursuant to this subchapter
38   the person whose mental condition is the subject of the hearing shall

1 be represented by counsel and, if he is financially unable to obtain
 2 adequate representation, counsel shall be appointed for him pursuant
 3 to section 3402. The person shall be afforded an opportunity to testify,
 4 to present evidence, to subpoena witnesses on his behalf, and to con-
 5 front and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing.

6 “(c) PERIODIC REPORTS BY MENTAL HOSPITAL.—The director of the 7 facility in which a person is hospitalized pursuant to:

8 “(1) section 3611 shall prepare semiannual reports; or 9 “(2) section 3613, 3614, 3615, or 3616 shall prepare annual 10 reports;

11 concerning the mental condition of the person and continuing recom-
 12 mendations concerning his continued hospitalization. The reports shall 13 be submitted to the court that ordered the person’s commitment to 14 the facility and copies of the reports shall be submitted to such other 15 persons as the court may direct.

16 “(f) ADMISSIBILITY OF A DEFENDANT’S STATEMENTS AT TRIAL.—A 17 statement made by the defendant during the course of a psychiatric 18 examination pursuant to section 3611 or 3612 is not admissible as evi-
 19 dence against the accused on the issue of guilt in any criminal pro-
 20 ceeding.

21 “(g) HABEAS CORPUS UNIMPAIRED.—Nothing contained in section
 22 3613 or 3616 precludes a person who is committed under either of such 23 sections from establishing by writ of habeas corpus the illegality of 24 his detention.

25 “(h) AUTHORITY AND RESPONSIBILITY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.—
 26 The Attorney General:

27 “(1) may contract with a state, a locality, or a private agency
 28 for the confinement, hospitalization, care, or treatment of, or the 29 provision of services to, a person committed to his custody pur-
 30 suant to this subchapter;

31 “(2) may apply for the civil commitment, pursuant to state law,
 32 of a person committed to his custody pursuant to section 3613 or
 33 3616; and

34 “(3) shall consult with the Secretary of the Department of 35 Health, Education, and Welfare in the general implementation of 36 the provisions of this subchapter and in the establishment of stand-
 37 ards for facilities used in the implementation of this subchapter.

1 “Chapter 37.—PRETRIAL AND TRIAL PROCEDURE, EVI-
 2 DENCE, AND APPELLATE REVIEW

“Subchapter

“A. Pretrial and Trial Procedure.

“B. Evidence.

“C. Appellate Review.

3 “Subchapter A.—Pretrial and Trial Procedure

“Sec.

“3701. Pretrial and Trial Procedure in General.

“3702. Rulemaking Authority of the Supreme Court for Rules of Criminal Procedure.

4 “§ 3701. Pretrial and Trial Procedure in General

5 “Pretrial and trial procedure in criminal cases in the district courts
 6 of the United States and before United States magistrates is governed
 7 by the provisions of this title, by the Federal Rules of Criminal Proce-
 8 dure, and by such other rules as the Supreme Court may prescribe.

9 “§ 3702. Rulemaking Authority of the Supreme Court for Rules of 10 Criminal Procedure

11 “(a) PRESCRIPTION OF RULES.—The Supreme Court of the United
 12 States may prescribe amendments to the Federal Rules of Criminal
 13 Procedure and may otherwise prescribe rules of pleading, practice,
 14 and procedure with respect to proceedings prior to, including, and 15 relating to the entry of judgment of conviction in criminal cases in 16 the district courts of the United States or in proceedings before United 17 States magistrates. Any provision of law in conflict with a rule pre-
 18 scribed pursuant to this section shall be of no further force or effect
 19 after such rule has taken effect.

20 “(b) EFFECTIVE DATE OF RULES.—Rules prescribed pursuant to this
 21 section shall be reported to Congress by the Chief Justice at or after 22 the beginning of a regular session of Congress but not later than the 23 first day of May, and shall take effect one hundred and eighty days
 24 after they have been reported. The Supreme Court may fix a later date 25 upon which rules shall take effect, and may fix the extent to which they 26 shall apply to proceedings then pending.

27 “Subchapter B.—Evidence

“Sec.

“3711. Evidence in General.

“3712. Rulemaking Authority of the Supreme Court for Rules of Evidence.

“3713. Admissibility of Confessions.

“3714. Admissibility of Evidence in Sentencing Proceedings.

28 “§ 3711. Evidence in General

29 “The introduction, admission, and use of evidence in criminal cases
 30 in the district courts of the United States and before United States
 31 magistrates is governed by the provisions of this title and by the Fed-
 32 eral Rules of Evidence.

1   “§ 3712. Rulemaking Authority of the Supreme Court for Rules of
2                   Evidence

3       “(a) PRESCRIPTION OF AMENDMENTS TO RULES.—The Supreme Court
4 of the United States may prescribe amendments to the Federal Rules
5 of Evidence. Any provision of law in conflict with an amendment
6 prescribed pursuant to this section shall be of no further force or effect
7 after such amendment has taken effect.

8       “(b) EFFECTIVE DATE OF AMENDMENTS TO RULES.—Amendments
9 prescribed pursuant to this section shall be reported to Congress by 10 the Chief Justice at or after the beginning of a regular session of Con-
11 gress but not later than the first day of May, and shall take effect 12 one hundred and eighty days after they have been reported, except 13 that:

14           “(1) either House of Congress within that time may defer the 15 effective date of any amendment so reported to a later date or 16 until approved by Act of Congress;

17           “(2) either House of Congress within that time by resolution 18 may disapprove any amendment so reported, in which event such 19 amendment shall not take effect; and 20           “(3) any amendment so reported that creates, abolishes, or 21 modifies a privilege shall not take effect until it is approved by 22 Act of Congress.

23 The Supreme Court set a later date upon which such amendments
24 shall take effect, and may prescribe the extent to which they shall apply
25 to proceedings then pending.

26   “§ 3713. Admissibility of Confessions

27       “(a) ADMISSIBILITY IN GENERAL.—Unless otherwise required by the 28 Constitution, a confession that is made voluntarily is admissible in 29 evidence in a criminal case brought by the United States or the District
30 of Columbia.

31       “(b) DETERMINATION OF VOLUNTARINESS.—Before a confession is 32 received in evidence, the judge shall, out of the presence of the jury, 33 determine any issue concerning the voluntariness of the confession. If 34 the judge determines that the confession was made voluntarily, he shall 35 admit the confession in evidence, shall permit the jury to hear relevant 36 evidence on the issue of voluntariness, and shall instruct the jury to 37 give such weight to the confession as the jury feels it deserves under 38 all the circumstances.

39       “(c) FACTORS IN DETERMINING VOLUNTARINESS.—In determining an 40 issue concerning the voluntariness of a confession, the judge shall

1 consider all the circumstances under which the confession was made,
2 including:

3 “(1) the amount of time that elapsed between the arrest of 4 the person who made the confession and his initial appearance
5 before a judicial officer as required by Rule 5 of the Federal Rules
6 of Criminal Procedure if the confession was made after arrest
7 and before such appearance;

8 “(2) whether the person knew the nature of the offense with 9 which he was charged or of which he was suspected at the time of 10 the confession;

11 “(3) whether the person was advised or knew that he was not 12 required to make a statement and that the statement could be 13 used against him;

14 “(4) whether the person had been advised prior to questioning
15 of his right to assistance of counsel; and

16 “(5) whether the person was without assistance of counsel
17 when questioned or when making the confession.

18 The presence or absence of any of such factors is not conclusive as to 19 the voluntariness of the confession.

20 “(d) EFFECT OF DELAY DURING DETENTION.—A confession made by 21 a person between the time of his arrest or other official detention and 22 his initial appearance before a judicial officer as required by Rule 5
23 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure shall not be considered
24 inadmissible solely because of delay in bringing the person before
25 such judicial officer if:

26 “(1) the confession is found by the judge to have been made
27 voluntarily;

28 “(2) the weight to be given the confession is left to the jury;
29 and

30 “(3) the confession was made within six hours immediately
31 following the person’s arrest or other official detention, or within 32 such additional time as is found by the judge to be reasonable in 33 view of the distance that was required to be traveled to the nearest 34 available judicial officer and in view of the means of transportation
35 that was available.

36 “(e) SPONTANEOUS AND NONCUSTODIAL CONFESSIONS UNAFFECTED.—
37 Nothing contained in this section precludes the admission in evidence 38 of a confession made voluntarily by a person without interrogation by 39 anyone, or by a person who was not under arrest or held in official
40 detention.

1 “(f) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, ‘confession’ means any
2 self-incriminating oral or written statement.

3 “§ 3714. Admissibility of Evidence in Sentencing Proceedings

4 “Any relevant information concerning the history, characteristics,
5 and conduct of a person found guilty of an offense may be received and 6 considered by a court of the United States for the purpose of ascer-
7 taining an appropriate sentence to be imposed, regardless of the 8 admissibility of the information under the Federal Rules of Evidence,
9 except to the extent that receipt and consideration of such information
10 for purposes of sentencing is expressly limited by a section of this title
11 relating to sentencing or by any other provision of law.

12 “Subchapter C.—Appellate Review

“Sec.

“3721. Appellate Review in General.

“3722. Rulemaking Authority of the Supreme Court for Rules of Appellate Procedure.

“3723. Appeal by a Defendant.

“3724. Appeal by the Government.

“3725. Review of a Sentence.

13 “§ 3721. Appellate Review in General

14 “Review by the courts of appeals of the United States and by the 15 United States Supreme Court of decisions, judgments, and orders en-
16 tered in criminal cases by district courts of the United States is gov-
17 erned by the provisions of this title and by the Federal Rules of 18 Appellate Procedure.

19 “§ 3722. Rulemaking Authority of the Supreme Court for Rules of 20 Appellate Procedure

21 “(a) PRESCRIPTION OF RULES.—The Supreme Court of the United 22 States may prescribe amendments to the Federal Rules of Appellate
23 Procedure and may otherwise prescribe rules of pleading, practice,
24 and procedure with respect to appeals from decisions, orders, and 25 judgments entered in criminal cases in the district courts of the United 26 States. Any provision of law in conflict with a rule prescribed pur-27 suant to this section shall be of no further force or effect after such 28 rule has taken effect.

29 “(b) EFFECTIVE DATE OF RULES.—Rules prescribed pursuant to this
30 section shall be reported to Congress by the Chief Justice at or after 31 the beginning of a regular session of Congress but not later than the 32 first day of May, and shall take effect one hundred and eighty days
33 after they have been reported. The Supreme Court may fix a later
34 date upon which such rules shall take effect, and may fix the extent
35 to which they shall apply to proceedings then pending.

1    “§ 3723. Appeal by the Defendant

2       “A defendant may appeal to a United States Court of Appeals from 3 a final judgment or order entered by a district court of the United
4 States in a criminal case.

5    “§ 3724. Appeal by the Government

6       “(a) APPEAL FROM DISMISSAL.—The government may appeal to 7 a United States Court of Appeals from a decision, judgment, or 8 order, entered by a district court of the United States in a criminal
9 case, dismissing an indictment or information or terminating a
10 prosecution in favor of a defendant as to one or more counts, unless 11 the double jeopardy clause of the United States Constitution prohibits 12 further prosecution of the case.

13       “(b) APPEAL FROM ORDER SUPPRESSING EVIDENCE.—The govern-
14 ment may appeal to a United States Court of Appeals from a deci-
15 sion or order, entered by a district court of the United States, suppress-
16 ing or excluding evidence or requiring the return of seized property 17 in a criminal proceeding, if:

18           “(1) the decision or order was not made during the interval
19 between the time the defendant was put in jeopardy and the re-
20 turn of the verdict or finding on an indictment or information;
21 and

22           “(2) the attorney for the government certifies to the district 23 court or magistrate that the appeal is not taken for purposes of 24 delay and that the evidence is a substantial proof of a fact mate-
25 rial to the case.

26       “(c) APPEAL FROM ORDER DENYING AUTHORIZATION FOR INTER-
27 ception.—The government may appeal to a United States Court
28 of Appeals from a decision or order, entered by a district court of the 29 United States, denying an application for an order authorizing or 30 approving the interception of a private oral communication, if the 31 attorney for the government certifies to the district court that the 32 appeal is not taken for purposes of delay.

33       “(d) DILIGENT PROSECUTION REQUIRED.—An appeal by the govern-
34 ment shall be diligently prosecuted.

35    “§ 3725. Review of a Sentence

36       “(a) APPEAL BY A DEFENDANT.—A defendant may file a notice of 37 appeal in the district court for review of a final sentence imposed for 38 a felony if the sentence includes a fine or a term of imprisonment or a

1 term of parole ineligibility higher than the maximum established in
2 the guidelines that are issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant
3 to 28 U.S.C. 994(a) (1), and that are found by the sentencing court to 4 be applicable to the case, unless:

5 “(1) the sentence is consistent with policy statements issued
6 by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(a) (2);

7 “(2) the sentence is equal to or less than the sentence recom-
8 mended or not opposed by the attorney for the government pur-
9 suant to a plea agreement under Rule 11(e) (1) (B) of the Federal 10 Rules of Criminal Procedure; or

11 “(3) the sentence is that provided in an accepted plea agree-
12 ment pursuant to Rule 11(e) (1) (C) of the Federal Rules of 13 Criminal Procedure.

14 (b) APPEAL BY THE GOVERNMENT.—The government may, with the 15 approval of the Attorney General or his designee, file a notice of 16 appeal in the district court for review of a final sentence imposed for 17 a felony if the sentence includes a fine or a term of imprisonment or 18 a term of parole ineligibility lower than the minimum established in 19 the guidelines that are issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant
20 to 28 U.S.C. 994(a) (1), and that are found by the sentencing court
21 to be applicable to the case, unless:

22 “(1) the sentence is consistent with policy statements issued by 23 the Sentencing Commission to 28 U.S.C. 994(a) (2);

24 “(2) the sentence is equal to or greater than the sentence recom-
25 mended or not opposed by the attorney for the government pur-
26 suant to a plea agreement under Rule 11(e) (1) (B) of the Federal 27 Rules of Criminal Procedures; or

28 “(3) the sentence is equal to that provided in an accepted plea
29 agreement pursuant to Rule 11(e) (1) (C) of the Federal Rules of 30 Criminal Procedure.

31 (c) REVIEW.—If a notice of appeal is filed in the district court
32 pursuant to subsection (a) or (b), the clerk shall certify to the court
33 of appeals:

34 “(1) that portion of the record in the case that is designated
35 as pertinent by either of the parties;

36 “(2) the presentence report; and 37 “(3) the information submitted during the sentencing pro-

38 ceeding.

1 “(d) CONSIDERATION.—Upon review of the record, the court of ap-
2 peals shall determine whether the sentence imposed is clearly unreason-
3 able, having regard for :

4 “(1) the factors to be considered in imposing a sentence, as set
5 forth in part III of this title ; and

6 “(2) the reasons for the imposition of the particular sentence,
7 as stated by the district court pursuant to the provisions of section
8 2003(b).

9 “(e) DECISION AND DISPOSITION.—If the court of appeals deter-
10 mines that the sentence is :

11 “(1) clearly unreasonable, it shall state specific reasons for its 12 conclusions and :

13 “(A) if it determines that the sentence is too high and the 14 appeal has been filed under subsection (a), shall set aside the 15 sentence and :

16 “(i) remand the case for imposition of a lesser
17 sentence ;

18 “(ii) remand the case for further sentencing proceed-
19 ings ; or

20 “(iii) impose a lesser sentence.

21 “(B) if it determines that the sentence is too low and the 22 appeal has been filed under subsection (b), shall set aside the 23 sentence and :

24 “(i) remand the case for imposition of a greater
25 sentence ;

26 “(ii) remand the case for further sentencing proceed-
27 ings ; or

28 “(iii) impose a greater sentence ;

29 “(2) not clearly unreasonable, it shall affirm the sentence.

30 “Chapter 38.—POST-SENTENCE ADMINISTRATION

“Subchapter

“A. Probation.

“B. Fines.

“C. Imprisonment.

“D. Parole.

31 “Subchapter A.—Probation

“Sec.

“3801. Supervision of Probation.

“3802. Appointment of Probation Officers.

“3803. Duties of Probation Officers.

“3804. Transportation of a Probationer.

“3805. Transfer of Jurisdiction over Probationer.

“3806. Arrest and Return of a Probationer.

“3807. Special Probation and Expungement Procedures for Drug Possessors.

1 “§ 3801. Supervision of Probation

2 A person who has been sentenced to probation pursuant to the provi-
3 sions of chapter 21 shall, during the term of his probation, be super-
4 vised by a probation officer to the degree warranted by the conditions
5 of his probation.

6 “§ 3802. Appointment of Probation Officers

7 “(a) APPOINTMENT.—A district court of the United States shall 8 appoint qualified persons to serve as probation officers within the 9 jurisdiction and under the direction of the court making the appoint-
10 ment. The court may, in its discretion, remove a probation officer
11 previously appointed.

12 “(b) RECORD OF APPOINTMENT.—The order of appointment shall be 13 entered on the records of the court, a copy of the order shall be 14 delivered to the officer appointed, and a copy shall be sent to the 15 Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts.

16 “(c) CHIEF PROBATION OFFICER.—If the court appoints more than 17 one probation officer, one may be designated by the court as chief pro-
18 bation officer and shall direct the work of all probation officers serving 19 in the court.

20 “§ 3803. Duties of Probation Officers

21 “A probation officer shall:

22 “(a) instruct a probationer under his supervision as to the con-
23 ditions of his probation, and provide him with a written statement
24 clearly setting forth all such conditions;

25 “(b) keep informed, to the degree required by the conditions
26 of probation, as to the conduct and condition of a probationer 27 under his supervision, and report his conduct and condition to 28 the sentencing court;

29 “(c) use all suitable methods, not inconsistent with the condi-
30 tions imposed by the court, to aid a probationer under his super-
31 vision and to bring about improvements in his conduct and 32 condition;

33 “(d) be responsible for the supervision of any probationer
34 known to be within the judicial district;

35 “(e) keep a record of his work, and make such reports to the 36 Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts
37 as the Director may require;

38 “(f) perform any other duty that the court may designate; and 39 “(g) perform any duty with respect to a person on parole that 40 the Parole Commission may designate.

1 “§ 3804. Transportation of a Probationer

2 “A court, after imposing a sentence of probation, may direct a
3 United States marshal to furnish the probationer with :

4 “(a) transportation to the place to which he is required to 5 proceed as a condition of his probation ; and

6 “(b) money, not to exceed such amount as the Attorney General
7 may prescribe, for subsistence expenses while traveling to his 8 destination.

9 “§ 3805. Transfer of Jurisdiction over a Probationer

10 “A court, after imposing a sentence of probation, may transfer juris-
11 diction over the probationer to the district court for any other district 12 to which the probationer is required to proceed as a condition of his 13 probation, with the concurrence of such court. A retransfer of jurisdic-
14 tion may be made in the same manner. A court to which jurisdiction is 15 transferred under this section is authorized to exercise all powers over 16 the probationer that are permitted by this subchapter or chapter 21.

17 “§ 3806. Arrest and Return of a Probationer

18 “A probationer who has violated a condition of his probation may 19 be arrested, and, upon arrest, shall be taken without unnecessary delay
20 before the court having jurisdiction over him.

21 “§ 3807. Special Probation and Expungement Procedures for Drug
22 Possessors

23 “(a) PRE-JUDGMENT PROBATION.—If a person found guilty of an of-
24 fense described in section 1813 (Possessing Drugs) :

25 “(1) has not, prior to the commission of such offense, been con-
26 victed of violating a federal or state law relating to controlled
27 substances ; and

28 “(2) has not previously been the subject of a disposition under 29 this subsection ;

30 the court may, with the consent of such person, place him on probation 31 for a term of not more than one year without entering a judgment of 32 conviction. At any time before the expiration of the term of probation,
33 if the person has not violated a condition of his probation, the court
34 may, without entering a judgment of conviction, dismiss the proceed-
35 ings against the person and discharge him from probation. At the ex-
36 piration of the term of probation, if the person has not violated a con-
37 dition of his probation the court shall, without entering a judgment of 38 conviction, dismiss the proceedings against the person and discharge
39 him from probation. If the person violates a condition of his proba-
40 tion, the court shall proceed in accordance with the provisions of sec-
41 tion 2105.

1     “(b) RECORD OF DISPOSITION.—A non-public record of a disposition
2 under subsection (a) shall be retained by the Department of Justice
3 solely for the purpose of use by the courts in determining in any sub-
4 sequent proceeding whether a person qualifies for the disposition pro-
5 vided in subsection (a). A disposition under subsection (a) shall not 6 be considered a conviction for the purpose of a disqualification or a 7 disability imposed by law upon conviction of a crime, or for any other
8 purpose.

9     “(c) EXPUNGEMENT OF RECORD OF DISPOSITION.—If a person whose 10 case is the subject of a disposition under subsection (a) was less than 11 twenty-one years old at the time of the offense, the court shall, upon 12 application of such person, enter an order to expunge from all official 13 records, except the nonpublic records referred to in subsection (b),
14 all references to his arrest for the offense, the institution of criminal 15 proceedings against him, and the results thereof. The effect of the 16 order shall be to restore such person, in the contemplation of the law,
17 to the status he occupied before such arrest or institution of criminal 18 proceedings. A person concerning whom such an order has been 19 entered shall not be held thereafter under any provision of law to 20 be guilty of perjury, false swearing, or making a false statement by 21 reason of his failure to recite or acknowledge such arrests or institution 22 of criminal proceedings, or the results thereof, in response to an 23 inquiry made of him for any purpose.

24           “Subchapter B.—Fines

“Sec.

“3811. Payment of a Fine.

“3812. Collection of an Unpaid Fine.

“3813. Lien Provision for Satisfaction of an Unpaid Fine.

25           “§ 3811. Payment of a Fine

26           “A person who has been sentenced to pay a fine pursuant to the 27 provisions of chapter 22 shall pay the fine immediately, or by the 28 time and method specified by the sentencing court, to the clerk of the 29 court. The clerk shall forward the payment to the United States
30 Treasury for credit to the Victim Compensation Fund.

31           “§ 3812. Collection of an Unpaid Fine

32           “(a) CERTIFICATION OF IMPOSITION.—If a fine is imposed, the sen-
33 tencing court shall promptly certify to the Attorney General:

34           “(1) the name of the person fined;

35           “(2) his last known address;

36           “(3) the docket number of the case;

37           “(4) the amount of the fine imposed;

38           “(5) the time and method of payment specified by the court;

1           “(6) the nature of any modification or remission of the fine;
2           and

3           “(8) the amount of the fine that is due and unpaid.

4           The court shall thereafter promptly certify to the Attorney General
5           the amount of any subsequent payment that the court may receive 6           with respect to, and the nature of, any subsequent remission or modi-
7           fication of a fine concerning which certification has previously been 8           issued.

9           “(b) RESPONSIBILITY FOR COLLECTION.—The Attorney General shall 10          be responsible for collection of an unpaid fine concerning which a cer-
11          tification has been issued as provided in subsection (a).

12          “§ 3813. Lien Provisions for Satisfaction of an Unpaid Fine

13          “(a) LIEN.—A fine imposed pursuant to the provisions of chapter
14          22 is a lien in favor of the United States upon all property belonging
15          to the person fined. The lien arises at the time of the entry of the 16          judgment and continues until the liability is satisfied, remitted, or 17          set aside, or until it becomes unenforceable pursuant to the provisions
18          of subsection (b).

19          “(b) EXPIRATION OF LIEN.—A lien becomes unenforceable and lia-
20          bility to pay a fine expires: .

21                 “(1) twenty years after the entry of the judgment; or 22                 “(2) upon the death of the individual fined.

23          The period set forth in paragraph (1) may be extended, prior to its 24          expiration, by a written agreement between the person fined and the 25          Attorney General. The running of the period set forth in paragraph 26          (1) is suspended during any interval for which the running of the 27          period of limitations for collection of a tax would be suspended pur-
28          suant to section 6503(b), 6503(c), 6503(g), or 7508(a)(1)(I) of the 29          Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended (26 U.S.C. 503(b), 6503
30          (c), 6503(g), or 7508(a)(1)(I)), or section 513 of the Act of Octo-
31          ber 17, 1940, 54 Stat. 1190.

32          “(c) APPLICATION OF OTHER LIEN PROVISIONS.—The provisions of 33          sections 6323, 6331 through 6343, 6901, 7402, 7403, 7405, 7423 through 34          7426, 7505(a), 7506, 7508, 7602 through 7605, 7622, 7701, 7805, and 7810
35          of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended (26 U.S.C. 6323, 36          6331 through 6343, 6901, 7402, 7403, 7405, 7423 through 7426, 7505(a), 37          7506, 7508, 7602 through 7605, 7622, 7701, 7805, and 7810), and of 38          section 513 of the Act of October 17, 1940, 54 Stat. 1190, apply to a 39          fine and to the lien imposed by subsection (a) as if the liability of 40          the person fined were for an internal revenue tax assessment, except

1 to the extent that the application of such statutes is modified by regu-
 2 lations issued by the Attorney General to accord with differences in
 3 the nature of the liabilities. For the purposes of this subsection, ref-
 4 erences in the preceding sections of the Internal Revenue Code of 5 1954 to "the Secretary or his delegate" shall be construed to mean
 6 "the Attorney General," and references in those sections to "tax" shall 7 be construed to mean "fine."

8 "(d) EFFECT OF NOTICE OF LIEN.—A notice of the lien imposed by 9 subsection (a) shall be considered a notice of lien for taxes payable 10 to the United States for the purpose of any state or local law provid-
 11 ing for the filing of a notice of a tax lien. The registration, recording, 12 docketing, or indexing, in accordance with 28 U.S.C. 1962, of the 13 judgment under which a fine is imposed shall be considered for all 14 purposes as the filing prescribed by section 6323(f)(1)(A) of the 15 Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended (26 U.S.C. 6323(f)(1)
 16 (A)), and by subsection (c).

17 "Subchapter C.—Imprisonment

"Sec.

"3821. Imprisonment of a Convicted Person.

"3822. Temporary Release of a Prisoner.

"3823. Transfer of a Prisoner to State Authority.

"3824. Release of a Prisoner.

"3825. Inapplicability of the Administrative Procedure Act.

18 "§ 3821. Imprisonment of a Convicted Person

19 "(a) COMMITMENT TO CUSTODY OF BUREAU OF PRISONS.—A person
 20 who has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment pursuant to the 21 provisions of chapter 23 shall be committed to the custody of the 22 Bureau of Prisons until the expiration of the term imposed or until 23 earlier released on parole pursuant to the provisions of subchapter D.

24 "(b) PLACE OF IMPRISONMENT.—The Bureau of Prisons shall desig-
 25 nate the place of the prisoner's imprisonment. The Bureau may desig-26 nate any available prison facility, whether maintained by the federal 27 government or otherwise and whether within or without the judicial 28 district in which the person was convicted, that appears to be appro-
 29 priate and suitable, considering the resources of the facility contem-30 plated, the nature and circumstances of the offense, the history and 31 characteristics of the prisoner, any statement by the court that im-32 posed the sentence concerning the purposes for which the sentence to 33 imprisonment was determined to be warranted or recommending a
 34 type of prison facility as appropriate, and any pertinent policy state-
 35 ment issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C.
 36 994(a)(2). The Bureau may at any time, having regard for the same

1 matters, direct the transfer of a prisoner from one prison facility to
2 another.

3 “(c) DELIVERY OF ORDER OF COMMITMENT.—When a prisoner pur-
4 suant to a court order, is placed in the custody of a person in charge
5 of a prison facility, a copy of the order shall be delivered to such per-
6 son as evidence of his authority to hold the prisoner, and the original
7 order, with the return endorsed thereon, shall be returned to the court
8 that issued it.

9 “(d) DELIVERY OF PRISONER FOR COURT APPEARANCES.—The Bureau
10 of Prisons shall, without charge, bring a prisoner into court or return
11 him to a prison facility on order of a court of the United States or on 12 written request of an attorney for the government.

13 “§ 3822. Temporary Release of a Prisoner

14 “The Bureau of Prisons may release a prisoner from the place of 15 his imprisonment for a limited period, if such release appears to be 16 consistent with the purposes for which the sentence was imposed and 17 any pertinent policy statement issued by the Sentencing Commission
18 pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(a) (2), if such release otherwise appears to 19 be consistent with the public interest and if there is reasonable cause 20 to believe that the prisoner will honor the trust to be imposed in 21 him, by authorizing him, under prescribed conditions, to:

22 “(a) visit a designated place for a period not to exceed thirty
23 days, and then return to the same or another facility, for the pur-24 pose of:

25 “(1) visiting a relative who is dying;

26 “(2) attending a funeral of a relative;

27 “(3) obtaining medical treatment not otherwise available;

28 “(4) contacting a prospective employer;

29 “(5) establishing or reestablishing family or community
30 ties; or

31 “(6) engaging in any other significant activity consistent
32 with the public interest;

33 “(b) participate in a training or educational program in the 34 community while continuing in official detention at the prison
35 facility; or

36 “(c) work at paid employment in the community while con-
37 tinuing in official detention at the prison facility if:

38 “(1) the representatives of local union central bodies or 39 similar labor union organizations are first consulted;

40 “(2) the paid employment will not result in the displace-
41 ment of employed persons, or be applied in skills, crafts,

1 or trades in which there is a surplus of available labor
2 in the community, or impair existing contracts for services;

3 “(3) the rates of pay and other conditions of employment
4 will not be less than those paid or provided for work of a
5 similar nature in the community; and

6 “(4) the prisoner agrees to pay to the Bureau such costs
7 incident to his official detention as the Bureau finds appro-
8 priate and reasonable under all the circumstances, such costs
9 to be collected by the Bureau and deposited in the Treasury
10 to the credit of the appropriation available for such costs at 11 the time such collections are made.

12 “§ 3823. Transfer of a Prisoner to State Authority

13 “The Director of the Bureau of Prisons shall order that a prisoner
14 who has been charged in an indictment or information with, or con-
15 victed of, a state felony, be transferred to an official detention facility 16 within such state prior to his release from a federal prison facility if:

17 “(1) the transfer has been requested by the Governor or other
18 executive authority of the state;

19 “(2) the state has presented to the Director a certified copy
20 of the indictment, information, or judgment of conviction; and 21 “(3) the Director finds that the transfer would be in the public 22 interest.

23 If more than one request is presented with respect to a prisoner, the 24 Director shall determine which request should receive preference.

25 “§ 3824. Release of a Prisoner

26 “(a) DATE OF RELEASE.—Except as otherwise provided, and unless
27 earlier released on parole pursuant to the provisions of subchapter D,
28 a prisoner shall be released on parole, pursuant to the provisions of 29 section 3831, on the date of the expiration of his term of imprisonment.
30 If the date of the expiration of a prisoner’s term of imprisonment falls
31 on a Saturday, a Sunday, or a legal holiday, the prisoner may be re-
32 leased by the Bureau of Prisons on the last preceding weekday.

33 “(b) ALLOTMENT OF CLOTHING, FUNDS, AND TRANSPORTATION.—Upon 34 the release of a prisoner on parole prior to or on the expiration of his 35 term of imprisonment, the Bureau of Prisons shall furnish him with:

36 “(1) suitable clothing;

37 “(2) an amount of money, not less than $200 nor more than $500,
38 determined by the Director to be consistent with the needs of the 39 offender and the public interest, unless the Director determines 40 that the financial position of the offender is such that no sum
41 should be furnished; and

1           “(3) transportation to the place of his conviction, to his bona
2           fide residence within the United States, or to such other place
3           within the United States as may be authorized by the Parole
4           Commission.

5           “§ 3825. Inapplicability of the Administrative Procedure Act

6           “The provisions of 5 U.S.C. 551 through 559, and 701 through 706,
7           do not apply to the making of any determination, decision, or order
8           under this subchapter.

9           “Subchapter D.—Parole

“Sec.

“3831. Consideration of a Prisoner for Release on Parole.

“3832. Pre-Parole Reports.

“3833. Parole Interview Procedure.

“3834. Term and Conditions of Parole.

“3835. Revocation of Parole.

“3836. Appeal from Parole Commission Determination.

“3837. Inapplicability of the Administrative Procedure Act.

10          “§ 3831. Consideration of a Prisoner for Release on Parole

11          “(a) ELIGIBILITY.—A prisoner who has been committed to the cus-
12          tody of the Bureau of Prisons to serve a term of imprisonment total-
13          ing six months or more is eligible for release on parole by the Parole
14          Commission upon completion of the service of the term of parole
15          ineligibility imposed by the sentencing court pursuant to the provisions 16          of section 2301(c) and 2302(b), or upon completion of the first six 17          months of the term of imprisonment, whichever is later.

18          “(b) FIRST CONSIDERATION.—The Parole Commission shall consider 19          the parole of a prisoner serving a term of imprisonment totaling:

20                 “(1) more than one year, at least sixty days prior to the later
21          of:

22                         “(A) the date upon which he will become eligible for 23                         parole; or

24                         “(B) the date upon which he will complete the service of 25                         one-fourth of the term of imprisonment or of the first year
26                         of the term of imprisonment, whichever is earlier;

27                 “(2) six months or more but not more than one year, at least 28                 sixty days prior to the date upon which he will become eligible
29                 for parole.

30          “(c) CRITERIA FOR RELEASE.—The Parole Commission shall grant 31          parole to a prisoner who is eligible for parole if, having regard for 32          the guidelines and any pertinent policy statements concerning parole
33          issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(f),
34          the Commission is of the opinion that:

1           “(1) his release at that time is consistent with the applicable
2 factors that led to the imposition of his particular sentence under
3 the provisions of part III of this title;

4           “(2) there is no undue risk that he will fail to conform to 5 such conditions of parole as would be warranted under the cir-
6 cumstances; and

7           “(3) his release at that time, in light of his conduct at the 8 institution, would not have a substantially adverse effect on insti-
9 tutional discipline.

10          “(d) RECONSIDERATION.—If parole is denied a prisoner, the Parole
11 Commission shall reconsider parole at least once each year thereafter
12 until parole is granted, unless at the time parole is denied the Com-
13 mission determines that a release order after an additional year would 14 be inappropriate, in which case the Commission may defer reconsid-
15 eration for not more than two years.

16          “(e) MANDATORY RELEASE ON PAROLE AT EXPIRATION OF SENTENCE.—
17 A prisoner serving a term of imprisonment totaling six months or 18 more who is still in confinement on the date of the expiration of his 19 term of imprisonment shall then be released on parole.

20          “§ 3832. Preparole Reports

21          “(a) PREPAROLE STUDY AND REPORT BY BUREAU OF PRISONS.—An 22 adequate time prior to the date upon which a prisoner becomes eli-
23 gible for parole, the Bureau of Prisons, under such regulations as 24 the Attorney General may prescribe, shall conduct a complete study
25 of the prisoner, inquiring into such matters as the prisoner’s previous 26 delinquency or criminal experiences; his social background; his capa-
27 bilities; his mental, emotional, and physical health; and the rehabili-
28 tative resources or programs that may be available to suit his needs.
29 At least ninety days prior to the date upon which the prisoner becomes 30 eligible for parole, the Bureau shall provide the Parole Commission 31 with a written report of the results of the study and shall make to 32 the Commission whatever recommendations the Bureau believes will 33 be helpful in determining the suitability of the prisoner for parole
34 and in determining the appropriate terms and conditions of parole.

35          “(b) PREPAROLE REPORT BY PROBATION OFFICERS AND GOVERNMENT
36 AGENCIES.—Upon request of the Parole Commission prior to its con-
37 sideration of the parole of a prisoner or of any other matter within 38 its jurisdiction, a probation officer or a government agency shall pro-

1 vide the Commission with whatever information is available to such 2 officer or agency concerning a prisoner or parolee and shall, if not
3 inconsistent with the public interest, make to the Commission what-
4 ever recommendations such officer or agency believes will be helpful
5 with respect to the matter concerning which the request was made.

6 “(c) OTHER PREPAROLE INVESTIGATION.—The Parole Commission
7 may make such other investigation as it may consider warranted.

8 “§ 3833. Parole Interview Procedure

9 “(a) INTERVIEW REQUIRED.—A prisoner whom the Parole Commis-
10 sion is required to consider for parole under the provisions of:

11 “(1) section 3831(b)(1) or (d), shall, within the time specified,
12 be afforded a parole interview unless he signs a written waiver
13 of such an interview;

14 “(2) section 3831(b)(2), shall, within the time specified, be 15 afforded a parole interview unless:

16 “(A) he signs a written waiver of such an interview; or 17 “(B) the Commission, on the basis of the report and 18 recommendations of the Bureau of Prisons, determines to 19 release him on parole on the date upon which he will become 20 eligible for parole.

21 “(b) NOTICE AND OPPORTUNITY FOR REPRESENTATION.—Prior to the 22 parole interview, the prisoner:

23 “(1) shall be given a written notice of the time, place, and pur-
24 pose of such interview; and 25 “(2) shall be allowed to select, as a representative to aid him

26 in such interview, any person who qualifies under regulations
27 or rules issued by the Parole Commission, the regulations or rules
28 of which may not exclude attorneys as a class.

29 “(c) ACCESS TO REPORTS.—Following notification that a parole in-
30 terview is scheduled, the prisoner shall be afforded reasonable access
31 to such reports and other materials as are prepared by, or for the use
32 of, the Parole Commission in making its determination, except that 33 the prisoner shall not be afforded access to matters that, if they ap-
34 peared in a report of a presentence investigation, would not be revealed
35 to a defendant under the provisions of Rule 32 of the Federal Rules of 36 Criminal Procedure. If access to any such material is withheld from 37 the prisoner on such grounds, the Commission, or, if the material was 38 withheld at the request of the Bureau of Prisons or another agency,
39 the Bureau or such other agency, shall summarize the basic contents of 40 the material to the extent that is possible without violating a pledge of

1 confidentiality or endangering any person, and the Commission shall
2 furnish such summary to the prisoner.

3 “(d) RECORD OF INTERVIEW.—A complete record of a parole inter-
4 view shall be retained by the Parole Commission. Upon request, the 5 Commission shall make the record available to the prisoner.

6 “(e) NOTIFICATION OF DETERMINATION.—Not later than fifteen
7 working days after the date of the interview, the Parole Commission
8 shall notify the prisoner in writing of its determination. If parole
9 is denied, or if discretionary conditions of parole are imposed other
10 than those incorporated by reference in section 3834(c), the Commis-
11 sion shall include a statement of the reasons for such determination
12 and, if possible, a representative of the Commission who participated 13 in the parole interview shall hold a conference with the prisoner to ex-
14 plain such reasons.

15 “§ 3834. Term and Conditions of Parole

16 “(a) SETTING OF TERM AND CONDITIONS.—Upon a determination to 17 release a prisoner on parole, the Parole Commission shall set the term 18 and conditions of parole, having regard for:

19 “(1) the guidelines and any pertinent policy statements con-
20 cerning parole issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 21 28 U.S.C. 994(f);

22 “(2) the nature and circumstances of the offense and the history
23 and characteristics of the parolee; and

24 “(3) the need:

25 “(A) to protect the public from further crimes of the pa-
26 rolee; and

27 “(B) to provide the parolee with the opportunity for such 28 needed educational or vocational training, medical care, or 29 other correctional treatment as can be provided effectively
30 while he is on parole.

31 “(b) TERM OF PAROLE.—The Parole Commission, having regard for 32 the guidelines and any pertinent policy statements concerning parole
33 issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(f),
34 shall set the term of parole:

35 “(1) for a Class A or Class B felony, at not less than one year
36 nor more than five years;

37 “(2) for a Class C felony, at not less than one year nor more
38 than three years;

39 “(3) for a Class D felony, at not less than one year nor more
40 than two years;

1           “(4) for a Class E felony, at not less than six months nor more
2           than one year; and

3           “(5) for a Class A misdemeanor, at not less than three months
4           nor more than six months.

5           “(c) CONDITIONS OF PAROLE.—The Parole Commission shall provide,
6 as an explicit condition of parole, that the parolee not commit another
7 federal, state, or local crime during the term of parole. The Commis-
8 sion may provide, as further conditions of parole, to the extent that 9 such conditions are reasonably related to the matters set forth in 10 subsection (a) (2) and (a) (3), and to the extent that such conditions
11 involve no greater a deprivation of liberty than is reasonably necessary 12 for the purposes indicated in subsection (a) (3), and to the extent that 13 such conditions are consistent with any pertinent policy statements
14 issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(f),
15 any conditions set forth as discretionary conditions of probation in 16 section 2103(b) (1) through (b) (10) and (b) (12) through (b) (18),
17 and any other conditions it considers to be appropriate. If an alien
18 prisoner subject to deportation is paroled, the Commission may pro-
19 vide, as a condition of parole, that he be deported and remain outside
20 the United States, and may order that he be delivered to a duly author-
21 ized immigration official for such deportation. The Commission shall 22 provide to a parolee a written statement setting forth all the conditions 23 to which the parole is subject with sufficient clarity and specificity to 24 serve as a guide for the parolee’s conduct and for such supervision as 25 is required.

26           “(d) COMMENCEMENT OF TERM.—A term of parole commences on 27 the day the parolee is released from imprisonment.

28           “(e) CONCURRENT WITH OTHER SENTENCES.—A term of parole
29 runs concurrently with any federal, state, or local term of parole
30 or probation for another offense to which the parolee is subject
31 or becomes subject during the term of parole, except that it does not 32 run during any period in which the parolee is imprisoned in connec-
33 tion with a conviction for a federal, state, or local crime.

34           “(f) EARLY TERMINATION.—The Parole Commission may terminate 35 a term of parole previously ordered and discharge the parolee at any 36 time after expiration of one year of parole if it is satisfied that such 37 action is warranted by the conduct of the parolee and the interest of 38 justice. The Commission shall review the status of a parolee after 39 two years of continuous parole, and after each additional year of 40 parole, to determine the need for his continued parole.

1     “(g) EXTENSION OF TERM OR MODIFICATION OF CONDITIONS.—The
2 Parole Commission may extend a term of parole if less than the au-
3 thorized term was previously imposed, and may modify, reduce, or 4 enlarge the conditions of parole, at any time prior to the expiration or 5 termination of the term of parole.

6     “(h) SUBJECT TO REVOCATION.—A term of parole remains conditional
7 and subject to revocation until its expiration or termination.

8     “§ 3835. Revocation of Parole

9     “(a) WARRANT FOR ARREST.—A warrant for the arrest of a parolee
10 who is alleged to have violated a condition of his parole may be issued
11 by the Parole Commission at any time prior to the expiration or ter-
12 mination of the term of parole. An officer authorized under subchapter
13 B of chapter 30 to execute such a warrant may arrest the parolee and,
14 upon such an arrest, shall return the parolee to the custody of the 15 Bureau of Prisons.

16     “(b) PRELIMINARY APPEARANCE.—A parolee arrested on a warrant
17 for violation of a condition of his parole shall be taken, without un-
18 necessary delay, before the Parole Commission at a place reasonably 19 near the place of the arrest or of the violation alleged, to determine if 20 there is probable cause to believe that he has violated a condition of 21 his parole. The parolee shall be given the opportunity to admit or 22 deny, in whole or in part, the violation alleged, and to explain the cir-
23 cumstances of the matter. If the Commission, after a preliminary 24 hearing, finds that there is probable cause to believe that the violation
25 occurred, a revocation hearing before the Commission shall be ordered.
26 If the parolee admits the violation alleged, the revocation hearing may 27 be limited to matters concerning disposition.

28     “(c) TIME AND PLACE OF REVOCATION HEARING.—A revocation hear-29 ing shall be held by the Parole Commission, with respect to the parole
30 of:

31         “(1) a parolee for whom such a hearing was ordered under sub-32 section (b), immediately upon the finding of probable cause or 33 within sixty days thereafter, at a place reasonably near the place
34 of the arrest or of the violation alleged; or

35         “(2) a parolee who has been convicted of a federal, state, or 36 local crime committed subsequent to his release on parole and who 37 has been sentenced for such crime to a term of imprisonment of 38 more than one hundred and eighty days and who has had placed
39 against him a detainer on a warrant issued under subsection (a),

1       within one hundred and eighty days of such placement, at the
2       prison facility in which he is confined.

3       (d) REVOCATION HEARING PROCEDURE.—Prior to the holding of 4       the revocation hearing, the parolee shall be given reasonable notice
5       of the conditions of parole alleged to have been violated, and of the 6       time, place, and purpose of the scheduled hearing. At the hearing, the 7       parolee shall be apprised of the evidence against him and shall be 8       given opportunity:

9           (1) to be represented by retained counsel, or, if he is unable to 10          retain counsel, by counsel provided pursuant to the provisions of
11          chapter 34;

12          (2) to appear, to testify, and to present witnesses and docu-
13          mentary evidence on his own behalf; and

14          (3) to confront and cross-examine adverse witnesses, if he so
15          requests, unless the Parole Commission specifically finds good
16          cause for declining to allow confrontation.

17       Any relevant evidence may be received and considered at the hearing,
18       regardless of its admissibility under the Federal Rules of Evidence,
19       except to the extent that receipt and consideration of such evidence 20       for purposes of parole revocation is expressly limited by a section of 21       this title relating to parole or any other provision of law. At the con-
22       clusion of the hearing, the Commission shall determine on the evidence
23       before it whether the parolee has violated a condition of his parole.

24       “(e) DISPOSITION.—If the Parole Commission determines that the 25       parolee has not violated a condition of his parole, the warrant shall 26       be withdrawn. If the Commission determines that the parolee has 27       violated a condition of his parole, it may, after considering any perti-
28       nent policy statements concerning parole issued by the Sentencing
29       Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994 (f) :

30           “(1) continue him on parole, with or without extending the term 31           or modifying or enlarging the conditions; or

32           “(2) revoke parole, if such continuation, extension, modification, or 33           enlargement is inappropriate in its opinion, and order the parolee 34           imprisoned for:

35               “(A) the term of the original sentence minus the portion of 36               the original sentence served in confinement prior to the parole; or

37               “(B) the contingent term of imprisonment provided in section 38               2303.

39       In determining the appropriate disposition, the Commission shall con-
40       sider whether the violation was serious and whether the violation had 41       been preceded by other violations.

1       “(f) DIGEST OF PROCEEDINGS.—In any case in which parole is modi-
2       fied or revoked, the Parole Commission shall prepare, and shall give to 3       the parolee, a digest of the factors considered by the Commission and 4       of the reasons for the disposition ordered by the Commission.

5       “(g) DELAYED ADJUDICATION.—The power of the Parole Commis-
6       sion to revoke parole for violation of a condition of parole extends 7       beyond the expiration of the term of parole for any period reasonably
8       necessary for the adjudication of matters arising before its expiration 9       if, prior to its expiration, a warrant or summons has been issued on the 10      basis of an allegation of such violation.

11      “(h) CREDIT UPON REIMPRISONMENT.—Credit shall be given for 12      reimprisonment of a parolee beginning on the date he is returned to 13      the custody of the Bureau of Prisons.

14      “(i) REPAROLE.—A prisoner who has been reimprisoned following
15      revocation of parole may be reparable by the Parole Commission
16      under the same provisions of this subchapter that govern initial parole,
17      and such subsequent parole may be revoked by the Commission under 18      the same provisions of this subchapter that govern initial revocation.
19      If such a subsequent parole is revoked, the parolee may be reim-20      prisoned for:

21           “(1) the term of the original sentence minus the portion of the 22           original sentence served in confinement prior to the last parole; or

23           “(2) the contingent term of imprisonment provided in section
24           2303 if no part of such a term was served in the course of his reim-
25           prisonment after the initial revocation.

26      “§ 3836. Appeal from Parole Commission Determination

27      “(a) APPEAL IN GENERAL.—In any case in which, inconsistent with 28      the guidelines for parole issued by the Sentencing Commission pur-
29      suant to 28 U.S.C. 994(f) (1):

30           “(1) parole is denied;

31           “(2) conditions of parole are imposed other than those set forth 32           or incorporated by reference in section 3834(c); or

33           “(3) parole is modified or revoked;

34      the person to whom such decision applies may file with the National 35      Appeals Board a written appeal from such decision not later than 36      thirty days after the decision is rendered. In any case in which, incon-
37      sistent with the guidelines concerning parole issued by the Sentencing
38      Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(f) (1), any decision with re-
39      spect to parole is rendered, the Attorney General may file with the 40      National Appeals Board a written appeal from such decision not later
41      than thirty days after the decision is rendered. An appeal shall be

1 decided by a majority vote of the three commissioners on the National
2 Appeals Board within sixty days after receipt of the appellant's
3 papers.

4 “(b) APPEAL IF ORIGINAL JURISDICTION RETAINED.—In accordance 5 with regulations and rules issued by the Parole Commission, in 6 any case in which original jurisdiction is retained by the Commission
7 the initial decision shall be made by a majority vote of a panel of five 8 commissioners. The panel's decision may be appealed on the motion of 9 any commissioner on the panel, or on the application of the individual
10 to whom such decision applies, or on the motion of the Attorney Gen-
11 eral, directly to the National Appeals Board, which shall either affirm
12 the decision or schedule a review by the full Commission.

13 “(c) PARTICIPANT IN PRIOR DECISION BARRED.—No commissioner
14 may participate as a member of the National Appeals Board in the 15 consideration of an appeal from a decision in which he had earlier
16 participated.

17 “§ 3837. Inapplicability of the Administrative Procedure Act

18 “The provisions of 5 U.S.C. 551 through 559, and 701 through 706,
19 do not apply to the making of any determination, decision, or order
20 under this subchapter.

21 “PART V.—ANCILLARY CIVIL 22 PROCEEDINGS

“Chapter

“40. ANCILLARY PUBLIC CIVIL PROCEEDINGS.

“41. ANCILLARY PRIVATE CIVIL PROCEEDINGS.

23 “Chapter 40.—ANCILLARY PUBLIC CIVIL PROCEEDINGS

“Subchapter

“A. Civil Forfeiture.

“B. Civil Restraint of Racketeering.

“C. Injunctions.

24 “Subchapter A.—Civil Forfeiture

“Sec.

“4001. Civil Forfeiture Proceeding.

“4002. Protective Order

“4003. Execution of Civil Forfeiture.

“4004. Applicability of Other Civil Forfeiture Provisions.

“4005. Definitions for Subchapter A.

25 “§ 4001. Civil Forfeiture Proceeding

26 “(a) PROPERTY SUBJECT TO FORFEITURE.—In addition to a proceed-
27 ing under any other act of Congress, the Attorney General may initiate 28 in a district court of the United States an in rem civil proceeding to 29 have seized and forfeited to the United States any property, or the 30 value thereof where specified, used, intended for use, or possessed in 31 the course of an offense described in section :

1           “(1) 1204 (Violating Neutrality by Causing Departure of a
2 Vessel or Aircraft), if the property consists of a vessel or aircraft
3 or its contents;

4           “(2) 1206 (a)(2) or (a)(3) (Engaging in an Unlawful Inter-
5 national Transaction) if the property consists of property being
6 introduced into or exported from the United States in violation
7 of such section, or the value thereof;

8           “(3) 1321 (Witness Bribery), 1322 (Corrupting a Witness or 9 an Informant), or 1323 (Tampering with a Witness or an Inform-10 ant), if the property consists of anything of value given or 11 accepted in violation of such section;

12           “(4) 1351 (Bribery) or 1352 (Graft) if the property consists 13 of anything of value given or accepted in violation of such
14 section;

15           “(5) 1411 (Smuggling) if the property consists of an object
16 introduced, or being introduced, into the United States, or the 17 value thereof;

18           “(6) 1412 (Trafficking in Smuggled Property) if the property
19 consists of an object introduced, or being introduced, into the
20 United States, or the value thereof;

21           “(7) 1413 (Receiving Smuggled Property) if the property
22 consists of an object introduced, or being introduced, into the
23 United States, or the value thereof;

24           “(8) 1511 (Obstructing an Election), 1512 (Obstructing Regis-
25 tration), 1516 (Soliciting a Political Contribution as a Federal 26 Public Servant or in a Federal Building), or 1517 (Making a 27 Political Contribution as a Foreign National), if the property
28 consists of anything of value given or received in violation of 29 such section;

30           “(9) 1521 (Eavesdropping), 1522 (Trafficking in an Eaves-
31 dropping Device), or 1523 (Possessing an Eavesdropping De-
32 vice), if the property consists of an eavesdropping device;

33           “(10) 1715 (Possessing Burglar’s Tools) if the property con-
34 sists of an object that is designed for, or commonly used for, the 35 facilitation of a forcible entry in the course of an offense described 36 in section 1711, 1712, 1713, or 1714;

37           “(11) 1734 (Executing a Fraudulent Scheme) if the property
38 consists of fraudulently advertised property;

39           “(12) 1738 (Consumer Fraud) if the property consists of a
40 fraudulently advertised property;

1           “(13) 1741 (Counterfeiting) if the property consists of a
2 counterfeited written instrument;

3           “(14) 1742 (Forgery) if the property consists of a forged
4 written instrument;

5           “(15) 1745 (Trafficking in a Counterfeiting Implement) if the 6 property consists of a counterfeiting or forging implement;

7           “(16) 1751 (Commercial Bribery), 1752 (Labor Bribery), or 8 1753 (Sports Bribery), if the property consists of anything of 9 value given or accepted in violation of such section;

10           “(17) 1821 (Explosives Offenses) if the property consists of 11 an explosive;

12           “(18) 1822 (Firearms Offenses) if the property consists of a 13 firearm or ammunition;

14           “(19) 1823 (Using a Weapon in the Course of a Crime) if the 15 property consists of a firearm or a destructive device;

16           “(20) 1841 (Engaging in a Gambling Business) if the property
17 consists of other than real property, or

18           “(21) 1842 (Disseminating Obscene Material) if the property
19 consists of obscene material.

20           “(b) ORDER OF FORFEITURE.—If the court finds, by a preponderance
21 of the evidence, that the property that is the subject of the proceeding 22 had been used, intended for use, or possessed in the course of an of-23 fense set forth in subsection (a), and that the property consists of an 24 object set forth in subsection (a), the court shall order such property
25 to be forfeited to the United States.

26 § 4002. Protective Order

27           ““At any time after the initiation of a proceeding under section 4001,
28 the court may enter a restraining order or injunction, may require a 29 performance bond, and may take such other action as is in the interest
30 of justice, with respect to any property subject to civil forfeiture.

31 “§ 4003. Execution of Civil Forfeiture

32           ““The Attorney General, upon such terms and conditions as are in 33 the interest of justice, shall seize property that a defendant has been 34 ordered to forfeit to the United States, pursuant to section 4001, and 35 shall, pursuant to regulations issued by the Attorney General, sell, re-
36 tain, destroy, or make other appropriate disposition of such property,
37 making due provision for the rights of any innocent person. If any 38 property is not disposed of for value the rights to such property shall 39 not revert to the defendant.

1 “§ 4004. Applicability of Other Civil Forfeiture Provisions

2 “Except to the extent that they are inconsistent with the provisions
3 of this subchapter, all provisions of law relating to the remission or 4 mitigation of civil forfeitures of property for violation of the customs 5 laws, the compromise of claims with respect to such property, the 6 disposition of such property, the proceeds from the sale of such prop-
7 erty, and the award of compensation to informants with respect to 8 such property, shall apply to civil forfeitures incurred, or alleged 9 to have been incurred, under this section. The duties imposed upon 10 a customs officer or any other person with respect to the civil 11 seizure, forfeiture, and disposition of property under the customs laws 12 shall, with respect to property used, intended for use, or possessed in 13 violation of subsection (a), be performed by the Attorney General.

14 “§ 4005. Definitions for Subchapter A

15 As used in this subchapter :

16 “(a) ‘counterfeited written instrument’ has the meaning set
17 forth in section 1746(a) ;

18 “(b) ‘counterfeiting implement’ has the meaning set forth in
19 section 1746(b) ;

20 “(c) ‘eavesdropping device’ has the meaning set forth in section
21 1526(c) ;

22 “(d) ‘forged written instrument’ has the meaning set forth in 23 section 1746(c) ;

24 “(e) ‘forging implement’ has the meaning set forth in section
25 1746(d) ;

26 “(f) ‘introduce’ has the meaning set forth in section 1414
27 (a) (1) ;

28 “(g) ‘object’ has the meaning set forth in section 1414(a) (2) ;

29 “(h) ‘obscene material’ has the meaning set forth in section
30 1842(b) (4).

31 “Subchapter B.—Civil Restraint of Racketeering

“Sec.

“4011. Civil Action to Restrain Racketeering.

“4012. Civil Restraint Procedure.

“4013. Civil Investigative Demand.

32 “§ 4011. Civil Action to Restrain Racketeering

33 “(a) INITIATION OF ACTION.—The Attorney General may initiate a
34 civil proceeding to prevent and restrain offenses under section 1801
35 (Operating a Racketeering Syndicate), 1802 (Racketeering), or 1803
36 (Washing Racketeering Proceeds).

1     “(b) JURISDICTION.—The district courts of the United States have
2 jurisdiction to hear and determine proceedings initiated under this
3 section, and to prevent and restrain the offenses set forth in subsection
4 (a). In a proceeding initiated under this section, the court shall proceed
5 as soon as practicable to the hearing and determination thereof.

6     “(c) PROTECTIVE ORDERS.—At any time after the initiation of a pro-
7 ceeding under this section, the court may enter a restraining order or 8 injunction, may require a performance bond, and may take such other
9 action as is in the interest of justice.

10    “(d) ESTOPPEL.—A conviction of a defendant for an offense under 11 section 1801 (Operating a Racketeering Syndicate), 1802 (Racketeer-
12 ing), or 1803 (Washing Racketeering Proceeds) shall, as a final judg-
13 ment or decree rendered in favor of the United States, estop the de-
14 fendant from denying the essential allegations of the criminal offense
15 in any subsequent civil proceeding brought by the United States under 16 this section or by a person under section 4101.

17    “(e) FINAL ORDERS.—Upon the determination of a proceeding under 18 this section in favor of the United States, the court may issue appro-
19 priate orders, including an order:

20        “(1) directing a person to divest himself of an interest, direct 21 or indirect, in an enterprise;

22        “(2) imposing reasonable restrictions on the future activities or 23 investments of a person, including a prohibition against a person’s
24 engaging in an endeavor of the same kind as the enterprise en-
25 gaged in;

26        “(3) directing dissolution or reorganization of an enterprise,
27 making due provision for the rights of an innocent person.

28    “§ 4012. Civil Restraint Procedure

29    “(a) VENUE.—A proceeding under section 4011 or 4101 may be 30 initiated in a United States District Court for any district in which 31 the defendant in the proceeding resides, is found, has an agent, or 32 transacts affairs.

33    “(b) ISSUANCE OF PROCESS.—In a proceeding under section 4011 or 34 4101, if it is shown that the interest of justice requires that any other 35 party residing in another district be brought before the court, the 36 court may cause such party to be summoned, and process for that pur-
37 pose may be served in any judicial district of the United States by the 38 United States marshal in such district.

39    “(c) SERVICE OF PROCESS.—In a proceeding under section 4011 or 40 4101, a subpoena issued by the court to compel the attendance of a
41 witness may be served in any other judicial district, but no such sub-

1 poena shall be issued for service upon an individual who resides in 2 another district at a place more than one hundred miles from the 3 place at which the court is held without approval by a judge of such
 4 court upon a showing of good cause. All other process may be served
 5 on a person in any judicial district in which the person resides, is 6 found, has an agent, or transacts affairs.

7 “(d) EXPEDITED ACTION.—In a proceeding under section 4011 or
 8 4101, the Attorney General may file with the clerk of the court a
 9 certificate stating that in his opinion the case is of general public
 10 importance. A copy of the certificate shall be furnished immediately
 11 by the clerk to the chief judge, or in his absence to the presiding dis-
 12 trict judge, of the district in which the proceeding is pending. Upon 13 receipt of the copy, the judge shall designate immediately a judge of 14 that district to hear and determine the proceeding. The judge so
 15 designated shall assign the proceeding for hearing as soon as practi-16 cable, shall participate in the hearing and determination, and shall 17 otherwise cause the proceeding to be expedited.

18 “(e) OPEN OR CLOSED PROCEEDINGS.—A proceeding under section
 19 4011 may be open or closed to the public, at the discretion of the court,
 20 after consideration of the rights of the persons affected.

21 “§ 4013. Civil Investigative Demand

22 “(a) ISSUANCE OF DEMAND.—If the Attorney General has reason to 23 believe that a person may be in possession, custody, or control of any 24 documentary material that may be relevant to a civil proceeding under 25 section 4011, he may, prior to the initiation of such proceeding, issue
 26 in writing and cause to be served on the person a civil investigative 27 demand requiring the person to produce such material for examination.
 28 The civil investigative demand shall:

29 “(1) state the character of the conduct under investigation and 30 the provision of law applicable;

31 “(2) describe the class of documentary material to be produced
 32 with sufficient definiteness to enable the material to be fairly 33 identified;

34 “(3) state that the demand is returnable forthwith or prescribe
 35 a return date that provides a reasonably sufficient period of time
 36 within which the material can be assembled and made available
 37 for inspection and copying or reproduction; and

38 “(4) identify the document custodian to whom the material
 39 is to be made available.

40 “(b) LIMITATIONS.—No civil investigative demand may contain a
 41 requirement that would be held to be unreasonable if contained in a

1 subpoena duces tecum issued by a court of the United States in aid of a
2 grand jury investigation.

3 “(c) SERVICE.—Service of a civil investigative demand or a petition
4 filed under this section may be made upon a person by :

5 “(1) delivering an executed copy to the person ;

6 “(2) delivering an executed copy to the person’s agent or to 7 another person authorized by appointment or by law to receive
8 service of process on behalf of the person ;

9 “(3) delivering an executed copy to the principal office or place
10 of business of the person ; or

11 “(4) sending an executed copy by registered or certified mail
12 addressed to the person at his principal office or place of business.

13 A verified return by the person serving the demand or petition, setting
14 forth the manner of service, is prima facie evidence of service. A return 15 reflecting service by registered or certified mail shall be accompanied 16 by the return post office receipt of delivery of the demand.

17 “(d) CUSTODY.—

18 “(1) The Attorney General shall designate a person to serve
19 as document custodian, and such additional persons as are neces-
20 sary to serve as deputies to the document custodian.

21 “(2) A person upon whom a civil investigative demand has 22 been served shall, at his principal place of business and on the 23 return date specified in the demand, make the material available
24 for inspection and copying or reproduction by the custodian
25 designated. Upon written agreement between the person and the 26 custodian, or upon order of the court, the material may be made
27 available at such other place and at such later date as is agreed 28 upon or ordered, and the person may substitute a copy for an 29 original of all or any part of the material.

30 “(3) The custodian to whom the material is delivered shall take 31 physical possession and shall be responsible for the use made of 32 it and for its return. The custodian may prepare as many copies
33 of such documentary material as may be required for official use,
34 under regulations issued by the Attorney General. While in 35 the possession of the custodian, no material so produced shall be 36 available for examination by any person other than the Attorney
37 General, without the consent of the person who produced the 38 material. The material in the possession of the custodian shall be 39 made available for examination by the person who produced the 40 material, or his representative, under such reasonable terms and 41 conditions as the Attorney General shall prescribe.

1       “(4) The custodian shall, upon request, deliver the material in
2 his possession to an attorney for the government who has deter-
3 mined that the material is needed for his presentation in a pro-
4 ceeding before a court or grand jury. Upon the conclusion of the 5 proceeding, the attorney shall return to the custodian any mate-
6 rial that has not passed into the control of the court or grand
7 jury through its introduction into the record of the proceeding.

8       “(5) Upon the completion of:

9           “(A) the investigation for which material was produced
10       under this section; and

11           “(B) any proceeding arising from the investigation;
12 the custodian shall return, to the person who produced the ma-
13 terial, all the material that has not passed into the control of a 14 court or grand jury through its introduction into the record of 15 the proceeding. A copy made under this subsection need not be 16 returned.

17       “(6) If no proceeding has been instituted within a reasonable
18 time after completion of the examination and analysis of all evi-
19 dence assembled in the course of the investigation, the person who 20 produced the material shall be entitled, upon written demand
21 made upon the Attorney General, to the return of all the material
22 produced by him. A copy made under this subsection need not be
23 returned.

24       “(e) ENFORCEMENT.—

25           “(1) If a person fails to comply with a civil investigative de-
26 mand served upon him pursuant to the provisions of this section, 27 or if satisfactory copying or reproduction of any material cannot 28 be done and the person refuses to surrender the material, the 29 Attorney General may file and serve upon the person a petition
30 for an enforcement order. The petition shall be filed in a district
31 court of the United States for the judicial district in which the 32 person resides, is found, has an agent, or transacts his affairs.
33 If the person transacts business in more than one judicial district,
34 the petition shall be filed in the district in which the person main-35 tains his principal place of business, or in such other district in 36 which the person transacts business as may be agreed upon by 37 the parties to the petition.

38           “(2) Within twenty days after the service of a civil investiga-
39 tive demand upon a person, or at any time before the return date
40 specified in the demand, whichever period is less, the person may 41 file and serve upon the Attorney General a petition for an order

1        modifying or setting aside the demand. The time allowed for 2        compliance with the demand shall not run while the petition
 3        is pending in the court. The petition shall specify each ground
 4        upon which the petitioner relies in seeking relief. The petition
 5        may be based upon a failure of the demand to comply with the 6        provisions of this section or upon any constitutional or other
 7        legal right or privilege of the person.

8        “(3) At any time during which the document custodian has 9        custody or control of material delivered by a person in compli-
 10        ance with a civil investigative demand, the person may file and 11        serve upon the custodian a petition for an order requiring the 12        performance by the custodian of a duty imposed upon him by 13        this section.

14        “(f) JURISDICTION.—A district court of the United States in which 15        a petition is filed under this section has jurisdiction to hear and 16        determine the matter so presented, and to enter such order as may be 17        required to effectuate the provisions of this section.

18        “Subchapter C.—Injunctions

      “Sec.
 19        “4021. Injunctions against Fraud.

20        “§ 4021. Injunctions against Fraud

21        “Upon evidence satisfactory to the Attorney General that a person is 22        engaged in an act or practice that constitutes or could constitute a
 23        violation of section 1734 (Executing a Fraudulent Scheme), or 1738
 24        (Consumer Fraud), the Attorney General may bring an action in a 25        district court of the United States to enjoin such act or practice, and,
 26        upon a proper showing, a permanent or temporary injunction or re-
 27        straining order shall be granted by the court together with such other 28        equitable relief as may be appropriate.

29        “Chapter 41.—ANCILLARY PRIVATE CIVIL REMEDIES

      “Subchapter
 30        “A. Private Actions for Damages.
 31        “B. Actions for Compensation of Victims of Crime.

32        “Subchapter A.—Private Actions for Damage

      “Sec.
 33        “4101. Civil Action against a Racketeering Offender.
 34        “4102. Civil Action against a Fraud Offender.
 35        “4103. Civil Action against an Eavesdropping Offender.

36        “§ 4101. Civil Action against a Racketeering Offender

37        “A person injured in his business or property by reason of a viola-
 38        tion of section 1801 (Operating a Racketeering Syndicate), 1802

1 (Racketeering), or 1803 (Washing Racketeering Proceeds) shall have
 2 a civil cause of action against an offender in an appropriation district
 3 court of the United States and shall be entitled to recover ;

4 “(a) three times the damages sustained ; and

5 “(b) a reasonable attorney’s fee and other litigation costs rea-
 6 sonably incurred.

7 “§ 4102. Civil Action against a Fraud Offender

8 “A person injured in his business or property by reason of a viola-
 9 tion of section 1734 (Executing a Fraudulent Scheme) or 1738 (Con-
 10 sumer Fraud) shall have a civil cause of action against a convicted
 11 offender in an appropriate district court of the United States and shall 12 be entitled to recover :

13 “(a) three times the damages sustained ; and

14 “(b) a reasonable attorney’s fee and other litigation costs rea-
 15 sonably incurred.

16 “§ 4103. Civil Action against an Eavesdropping Offender

17 “(a) CIVIL ACTION.—A person whose private oral communication is 18 intercepted, disclosed, or used in violation of section 1521 (Eaves-19 dropping) shall have a civil cause of action against an offender in an 20 appropriate district court of the United States and shall be entitled to 21 recover :

22 “(1) actual damages, but not less than liquidated damages of 23 $1,000 or of $100 per day for each day of violation, whichever is 24 the greater ;

25 “(2) punitive damages ; and 26 “(3) a reasonable attorney’s fee and other litigation costs rea-

 27 sonably incurred.

28 “(b) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a civil 29 proceeding brought under this section or any other provision of law
 30 that the defendant acted in reasonable reliance on a court order or leg-
 31 islative authorization and believed in good faith that his conduct did
 32 not constitute an offense.

33 “Subchapter B.—Actions for Compensation of Victims of 34 Crime

“Sec.

“4111. Establishment of a Victim Compensation Fund.

“4112. Claim for Compensation.

“4113 Limitation on Compensation.

“4114. Subrogation.

“4115. Definitions for Subchapter B.

1   “§ 4111. Establishment of a Victim Compensation Fund

2       “There is established in the Treasury of the United States a revolving
3 fund, to be known as the Victim Compensation Fund, that shall 4 be the depository of:

5           “(a) all criminal fines paid in the courts of the United States;

6           “(b) all funds reimbursed pursuant to section 4112(e) or 4113
7 (e) (2);

8           “(c) all funds collected as a result of actions instituted pursu-
9 ant to section 4114; and

10          “(d) all contributions to such Fund from public or private 11 sources.

12   “§ 4112. Claim for Compensation

13       “(a) CLAIM.—The victim of an offense described in chapter 16 over 14 which federal jurisdiction exists, or of an attempt to commit such 15 an offense, or a surviving dependent of such a victim, may file a claim
16 with the United States Victim Compensation Board for compensation
17 in accordance with this subchapter.

18       “(b) HEARING ON CLAIM.—A hearing on a claim filed under this 19 subchapter shall be open to the public unless the Board determines 20 that, in the interest of justice, the hearing, or a portion of the hearing,
21 should not be open to the public.

22       “(c) SCOPE OF COMPENSATION.—The Board, subject to the provisions 23 of section 4113, shall order the payment of compensation to:

24           “(1) a victim who has suffered personal injury as a result of the
25 offense;

26           “(2) the estate of a victim who has suffered personal injury
27 as a result of the offense; or

28           “(3) a surviving dependent of a victim who has suffered death
29 as a result of the offense.

30       “(d) AMOUNT AND PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION.—The Board shall 31 determine the amount of, and shall order payment of compensation
32 for pecuniary loss to be awarded to a claimant. If the pecuniary loss
33 occasioned by loss of anticipated earnings or support continues for a 34 period of ninety days or more, payment for the loss may be in the form
35 of periodic payments during the period for which the loss continues
36 or during a period of ten years, whichever is less.

37       “(e) EMERGENCY COMPENSATION.—If, prior to taking final action
38 upon a claim, the Board determines that such claim is one with respect
39 to which compensation will probably be ordered to be paid, the Board
40 may order emergency compensation to be paid, not to exceed $1,500,
41 pending final action on the claim. The amount of any emergency

1 compensation ordered and paid shall be deducted from the amount
2 of any final order for compensation. If the amount of any emergency
3 compensation ordered and paid exceeds the amount of the final order
4 for compensation, or if no final order for compensation is made, the 5 claimant may be ordered to make reimbursement to the Fund of the 6 difference between such amounts.

7 “(f) RECONSIDERATION OF CLAIM.—The Board at any time may 8 reconsider a claim and modify or rescind an order for the payment of 9 compensation based upon a change in circumstances of the claimant.

10 “(g) BAR TO CLAIM.—No claim may be brought under this subchap-
11 ter if the injury or the death was caused by the operation of a vehicle,
12 unless the injury or death was intentionally inflicted through the use
13 of the vehicle, or unless the vehicle was an implement used in the com-
14 mission of an offense to which this subchapter applies.

15 “(h) BAR TO CLAIM PRECLUDED.—It is not a bar to a claim brought 16 under this subchapter that, by reason of immaturity, incompetency, or 17 otherwise, the person engaging in the conduct that caused the injury
18 or death could not be convicted for the offense.

19 “(i) OTHER RIGHTS UNAFFECTED.—Except as otherwise provided,
20 the availability or payment of compensation under this subchapter
21 does not affect the right of any person to recover damages from any 22 other person by a civil action for the injury or death.

23 “(j) EXECUTION OR ATTACHMENT BARRED.—An order for the pay-
24 ment of compensation under this subchapter is not subject to execution
25 or attachment.

26 “§ 4113. Limitation on Compensation

27 “(a) PREREQUISITES TO RECOVERY OF COMPENSATION.—An order for 28 the payment of compensation under this subchapter shall not be made
29 unless:

30 “(1) the offense giving rise to the claim was reported to a law
31 enforcement officer within seventy-two hours after its occurrence,
32 unless the Board finds that the failure to report within such time
33 was justified by good cause;

34 “(2) the claim is filed within one year after the date of the 35 offense giving rise to the claim, unless the Board finds that the 36 failure to file the claim within such time was justified by good 37 cause; and

38 “(3) the claimant has suffered a pecuniary loss exceeding $100
39 or an amount equal to a week’s earnings or support, whichever
40 is less, as a proximate cause of the offense giving rise to the claim.

1       “(b) MAXIMUM AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION.—An order for the pay-
2 ment of compensation for pecuniary loss under this subchapter may
3 not exceed a total of $50,000, including lump-sum payments and pe-
4 riodic payments, for each incident involving an offense against a 5 victim.

6       “(c) RESPONSIBILITY OF VICTIM OR CLAIMANT FOR THE OFFENSE.—
7 The Board, in determining whether to order payment of compensation
8 and the amount of compensation to be ordered, shall consider the 9 behavior of the victim or claimant with regard to the circumstances
10 of the offense giving rise to the claim, shall determine whether the 11 victim or claimant bears any share of responsibility for the offense 12 because of provocation or otherwise, and shall:

13           “(1) reduce the amount of compensation to the claimant in 14 accordance with its assessment of the degree of such responsibility
15 attributable to the victim or claimant; or

16           “(2) deny compensation if the behavior of the victim or claim-
17 ant was a substantial contributing factor to the offense giving rise
18 to the claim.

19       “(d) CONTINUING DUTY OF VICTIM OR CLAIMANT TO COOPERATE.—
20 The Board, upon finding that a victim or claimant has not substan-
21 tially cooperated with all government agencies involved in the investi-
22 gation or prosecution of the offense that gave rise to the claim, may 23 deny, rescind, or reduce the amount of any order for the payment of 24 compensation under this subchapter.

25       “(e) EFFECT OF COMPENSATION FROM OTHER SOURCES.—In the event
26 that a claimant:

27           “(1) recovers damages from any other source based upon an 28 offense giving rise to a claim under this section and subsequently 29 files a claim under this section based upon such offense, in deter-
30 mining the amount of compensation to be awarded under this 31 section such damages shall be assumed to compensate for losses
32 other than pecuniary losses compensable under this subchapter
33 unless the damages clearly compensate for pecuniary losses; or

34           “(2) receives compensation under this section and subsequently 35 recovers damages from any other source based upon the offense
36 that gave rise to compensation under this section, the claimant
37 shall be ordered to make reimbursement to the Fund for the com-
38 pensation previously paid to the same extent that compensation
39 would have been reduced under paragraph (1) had recovery pre-
40 ceded compensation.

1    “§ 4114. Subrogation

2        “The Attorney General may, within three years after the entry of an
3    order for the payment of compensation under this subchapter, in-
4    stitute, against an offender convicted by a federal, state, or local court
5    of an offense giving rise to a claim under this subchapter, an action for 6    the recovery of all or part of such compensation in the United States
7    District Court for any judicial district in which such person resides
8    or is present. A conviction of a defendant by a federal court of an 9    offense involving the act giving rise to a claim under this subsection 10   shall estop the defendant from denying the essential allegations of the 11   criminal offense in any subsequent civil proceeding brought by the 12   United States under this section. Such court shall have jurisdiction to 13   hear, determine, and render judgment in any such action. Any amounts 14   recovered under this subsection shall be forwarded to the Treasury of 15   the United States for credit to the Victim Compensation Fund.

16   “§ 4115. Definitions for Subchapter B

17        “As used in this subchapter :

18           “(a) ‘dependent’ means :

19                “(1) a spouse ;

20                “(2) an individual who is a dependent within the meaning
21                of section 152 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 22                U.S.C. 152) ; or

23                “(3) a posthumous child ;

24           “(b) ‘pecuniary loss’ means :

25                “(1) in the case of personal injury :

26                    “(A) all appropriate and reasonable expenses neces-
27                    sarily incurred for ambulance, hospital, surgical, nurs-
28                    ing, dental, prosthetic, and other medical and related 29                    professional services relating to physical or psychiatric 30                    care, including non-medical care and treatment rendered
31                    in accordance with a recognized method of healing ;

32                    “(B) all appropriate and reasonable expenses neces-
33                    sarily incurred for physical and occupational therapy and 34                    rehabilitation ; and

35                    “(C) actual loss of past earnings and anticipated loss 36                    of future earnings because of a disability resulting from 37                    the personal injury, at a rate not to exceed $150 per week, 38                    if the loss continues for a period of ninety days or more ;
39                    and

- 1                   “(2) in the case of death:
- 2                   “(A) all appropriate and reasonable expenses neces-
- 3                   sarily incurred for funeral and burial expenses; and
- 4                   “(B) loss of support to a dependent of a victim, not
- 5                   otherwise compensated for as a pecuniary loss for per-
- 6                   sonal injury, for such period of time as the dependency
- 7                   would have existed but for the death of the victim, at a
- 8                   rate not to exceed a total of $150 per week for all depend-
- 9                   ents;
- 10                  “(c) ‘personal injury’ includes bodily injury, pregnancy, mental
- 11                  distress, and nervous shock; and
- 12                  “(d) ‘offense described in chapter 16’ does not include an offense
- 13                  over which there is federal jurisdiction only because the offense
- 14                  affects, delays, or obstructs interstate or foreign commerce or the
- 15                  movement of an article or commodity in interstate or foreign com-
- 16                  merce, or because the offense occurred during the commission of
- 17                  an offense over which there is federal jurisdiction only for that
- 18                  reason, unless an indictment or information charging such an
- 19                  offense is filed in a court of the United States.”

20                                   TITLE II—MISCELLANEOUS

21                                                           AMENDMENTS

22                   PART A—AMENDMENTS RELATING TO COM-

23                   MERCE AND TRADE, TITLE 15, UNITED

24                   STATES CODE

25                   AMENDMENTS RELATING TO IMPORTATION, MANUFACTURE, DISTRIBUTION,

26                   AND STORAGE OF EXPLOSIVE MATERIALS

27                  SEC. 201. (a) Title XI of the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970

28                  (84 Stat. 952) is amended:

- 29                   (1) by redesignating sections 1103 to 1107 as sections 1110 to
- 30                   1114, respectively; and
- 31                   (2) by deleting section 1102.

32                  (b) Sections 841 through 848 of title 18, United States Code, as

33                  they existed on the day before the effective date of this Act, are hereby

34                  reenacted as sections 1102 through 1109 of title XI of the Organized

35                  Crime Control Act of 1970 (84 Stat. 952) and amended as follows:

- 36                   (1) Section 1102 (formerly 18 U.S.C. 841) is amended:
- 37                   (A) by deleting “Except for the purposes of subsection
- 38                   (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), and (j) of section 844 of this

1 title, 'explosives' " in subsection (d) and inserting in lieu
2 thereof " 'Explosives' ";

3 (B) by inserting a comma after the word "compound" in 4 the first sentence of subsection (d) ;

5 (C) by deleting the word "chapter" wherever it appears in 6 subsections (d), (j), and (m) and inserting in lieu thereof
7 "title"; and

8 (D) by deleting the last sentence in subsection (d).

9 (2) Section 1103 (formerly 18 U.S.C. 842) is amended :

10 (A) by deleting the word "chapter" wherever it appears
11 in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the word "title";

12 (B) by deleting "ship, transport, or cause to be trans-
13 ported" in subsection (a) (3) (A) and inserting in lieu there-
14 of "ship or transport";

15 (C) by deleting the words "marihuana (as defined in sec-
16 tion 4761 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) or any de-17 pressant or stimulant drug (as defined in section 201(v) of 18 the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act) or narcotic drug 19 (as defined in section 4721(a) of the Internal Revenue Code 20 of 1954)" in subsection (d) (5) and inserting in lieu thereof
21 "or addicted to marihuana or any depressant or stimulant
22 substance or narcotic drug as those terms are defined in sec-
23 tion 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802)";

24 (D) by deleting "willfully" in subsection (f) and inserting
25 in lieu thereof "knowingly";

26 (E) by deleting "847" in subsection (g) and inserting in 27 lieu thereof "1108"; and

28 (F) by deleting "(as defined in section 4761 of the Internal 29 Revenue Code of 1954) or any depressant or stimulant drug 30 (as defined in section 201(v) of the Federal Food, Drug, and 31 Cosmetic Act) or narcotic drug (as defined in section 4731(a)
32 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954)" in subsection (i) (3)
33 and inserting in lieu thereof "or any depressant or stimulant
34 substance or narcotic drug as those terms are defined in section
35 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802)".

36 (3) Section 1104 (formerly 18 U.S.C. 843) is amended :

37 (A) by deleting "provisions of this chapter" in subsection
38 (b) and inserting in lieu thereof "provisions of this title";

1 (B) by deleting "842(d) of this chapter" in subsection (b)
2 (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "1103(d) of this title";

3 (C) by deleting "willfully" in subsection (b)(2) and in-
4 serting in lieu thereof "knowingly";

5 (D) by deleting "chapter" in subsection (b)(2) and insert-
6 ing in lieu thereof "title";

7 (E) by deleting the word "chapter" wherever it appears in 8 subsection (d) and inserting in lieu thereof "title";

9 (F) by inserting after the word "title" the second time it
10 appears in subsection (d) the words "or, if the offense in-
11 volved an explosive as defined in section 1821(b) of title 18,
12 United States Code, any provision of section 1601 (murder),
13 1602 (manslaughter), 1611 (maiming), 1612 (aggravated
14 battery), 1613 (battery), 1701 (arson), 1702 (aggravated
15 property destruction), 1821 (explosives offenses), 1823 (using 16 a weapon in the course of a crime), or 1001 (criminal at-
17 tempt) of title 18, United States Code,";

18 (G) by deleting "842(d)" in subsection (d) and inserting
19 in lieu thereof "1103(d) of this title"; and

20 (H) by deleting the word "chapter" wherever it appears in 21 subsection (f) and inserting in lieu thereof the word "title".

22 (4) Section 1105 (formerly 18 U.S.C. 844) is amended to read
23 as follows:

24 "SEC. 1105. (a) Any person who violates section 1103 of this title
25 commits an unlawful act that is an offense described in section 1812 of 26 title 18, United States Code.

27 "(b) Except as provided in section 4001 of title 18, United States
28 Code, any explosive materials involved or used or intended to be used
29 in any violation of the provisions of this title or any rule or regula-30 tion promulgated thereunder or any violation of any criminal law of 31 the United States shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture, and all
32 provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 relating to the seizure,
33 forfeiture, and disposition of firearms, as defined in section 5845(a)
34 of that Code, shall, so far as applicable, extend to seizures and for-
35 feitures under the provisions of this title."

36 (5) Section 1106 (formerly 18 U.S.C. 845) is amended:

37 (A) by deleting "Except in the case of subsections (d), (e), 38 (f), (g), (h), and (i) of section 844 of this title, this" in sub-
39 section (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "This";

40 (B) by deleting "921(a)(16) of title 18 of the United 41 States Code," in subsection (a)(5) and inserting in lieu

1 by reenacted as sections 102 through 109 of title I of the Gun Control
2 Act of 1968 (82 Stat. 1213) and amended as follows:

3 (1) Section 102 (formerly 18 U.S.C. 921) is amended by 4 deleting the word "chapter" wherever it appears and inserting
5 in lieu thereof the word "title".

6 (2) Section 103 (formerly 18 U.S.C. 922) is amended:

7 (A) by deleting "chapter" in subsection (a) (2) and in-
8 serting in lieu thereof "title";

9 (B) by deleting "1715 of this title" in subsection (a) (3)
10 and inserting in lieu thereof "6017 of title 39, United States
11 Code,";

12 (C) by deleting "the effective date of this chapter" in 13 subsection (a) (3) (C) and inserting in lieu thereof "Decem-
14 ber 16, 1968";

15 (D) by deleting "chapter" in subsection (a) (6) and in-
16 serting in lieu thereof "title";

17 (E) by deleting "922(c)" in subsection (b) (3) (A) and 18 inserting in lieu thereof "103(c)";

19 (F) by adding after the words "registered mail" in sub-
20 section (b) (3) (C) (ii) the words "or certified mail (return
21 receipt requested)";

22 (G) by deleting "923 of this chapter" in subsection (b) (5)
23 and inserting in lieu thereof "104 of this title";

24 (H) by deleting the word "chapter" the first time it appears
25 in subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "title";

26 (I) by inserting after the words "eighteen years or more of 27 age;" in subsection (c) (1) the words "that I am not under 28 indictment for, nor has an information been filed against me
29 for, nor have I been convicted in any court of, a crime punish-
30 able by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year; that I
31 am not a fugitive from justice; that I am not an unlawful 32 user of or addicted to marijuana or any depressant or stimu-
33 lant substance or narcotic drug; that I have not been adjudi-
34 cated as a mental defective nor have I been committed to any 35 mental institution;"

36 (J) by deleting "chapter 44 of title 18, United States Code"
37 in subsection (c) (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "title I of 38 the Gun Control Act of 1968, as amended";

39 (K) by deleting "923(g)" in the last sentence of subsection
40 (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "104(g)";

1 (L) by deleting the words “drug (as defined in section
2 201(v) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act) or nar-
3 cotic drug (as defined in section 4731(a) of the Internal Reve-
4 nue Code of 1954)” each time they appear in subsections (d),
5 (g), and (h) and inserting in lieu thereof “substance or nar-
6 cotic drug as those terms are defined in section 102 of the 7 Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802)”.

8 (M) by deleting the words “925 of this chapter” wherever 9 they appear in the last sentence of subsection (d) and insert-
10 ing in lieu thereof the words “106 of this title”;

11 (N) by deleting “chapter” in subsection (e) and inserting
12 in lieu thereof “title”;

13 (O) by deleting “chapter” in subsection (f) and inserting
14 in lieu thereof “title”;

15 (P) by deleting subsections (i) and (j) and redesignating
16 sections (k), (l), and (m) as subsections (i), (j), and (k)
17 respectively;

18 (Q) by deleting “925(d) of this chapter” in subsection (j)
19 (formerly subsection (l)) and inserting in lieu thereof “106
20 (d) of this title”;

21 (R) by deleting “provisions of this chapter” in subsection
22 (j) (formerly subsection (l)) and inserting in lieu thereof
23 “provisions of this title”; and

24 (S) by deleting “923 of this chapter” in subsection (k)
25 (formerly subsection (m)) and inserting in lieu thereof “104
26 of this title”.

27 (3) Section 104 (formerly 18 U.S.C. 923) is amended:

28 (A) by deleting “chapter” in subsection (c) and inserting
29 in lieu thereof “title”;

30 (B) by deleting “922(g) and (h) of this chapter” in sub-
31 section (d)(1)(B) and inserting in lieu thereof “103(g) or 32 (h) of this title”;

33 (C) by deleting “willfully” wherever it appears in sub-
34 sections (d)(1)(C) and (d)(1)(D) and inserting in lieu
35 thereof “knowingly”;

36 (D) by deleting “chapter” in subsection (d)(1)(C) and 37 inserting in lieu thereof “title”;

38 (E) by deleting the word “chapter” wherever it appears
39 in subsection (d)(1)(E) and inserting in lieu thereof
40 “title”;

1 (F) by deleting the word "chapter" wherever it appears in
2 subsection (e) and inserting in lieu thereof "title"; and

3 (G) by deleting the word "chapter" wherever it appears
4 in subsection (g) and inserting in lieu thereof "title".

5 (4) Section 105 (formerly 18 U.S.C. 924 is amended to read as 6 follows:

7 "SEC. 105. (a) A person who violates this title commits an unlawful 8 act that is an offense described in section 1822 of title 18, United 9 States Code.

10 (b) Except as provided in section 4001 of title 18, United States
11 Code, any firearm or ammunition involved in or used or intended to 12 be used in, any violation of the provisions of this title or any rule or 13 regulation promulgated thereunder, or any violation of any other 14 criminal law of the United States Code, shall be subject to seizure and 15 forfeiture and all provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954
16 relating to the seizure, forfeiture, and disposition of firearms, as 17 defined in section 5845(a) of that Code, shall, so far as applicable,
18 extend to seizures and forfeitures under the provisions of this title."

19 (5) Section 106 (formerly 18 U.S.C. 925) is amended:

20 (A) by deleting the word "chapter" wherever it appears
21 and inserting in lieu thereof "title"; and

22 (B) by inserting after the word "title" in the first sentence
23 of subsection (c) the words "or of section 1822 of title 18,
24 United States Code,".

25 (6) Section 107 (formerly 18 U.S.C. 926) is amended by deleting
26 the word "chapter" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu there-
27 of "title".

28 (7) Section 108 (formerly 18 U.S.C. 927) is amended by delet-
29 ing "chapter" and inserting in lieu thereof "title".

30 (8) Section 109 (formerly 18 U.S.C. 928 is amended by deleting
31 the word "chapter" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu there-
32 of "title".

33 (c) Section 110 (formerly section 103) is amended by deleting the 34 words "the amendment made by this".

35 (d) Section 111 (formerly section 104) is amended by deleting "sec-
36 tion 1715 of title 18" in subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof
37 "section 6017 of title 39".

1 PART B—AMENDMENT RELATING TO FEDERAL
2 RULES OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE

3 SEC. 211. A new Rule 25.1 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Pro-
4 cedure is added after rule 25 to read as follows:

5 “Rule 25.1.—Burdens of Proof

6 “(a) Proof of Guilt—

7 “(1) PROOF OF OFFENSES.—The Government has the burden of 8 proving each element of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt.

9 “(2) PROOF OF DEFENSES.—If a defendant raises a defense at 10 trial and there is sufficient evidence of the defense to support a
11 reasonable belief as to its existence, the Government has the bur-
12 den of proving the nonexistence of the defense beyond a reason-
13 able doubt.

14 “(3) PROOF OF AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES.—If a defendant raises
15 an affirmative defense at trial, the defendant has the burden of 16 proving the defense by a preponderance of the evidence.

17 “(4) PROOF OF GRADING.—The lowest grade of an offense shall 18 be applicable unless the Government proves the elements of a
19 higher grade beyond a reasonable doubt.

20 “(5) PRESUMPTIONS.—If a statute provides that a given fact
21 gives rise to a presumption, the statute has the following
22 consequences:

23 “(A) TRIAL BY JURY.—In a case tried before a jury:

24 “(i) if there is sufficient evidence of the fact that gives 25 rise to the presumption to support a reasonable belief as 26 to the fact’s existence beyond a reasonable doubt, the 27 court shall submit the issue to the jury unless the evi-
28 dence as a whole clearly precludes a reasonable juror
29 from finding the presumed fact beyond a reasonable
30 doubt; and

31 “(ii) in submitting to the jury the issue of the exist-
32 ence of the presumed fact, the court shall, upon request
33 of the Government, charge that, although the evidence as 34 a whole must establish the presumed fact beyond a rea-
35 sonable doubt, the jury may arrive at that judgment on 36 the basis of the presumption alone, since the law regards

1           the fact giving rise to the presumption as strong evidence
2           of the fact presumed.

3           “(B) TRIAL BY COURT.—In a case tried before the court
4           sitting without a jury, although the evidence as a whole must 5           establish the presumed fact beyond a reasonable doubt, the 6           court may arrive at that judgment on the basis of the pre-
7           sumption alone.

8           “(6) PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE.—If a statute provides that a 9           given fact constitutes prima facie evidence, the statute has the 10          following consequences:

11          “(A) TRIAL BY JURY.—In a case before a jury:

12           “(i) if there is sufficient evidence of the fact that con-
13           stitutes prima facie evidence to support a reasonable be-
14           lief as to the fact’s existence beyond a reasonable doubt, 15           the court shall submit the issue to the jury unless the 16           evidence as a whole clearly precludes a reasonable juror
17           from finding the inferred fact beyond a reasonable doubt ;
18           and

19           “(ii) in submitting to the jury the issue of the inferred
20           fact concening which the given fact is prima facie evi-
21           dence, the court, upon the request of the Government,
22           shall charge that, although the evidence as a whole must 23           establish the inferred fact beyond a reasonable doubt,
24           the jury may consider that the given fact is ordinarily a
25           circumstance from which the existence of the inferred
26           fact may be drawn.

27          “(B) TRIAL BY COURT.—In a case before the court sitting
28          without a jury, although the evidence as a whole must estab-
29          lish the inferred fact beyond a reasonable doubt, the court
30          may consider that the given fact is ordinarily a circumstance
31          from which the existence of the inferred fact may be drawn.

32          “(b) Proof of Jurisdiction.

33           “(1) PROOF.—The Government has the burden of proving the 34           existence of Federal jurisdiction over the offense, as set forth in 35           18 U.S.C. 201, beyond a reasonable doubt.

36           “(2) PRESENTATION TO COURT DURING TRIAL.—The existence
37           of Federal jurisdiction over the offense is an issue to be decided by 38           the court. The evidence relating to jurisdiction may be presented

1 by the Government in open court in the course of its presentation
 2 of the evidence relating to guilt. Any evidence relating to juris-
 3 diction that is not so presented in open court may be presented to 4 the court, out of the presence of the jury, during the course of the 5 presentation of the Government's evidence relating to guilt or 6 after the close thereof. At the close of the presentation of the 7 Government's evidence relating to guilt and of any subsequent 8 presentation of evidence relating to jurisdiction, the issue shall be 9 determined by the court.

10 “(3) PRESENTATION TO COURT BEFORE TRIAL.—Upon a timely
 11 pretrial motion by the attorney for the Government, the issue of 12 the existence of Federal jurisdiction shall be heard by the court
 13 before trial and, notwithstanding the provisions of rule 12(e), 14 shall be determined before trial and may not be deferred for 15 determination at a later time.”.

16 PART C—AMENDMENTS RELATING TO FOREIGN
 17 RELATIONS AND INTERCOURSE, TITLE 22,
 18 UNITED STATES CODE

19 SEC. 221. Section 1116(b) (4) of title 18, United States Code, as it
 20 existed on the day before the effective date of this Act, is reenacted and 21 redesignated as section 2 of the Act for the Prevention and Punish-22 ment of Crimes Against Internationally Protected Persons in lieu of 23 the existing text of such section.

24 PART D—AMENDMENT RELATING TO INDIANS,
 25 TITLE 25, UNITED STATES CODE

26 SEC. 231. Jurisdiction Over Offenses Committed in the Indian
 27 Country.—

28 (a) As used in this section, the term “Indian country” includes:

29 (1) all land within the limits of any Indian reservation under 30 the jurisdiction of the United States, notwithstanding the issuance 31 of any patent, and including any right-of-way running through a
 32 reservation;

33 (2) all dependent Indian communities within the borders of 34 the United States, whether within the original or subsequently 35 acquired territory thereof, and whether within or without a State;
 36 and
 37

1           (3) all Indian allotments, the Indian titles to which have not
2           been extinguished, including any right-of-way running through
3           such an allotment.

4           (b) Except to the extent specifically set forth in this Act, nothing in 5           this Act is intended to diminish, expand, or otherwise alter in any
6           manner or to any extent State or tribal jurisdiction over offenses
7           within Indian country, as such jurisdiction existed on the date imme-
8           diately preceding the effective date of this Act.

9           (c) Except as otherwise specifically provided, the general laws of 10          the United States as to the punishment of offenses committed within 11          the special jurisdiction of the United States shall extend to the Indian 12          country.

13          (d)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, the 14          general laws of the United States as to the punishment of offenses
15          within the special jurisdiction of the United States shall not extend 16          to offenses committed by one Indian against the person or property
17          of another Indian or to any Indian committing any offense in the 18          Indian country who has been punished by the local law of the tribe
19          or to any case where, by treaty stipulations, the exclusive jurisdiction
20          over such offenses is or may be secured to the Indian tribes respec-
21          tively.

22          (2) Any Indian who commits against the person or property of an
23          Indian or other person any of the following felony offenses as defined
24          in title 18, United States Code, namely, Murder (section 1601), Man-
25          slaughter (section 1602), Negligent Homicide (section 1603), Maim-
26          ing (section 1611), Aggravated Battery (section 1612), Terrorizing
27          (section 1615), Reckless Endangerment (section 1617), Kidnapping
28          (section 1621), Aggravated Criminal Restraint (section 1622), Rape
29          (section 1641), Sexual Assault (section 1642), Sexual Abuse of a
30          Minor (section 1643), Arson (section 1701), Aggravated Property De-
31          struction (section 1702), Burglary (section 1711), Criminal Entry
32          (section 1712), Robbery (section 1721), Extortion (section 1722),
33          Theft (section 1731), Trafficking in Stolen Property (section 1732),
34          Receiving Stolen Property (section 1733), or incest shall be subject to 35          the same law and penalties as all other persons committing any of the 36          above offenses within the special jurisdiction of the United States. As 37          used in this section, the offense of incest shall be defined and punished
38          in accordance with such laws of the State in which the offense was com-
39          mitted as are in force at the time of such offense. In the event of a

1 criminal prosecution of an Indian for one or more of the foregoing
 2 offenses, this subsection shall not be construed to preclude a finding of 3 guilty of a lesser included offense of such offense or offenses.

4 (e) The provisions of subsection (d) of this section shall not be
 5 applicable within the areas of Indian country listed in subsection (f).

6 (f) (1) Each of the States listed in the following table shall have
 7 jurisdiction over offenses committed by or against Indians in the areas
 8 of Indian country listed opposite the name of the State to the same
 9 extent that such State has jurisdiction over offenses committed else-
 10 where within the State, and the criminal laws of such State shall have 11 the same force and effect within such Indian country as they have 12 elsewhere within the State:

State of:	Indian country affected
Alaska-----	All Indian country within the State, except that on Annette Islands the Metlakatla Indian community may exercise jurisdiction over offenses committed by Indians in the same manner in which such jurisdiction may be exercised by Indian tribes in Indian country over which State jurisdiction has not been extended.
California-----	All Indian country within the State.
Minnesota-----	All Indian country within the State, except the Red Lake Reservation.
Nebraska-----	All Indian country within the State.
Oregon-----	All Indian country within the State, except the Warm Springs Reservation.
Wisconsin-----	All Indian country within the State.

13 (2) Nothing in this section shall authorize the alienation, encum-
 14 brance, or taxation of any real or personal property, including water
 15 rights, belonging to any Indian or any Indian tribe, band, or com-
 16 munity that is held in trust by the United States or is subject to a
 17 restriction against alienation imposed by the United States; or shall 18 authorize regulation of the use of such property in a manner incon-
 19 sistent with any Federal treaty, agreement, or statute or within any 20 regulation made pursuant thereto; or shall deprive any Indian or any 21 Indian tribe, band, or community of any right, privilege, or immunity 22 afforded under Federal treaty, agreement, or statute with respect to 23 hunting, trapping, or fishing or the control, licensing, or regulation 24 thereof.

25 (3) The areas listed in subsection (f) (1) are excluded from the spe-
 26 cial jurisdiction of the United States described in section 203 of 27 title 18.

28 (g) Jurisdiction is conferred on the State of Kansas over offenses
 29 committed by or against Indians on Indian reservations, including
 30 trust or restricted allotments, within the State of Kansas, to the same

1 extent as its courts have jurisdiction over offenses committed elsewhere
2 within the State in accordance with the laws of the State.

3 This subsection shall not deprive the courts of the United States
4 of jurisdiction over offenses defined by the laws of the United States
5 committed by or against Indians on Indian reservations.

6 (h) The State of New York shall have jurisdiction over offenses
7 committed by or against Indians on Indian reservations within the 8 State of New York to the same extent as the courts of the State have 9 jurisdiction over offenses committed elsewhere within the State as 10 defined by the laws of the State, except that nothing contained in this 11 paragraph shall be construed to deprive any Indian tribe, band, or 12 community, or members thereof, of hunting and fishing rights as 13 guaranteed them by agreement, treaty, or custom, nor require them
14 to obtain State fish and game licenses for the exercise of such rights.

15 (i) Ninety days following the adoption of a resolution to that effect
16 by the Indian tribe occupying the particular Indian country or part 17 thereof affected by such grant or assumption, the United States shall 18 reacquire such measure of the criminal jurisdiction granted to or as-
19 sumed by a State pursuant to the provisions of the Act of August 15,
20 1953 (67 Stat. 588), section 231(f), (g), or (h) of the Criminal Code
21 Reform Act of 1977, or the Act of April 11, 1968 (82 Stat. 73), as 22 shall have been determined in the resolution of such tribe.

23 The resolution authorized by this subsection shall be considered
24 adopted only where the enrolled Indians within the affected area of 25 such Indian country accept the resolution by a majority vote of the 26 adult Indians voting at a special election held for that purpose. The 27 Secretary of the Interior shall call such special election under such 28 rules and regulations as he may prescribe when requested to do so by 29 the tribal council or other governing body or by 20 per centum of such 30 enrolled adults.

31 (j) No retrocession of jurisdiction pursuant to subsection (i) of 32 this section shall deprive any court of a State of jurisdiction to hear,
33 determine, render judgment, or impose sentence in any criminal action 34 instituted against any person for any offense committed before the 35 effective date of such retrocession, if the offense charged in such action
36 was cognizable under any law of such State at the time of commission
37 of such offense. For the purpose of any such criminal action, such 38 retrocession shall take effect on the day following the date of final 39 determination of such action.

1 PART E—AMENDMENTS RELATING TO JUDICI-
 2 ARY AND JUDICIAL PROCEDURE, TITLE 28,
 3 UNITED STATES CODE

4 SEC. 241. A new chapter 58 of title 28, United States Code, is added
 5 after chapter 57, to read as follows:

6 “Chapter 58.—UNITED STATES SENTENCING
 7 COMMISSION

“SEC.

“991. United States Sentencing Commission, establishment and purpose.

“992. Terms of office; compensation.

“993. Designation of Chairman; powers and duties of Chairman.

“994. Duties of the Commission.

“995. Powers of the Commission.

“996. Director and staff.

“997. Annual report.

“998. Definitions..

8 “§ 991. United States Sentencing Commission; establishment
 9 and purpose

10 “(a) There is hereby established as an independent Commission in 11 the judicial branch a United States Sentencing Commission which 12 shall consist of nine members designated by the Judicial Conference
 13 of the United States. A member of the Commission may be removed 14 by the Judicial Conference only for cause.

15 “(b) The purposes of the United States Sentencing Commission 16 are to:

17 “(1) establish sentencing policies and practices for the federal 18 criminal justice system that:

19 “(A) assure the meeting of the purposes of sentencing as 20 set forth in section 101(b) of title 18, United States Code;

21 “(B) provide certainty and fairness in meeting the pur-
 22 poses of sentencing, avoiding unwarranted disparity while
 23 maintaining sufficient flexibility to permit individualized sen-
 24 tences when warranted by mitigating or aggravating factors
 25 not taken into account in the establishment of general sen-
 26 tencing practices;

27 “(C) reflect, to the extent practicable, advancement in 28 knowledge of human behavior as it relates to the criminal jus-
 29 tice process; and

30 “(2) develop means of measuring the degree to which the sen-
 31 tencing, penal, and correctional practices are effective in meeting
 32 the purposes of sentencing as set forth in section 101(b) of title
 33 18, United States Code.

1 “§ 992. Terms of office; compensation

2 “(a) Commissioners shall be designated for six-year terms, except
3 that the terms of the first Commissioners shall be staggered so that:

4 “(1) three members are designated for a two-year term;

5 “(2) three members are designated for a four-year term; and

6 “(3) three members are designated for a full six-year term.

7 “(b) No Commissioner may serve more than two full terms. A Com-
8 missioner designated to fill a vacancy that occurs before the expiration 9 of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be designated 10 only for the remainder of such term.

11 “(c) A member of the Commission who is an employee of the Federal 12 Government shall serve without compensation in addition to that re-
13 ceived for his services as an employee of the Federal Government, but 14 shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses
15 incurred in the performance of duties vested in the Commission. A
16 member of the Commission who is not a Federal employee shall receive 17 the highest daily rate now or hereafter prescribed for grade 18 of the 18 General Schedule pay rates (5 U.S.C. 5332) when engaged in the actual 19 performance of duties vested in the Commission, plus reimbursement
20 for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred in the 21 performance of such duties.

22 “§ 993. Designation of Chairman; powers and duties of Chairman

23 “(a) The Commission shall from time to time designate by majority
24 vote one of its members to serve as Chairman.

25 “(b) The Chairman shall:

26 “(1) preside at meetings of the Commission; and 27 “(2) direct:

28 “(A) the preparation of requests for appropriations for the 29 Commission; and

30 “(B) the use of funds made available to the Commission.

31 § 994. Duties of Commission

32 “(a) The Commission, by vote of a majority of the members, and 33 pursuant to its rules and regulations and, consistent with all pertinent 34 provisions of this title and title 18, shall promulgate and distribute to 35 all courts of the United States and to the United States Probation
36 Service:

37 “(1) guidelines, as described in subsections (b) through (e),
38 for use of a sentencing court in determining whether to impose a
39 sentence to probation, a fine, a term of imprisonment, or a term
40 of parole ineligibility and in determining the appropriate amount
41 of a fine or the appropriate length of a term of probation, term

1 of imprisonment, or term of parole ineligibility to be imposed in 2 a criminal case; and

3 “(2) general policy statements regarding application of the 4 guidelines or any other aspect of sentencing that in the view of 5 the Commission would further the purposes set forth in section
6 101(b) of title 18, United States Code.

7 “(b) The guidelines promulgated pursuant to subsection (a)(1)
8 shall, for each category of offense involving each category of defend-
9 ant, provide a suggested sentencing range that is consistent with all
10 pertinent provisions of title 18, United States Code.

11 “(c) In establishing categories of offenses for use in the guidelines,
12 the Commission shall consider, but shall not limit its consideration to:

13 “(1) the grade of the offense;

14 “(2) the circumstances under which the offense was committed
15 which mitigate or aggravate the seriousness of the offense;

16 “(3) the nature and degree of the harm caused by the offense,
17 including whether it involved property, irreplaceable property, a
18 person, a number of persons, or a breach of public trust;

19 “(4) the community view of the gravity of the offense;

20 “(5) the public concern generated by the offense;

21 “(6) the deterrent effect a particular sentence may have on the 22 commission of the offense by others; and

23 “(7) the current incidence of the offense in the community and 24 in the nation as a whole.

25 “(d) In establishing categories of defendants for use in the guide-
26 lines, the Commission shall consider, but shall not limit its considera-
27 tion to, a defendant’s:

28 “(1) age;

29 “(2) education;

30 “(3) vocational skills;

31 “(4) mental and emotional condition to the extent that such 32 condition mitigates the defendant’s culpability or to the extent
33 that such condition is otherwise plainly relevant;

34 “(5) physical condition, including drug dependence;

35 “(6) previous employment record;

36 “(7) family ties and responsibilities;

37 “(8) community ties;

38 “(9) role in the offense;

39 “(10) criminal history, including prior criminal activity not
40 resulting in convictions, prior convictions, and prior sentences;

41 and

1           “(11) degree of dependence upon criminal activity for a liveli-
2           hood.

3           “(e) A substantial sentence of imprisonment shall be provided in 4           the guidelines for most cases in which the defendant has a history of 5           several prior convictions for offenses committed on different occasions,
6           in which the defendant committed the offense as part of a pattern
7           of criminal conduct from which he derived a substantial portion of 8           his income, or in which the defendant committed the offense in further-
9           ance of a conspiracy with three or more persons engaging in a pattern
10          of racketeering activity in which the defendant participated in a 11          managerial or supervisory capacity.

12          “(f) The Commission, by vote of a majority of the members, and 13          pursuant to its rules and regulations and consistent with all pertinent
14          provisions of this title and title 18, United States Code, shall promul-
15          gate and distribute to the United States Parole Commission :

16                 “(1) guidelines consistent with those promulgated pursuant to 17                 subsection (a)(1) of this section for use of the United States
18                 Parole Commission in determining whether to parole a prisoner
19                 and in determining the length of the term and conditions of parole;
20                 and

21                 “(2) general policy statements regarding application of the 22                 guidelines or any other aspect of parole that in the view of the 23                 Commission would further the purposes set forth in section 101
24                 (b) of title 18, United States Code.

25          “(g) Guidelines promulgated pursuant to subsection (a)(1) or (f)
26          (1) shall be reported to the Congress by the Commission at or after 27          the beginning of a regular session of Congress but not later than the 28          first day of May, and shall take effect one hundred eighty days after 29          the Commission reports them, unless within that time one House of 30          Congress votes to disapprove them.

31          “§ 995. Powers of Commission

32                 “(a) The Commission, by vote of a majority of the members present 33                 and voting, shall have the power to :

34                         “(1) establish general policies and promulgate such rules and 35                         regulations for the Commission as are necessary to carry out the 36                         purposes of this chapter;

37                         “(2) appoint and fix the salary and duties of the Staff Director
38                         of the Sentencing Commission, who shall serve at the discretion
39                         of the Commission;

40                         “(3) deny, revise, or ratify any request for regular, supple-
41                         mental, or deficiency appropriations prior to any submission of

1 such request to the Office of Management and Budget by the Chair-
2 man;

3 “(4) procure for the Commission temporary and intermittent
4 services to the same extent as is authorized by section 3109(b) of 5 title 5, United States Code;

6 “(5) utilize, with their consent, the services, equipment, per-
7 sonnel, information, and facilities of other Federal, State, local,
8 and private agencies and instrumentalities with or without re-
9 imbursement therefor;

10 “(6) without regard to section 3648 of the Revised Statutes of 11 the United States (31 U.S.C. 529), enter into and perform such 12 contracts, leases, cooperative agreements, and other transactions
13 as may be necessary in the conduct of the functions of the Com-
14 mission, with any public agency, or with any person, firm, asso-
15 ciation, corporation, educational institution, or nonprofit organi-
16 zation;

17 “(7) accept voluntary and uncompensated services, notwith-
18 standing the provisions of section 3679 of the Revised Statutes of 19 the United States (31 U.S.C. 655(b));

20 “(8) request such information, data, and reports from any Fed-
21 eral agency or judicial officer as the Commission may from time to 22 time require and as may be produced consistent with other law;

23 “(9) arrange with the head of any other Federal agency for 24 the performance by such agency of any function of the Commis-
25 sion, with or without reimbursement;

26 “(10) establish a research and development program within the 27 Commission for the purpose of:

28 “(A) serving as a clearinghouse and information center
29 for the collection, preparation, and dissemination of infor-
30 mation on Federal sentencing practices;

31 “(B) assisting and serving in a consulting capacity to Fed-
32 eral courts, departments, and agencies in the development,
33 maintenance, and coordination of sound sentencing practices;

34 “(11) collect systematically the data obtained from studies, re-
35 search, and the empirical experience of public and private agen-
36 cies concerning the sentencing process;

37 “(12) publish data concerning the sentencing processes;

38 “(13) collect systematically and disseminate information con-
39 cerning sentences actually imposed, and the relationship of such 40 sentences to the factors set forth in section 2003(a) of title 18,
41 United States Code;

1           “(14) collect systematically and disseminate information re-
2           garding effectiveness of sentences imposed;

3           “(15) devise and conduct, in various geographical locations,
4           seminars and workshops providing continuing studies for per-
5           sons engaged in the sentencing field;

6           “(16) devise and conduct a training program of short-term
7           instruction in sentencing techniques for judicial and probation
8           personnel and other persons connected with the sentencing
9           process;

10          “(17) make recommendations to Congress concerning modifi-
11          cation or enactment of statutes relating to sentencing, penal, and 12          correctional matters that the Commission finds to be necessary
13          and advisable to carry out an effective, humane, and rational sen-
14          tencing policy; and

15          “(18) perform such other functions as are required to permit
16          federal courts to meet their responsibilities under section 2003(a)
17          of title 18, United States Code, and to permit others involved in 18          the federal criminal justice system to meet their related 19          responsibilities.

20          “(b) The Commission shall have such other powers and duties 21          and shall perform such other functions as may be necessary to carry 22          out the purposes of this chapter, and may delegate to any Com-
23          missioner or designated person such powers as may be appropriate
24          other than the power to establish general policies, guidelines, rules,
25          and factors under subsection (a) and (b)(1).

26          “(c) Upon the request of the Commission, each federal agency is 27          authorized and directed to make its services, equipment, personnel,
28          facilities, and information available to the greatest practicable extent
29          to the Commission in the execution of its functions.

30          “(d) Regular meetings of the Commission shall be held not less 31          frequently than quarterly to establish and consider revisions to its 32          general guidelines, policies, and rules. Special meetings shall be held 33          at the call of the Chairman, acting at his own discretion or pursuant 34          to the petition of any five members. A simple majority of the member-35          ship shall constitute a quorum for the conduct of business.

36          “(e) Except as otherwise provided by law, the Commission shall 37          maintain and make available for public inspection a record of the 38          final vote of each member of any action taken by it.

39          “§ 996. Director and Staff

40          “(a) The Staff Director shall supervise the activities of persons
41          employed by the Commission and perform other duties assigned to 42          him by the Commission.

1     “(b) The Staff Director shall appoint such officers and employees
2 as are necessary in the execution of the functions of the Commission,
3 subject to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing ap-
4 pointments in the competitive service and the provisions of chapter 51
5 and subchapter II of such title, relating to classification and General
6 Schedule pay rates.

7     “§ 997. Annual Report

8     “The Commission shall report annually to the United States Judicial 9 Conference, the Congress, and the President of the United States on 10 the activities of the Commission.

11    “§ 998. Definitions

12    “As used in this chapter :

13       “(a) ‘Commission’ means the United States Sentencing Com-
14 mission;

15       “(b) ‘Commissioner’ means a member of the United States Sen-
16 tencing Commission;

17       “(c) ‘guidelines’ means the guidelines promulgated by the Com-18 mission pursuant to section 994(a) or (f) of this title; and

19       “(d) ‘rules and regulations’ means rules and regulations pro-
20 mulgated by the Commission pursuant to section 995 of this title.”.

21    SEC. 242. The analysis at the beginning of title 28, United States
22 Code, is amended by adding after the item relating to chapter 57
23 the following new item :

“58. United States Sentencing Commission..... 991”.

24    SEC. 243. The analysis at the beginning of Part III of title 28,
25 United States Code, is amended by adding after the item relating to 26 chapter 57 the following new item :

“58. United States Sentencing Commission..... 991”.

27    PART F—AMENDMENTS RELATING TO WAR
28    AND NATIONAL DEFENSE, TITLE 50, UNITED
29    STATES CODE

30    SEC. 251. Section 793 of title 18, United States Code, as it existed
31 on the day before the effective date of this Act, is reenacted and re-
32 designated as section 18 of the Subversive Activities Control Act of 33 1950 in lieu of the existing text of such section.

34    SEC. 252. (a) Sections 794(a), 794(b), and 794(c) of title 18, United 35 States Code, as they existed on the day before the effective date of this 36 Act, are reenacted and redesignated as subsections (a), (b), and (c), 37 respectively, of section 201 of the Espionage and Sabotage Act of 38 1954 in lieu of the existing text of such section.

39    (b) Section 798 of title 18, United States Code, as enacted by sec-
40 tion 4 of the Act of June 30, 1953 (67 Stat. 133), and as it existed on

1 the day before the effective date of this Act, is reenacted and redesign-
2 nated as subsection (d) of section 201 of the Espionage and Sabotage
3 Act of 1954.

4 SEC. 253. Section 798 of title 18, United States Code, as enacted by 5 section 24(a) of the Act of October 31, 1951 (65 Stat. 719), and as it
6 existed on the day before the effective date of this Act, is reenacted
7 and redesignated as section 24 of the Act of October 31, 1951 in lieu 8 of the existing text of such section.

9 SEC. 254. The provisions of chapter 3 of title 18, United States Code
10 (Culpable States of Mind), are not applicable to the amendments to 11 title 50 set forth in section 241, 242, and 243 of this Act.

12 TITLE III—GENERAL PROVISIONS

13 SEC. 260. SEVERABILITY.—If a provision of this Act is held invalid,
14 the validity of the other provisions of the Act shall not be affected. If 15 an application of a provision of this Act to a person or circumstance 16 is held invalid, the validity of the application of the provisions to 17 another person or circumstance shall not be affected.

18 SEC. 261. TRANSITION.—(a) The Bureau of Prisons created under 19 chapter 303 of title 18, United States Code, as that chapter existed
20 before the effective date of this Act, is continued as the Bureau of 21 Prisons established under section 571 of title 28, United States Code.
22 The Director of the Bureau of Prisons in office on the effective date
23 of this Act shall continue to hold office under section 571(b) of title
24 28, United States Code.

25 (b) The Federal Prison Industries created under section 4121 of 26 title 18, United States Code, as that section existed prior to the effec-
27 tive date of this Act, is continued as the Federal Prison Industries
28 created under section 581 of title 28, United States Code. A member
29 of the board of directors shall continue to hold office under the provi-
30 sions of section 581 of title 28, United States Code.

31 SEC. 262. AUTHORIZATION.—There are hereby authorized to be ap-
32 propriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions
33 and purposes of this Act.

34 SEC. 263. EFFECTIVE DATE.—This Act shall take effect on the first 35 day of the first calendar month beginning twenty-four months after 36 the date of enactment of this Act, except that chapter 58 of title 28,
37 United States Code, shall take effect on the date of enactment of this 38 Act.

S. 31

---

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JANUARY 10, 1977

Mr. DOMENICI (for himself, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. STEVENS, and Mr. THURMOND) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

---

A BILL

To amend the Gun Control Act of 1968 to provide for separate offense and consecutive sentencing in felonies involving the use of a firearm.

1       Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-
2       tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,
3       That section 924 (c) of the Gun Control Act of 1968 (Pub-
4       lic Law 90-618; 18 U.S.C. 924 (c) ) read as follows:

5       “(c) Whoever—

6               “(1) uses a firearm to commit any felony for which 7       he may be prosecuted in a court of the United States; or

8               “(2) carries a firearm during the commission of 9       any felony for which he may be prosecuted in a court

2

1 of the United States, shall, in addition to the punish-
2 ment provided for the commission of such felony, be
3 sentenced for the additional offense defined in this sub-
4 section to a term of imprisonment for not less than one
5 year nor more than ten years. In the case of his second
6 or subsequent conviction under this subsection, such 7 person shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment for 8 not less than two nor more than twenty-five years.

9 "The execution or imposition of any term of imprison-
10 ment imposed under this subsection may not be suspended,
11 and probation may not be granted. Any term or imprison-
12 ment imposed under this subsection may not be imposed to 13 run concurrently with any term or imprisonment imposed
14 for the commission of such felony."

S. 45

---

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JANUARY 10, 1977

Mr. McCLURE (for himself and Mr. GOLDWATER) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

---

A BILL

To amend chapter 44 of title 18 of the United States Code (respecting firearms) to penalize the use of firearms in the commission of any crime of violence and to increase the penalties in certain related existing provisions.

1 Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-
2 tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

3 That section 924 (c) of title 18 of the United States Code is
4 amended to read as follows:

5 “(c) (1) Whoever—

6 “(A) uses any firearm to commit a crime of vio-
7 lence with respect to which the district courts of the 8 United States have original and exclusive jurisdiction
9 under section 3231 of this title, or carries a firearm
10 during the commission of any such crime, or

2

1           “(B) uses any firearm transported in interstate or
2 foreign commerce or affecting such commerce to commit,
3 or carries such a firearm unlawfully during the commis-
4 sion of any crime of violence, and is convicted of such
5 crime in a court of any State,

6 shall, in addition to the punishment provided for the com-
7 mission of such crime, be sentenced to a term of imprison-
8 ment for not less than five years, nor more than ten years.
9 In the case of his second or subsequent conviction under this
10 subsection, such person shall be sentenced to imprisonment
11 for any term of years not less than ten, or to life imprison-
12 ment. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the court
13 shall not suspend the sentence in the case of any person con-
14 victed under this subsection, or give him a probationary
15 sentence, nor shall the term of imprisonment imposed under 16 this subsection run concurrently with any term of imprison-
17 ment imposed for the commission of such crime of violence.

18           “(2) As used in this subsection, ‘crime of violence’
19 means any of the following crimes, or an attempt to commit
20 any of such crimes: Murder, manslaughter, rape, mayhem,
21 maliciously disfiguring another, abduction, kidnaping, bur-
22 glary, robbery, housebreaking, larceny, any assault with in-
23 tent to kill, or assault with intent to commit any offense
24 punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year.”.

S. 181

---

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JANUARY 11 (legislative day, JANUARY 10), 1977

Mr. KENNEDY, (for himself, Mr. ABOUREZK, Mr. BAYH, Mr. HASKELL, Mr. HUMPHREY, McCLELLAN, Mr. MATHIAS, Mr. MATSUNAGA, and Mr. STEVENSON) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

---

A BILL

To amend title 18, United States Code, so as to establish certain guidelines for sentencing, establish a United States Commission on Sentencing, and for other purposes.

1 Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-

2 tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

3 That (a) chapter 227 of title 18, United States Code, is

4 amended by adding at the end thereof the following new

5 section:

6 “§ 3579. Imposition of a sentence of imprisonment

7 “(a) The court, in determining whether to impose a

8 term of imprisonment within a range authorized under this

9 title and, if a term of imprisonment is to be imposed, in

1 determining the length of that term within such range, shall
2 consider—

3 “(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense
4 and the history and characteristics of the defendant;

5 “(2) the need for the sentence imposed (A) to
6 reflect the seriousness of the offense and promote respect
7 for law by providing just punishment for the offense,
8 (B) to afford adequate deterrence to criminal conduct,
9 and (C) to protect the public from further crimes of the 10 defendant;

11 “(3) whether other less restrictive sanctions have 12 been applied to the defendant frequently or recently; and

13 “(4) any sentencing guidelines established by the 14 United States Commission on Sentencing.

15 “(b) In every case in which the court imposes a term
16 of imprisonment within the guidelines for sentencing promul-
17 gated by the Commission, the court shall make as part of the 18 record, and disclose in open court to the defendant at the 19 time of sentencing, a brief statement of the reason or reasons
20 for the sentence imposed. A court may impose a term of 21 imprisonment outside of the guidelines for sentencing pro-
22 mulgated by the Commission if it makes as a part of the 23 record, and discloses to the defendant in open court at the 24 time of sentencing, a statement of the specific reason or rea-
25 sons for the particular sentence of imprisonment imposed.

1 Failure to so comply shall be grounds for vacating the sen-
2 tence and resentencing the defendant.”.

3 (b) The analysis of such chapter is amended by adding
4 at the end thereof the following:

“3579. Imposition of a sentence of imprisonment.”.

5 SEC. 2. (a) Chapter 229 of title 18, United States Code,
6 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new
7 section:

8 “§ 3621. Imposition of a sentence of fine

9 “The court in determining whether to impose a fine
10 within a range authorized by this title, and, if a fine is to be 11 imposed, in determining the amount of the fine within such 12 range, the time of payment, and the method of payment,
13 shall consider—

14 “(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense
15 and the history and characteristics of the defendant;

16 “(2) the need for the sentence imposed (A) to 17 reflect the seriousness of the offense and promote re-
18 spect for law by providing just punishment for the 19 offense, (B) to afford adequate deterrence to criminal
20 conduct, and (C) to protect the public from further
21 crimes of the defendant;

22 “(3) whether other less restrictive sanctions have
23 been applied to the defendant frequently or recently;
24 and

1           “(4) any sentencing guidelines established by the
2       United States Commission on Sentencing.”.

3       (b) The analysis of such chapter is amended by adding
4 at the end thereof the following:

“3621. Imposition of a sentence of fine.”.

5       SEC. 3. (a) Chapter 231 of title 18, United States Code,
6 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new
7 section:

8       “§ 3657. Imposition of a sentence of probation

9       “‘The court, in determining whether to impose a term
10 of probation in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, 11 and, if a term of probation is to be imposed, in determining 12 the length of such term and the conditions of probation in 13 accordance with such provisions, shall consider—

14           “(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense
15       and the history and characteristics of the defendant;

16           “(2) the need for the sentence imposed (A) to
17       reflect the seriousness of the offense and promote respect
18       for law by providing just punishment for the offense,
19       (B) to afford adequate deterrence to criminal conduct,
20       and (C) to protect the public from further crimes of the 21       defendant;

22           “(3) whether other less restrictive sanctions have
23       been applied to the defendant frequently or recently;
24       and

1           “(4) any sentencing guidelines established by the
2       United States Commission on Sentencing.”.

3       (b) The analysis of such chapter is amended by adding
4       at the end thereof the following:

“3657. Imposition of a sentence of probation.”.

5       SEC. 4. (a) Chapter 235 of title 18, United States Code,
6       is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new
7       section:

8       “§ 3742. Review of sentence

9       “(a) Subject to the provisions of section 3576 of this 10      title in any case in which a sentence is imposed for an of-
11      fense, except a case in which the sentence is equal to or less 12      than that recommended or not opposed by the attorney for 13      the Government pursuant to a plan agreement under rule
14      11 (e) (1) (B) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure
15      or a case in which the sentence is equal to that provided in an 16      accepted plea agreement pursuant to rule 11 (e) (1) (C) of 17      the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, an appeal to a
18      United States court of appeals for review of such sentence
19      may be filed by—

20           “(1) the defendant, within the time specified for 21      the filing of a notice of appeal, if the sentence includes a
22      fine or term of imprisonment more than the maximum
23      established by the guidelines for sentencing promulgated

1 by the United States Commission on Sentencing or a
2 maximum established by this title; or

3 “(2) the United States within the time specified
4 for the defendant’s filing of notice of appeal, if the 5 sentence includes a fine or term of imprisonment less
6 than the minimum established by the guidelines for 7 sentencing promulgated by the United States Commis-
8 sion on Sentencing or a minimum established by this
9 title.

10 “(b) Upon an appeal being filed pursuant to subsec-
11 tion (A) of this section, the clerk of the court that imposed
12 the sentence shall certify to the court of appeals that portion
13 of the record in the case that includes the presentence report,
14 the information submitted during the sentence proceeding,
15 and findings of the court upon which the sentence was based,
16 the statement of reasons for the sentence imposed by the 17 sentencing court and any additional portions of the record
18 designated by the court of appeals.

19 “(c) Upon review of the record, the court of appeals
20 shall determine whether the sentence imposed is not within 21 the guidelines for sentencing promulgated by the United 22 States Commission on Sentencing (hereinafter referred to as 23 the ‘Commission’) and is unreasonable having regard for—

24 “(A) the reasonableness of the district court’s

1 application of the guidelines established by the Com-
2 mission;

3 “(B) the opportunity for the district court to ob-
4 serve the defendant; and

5 “(C) any findings upon which the sentence was 6 based.

7 “(d) If the court of appeals determines that—

8 “(1) the guidelines for sentencing promulgated by
9 the Commission were properly applied by the district
10 court, the court of appeals shall affirm the sentence if 11 the sentence imposed outside the guidelines for sen-
12 tencing is not unreasonable; or

13 “(2) the guidelines for sentencing promulgated by 14 the Commission were clearly erroneously applied by the 15 district court, the court of appeals shall set aside the 16 sentence and remand the case for further sentencing
17 proceedings; or

18 “(3) the guidelines for sentencing promulgated by
19 the Commission were properly applied by the district
20 court, but that the sentence imposed outside the guide-
21 lines for sentencing was otherwise unreasonable, the 22 court of appeals—

23 “(A) in the case of an appeal of a sentence by 24 the defendant, may—

1                   “(i) remand the case of imposition of a
2                   lesser sentence to be determined by the district
3                   court; or

4                   “(ii) remand the case for further sentenc-
5                   ing proceedings; or

6                   “(iii) impose a lesser sentence;

7                   “(B) in the case of an appeal of a sentence
8                   submitted by the United States, may—

9                   “(i) remand the case for imposition of a
10                  greater sentence to be determined by the dis-
11                  trict court; or

12                  “(ii) remand the case for further sentenc-
13                  ing proceedings; or

14                  “(iii) impose a greater sentence.”.

15                  (b) The analysis of such chapter is amended by adding
16                  at the end thereof the following:

“3742. Review of sentence.”.

17                  SEC. 5. Part II of title 18, United States Code, is 18                  amended by adding at the end thereof the following new
19                  chapter:

20                  “Chapter 238—UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON 21                  SENTENCING

“Sec.

“3801. Definitions.

“3802. United States Commission on Sentencing; structure and composition.

“3803. Powers and duties of Commission.

“3804. Powers and duties of Chairman.

“3805. Annual report.

“3806. Congressional review.

1 “§ 3801. Definitions

2 “As used in this chapter—

3 “(a) ‘Commission’ means the United States Com-
4 mission on Sentencing;

5 “(b) ‘Commissioner’ means any member of the 6 United States Commission on Sentencing;

7 “(c) ‘rules and regulations’ means rules and regu-
8 lations promulgated by the Commission pursuant to sec-
9 tion 3803 of this title.

10 “§ 3802. United States Commission on Sentencing; struc-
11 ture and composition

12 “There is hereby established as an independent Com-
13 mission in the judicial branch, a United States Commission
14 on Sentencing which shall be comprised of not less than five
15 members appointed by the United States Judicial Con-
16 ference. The Commission shall from time to time designate
17 by majority vote one of its members to serve as Chairman
18 and shall delegate to him the necessary administrative duties
19 and responsibilities. The term of office of a commissioner
20 shall be three years, except that the term of a person ap-
21 pointed as a commissioner to fill a vacancy shall expire at 22 the end of three years from the effective date of this statute.
23 A member of the Commission who is an employee of the 24 Federal Government shall serve without compensation in

1 addition to that received for his services as an employee of
2 the Federal Government, but shall be reimbursed for travel,
3 subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred in the 4 performance of duties vested in the Commission. A member
5 of the Commission who is not a Federal employee shall re-
6 ceive the highest daily rate now or hereafter prescribed for 7 grade 18 of the General Schedule pay rates (5 U.S.C. 5332)
8 when engaged in the actual performance of duties vested in 9 the Commission, plus reimbursement for travel, subsistence,
10 and other necessary expenses incurred in the performance
11 of such duties.

12 “§ 3803. Powers and duties of Commission

13 “(a) The Commission, by majority vote, and pursuant 14 to rules and regulations, shall promulgate and distribute to 15 all Federal courts suggested sentencing ranges for specific 16 offenses and guidelines shall be considered by the sentencing
17 court in determining the appropriate sentence for a defendant
18 and general policy statements regarding application of the 19 guidelines or any other aspect of sentencing that in the view
20 of the Commission would further the purposes of this title.

21 “(b) In promulgating suggested sentencing ranges for 22 specific offenses and guidelines for sentencing the Commission
23 shall consider, but shall not limit its consideration to—

24 “(1) the grade of the offense;

25 “(2) the circumstances under which the offense was

1 committed which mitigate or aggravate the seriousness
2 of the offense;

3 “(3) the nature and degree of the harm caused
4 by the offense, including whether it involved property,
5 irreplaceable property, a person, a number of persons, or 6 a breach of public trust;

7 “(4) the community view of the gravity of the
8 offense;

9 “(5) the public concern generated by the offense;

10 “(6) the deterrent effect a particular sentence may 11 have on the commission of the offense by others; and

12 “(7) the current incidence of the offense in the 13 community and in the Nation as a whole.

14 The Commission shall also consider, but shall not limit its 15 consideration to a defendant's age, mental and emotional
16 condition, physical condition, particularly drug dependence,
17 role in the offense, criminal history, including prior criminal
18 activity not resulting in prior convictions and prior sentences,
19 and degree of dependence upon criminal activity for a 20 livelihood.”

21 “(c) The Commission, by majority vote, and pursuant 22 to rules and regulations, shall have the power to—

23 “(1) establish general policies and promulgate such 24 rules and regulations for the Commission as are neces-
25 sary to carry out the purposes of this chapter;

1           “(2) deny, revise, or ratify any request for regular,
2           supplemental, or deficiency appropriations prior to any
3           submission of such request to the Office of Management
4           and Budget by the Chairman;

5           “(3) procure for the Commission temporary and 6           intermittent services to the same extent as is authorized
7           by section 3109 (b) of title 5, United States Code;

8           “(4) utilize, with their consent, the services, equip-
9           ment, personnel, information, and facilities of other Fed-
10          eral, State, local, and private agencies and instrumentali-
11          ties with or without reimbursement therefor;

12          “(5) without regard to section 3648 of the Revised
13          Statutes of the United States (31 U.S.C. 529), enter
14          into and perform such contracts, leases, cooperative
15          agreements, and other transactions as may be necessary
16          in the conduct of the functions of the Commission, with 17          any public agency, or with any person, firm, association,
18          corporation, educational institution, or nonprofit organi-
19          zation;

20          “(6) accept voluntary and uncompensated services,
21          notwithstanding the provisions of section 3679 of the 22          Revised Statutes of the United States (31 U.S.C. 655
23          (b) );

24          “(7) request such information, data, and reports
25          from any Federal agency or judicial officer as the Com-

1 mission may from time to time require and as may be
2 produced consistent with other law;

3 “(8) arrange with the head of any other Federal
4 agency for the performance by such agency of any func-
5 tion of the Commission, with or without reimbursement;

6 “(9) issue subpoenas requiring the attendance and
7 testimony of witnesses and the production of any evi-
8 dence that relates directly to a matter with respect to 9 which the Commission or any Commissioner or agent
10 of the Commission is empowered to make a determina-
11 tion under this chapter; such attendance of witnesses
12 and the production of evidence may be required from 13 any place within the United States at any designated
14 place of hearings within the United States;

15 “(10) establish a research and development pro-
16 gram within the Commission for the purpose of—

17 “(A) serving as a clearinghouse and informa-
18 tion center for the collection, preparation, and dis-
19 semination of information on Federal sentencing
20 practices;

21 “(B) assisting and serving in a consulting ca-
22 pacity to Federal courts, departments, and agencies
23 in the development, maintenance, and coordination
24 of sound sentencing practices;

25 “(11) collect systematically the data obtained from

1 studies, research, and the empirical experience of public
2 and private agencies concerning the sentencing pro-
3 cesses;

4 “(12) publish data concerning the sentencing pro-
5 cesses;

6 “(13) collect systematically and disseminate in-
7 formation concerning sentences actually imposed, and 8 the relationship of such sentences to the criteria set forth
9 in sections 3579, 3621, and 3657 of this title;

10 “(14) collect systematically and disseminate infor-
11 mation regarding effectiveness of sentences imposed;

12 “(15) devise and conduct, in various geographical 13 locations, seminars and workshops providing continuing
14 studies for persons engaged in the sentencing field;

15 “(16) devise and conduct a training program of 16 short-term instruction in sentencing techniques for judi-
17 cial and probation personnel and other persons connected
18 with the sentencing process;

19 “(17) make recommendations to Congress con-
20 cerning modification or enactment of sentencing and 21 correctional statutes which the Commission finds to be
22 necessary and advisable to carry out an effective, hu-
23 mane, and rational sentencing policy;

24 “(18) appoint and fix the salary and duties of the

1 staff director of the Commission, who shall serve at the
2 discretion of the Commission.

3 “(d) The Commission shall have such other powers and 4 duties and shall perform such other functions as may be 5 necessary to carry out the purposes of this chapter or as 6 may be provided under any other provisions of law and may 7 delegate to any commissioner or designated person such 8 powers as may be appropriate other than the power to 9 establish general policies, guidelines, rules, and factors under 10 subsection (b) (1).

11 “(e) Upon the request of the Commission, each Fed-
12 eral agency is authorized and directed to make its services,
13 equipment, personnel, facilities, and information available
14 to the greatest practicable extent to the Commission in the 15 execution of its functions.

16 “(f) The Commission shall meet not less frequently
17 than quarterly to establish its general policies and rules.

18 “(g) Except as otherwise provided by law, the Com-
19 mission shall maintain and make available for public inspec-
20 tion a record of the final vote of each member on any action
21 taken by it.

22 “§ 3804. Powers and duties of Chairman

23 “The Chairman shall—

24 “(a) preside at meetings of the Commission;

1           “(b) assign duties among the regional offices, if
2           any, in order to assure efficient administration;

3           “(c) direct (1) the preparation of requests for 4           appropriations for the Commission, and (2) the use of 5           funds made available to the Commission;

6           “(d) appoint and fix the basic pay of personnel of 7           the Commission.

8       “§ 3805. Annual report

9           “The Commission shall report annually to each House
10          of Congress, the United States Judicial Conference, and the 11          President of the United States on the activities of the Com-
12          mission.”.

13       “§ 3806. Congressional review

14          “Such sentencing ranges for specific offense and guide-
15          lines for sentencing as are promulgated and distributed by the 16          Commission pursuant to and in accordance with the provi-
17          sions of this title shall not take effect until they have been 18          reported to Congress by the Commission at or after the 19          beginning of a regular session thereof but not later than the 20          first day of May, and until the expiration of one hundred 21          and eighty days after they have been thus reported. All
22          laws in conflict with such sentencing ranges and guidelines 23          for sentencing shall be of no further force or effect after such 24          sentencing ranges and guidelines have taken effect.

1           (1) results in the imposition of penalties that are
2 frequently either unduly lenient or unduly severe;

3           (2) permits unwarranted, and unreviewable, dis-
4 parity in sentences;

5           (3) operates without consistent and understandable
6 rationale or standards; and

7           (4) undermines public confidence in the equity,
8 impartiality, and effectiveness of Federal criminal justice.

9       (b) It is the purpose of this Act—

10           (1) to establish a method of promulgating stand-
11 ards for criminal sentences that will help deter crime
12 and punish convicted criminal offenders fairly and 13 equally;

14           (2) to establish in such standards the principle that 15 the severity of a sentence should be commensurate with 16 the gravity of the offense;

17           (3) to reduce the disparity between sentences im-
18 posed upon persons convicted of the same crime by 19 requiring that such sentencing standards shall consist of 20 presumptive sentences of varying severity for criminal
21 offenses of varying degrees of gravity, with limited
22 variations allowed for special aggravating and mitigating 23 circumstances; and

24           (4) to allow each convicted offender sentenced to 25 imprisonment to know at the time that such sentence

1 is imposed the actual duration of his confinement, but
2 also to maintain appropriate incentives for good institu-
3 tional behavior.

4 DEFINITIONS

5 SEC. 3. For purposes of this Act, the term—

6 (1) “Parole Commission” means the United States
7 Parole Commission in the Department of Justice estab-
8 lished in section 4202 of title 18, United States Code;

9 (2) “Commission” means the Federal Sentencing
10 Commission established in section 4;

11 (3) “criminal offense” means a category, or any 12 subcategory thereof, established under section 6, of 13 crimes punishable under any statute of the United
14 States;

15 (4) “convicted offender” means any person who is 16 convicted of or pleads guilty to a crime punishable under 17 any statute of the United States;

18 (5) “imprisonment” means the requirement that 19 any convicted offender live in any prison, jail, or other
20 institution of confinement;

21 (6) “presumptive sentence” means a definite and
22 specific penalty, established by the Commission, as pro-
23 vided in section 6, for a criminal offense of a particular
24 gradation of gravity;

1           (7) "rule" means any rule, regulation, or schedule
2 proposed or adopted by the Commission;

3           (8) "sentencing judge" means any judge of the 4 United States, as defined in section 451 of title 28,
5 United States Code, presiding at a trial in which any
6 defendant is convicted of or pleads guilty to any criminal
7 offense for which a presumptive sentence is in effect; and

8           (9) "sentencing standards" means the schedules,
9 rules, and regulations for sentencing convicted offenders
10 which the Commission establishes in accordance with 11 the provisions of this Act.

12                               FEDERAL SENTENCING COMMISSION

13       SEC. 4. (a) (1) There is established a commission to 14 be known as the Federal Sentencing Commission. The Com-
15 mission shall be composed of five members appointed by the 16 President of the United States, by and with the consent of 17 the Senate.

18       (2) Members of the Commission shall serve for terms
19 of five years, except that of the members first appointed—

20           (A) one shall be appointed for one year;

21           (B) one shall be appointed for two years;

22           (C) one shall be appointed for three years;

23           (D) one shall be appointed for four years; and

24           (E) one shall be appointed for five years.

25       The member appointed under subparagraph (E) shall be or

5

1 have been a member of the Parole Commission or its pred-
2 ecessor, the United States Board of Parole.

3 (3) Any person appointed to fill a vacancy occurring
4 other than by the expiration of a term of office shall be ap-
5 pointed (A) only for the unexpired term of the member he 6 succeeds, and (B) in the same manner as in the case of the 7 original appointment.

8 (4) Members of the Commission shall receive compen-
9 sation equivalent to the compensation paid at level IV of the 10 Executive Schedule (5 U.S.C. 5315).

11 (b) (1) The Commission shall have an Executive Di-
12 rector who shall be appointed by the Commission. The Ex-
13 ecutive Director shall be paid at a rate not to exceed the rate
14 of basic pay in effect for level V of the Executive Schedule
15 (5 U.S.C. 5316).

16 (2) With the approval of the Commission, the Execu-
17 tive Director may—

18 (A) appoint and fix the pay of such additional per-19 sonnel as he deems necessary, and

20 (B) procure temporary and intermittent services to 21 the same extent as is authorized by section 3109 (b)
22 of title 5, United States Code, but at rates for individ-
23 uals not to exceed the daily equivalent of the annual rate
24 of basic pay in effect for grade GS-15 of the General
25 Schedule (5 U.S.C. 5332).

1       (3) In carrying out its responsibilities under this Act,
2 the Commission shall, to the fullest extent practicable, avail
3 itself of the assistance, including personnel and facilities, of 4 other agencies and departments of the United States Gov-
5 ernment. The heads of such agencies and departments may 6 make available to the Commission such personnel, facilities,
7 and other assistance, with or without reimbursement, as the 8 Commission may request.

9       (c) The Commission is abolished six years after the date
10 of enactment of this Act unless, prior to that time, the Con-
11 gress adopts a concurrent resolution disapproving the aboli-
12 tion of the Commission.

13       DUTIES OF COMMISSION; ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

14       SEC. 5. (a) The Commission shall—

15               (1) prescribe rules to carry out the provisions of 16 sections 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, and 12 in accordance with 17 the provisions of subsection (b) ;

18               (2) collect from each district court of the United 19 States such detailed information (which each such 20 court shall assist in providing) relating to sentencing
21 practices in each such court as the Commission shall 22 by rule require; and

23               (3) review the information collected pursuant to 24 paragraph (2) in accordance with the provisions of 25 subsection (c).

1 (b) (1) Not later than eighteen months after the date
2 of enactment of this Act, the Commission shall publish
3 in the Federal Register proposed rules to carry out the 4 provisions of sections 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, and 12. Not earlier
5 than sixty days, but not later than ninety days, after the 6 date of publication of such proposed rules, the Commission
7 shall hold public hearings to afford interested persons a
8 reasonable opportunity to present data, views, or argu-
9 ments concerning such proposed rules, in an oral presenta-
10 tion, or in writing prior to the hearing. The Commission
11 shall consider fully all submissions respecting such pro-
12 posed rules, revise such proposed rules on the basis of 13 such submissions to the extent appropriate and consistent
14 with the policy of this Act, and issue a concise statement
15 of the principal reasons for adoption, and the reasons for 16 overruling any considerations urged against adoption. All
17 such procedures shall be consistent with the applicable
18 provisions of sections 553 (b) and (c) of title 5, United
19 States Code.

20 (2) The Commission, before adopting any such pro-
21 posed rule under this section, shall transmit such proposed 22 rule and such statement to the Senate and the House of 23 Representatives.

24 (3) (A) If the Senate and the House of Representa-
25 tives do not, through agreement to a concurrent resolution,

1 disapprove the proposed rule within forty-five calendar days
2 after receipt thereof, then the Commission may adopt such
3 rule and it shall thereupon become effective. The Commis-
4 sion may not adopt any rule which is disapproved under this
5 subparagraph.

6 (B) For purposes of this paragraph, the term "Calen-
7 dar days" does not include any calendar day (i) on which
8 both Houses of the Congress are adjourned sine die, or (ii)
9 during a recess by either House of three or more days.

10 (C) If such proposed rule consists of a schedule of pre-
11 sumptive sentences as provided in section 6, a schedule of 12 aggravating or mitigating circumstances as provided in sec-
13 tion 7, or a schedule of sanctions as provided in section 9 (a), 14 any such resolution of disapproval must disapprove such 15 schedule as a whole.

16 (c) Each year, during the two-year period after the 17 date on which the first rules adopted as provided in subsec-
18 tion (a) become effective, the Commission shall review the 19 information collected as required by subsection (a) (2) and 20 shall reassess such rules accordingly. If the Commission finds,
21 on the basis of such review, that modification of such rules
22 is desirable, the Commission may modify such rules in ac-
23 cordance with the procedures set forth in subsection (b). At 24 the end of such two-year period, the Commission shall con-
25 duct such a review at least once every three years, unless the

1 Commission is sooner abolished as provided in section 4.

2 The Commission shall publish the results of all such reviews.

3 (d) The Commission shall transmit a report to the Con-
4 gress each year. Each such report shall contain a detailed 5 statement with respect to the activities of the Commission in 6 carrying out its duties under this Act, and any recommenda-
7 tions for legislative or other action by the Congress which 8 the Commission considers appropriate.

9 PRESUMPTIVE SENTENCES

10 SEC. 6. (a) The Commission shall establish, in accord-
11 ance with the provisions in section 5, a schedule—

12 (1) setting forth gradations of gravity of criminal
13 offenses;

14 (2) prescribing an appropriate gradation of gravity
15 for each criminal offense;

16 (3) prescribing a presumptive sentence for each
17 gradation of gravity.

18 (b) The severity of each presumptive sentence pre-
19 scribed as provided in subsection (a) (3) shall be com-
20 mensurate with the gravity of the criminal offense to which 21 such presumptive sentence is assigned.

22 (c) (1) For the purpose of subsections (a) and (b),
23 the Commission, in determining the gravity of a criminal 24 offense, shall assess the degree of harm or risk of harm of the 25 type of criminal conduct involved in such criminal offense

1 and the degree of culpability of a perpetrator engaging in
2 that type of conduct.

3 (2) For the purpose of subsections (a) and (b), the 4 Commission may establish, solely for purposes of this Act,
5 subcategories of any criminal offense and assign different
6 gradations of gravity to such subcategories, if it finds that 7 such subcategories have distinct degrees of gravity. When-
8 ever the Commission establishes such subcategories, it shall 9 also prescribe the criteria that each sentencing judge must 10 use to determine the applicable subcategory for the crim-
11 inal conduct engaged in by such convicted offender. For pur-
12 poses of this Act, such subcategory shall be considered to be 13 the criminal offense of which the criminal offender was 14 convicted.

15 MITIGATING AND AGGRAVATING CIRCUMSTANCES

16 SEC. 7. (a) The Commission shall establish, in accord-
17 ance with the provisions of section 5, a schedule and rules—

18 (1) prescribing variations from any presumptive
19 sentence established under section 6 on account of miti-
20 gating or aggravating circumstances;

21 (2) specifying which types of circumstances shall 22 qualify as mitigating or aggravating circumstances that 23 justify a variation from such presumptive sentence;
24 and

1           (3) specifying, with respect to each such type of
2 mitigating or aggravating circumstance, a particular
3 amount or a maximum permitted amount of variation
4 from such presumptive sentence.

5           (b) If a sentence of imprisonment is prescribed as the 6 presumptive sentence, no variation on account of aggravat-
7 ing circumstances prescribed by the Commission under sub-
8 section (a) shall increase the duration of such imprison-
9 ment by more than 50 per centum.

10          (c) For the purpose of subsection (a), the Commis-
11 sion—

12           (1) shall not consider as an aggravating or miti-
13 gating circumstance, the anticipated effect on the future
14 behavior of the convicted offender; or of any other per-15 son, of imposing a sentence more or less severe than the 16 presumptive sentence; and

17           (2) may specify as a mitigating or aggravating cir-
18 cumstance, any particular acts or circumstances surround-
19 ing the commission of a criminal offense which renders
20 the degree of harm or risk of harm of the criminal con-
21 duct, or the degree of culpability of the offender in en-
22 gaging in such conduct, greater or less than the grada-
23 tion of gravity prescribed for such criminal offense under
24 section 6.

1 (d) Notwithstanding the provisions in subsection (c),
2 the Commission shall establish rules, consistent with the 3 provisions of this section, which shall—

4 (1) prescribe as an aggravating circumstance
5 the fact that a convicted offender has previously been
6 convicted of a serious offense as defined in section 8
7 (b), and

8 (2) require the imposition of a sentence more severe
9 than the presumptive sentence in any case in which 10 such aggravating circumstance is present.

11 SENTENCES OF IMPRISONMENT

12 SEC. 8. (a) The Commission shall—

13 (1) prescribe a presumptive sentence of imprison-
14 ment under section 6 only for serious criminal offenses;
15 and

16 (2) prescribe, with respect to serious criminal of-
17 fenses, no presumptive sentence in excess of five years
18 of actual imprisonment, except as otherwise provided in 19 subsection (c).

20 (b) A criminal offense is serious for purposes of sub-
21 section (a) if, as determined under section 6 (c) (1), it en-
22 tails a substantial degree of harm or risk thereof and a high
23 degree of culpability on the part of the person who commits 24 such criminal offense. In determining whether the harm or

1 risk thereof is substantial, the Commission shall consider
2 whether the conduct—

3 (1) involves the infliction, risk, or threat of sub-
4 stantial bodily injury; or

5 (2) involves the infliction or risk of substantial
6 harm (other than of bodily injury), including but not
7 limited to the substantial abuse of a public office, a
8 public or private trust, or of government processes, or 9 the deprivation of a substantial portion of the livelihood
10 of a victim of such criminal offense.

11 (c) Subsection (a) (2) shall not apply to the criminal
12 offenses of murder, manslaughter, forcible rape, aircraft hi-
13 jacking, kidnapping, or treason, or any attempt or aiding or 14 abetting of such offenses.

15 SENTENCES OF IMPRISONMENT

16 SEC. 9. (a) The Commission shall establish, in accord-
17 ance with the provisions in section 5—

18 (1) a schedule of penalties other than imprison-
19 ment, to be assigned as presumptive sentences for crimi-
20 nal offenses for which imprisonment may not be pre-
21 scribed as the presumptive sentence under section 8;
22 and

23 (2) a schedule specifying the (A) terms and 24 conditions applicable to such penalties, and (B) sanc-

1        tions which may be applied by any sentencing judge
2        to any convicted offender who violates such terms or
3        conditions.

4        (b) For the purpose of subsection (a) (1), such
5        penalties may include—

6            (1) intermittent confinement for days, evenings,
7        or weekends, or portions thereof;

8            (2) supervision in the community;

9            (3) a fine or forfeiture;

10          (4) a curfew or travel restrictions; or

11          (5) community service.

12        (c) For the purpose of subsection (a) (2) (A), the 13        terms and conditions of such penalties prescribed by the 14        Commission may include the duration, scheduling, and 15        place of any intermittent confinement; the amount or 16        method of calculating or determining any fine or forfeiture;
17        and the nature, type, and extent of any supervision, cur-
18        few, travel restriction, or community service.

19        (d) For the purpose of subsection (a) (2) (B), no
20        sanction that is imposed on a convicted offender for fail-
21        ing to comply with such terms and conditions may result
22        in the imprisonment of such convicted offender for more
23        than one year.

24        (e) The Attorney General shall, after consulting with 25        the Commission, establish or designate an office within the

1 Department of Justice that shall be responsible for imple-
2 menting and carrying out any penalties under this section
3 which are prescribed by the Commission and imposed upon
4 convicted offenders by any sentencing judge.

5                                   MAXIMUM SENTENCES

6       SEC. 10. No presumptive sentence prescribed by the 7 Commission under section 6 for a criminal offense, including
8 any variation thereof on account of aggravating circum-
9 stances prescribed by the Commission under section 7, may 10 exceed in severity the maximum punishment for such of-
11 fense prescribed by any other statute of the United States.

12                           ABOLITION OF PAROLE; EARLY RELEASE FOR GOOD

13                                   BEHAVIOR

14       SEC. 11. (a) Whenever the Commission prescribes im-
15 prisonment as a penalty under section 6, 7, or 8, the Com-
16 mission—

17               (1) shall consider that such penalty refers to the 18 period of time which convicted offenders must actually 19 serve in confinement, except as otherwise provided in 20 subsection (c); and

21               (2) may by rule prescribe that the release of con-
22 victed offenders from imprisonment shall be followed by 23 a period of supervision in the community to aid the 24 transition of such offenders to the community, and pre-
25 scribe the terms and conditions of such supervision and

1 the sanctions which may be applied to any convicted
2 offender who fails to comply with such terms and condi-
3 tions, except that—

4 (A) the duration of any such supervision shall
5 not exceed 10 per centum of the convicted offender's
6 sentence of imprisonment; and

7 (B) no sanction for noncompliance with the 8 terms and conditions of such supervision shall result
9 in the imprisonment of a convicted offender for 10 more than fifteen days.

11 (b) After the date on which the schedule established
12 pursuant to section 6 becomes effective, the Parole Commis-
13 sion shall have no authority under section 4203 of title 18,
14 United States Code, to grant parole to any prisoner except 15 that the Parole Commission shall have the authority—

16 (1) to grant parole to any otherwise eligible
17 prisoner who was sentenced before that date; and 18 (2) to administer any supervision in the com-

19 munity authorized by the Commission under subsection
20 (a) (2).

21 (c) (1) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection
22 (a), the Commission may establish rules pursuant to which—

23 (A) each imprisoned offender is entitled to a de-
24 duction from the term of his imprisonment, if he has not

1 committed a serious disciplinary infraction while impris-
2 oned; or

3 (B) any imprisoned offender who has committed
4 such a serious disciplinary infraction may be penalized
5 by an addition to the term of his imprisonment.

6 (2) If the Commission establishes rules as provided in
7 paragraph (1), it shall, after consulting with the Attorney
8 General, the Director of the Bureau of Prisons of the United 9 States Department of Justice, and other appropriate officials,

10 (A) prescribe the procedures for determining whether an 11 imprisoned offender has committed a serious disciplinary
12 infraction, and (B) define what constitutes a serious dis-
13 ciplinary infraction for purposes of this subsection.

14 (3) No rule established as provided in paragraph (1)
15 shall permit—

16 (A) any deduction from the term of any convicted
17 offender's imprisonment, pursuant to paragraph (1)

18 (A) in excess of 15 per centum of the duration of such 19 term if such term is three years or less, or 10 per centum
20 of the duration of such term if such term is more than 21 three years; or

22 (B) any addition to the term of any convicted
23 offender's imprisonment, pursuant to paragraph (1)

1 (B), in excess of 10 per centum of the duration of such 2 term.

3 (d) Whenever the Commission, in accordance with
4 section 5 (c), amends its schedule and rules under section 6
5 to reduce the severity of any presumptive sentence, or under 6 section 7 in such a manner as could reduce the severity of 7 any penalty imposed thereunder, the Commission may estab-
8 lish rules—

9 (1) prescribing that any such amendment shall
10 apply retroactively to convicted offenders who were sen-
11 tenced as provided in this Act prior to the effective date
12 of such amendment and who still are undergoing pun-
13 ishment; or

14 (2) directing sentencing judges to reduce or ter-
15 minate the punishment of such convicted offenders, con-
16 sistentlly with the Commission's rules under paragraph 17 (1).

18 DUTIES OF SENTENCING COURTS

19 SEC. 12. (a) (1) Each sentencing judge shall impose
20 on any convicted offender the presumptive sentence assigned 21 to the criminal offense of which he was convicted, except 22 if a variation from the presumptive sentence is permitted or 23 required by the Commission's rules under section 7, such 24 judge shall vary such presumptive sentence only as provided
25 in section 7.

1 (2) If the sentencing judge (A) varies any presump-
2 tive sentence, based upon the existence of any aggravating
3 or mitigating circumstance, or (B) refuses, upon request by 4 the defendant or the United States, to vary any presump-
5 tive sentence, such judge shall disclose the variation or re-
6 fusal in open court, and make a statement for the record of 7 the justification therefor, including a description of any such 8 aggravating or mitigating circumstances and all other in-
9 formation, evidence, or other factors considered by the judge,
10 in accordance with the rules which the Commission shall 11 prescribe under this Act.

12 (b) The Supreme Court of the United States shall have 13 the power, after consulting with the Commission, to prescribe 14 rules of practice and procedure pursuant to section 3772 of 15 title 18, United States Code, with respect to the imposi-
16 tion of sentences under this Act and under the rules of the 17 Commission, except that the Supreme Court may delegate
18 such power to the Commission, subject to such terms and 19 conditions as the Supreme Court may prescribe.

20 APPELLATE REVIEW

21 SEC. 13. The convicted offender or the United States
22 may appeal any sentence imposed under section 12 to the 23 appropriate United States court of appeals solely on the 24 ground that—

1           (1) the sentencing judge imposed such sentence in
2 violation of a rule established by the Commission under
3 this Act or of a provision of this Act; or

4           (2) any rule established by the Commission and 5 related to such sentence is invalid, because (A) the 6 Commission did not comply with the provisions in sec-
7 tion 5 with respect to such rule, or (B) the presump-
8 tive sentence, aggravating or mitigating circumstances,
9 or other parts of the sentencing standards adopted by the 10 Commission are arbitrary and capricious.

95TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

S. 260

---

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JANUARY 14, 1977

Mr. KENNEDY (for himself and Mr. McCLELLAN) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

---

A BILL

To amend title 18, United States Code, so as to impose mandatory minimum terms with respect to certain offenses, and for other purposes.

1        Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-
2        tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,
3        SECTION 1. Section 13 of title 18, United States Code,
4        is amended by striking out "and subject to a like punish-
5        ment," and inserting the following new sentence: "Whoever
6        is found guilty of a like offense under the provisions of this 7        section shall be subject to a like punishment except that in 8        those cases in which a person is convicted of committing any 9        act which, according to the laws thereof in force at the time,
10        constitutes—

2

1           “(a) the crime of burglary, where at night a per-
2           son, with intent to engage in conduct constituting a
3           crime, enters without privilege, or remains surreptitiously
4           within, a dwelling that is the property of another; or

5           “(b) the crime of aggravated assault, where a per-
6           son, by physical force, intentionally causes serious bodily
7           injury to another person;

8           said person shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment
9           which may not be less than two years.”.

10          SEC. 2. The third paragraph of subsection (b) of sec-
11          tion 1111 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read
12          as follows:

13          “Whoever is guilty of murder in the second degree, shall 14          be sentenced to a term of imprisonment which may not be 15          less than two years and which may be up to life imprison-
16          ment.”.

17          SEC. 3. Subsection (c) of section 924 of title 18, United 18          States Code, is amended to read as follows:

19          “(c) Whoever, while engaged in the commission of any 20          offense for which he may be prosecuted in a court of the 21          United States, knowingly possesses, displays, brandishes, or 22          otherwise uses a firearm, destructive device, or other danger-
23          ous weapon, shall, in addition to the punishment provided
24          for the commission of such offense, be sentenced to a term

1 of imprisonment which may not be less than two years and
2 which may be up to ten years. In the case of a second or 3 subsequent conviction of a violation of this subsection, or in 4 the case of a conviction under this subsection following a
5 conviction of a State offense during the commission of which 6 the defendant knowingly possessed, displayed, brandished, or 7 otherwise used a firearm, destructive device, or other dan-
8 gerous weapon, such defendant, with respect to such con-
9 viction under this subsection, shall be sentenced to a term
10 of imprisonment which may not be less than four years and 11 which may be up to twenty years.”

12 SEC. 4. Section 2031 of title 18, United States Code, is 13 amended by striking out “imprisonment for any term of years
14 or for life” and inserting in lieu thereof “shall be sentenced
15 to a term of imprisonment which may not be less than two 16 years and which may be up to life imprisonment”.

17 SEC. 5. (a) Section 2111 of title 18, United States
18 Code, is amended by striking out “shall be imprisoned for 19 not more than fifteen years” and inserting in lieu thereof
20 “shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment which may 21 not be less than two years and which may be up to fifteen
22 years”.

23 (b) Section 2112 of title 18, United States Code, is 24 amended by deleting “shall be imprisoned not more than

1 fifteen years” and inserting in lieu thereof “shall be sen-
2 tenced to a term of imprisonment which may not be less than 3 two years and which may be up to fifteen years”.

4 (c) The third paragraph of section 2113 (a) of title 18,
5 United States Code, is amended by deleting “or imprisoned
6 not more than twenty years, or both” and inserting “and 7 shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment which may not
8 be less than two years and which may be up to twenty
9 years”.

10 (d) The first paragraph of section 2113 (b) of title 18,
11 United States Code, is amended by deleting “or imprisoned
12 not more than ten years, or both” and inserting in lieu there-13 of “and shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment which 14 may not be less than two years and which may be up to ten
15 years”.

16 (e) Section 2113 (d) of title 18, United States Code, is 17 amended by deleting “or imprisoned not more than twenty-18 five years, or both” and inserting in lieu thereof “and shall 19 be sentenced to a term of imprisonment which may be less
20 than two years and which may be up to twenty-five years”.

21 SEC. 6. (a) Section 401 (b) (1) (A) of the Controlled
22 Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 841 is amended (1) by adding 23 after the words “more than $25,000, or both”, the follow-
24 ing sentence: “In the case of a controlled substance in 25 schedule I which is the narcotic drug heroin, such person

1 shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of not less
2 than two years or more than fifteen years, and a fine of not
3 more than $25,000"; and (2) by adding after the words
4 "more than $50,000, or both" the following new sentence:
5 "In the case of a controlled substance in schedule I which 6 is the narcotic drug heroin, such person shall be sentenced
7 to a term of imprisonment of not less than two years or more
8 than thirty years, and a fine of not more than $50,000."

9 (b) Section 1010 (b) (1) of the Controlled Substances
10 Act 21 U.S.C. 960) is amended by adding after the words
11 "not more than $25,000, or both" the following new sen-
12 tence: "In the case of a controlled substance in schedule I
13 which is the narcotic drug heroin, such person shall be sen-
14 tenced to a term of imprisonment of not less than two years
15 or more than fifteen years and fine of not more than 16 $25,000."

17 SEC. 7. (a) Title 18, United States Code, is amended by 18 adding immediately after section 3578 the following new 19 sections:

20 "§ 3579. Increased sentence for repeat offenders

21 "(a) Whoever has been found guilty of an offense
22 described in the provisions of section 13 relating to bur-
23 glary and aggravated assault as defined therein, section 1111
24 relating to murder in the second degree, section 2031,
25 section 2111, section 2112, any provision of section 2113

1 (other than the provisions contained in the second para-
2 graph of subsection (b) of such section), or section 924
3 (c) of this title, or section 401 (b) of the Controlled Sub-
4 stances Act, relating to the narcotic drug heroin in schedule
5 I or the provisions of section 1010 of the Controlled Sub-
6 stances Act relating to the narcotic drug heroin in sched-
7 ule I, and said person is found to be a repeat offender, pur-
8 suant to subsection (c) of this section shall be sentenced
9 to imprisonment for an appropriate term which may not 10 be less than four years and may be up to the maximum
11 provided by law for such violation for which he was con-
12 victed. Otherwise the court shall sentence the defendant in 13 accordance with the law prescribing penalties for such viola-
14 tion. The court shall place in the record its findings, includ-
15 ing an identification of the information relied upon in making
16 such findings, and its reasons for the sentence imposed.

17 “(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of this sec-
18 tion, the court shall not sentence a repeat offender to less 19 than any mandatory minimum penalty prescribed by law for 20 such violation.

21 “(c) A defendant is a repeat offender for purposes of 22 this section if the defendant has previously been convicted
23 in courts of the United States, the District of Columbia, the 24 Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, a territory or possession of 25 the United States, any political subdivision, or any depart-

1 ment, agency, or instrumentality thereof, for a violation of 2 any provision within the purview of subsection (a) of this
3 section committed on an occasion different from the alleged
4 violation referred to in subsection (a), or has previously
5 been convicted in any State court of a violation of a State
6 law involving murder in the second degree, rape, robbery,
7 burglary, aggravated assault, the commission of any offense
8 while knowingly possessing, displaying, brandishing, or 9 otherwise using a firearm, destructive device, or other danger-
10 ous weapon, or the commission of any offense involving the 11 manufacturing, distributing, selling, dispensing, possessing, or 12 importing of the narcotic drug heroin. A conviction shown
13 on direct or collateral review or at the hearing to be invalid
14 or for which the defendant has been pardoned on the ground
15 of innocence shall be disregarded for purposes of this para-
16 graph.

17 “§ 3580. Imposition and execution of sentence

18 “(a) Except to the extent otherwise provided by sub-
19 section (b), the imposition or execution of any mandatory
20 minimum sentence pursuant to the provisions of section 13
21 (relating to burglary and aggravated assault), section 1111
22 (relating to murder in the second degree), section 924 (c),
23 section 2031, section 2111, section 2112, section 2113, or
24 section 3579, of title 18, United States Code, or section 401
25 (b) (1) (A) or section 1010 (b) (1), of the Controlled Sub-

1 stances Act, shall not be suspended, probation shall not be
2 granted, and section 4202 and chapters 309, 311, and 402
3 of this title shall not be applicable.

4 “(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title,
5 no mandatory minimum sentence shall be imposed, and 6 the provisions of subsection (a) shall not be applicable,
7 with respect to any individual sentenced pursuant to any 8 provision of this title referred to in subsection (a) if—

9 “(1) the individual was less than sixteen years
10 of age at the time of the commission of the offense for 11 which he is to be sentenced;

12 “(2) the individual’s mental capacity, at the time
13 of the commission of the offense for which he is to be 14 sentenced, was significantly impaired, although not so
15 impaired as to constitute a defense to the prosecution;

16 “(3) the individual, at the time of the commission
17 of the offense for which he is to be sentenced, was acting
18 under unusual and substantial duress, although not such 19 duress as would constitute a defense to the prosecution;

20 “(4) the individual to be sentenced was an accom-
21 plice, the conduct constituting the offense was principally
22 the conduct of another person, and the individual’s par-
23 ticipation was relatively minor; or

24 “(5) as to the crimes enumerated in sections 2111,

1 2112, and 2113, no serious bodily injury was inflicted
2 on the victim.

3 “(c) Whoever is convicted of an offense described in 4 subsection (a) of this section shall be granted a hearing by 5 the court prior to imposition of sentence to determine
6 whether any of the factors enumerated in subsection (b)
7 of this section are applicable. The hearing shall be held
8 before the court sitting without a jury, and the defendant and 9 the government shall be entitled to assistance of counsel, com-
10 pulsory process, and cross-examination of such witnesses as 11 appear at the hearing. If it appears by a preponderance of 12 the information, including information submitted during the 13 trial, during the sentencing hearing, and in so much of the 14 presentence report as the court relies on, that the defendant
15 is subject to a term of imprisonment as set forth in subsection
16 (a) of this section, the court shall so sentence the defendant.
17 The court shall submit its findings in writing, including an 18 identification of the facts relied upon in making its deter-
19 mination.”.

20 (b) The analysis of chapter 227 of title 18, United
21 States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the 22 following:

“3579. Increased sentence for repeat offenders.

“3580. Imposition and execution of sentence.”.

S. 888

---

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

MARCH 3 (legislative day, FEBRUARY 21), 1977

Mr. ROTH introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

---

A BILL

To amend title 18, United States Code, so as to provide for mandatory minimum sentences with respect to certain offenses against victims sixty years of age or older.

1       Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-
2       tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,
3       That (a) section 13 of title 18, United States Code, is 4       amended (1) by inserting “(a)” immediately before “Who-
5       ever”, and (2) by adding at the end thereof the following
6       new subsection:

7       “(b) Whoever is found guilty of a like offense, under 8       the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, constituting,
9       according to the laws in force at the time—

10       “(1) the crime of burglary, where at night a person,

1 with intent to engage in conduct constituting a crime,
2 enters without privilege, or remains surreptitiously
3 within, a dwelling that is the property of another; or 4 “(2) the crime of aggravated assault, where a per-
5 son, by physical force, intentionally causes serious bodily
6 injury to another person;
7 shall, if the victim of such offense is sixty years of age or 8 older at the time thereof, be sentenced to a term of imprison-
9 ment which may not be less than two years and which may 10 be up to the maximum provided by law for such like
11 offense.”.

12 (b) (1) Section 113 (a) of title 18, United States
13 Code, is amended by inserting immediately before the period
14 at the end thereof a comma and the following: “except that,
15 if the victim of the offense is an individual sixty years of 16 age or older at the time thereof, the defendant so convicted
17 of such offense shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment
18 which may not be less than four years and which may be up
19 to twenty years”.

20 (2) Section 113 (b) of title 18, United States Code, is
21 amended by inserting immediately before the period at the 22 end thereof a comma and the following: “except that, if 23 the victim of the offense is an individual sixty years of age
24 or older at the time thereof, the defendant so convicted of 25 such offense shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment

1 which may not be less than two years and which may be up
2 to ten years, and, in addition thereto, may be fined not more
3 than $3,000”.

4 (3) Section 113 (c) of title 18, United States Code, is
5 amended by inserting immediately before the period at the
6 end thereof a comma and the following: “except that, if the 7 victim of the offense is an individual sixty years of age or
8 older at the time thereof, the defendant so convicted of such
9 offense shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment which 10 may not be less than one year and which may be up to five 11 years, and, in addition thereto, may be fined not more than 12 $1,000”.

13 (4) Section 113 (d) of title 18, United States Code, is
14 amended by inserting immediately before the period at the
15 end thereof a comma and the following: “except that, if the 16 victim of the offense is an individual sixty years of age or
17 older at the time thereof, the defendant so convicted of such 18 offense shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment which 19 may not be less than three months and which may be up to 20 six months, and, in addition thereto, may be fined not more
21 than $500”.

22 (c) Section 114 of title 18, United States Code, is
23 amended by inserting immediately before the period at the
24 end thereof a comma and the following: “except that, if the 25 victim of the offense is an individual sixty years of age or

1 older at the time thereof, the defendant so convicted of such
2 offense shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment which
3 may not be less than one year and which may be up to 4 seven years, and, in addition thereto, may be fined not more
5 than $1,000”.

6 (d) The third paragraph of section 1111 (b) of title 18,
7 United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

8 “Whoever is guilty of murder in the second degree
9 shall be imprisoned for any term of years or for life, except 10 that, if the victim of the offense is an individual sixty years
11 of age or older at the time thereof, the defendant so con-
12 victed of such offense shall be sentenced to a term of 13 imprisonment which may not be less than fifteen years and 14 which may be up to life imprisonment.”.

15 (e) The second paragraph of section 1112 (b) of title
16 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting immedi-
17 ately before the period at the end thereof a comma and the 18 following: “except that, if the victim of the offense is an
19 individual sixty years of age or older at the time thereof,
20 the defendant so convicted of such offense shall be sentenced
21 to a term of imprisonment which may not be less than four 22 years and which may be up to ten years”.

23 (f) The third paragraph of section 1112 (b) of title 18,
24 United States Code, is amended by inserting immediately
25 before the period at the end thereof a comma and the fol-

1 lowing: "except that, if the victim of the offense is an
2 individual sixty years of age or older at the time thereof,
3 the defendant so convicted of such offense shall be sentenced
4 to a term of imprisonment which may not be less than one
5 year and which may be up to three years".

6 (g) Section 1113 of title 18, United States Code, is
7 amended by inserting immediately before the period at the
8 end thereof a comma and the following: "except that, if the
9 victim of the offense is an individual sixty years of age or 10 older at the time thereof, the defendant so convicted of such
11 offense shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment which 12 may not be less than one year and which may be up to 13 three years".

14 (h) Section 2031 of title 18, United States Code, is
15 amended by inserting immediately before the period at the
16 end thereof a comma and the following: "except that, if the 17 victim of such offense was sixty years of age or older at the 18 time thereof, the defendant so convicted of such offense shall 19 be sentenced to a term of imprisonment which may not be 20 less than five years and which may be up to life imprison-
21 ment".

22 (i) Section 2111 of title 18, United States Code, is
23 amended by inserting immediately before the period at the
24 end thereof a comma and the following: "except that, if the 25 victim of any such offense was sixty years of age or older

1 at the time thereof, the defendant so convicted of such
2 offense shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment which
3 may not be less than three years and which may be up to 4 fifteen years”.

5 (j) Section 1201 (a) of title 18, United States Code,
6 is amended by inserting immediately before the period at 7 the end thereof a comma and the following: “except that,
8 if the victim of any such offense (other than a victim de-
9 scribed in clause (4) of this subsection) was sixty years
10 of age or older at the time thereof, the defendant so con-
11 victed of such offense shall be sentenced to a term of im-
12 prisonment which may not be less than five years and which 13 may be up to life imprisonment”.

14 SEC. 2. (a) Chapter 227 of title 18, United States
15 Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following
16 new section:

17 “§ 3579. Mandatory minimum sentences

18 “The imposition or execution of any mandatory mini-
19 mum sentence pursuant to the provisions of section 13, sub-
20 section (a), (b), (c), or (d) of sections 113, 114, 1111
21 (b) (including a sentence of life imprisonment for murder 22 in the first degree), 1112 (b), 1113, 1201 (a), 2031, and 23 2111 of this title, involving an offense the victim with re-
24 spect to which was sixty years of age or older at the time
25 of such offense, shall not be suspended, probation shall not

1 be granted, and chapters 309, 311, and 402 of this title
2 shall not be applicable.”.

3 (b) The analysis of chapter 227 of title 18, United
4 States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the
5 following new item:

“3579. Mandatory minimum sentences.”.

6 SEC. 3. The amendments made by this Act shall be 7 applicable with respect to offenses committed on and after 8 the date of the enactment of this Act.

S. 979

---

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

MARCH 10 (legislative day, FEBRUARY 21), 1977

Mr. BENTSEN introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

---

A BILL

To amend certain provisions of title 18, United States Code, relating to the sentencing of defendants convicted of certain offenses.

1       Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-
2       tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,
3       That this Act may be cited as the "Fair and Certain Punish-
4       ment Act of 1977".

5       SEC. 2. (a) The last paragraph of section 1111 (b) of 6       title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

7       "Whoever is guilty of murder in the second degree,
8       shall be sentenced in accordance with the provisions of chap-
9       ter 228 of this title."

1           (b) Section 1112 (b) of title 18, United States Code,
2 is amended to read as follows:

3           “(b) Within the special maritime and territorial juris-
4 diction of the United States:

5           “Whoever is guilty of voluntary manslaughter, shall be
6 sentenced in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228
7 of this title.

8           “Whoever is guilty of involuntary manslaughter, shall 9 be sentenced in accordance with the provisions of chapter
10 228 of this title.”.

11          (c) Section 1113 of title 18, United States Code, is
12 amended by deleting “fined not more than $1,000 or im-
13 prisoned not more than three years, or both” and inserting in 14 lieu thereof “sentenced in accordance with the provisions of 15 chapter 228 of this title”.

16          (d) Section 1117 of title 18, United States Code, is 17 amended by deleting “punished by imprisonment for any 18 term of years or for life” and inserting in lieu thereof “sen-
19 tenced in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228 of 20 this title”.

21          (e) (1) The first paragraph of section 111 of title 18,
22 United States Code, is amended by deleting “fined not more
23 than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or 24 both” and inserting in lieu thereof “sentenced in accordance 25 with the provisions of chapter 228 of this title”.

1           (2) The second paragraph of section 111 of such title
2 is amended by deleting “fined not more than $10,000 or
3 imprisoned not more than ten years, or both” and inserting
4 in lieu thereof “sentenced in accordance with the provisions
5 of chapter 228 of this title”.

6           (f) Section 112 (a) of title 18, United States Code, is
7 amended to read as follows:

8           “(a) Whoever assaults, strikes, wounds, imprisons, or 9 offers violence to a foreign official or official guest shall be 10 sentenced in accordance with chapter 228 of this title. Who-
11 ever in the commission of any such act uses a deadly or 12 dangerous weapon shall be sentenced in accordance with 13 such chapter 228.”.

14           (g) (1) Section 113 (a) of such title is amended by de-15 leting “for not more than twenty years” and inserting “in 16 accordance with chapter 228 of this title”.

17           (2) Section 113 (b) of such title is amended by delet-
18 ing “by fine of not more than $3,000 or imprisonment for 19 not more than ten years, or both” and inserting in lieu
20 thereof “in accordance with chapter 228 of this title”.

21           (3) Section 113 (c) of such title is amended by delet-
22 ing “by fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for 23 not more than five years, or both” and inserting in lieu
24 thereof “in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228
25 of this title”.

1       (4) Section 113 (d) of such title is amended by delet-
2 ing “by fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not
3 more than six months, or both” and inserting in lieu thereof
4 “in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228 of this
5 title”.

6       (5) Section 113 (e) of such title is amended by delet-
7 ing “by fine of not more than $300 or imprisonment for not
8 more than three months, or both” and inserting in lieu
9 thereof “in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228
10 of this title”.

11       (h) The last paragraph of section 114 of such title is 12 amended by deleting “fined not more than $1,000 or impris-
13 oned not more than seven years, or both” and inserting in 14 lieu thereof “sentenced in accordance with the provisions of 15 chapter 228 of this title”.

16       (i) Subsections (b), (c), (d), and (e) of section 351
17 of such title are amended to read as follows:

18       “(b) Whoever kidnaps any individual designated in 19 subsection (a) of this section shall be punished in accordance 20 with the provisions of chapter 228 of this title.

21       “(c) Whoever attempts to kill or kidnap any individual
22 designated in subsection (a) of this section shall be punished
23 in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228 of this
24 title.

25       “(d) If two or more persons conspire to kill or kidnap

1 any individual designated in subsection (a) of this section
2 and one or more of such persons do any act to effect the
3 object of the conspiracy, each shall be punished in accord-
4 ance with the provisions of chapter 228 of this title.

5 “(e) Whoever assaults any person designated in sub-
6 section (a) of this section shall be punished in accordance
7 with the provisions of chapter 228 of this title.”.

8 (j) (1) Section 1201 (a) of such title is amended by 9 deleting “by imprisonment for any term of years or for life”
10 and inserting in lieu thereof “in accordance with the provi-
11 sions of chapter 228 of this title”.

12 (2) Section 1201 (c) of such title is amended to read
13 as follows:

14 “(c) If two or more persons conspire to violate this 15 section and one or more of such persons do any overt act
16 to effect the object of the conspiracy, each shall be punished
17 in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228 of this
18 title.”.

19 (k) Subsections (b), (c), (d), and (e) of section
20 1751 of such title are amended to read as follows:

21 “(b) Whoever kidnaps any individual designated in
22 subsection (a) of this section shall be punished in accord-
23 ance with the provisions of chapter 228 of this title.

24 “(c) Whoever attempts to kill or kidnap any individ-
25 ual designated in subsection (a) of this section shall be pun-

1   ished in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228 of
2   this title.

3       “(d) If two or more persons conspire to kill or kidnap
4   any individual designated in subsection (a) of this section
5   and one or more of such persons do any act to effect that
6   object of the conspiracy, each shall be punished in accord-
7   ance with the provisions of chapter 228 of this title.

8       “(e) Whoever assaults any person designated in sub-
9   section (a) of this section shall be punished in accordance
10   with the provisions of chapter 228 of this title.”.

11       (l) Section 2031 of such title is amended by deleting
12   “suffer death, or imprisonment for any term of years or for 13   life” and inserting in lieu thereof “be punished in accord-
14   ance with the provisions of chapter 228 of this title”.

15       (m) Section 2032 of such title is amended by deleting
16   “shall, for a first offense, be imprisoned not more than fifteen
17   years, and for a subsequent offense, be imprisoned not more
18   than thirty years” and inserting in lieu thereof “shall be 19   punished in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228
20   of this title”.

21       (n) Section 2111 of such title is amended by deleting
22   “imprisoned not more than fifteen years” and inserting in
23   lieu thereof “sentenced in accordance with the provisions of 24   chapter 228 of this title”.

25       (o) Section 2112 of such title is amended by deleting

1 “imprisoned not more than fifteen years” and inserting in
2 lieu thereof “sentenced in accordance with the provisions of
3 chapter 228 of this title”.

4 (p) (1) The third paragraph of section 2113 (a) of 5 such title is amended to read as follows:

6 “Shall be sentenced in accordance with the provisions
7 of chapter 228 of this title.”.

8 (2) Section 2113 (d) of such title is amended by de-
9 leting “fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more
10 than twenty-five years, or both” and inserting in lieu thereof
11 “sentenced in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228
12 of this title”.

13 (3) Section 2113 (e) of such title is amended by delet-
14 ing “imprisoned not less than ten years, or punished by 15 death if the verdict of the jury shall so direct” and inserting
16 in lieu thereof “sentenced in accordance with the provisions
17 of chapter 228 of this title”.

18 (q) Section 2114 of such title is amended to read as 19 follows:

20 “§ 2114. Mail, money, or other property of the United
21 States

22 “Whoever assaults any person having lawful charge,
23 control, or custody of any mail matter or of any money or 24 other property of the United States, with intent to rob,
25 steal, or purloin such mail matter, money, or other property

1 of the United States, or robs any such person of mail matter,
2 or of any money, or other property of the United States,
3 or, if in effecting or attempting to effect such robbery, he
4 wounds the person having custody of such mail, money, or 5 other property of the United States, or puts such person's 6 life in jeopardy by the use of a dangerous weapon, shall be
7 sentenced in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228
8 of this title."

9 (r) Section 2115 of such title is amended by deleting
10 "fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 11 five years, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "sentenced
12 in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228 of this
13 title".

14 (s) Section 2116 of such title is amended by deleting
15 "fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 16 three years, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "sentenced
17 in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228 of this
18 title".

19 (t) Section 2117 of such title is amended by deleting
20 "fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 21 ten years, or both" and inserting in lieu thereof "sentenced 22 in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228 of this title".

23 (u) (1) The first sentence of section 16 (b) of the Act
24 of August 24, 1966, as amended (7 U.S.C. 2146), is
25 amended by deleting "fined not more than $5,000, or im-

1    prisoned not more than three years, or both” and inserting
2    in lieu thereof “sentenced in accordance with the provisions
3    of chapter 228 of title 18, United States Code”.

4       (2) The second sentence of section 16 (b) of such Act
5    is amended by deleting “fined not more than $10,000, or
6    imprisoned not more than ten years, or both” and inserting
7    in lieu thereof “sentenced in accordance with the provisions
8    of chapter 228 of title 18, United States Code”.

9       (v) (1) (A) The first sentence of section 12 (c) of the 10   Act of August 28, 1957, as amended (21 U.S.C. 461), is
11   amended by deleting “fined not more than $5,000 or im-
12   prisoned not more than three years or both” and inserting in 13   lieu thereof “sentenced in accordance with the provisions of 14   chapter 228 of title 18, United States Code”.

15       (B) The second sentence of section 12 (c) of the Act
16   of August 28, 1957, as amended (21 U.S.C. 461), is
17   amended by deleting “fined not more than $10,000 or im-
18   prisoned not more than ten years, or both” and inserting
19   in lieu thereof “sentenced in accordance with the provisions
20   of chapter 228 of title 18, United States Code”.

21       (2) (A) The first sentence of section 405 of the Act
22   of March 4, 1907, as amended (21 U.S.C. 675), is amended
23   by deleting “fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not 24   more than three years, or both” and inserting in lieu thereof

1 “sentenced in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228
2 of title 18, United States Code”.

3 (B) The second sentence of section 405 of such Act of 4 March 4, 1909, as amended (21 U.S.C. 675), is amended
5 by deleting “fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not
6 more than ten years, or both” and inserting in lieu thereof
7 “sentenced in accordance with the provisions of chapter 228
8 of title 18, United States Code”.

9 (w) (1) The first sentence of section 12 (c) of the Act
10 of December 29, 1970, as amended (21 U.S.C. 1041), is
11 amended by deleting “fined not more than $5,000 or im-
12 prisoned not more than three years, or both” and inserting
13 in lieu thereof “sentenced in accordance with the provisions
14 of chapter 228 of title 18, United States Code”.

15 (2) The second sentence of section 12 (c) of such Act
16 of December 29, 1970, as amended (21 U.S.C. 1041), is
17 amended by deleting “fined not more than $10,000 or im-
18 prisoned not more than ten years, or both” and inserting in 19 lieu thereof “sentenced in accordance with the provisions of 20 chapter 228 of title 18, United States Code”.

21 (x) Section 13 of title 18, United States Code, is 22 amended (1) by deleting “and subject to a like punish-23 ment” and (2) by adding at the end thereof the following:
24 “Whoever is found guilty of a like offense under the provi-
25 sions of this section shall be subject to a like punishment,

1 except that in those cases in which a person is convicted
 2 of committing any act which, according to the laws thereof
 3 in force at the time, constitutes the crime of burglary,
 4 where at night a person, with intent to engage in conduct
 5 constituting a crime, enters without privilege, or remains
 6 surreptitiously within, a dwelling that is the property of 7 another, such person shall be sentenced in accordance with 8 the provisions of chapter 228 of this title.”.

9 SEC. 3. Title 18, United States Code, is amended by 10 inserting immediately after chapter 227 thereof the following
 11 new chapter:

12 “Chapter 228—SENTENCING

“Sec.

“3581. Sentence to be imposed.

“3582. Separate hearing.

13 “§ 3581. Sentence to be imposed

14 “(a) Whenever a defendant is found guilty of or pleads
 15 guilty to any offense under section 13 (involving the offense
 16 of burglary as specifically provided for in the text thereof), 17 111, 112 (a), 113, 114, 351 (other than murder in the 18 first degree), 1111 (other than murder in the first degree),
 19 1112, 1113, 1114 (other than murder in the first degree),
 20 1116 (other than murder in the first degree), 1117 (other
 21 than murder in the first degree), 1751 (other than murder
 22 in the first degree), 1201, 2031, 2032, 2111, 2112, 2113
 23 (a), (d), or (e), 2114, 2115, 2116, 2117, of this title,
 24 or section 16 of the Act of August 24, 1966, as amended

1 (7 U.S.C. 2146 (b) ), section 12 (c) of the Act of August
2 28, 1957, as amended (21 U.S.C. 461) (other than murder
3 in the first degree), section 405 of the Act of March 4,
4 1907, as amended (21 U.S.C. 675) (other than murder
5 in the first degree), or section 12 (c) of the Act of Decem-
6 ber 29, 1970 (21 U.S.C. 1041) (other than murder in the 7 first degree), the judge who presided at the trial or before
8 whom the guilty plea was entered shall conduct a separate
9 sentencing hearing to determine the sentence to be imposed.

10 “(b) Such hearing shall be conducted for the purpose
11 of determining—

12 “(1) the existence or nonexistence of any and all 13 of the factors set forth in subsections (l) and (m) of 14 this section;

15 “(2) the existence or nonexistence of extraordinary
16 aggravating circumstances; and

17 “(3) the existence or nonexistence of extraordinary
18 mitigating circumstances.

19 “(c) If, on the basis of such hearing, the judge deter-
20 mines that—

21 “(1) none of the factors set forth in subsection (l)
22 of this section exists;

23 “(2) none of the factors set forth in subsection (m)
24 of this section exists; or

1           “(3) there are no extraordinary aggravating or
2           mitigating circumstances,

3 such judge shall, subject to subsection (n) of this section,
4 sentence such defendant in accordance with the following:

5           “(1) In the case of the offense of murder in the
6           second degree committed by a defendant under section
7           351 (a), 1111, 1114, 1116, or 1751 (a) of this title,
8           or section 16 of the Act of August 24, 1966, as amended
9           (7 U.S.C. 2146 (b) ), section 12 (c) of the Act of Au-
10          gust 28, 1957, as amended (21 U.S.C. 461), section
11          405 of the Act of March 4, 1907, as amended (21
12          U.S.C. 675), or section 12 (c) of the Act of Decem-
13          ber 29, 1970 (21 U.S.C. 1041), the defendant shall 14          be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of nine years.

15          “(2) In the case of the offense of voluntary man-
16          slaughter committed by a defendant under section 351
17          (a), 1112, 1114, 1116, or 1751 (a) of this title, or sec-
18          tion 16 of the Act of August 24, 1966, as amended (7
19          U.S.C. 2146 (b) ), section 12 (c) of the Act of August
20          28, 1957, as amended (21 U.S.C. 461), section 405
21          of the Act of March 4, 1907, as amended (21 U.S.C.
22          675), or section 12 (c) of the Act of December 29,
23          1970 (21 U.S.C. 1041), the defendant shall be sen-
24          tenced to a term of imprisonment of three years.

1           “(3) In the case of the offense of involuntary man-
2           slaughter committed by a defendant under section 351
3           (a), 1112, 1114, 1116, or 1751 (a) of this title, or
4           section 16 of the Act of August 24, 1966, as amended
5           (7 U.S.C. 2146 (b)), section 12 (c) of the Act of
6           August 28, 1957, as amended (21 U.S.C. 461), sec-
7           tion 405 of the Act of March 4, 1907, as amended (21
8           U.S.C. 675), or section 12 (c) of the Act of December
9           29, 1970 (21 U.S.C. 1041), the defendant shall be
10          sentenced to a term of imprisonment of six months, and
11          in addition thereto, may be fined not more than $1,000.

12           “(4) (A) In the case of the offense of an attempt 13          to commit murder (other than an offense covered by 14          section 113 of this title) committed by a defendant
15          under section 1113, the defendant shall be sentenced to 16          a term of imprisonment of two years, and in addition
17          thereto, may be fined not more than $1,000.

18           “(B) In the case of the offense of an attempt to 19          commit manslaughter (other than an offense covered 20          by section 113 of this title) committed by a defendant
21          under section 1113, the defendant shall be sentenced to 22          a term of imprisonment of one year, and in addition
23          thereto, may be fined not more than $1,000.

24           “(5) In the case of an offense of conspiracy to

1 murder committed by a defendant under section 1117,
2 the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of four years.

3 “(6) (A) In the case of an offense of assault com-
4 mitted by a defendant under section 111, the defendant
5 shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of six
6 months, and in addition thereto, may be fined not more
7 than $5,000, except that, if such defendant, in the com-
8 mission of such assault, used a deadly or dangerous
9 weapon, such defendant shall be sentenced to a term of 10 imprisonment of three years, and in addition thereto,
11 may be fined not more than $10,000.

12 “(B) In the case of an offense committed by a de-
13 fendant under section 112 (a), the defendant shall be 14 sentenced to a term of imprisonment of six months, and
15 in addition thereto, may be fined not more than $5,000,
16 except that, if such defendant, in the commission of 17 such offense, used a deadly or dangerous weapon, such
18 defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment
19 of three years, and in addition thereto, may be fined not 20 more than $10,000.

21 “(7) (A) (i) In the case of the offense of assault
22 with the intent to commit murder committed by a de-
23 fendant under section 113, the defendant shall be sen-
24 tenced to a term of imprisonment of four years.

1           “(ii) In the case of the offense of assault with the
2 intent to commit rape committed by a defendant under
3 section 113 (a), the defendant shall be sentenced to a
4 term of imprisonment of four years.

5           “(B) In the case of the offense of assault with
6 intent to commit any felony (other than murder or
7 rape) committed by a defendant under section 113 (b),
8 the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprison-
9 ment of two years, and in addition thereto, may be fined
10 not to exceed $3,000.

11           “(C) In the case of the offense of assault with a
12 dangerous weapon, with intent to do bodily harm and 13 without just cause or excuse, committed by a defend-
14 ant under section 113 (c), the defendant shall be sen-
15 tenced to a term of imprisonment of two years, and in 16 addition thereto, may be fined not to exceed $1,000.

17           “(D) In the case of the offense of assault com-
18 mitted by a defendant under section 113 (d), the defend-
19 ant shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of one
20 month, and in addition thereto, may be fined not to 21 exceed $500.

22           “(E) In the case of the offense of simple assault
23 committed by a defendant under section 113 (e), the
24 defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment

1 of fourteen days, and in addition thereto, may be fined
2 not to exceed $300.

3 “(8) In the case of an offense committed by a
4 defendant under section 114, the defendant shall be
5 sentenced to a term of imprisonment of two years, and
6 in addition thereto, may be fined not to exceed $1,000.

7 “(9) In the case of an offense committed by a de-
8 fendant under section 2111, the defendant shall be sen-
9 tenced to a term of imprisonment of three years.

10 “(10) In the case of an offense committed by a
11 defendant under section 2112, the defendant shall be
12 sentenced to a term of imprisonment of three years.

13 “(11) (A) In the case of an offense committed
14 by a defendant under the first paragraph of section
15 2113 (a), the defendant shall be sentenced to a term
16 of imprisonment of three years, and in addition thereto,
17 may be fined not to exceed $5,000.

18 “(B) In the case of an offense committed by a de-
19 fendant under section 2113 (d), the defendant shall be 20 sentenced to a term of imprisonment of five years, and 21 in addition thereto, may be fined not to exceed $10,000.

22 “(C) (i) In the case of an offense committed by a
23 defendant under section 2113 (e), involving the killing

1 of any person referred to therein, the defendant shall be
2 sentenced to a term of imprisonment of nine years.

3 “(ii) In the case of an offense committed by a de-
4 fendant under section 2113 (e) involving the forcing of 5 any person to accompany such defendant without the 6 consent of such person, the defendant shall be im-
7 prisoned for seven years.

8 “(12) (A) In the case of an offense committed by 9 a defendant under section 2114 involving an assault
10 with intent to rob, steal, or purloin, the defendant shall 11 be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of two years,
12 except that, if such defendant, in attempting to effect
13 such robbery, stealing, or purloining wounds the person
14 having custody of such mail, money, or property re-
15 ferred to therein, or puts such person’s life in jeopardy
16 by the use of a dangerous weapon, the defendant shall 17 be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of five years.

18 “(B) In the case of the offense of robbery com-
19 mitted by a defendant under section 2114, the defendant
20 shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of three 21 years, except that, if such defendant in effecting such 22 robbery wounds the person having custody of such mail,
23 money, or property referred to therein, or puts such
24 person’s life in jeopardy by the use of a dangerous

1        weapon, the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of
2        imprisonment of five years.

3            “ (13) (A) In the case of an offense committed by 4        a defendant under section 2115 involving an attempt,
5        such defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprison-
6        ment of six months, and in addition thereto, may be
7        fined not to exceed $1,000.

8            “ (B) In the case of an offense committed by a
9        defendant under section 2115 involving a forcible break-
10       in, the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of im-
11       prisonment of one year, and in addition thereto, may be
12       fined not to exceed $1,000.

13           “ (14) (A) In the case of the offense of violent
14       entry committed by a defendant under section 2116, the
15       defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment
16       of one year, and in addition thereto, may be fined not to 17       exceed $1,000.

18           “ (B) In the case of an offense committed by a de-
19       fendant involving a willful or malicious assault under 20       section 2116, the defendant shall be sentenced to a term
21       of imprisonment of one year, and in addition thereto,
22       may be fined not to exceed $1,000.

23           “ (C) In the case of an offense committed by a de-
24       fendant involving an interference under section 2116,

1 the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprison-
2 ment of eight months, and in addition thereto, may be
3 fined not to exceed $1,000.

4 “(15) (A) In the case of an offense of breaking a
5 seal or a lock under section 2117 committed by a de-
6 fendant, the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of 7 imprisonment of six months.

8 “(B) In the case of an offense of entering under
9 section 2117 committed by a defendant, the defendant
10 shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of one
11 year, and in addition thereto, may be fined not to exceed 12 $5,000.

13 “(16) (A) In the case of the offense of kidnaping
14 committed by a defendant under section 1751 (b), the
15 defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment
16 of twenty years, except that, if death results to any 17 individual so kidnaped, the defendant shall be sentenced
18 to life imprisonment.

19 “(B) (i) In the case of the offense of attempting to 20 kill committed by a defendant under section 1751 (c),
21 the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprison-
22 ment of fifteen years.

23 “(ii) In the case of the offense of attempting to
24 kidnap committed by a defendant under section 1751

1 (c), the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of
2 imprisonment of twelve years.

3 “(C) (i) In the case of an offense of conspiracy
4 to kill committed by a defendant under section 1751 (d),
5 the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprison-
6 ment of twelve years, except that, if death results to 7 the individual who was the object of such conspiracy,
8 such defendant shall be sentenced to a term of life
9 imprisonment.

10 “(ii) In any case of the offense of conspiracy to
11 kidnap committed by a defendant under section 1751
12 (d), the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of 13 imprisonment of ten years, except that, if death results
14 to the individual who was the object of such conspiracy,
15 such defendant shall be sentenced to a term of life
16 imprisonment.

17 “(D) In the case of an offense committed by a
18 defendant under section 1751 (e), the defendant shall
19 be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of two years,
20 and in addition thereto, may be fined not to exceed 21 $10,000.

22 “(17) (A) In the case of the offense of kidnaping
23 committed by a defendant under section 351 (b), the
24 defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment

1 of eight years, except that, if death results to any indi-
2 vidual so kidnaped, the defendant shall be sentenced to 3 life imprisonment.

4 “(B) (i) In the case of the offense of attempting
5 to kill committed by a defendant under section 351 (c),
6 the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprison-
7 ment of four years.

8 “(ii) In the case of the offense of attempting to
9 kidnap committed by a defendant under section 351 (c),
10 the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprison-
11 ment of three years.

12 “(C) (i) In the case of an offense of conspiracy to 13 kill committed by a defendant under section 351 (d),
14 the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprison-
15 ment of three years, except that, if death results to the 16 individual who was the object of such conspiracy, such
17 defendant shall be sentenced to a term of life imprison-
18 ment.

19 “(ii) In the case of the offense of conspiracy to
20 kidnap committed by a defendant under section 351 (d),
21 the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprison-
22 ment of two years, except that, if death results to the 23 individual who was the object of such conspiracy, such
24 defendant shall be sentenced to a term of life imprison-
25 ment.

1           “(D) In the case of the offense of assault com-
2           mitted by a defendant under section 351 (e), such
3           defendant shall be sentenced to a term of three months,
4           and in addition thereto, may be fined not to exceed
5           $5,000, except that, if personal injury results, such
6           defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment
7           of two years, and in addition thereto, may be fined not 8           to exceed $10,000.

9           “(18) (A) In the case of the offense of kidnaping
10          committed by a defendant under section 1201 (a), such 11          defendant shall be sentenced to a term of eight years.

12          “(B) In the case of the offense of conspiracy com-
13          mitted by a defendant under section 1201 (c), such 14          defendant shall be sentenced to a term of two years.

15          “(19) In the case of an offense committed by a
16          defendant under section 13 constituting the crime of 17          burglary as set forth therein, the defendant shall be sen-
18          tenced to a term of imprisonment of one year, and in 19          addition thereto, may be fined in such amount as may 20          be provided by law.

21          “(20) In the case of an offense committed by a
22          defendant under section 2031, the defendant shall be
23          sentenced to a term of imprisonment of four years.

24          “(21) In the case of an offense committed by a
25          defendant under section 2032, the defendant shall be

1 sentenced to a term of imprisonment for a term of two
2 years.

3 “(22) In the case of an offense committed by a
4 defendant under the first sentence of section 12 (c) of
5 the Act of August 28, 1957, as amended (21 U.S.C.
6 461), the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of 7 imprisonment of six months, and in addition thereto,
8 may be fined not more than $5,000, except that, if
9 such defendant, in the commission thereof, used a deadly
10 or dangerous weapon, such defendant shall be sentenced
11 to a term of imprisonment of two years, and in addition
12 thereto, may be fined not more than $10,000.

13 “(23) In the case of an offense committed by a
14 defendant under the first sentence of section 405 of the 15 Act of March 4, 1907, as amended (21 U.S.C. 675),
16 the defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprison-
17 ment of six months, and, in addition thereto, may be 18 fined not more than $5,000, except that, if such defend-
19 ant, in the commission thereof, used a deadly or dan-
20 gerous weapon, such defendant shall be sentenced to a
21 term of imprisonment of two years, and, in addition
22 thereto, may be fined not more than $10,000.

23 “(24) In the case of an offense committed by a de-
24 fendant under the first sentence of section 12 (c) of the 25 Act of December 29, 1970 (21 U.S.C. 1041), the

1 defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprisonment
2 of six months, and, in addition thereto, may be fined not
3 more than $5,000, except that, if such defendant, in the 4 commission thereof, used a deadly or dangerous weapon,
5 such defendant shall be sentenced to a term of imprison-
6 ment of two years, and, in addition thereto, may be fined
7 not more than $10,000.

8 “(25) In the case of an offense committed by a
9 defendant under the first sentence of section 16 (b) of 10 the Act of August 24, 1966, as amended (7 U.S.C.
11 2146 (b) ), the defendant shall be sentenced to a term
12 of imprisonment of six months, and, in addition thereto,
13 may be fined not more than $5,000, except that, if
14 such defendant, in the commission thereof, used a deadly
15 or dangerous weapon, such defendant shall be sentenced
16 to a term of imprisonment of two years, and, in addition
17 thereto, may be fined not more than $10,000.

18 “(d) If the judge determines, on the basis of such 19 hearing—

20 “(1) the existence of one or more of the factors
21 set forth in subsection (m) of this section and the 22 nonexistence of any of the factors set forth in subsection
23 (1) of this section; or

24 “(2) the existence of one or more of the factors
25 set forth in such subsection (m) and the existence of

1       one or more of the factors set forth in subsection (l),
2       and that such existing factor or factors under subsection
3       (m) substantially outweigh such factor or factors under 4       subsection (l) ;
5       the judge shall, subject to the provisions of subsection (n) of 6       this section, sentence such defendant to a term of imprison-
7       ment equal to that provided for such offense under subsec-
8       tion (c) of this section, except that such judge may increase
9       such term of imprisonment by an amount not to exceed 40
10      per centum of the amount so provided for such offense under 11      subsection (c) .

12      “(c) If the judge determines, on the basis of such
13      hearing—

14          “(1) the existence of one or more of the factors
15          set forth in subsection (l) of this section and the non-
16          existence of any of the factors set forth in subsection
17          (m) of this section; or

18          “(2) that the existence of any factor or factors set 19          forth in such subsection (l) substantially outweigh the 20          existence of any factor or factors set forth in such sub-
21          section (m) ;

22      the judge shall, subject to the provisions of subsection (n)
23      of this section, sentence such defendant to a term of impris-
24      onment equal to that provided for such offense under sub-
25      section (c) of this section, except that such judge may

1 impose a lesser sentence, in which case, he is authorized to
2 reduce such term of imprisonment by an amount not to 3 exceed 40 per centum of the amount so provided for such
4 offense under subsection (c) of this section.

5       “(f) If the judge determines, on the basis of such hear-
6 ing, that there exist extraordinary aggravating circumstances,
7 the judge shall, subject to the provisions of subsection (n)
8 of this section, sentence such defendant to a term of impris-
9 onment equal to that provided for such offense under subsec-
10 tion (c), and in addition thereto, may increase such sentence
11 by an amount not to exceed the maximum provided for such 12 offense under subsection (h) of this section, and in addition 13 thereto, may fine such defendant in an amount not to exceed 14 twice the amount provided for such offense under subsection
15 (c).

16       “(g) If the judge determines, on the basis of such 17 hearing, that there exist extraordinary mitigating circum-
18 stances, the judge shall, subject to the provisions of subsec-
19 tion (n) of this section, sentence such defendant to a term
20 of imprisonment equal to that provided for such offense
21 under subsection (c), including suspension in whole or in 22 part, unless the judge determines to impose a lesser sentence,
23 in which case he is authorized to impose any sentence of im-
24 prisonment up to the amount provided for such offense under 25 subsection (c), and in addition thereto, may fine such de-

1 defendant in an amount not to exceed the amount provided
2 for under subsection (c) for such offense.

3       “(h) In any case in which a defendant is sentenced
4 pursuant to this chapter to a term below that provided for 5 the offense under subsection (e), the United States shall
6 have the right, and in any case in which a defendant is sen-
7 tenced pursuant to this chapter to a term above that pro-
8 vided for the offense under subsection (d), such defendant
9 shall have the right, within sixty days following any such 10 sentence, to appeal to an appropriate United States court of 11 appeals for a review of such sentence solely for the purpose
12 of determining if it is, and was imposed, in accordance with 13 law. The court of appeals shall have jurisdiction to receive,
14 consider, and act upon such appeal. The court shall have 15 jurisdiction to affirm such sentence or to remand the case
16 back to the trying court for correction by such court in 17 accordance with the direction of the appellate court.

18       “(i) Except with respect to a sentence imposed pur-
19 suant to subsection (g) of this section, no judge of a United 20 States court shall have jurisdiction to suspend any sentence
21 imposed pursuant to this chapter and place on probation any 22 such defendant so sentenced.

23       “(j) In any case involving a defendant sentenced pur-
24 suant to subsection (f) to a term in excess of that provided
25 for under subsection (c) (by reason of an extraordinary

1 aggravating circumstance), or involving a defendant sen-
2 tenced pursuant to subsection (g), to a term less than that
3 provided for under subsection (e) (by reason of an extraor-
4 dinary mitigating circumstances), the judge shall include, as 5 a part of his decision, a detailed account as to his reason or 6 reasons for so imposing such sentence.

7 “(k) The maximum sentence which may be imposed for 8 an offense pursuant to subsection (f) shall be as follows:

9 “(1) In the case of the offense of murder in the
10 second degree committed by a defendant under section
11 351 (a), 1111, 1114, 1116, or 1751 (a) of this title, or
12 section 16 of the Act of August 24, 1966, as amended
13 (7 U.S.C. 2146 (b)), section 12 (c) of the Act of 14 August 28, 1957, as amended (21 U.S.C. 461), section
15 405 of the Act of March 4, 1907, as amended (21
16 U.S.C. 675), or section 12 (c) of the Act of Decem-
17 ber 29, 1970 (21 U.S.C. 1041), the maximum term
18 to which such defendant may be sentenced shall be
19 imprisonment for life.

20 “(2) In the case of the offense of voluntary man-
21 slaughter committed by a defendant under section 351
22 (a), 1112, 1114, 1116, or 1751 (a) of this title, or sec-
23 tion 16 of the Act of August 24, 1966, as amended
24 (7 U.S.C. 2146 (b)), section 12 (c) of the Act of
25 August 28, 1957, as amended (21 U.S.C. 461), sec-

1       tion 405 of the Act of March 4, 1907, as amended (21
2       U.S.C. 675), or section 12 (c) of the Act of December
3       29, 1970 (21 U.S.C. 1041), the maximum term to 4       which such defendant may be sentenced shall be ten
5       years.

6               “(3) In the case of the offense of involuntary man-
7       slaughter committed by a defendant under section 351
8       (a), 1112, 1114, 1116, or 1751 (a) of this title, or
9       section 16 of the Act of August 24, 1966, as amended
10       (7 U.S.C. 2146 (b)), section 12 (c) of the Act of
11       August 28, 1957, as amended (21 U.S.C. 461), section
12       405 of the Act of March 4, 1907, as amended (21
13       U.S.C. 675), or section 12 (c) of the Act of Decem-
14       ber 29, 1970 (21 U.S.C. 1041), the maximum term to 15       which such defendant may be sentenced shall be three
16       years.

17               “(4) (A) In the case of the offense of an attempt
18       to commit murder (other than an offense covered by 19       section 113 of this title) committed by a defendant
20       under section 1113, the maximum term to which such 21       defendant may be sentenced shall be four years.

22               “(B) In the case of the offense of an attempt to 23       commit manslaughter (other than an offense covered by 24       section 113 of this title) committed by a defendant

1 under section 1113, the maximum term to which such
2 defendant may be sentenced shall be three years.

3 “(5) (A) In the case of an offense of assault
4 committed by a defendant under section 111, the max-
5 imum term to which such defendant may be sentenced
6 shall be three years, except that, if such defendant, in 7 the commission of such assault, used a deadly or dan-
8 gerous weapon, the maximum term for which such 9 defendant may be sentenced shall be ten years.

10 “(B) In the case of an offense committed by a
11 defendant under section 112(a), the maximum term
12 to which such defendant may be sentenced shall be three 13 years, except that, if such defendant, in the commission
14 of such offense, used a deadly or dangerous weapon,
15 the maximum term to which such defendant may be
16 sentenced shall be ten years.

17 “(6) (A) (i) In the case of the offense of assault
18 with the intent to commit murder committed by a
19 defendant under section 113, the maximum term to 20 which such defendant may be sentenced shall be twenty
21 years.

22 “(ii) In the case of the offense of assault with the 23 intent to commit rape committed by a defendant under 24 section 113(a), the maximum term to which such 25 defendant may be sentenced shall be twenty years.

1           “(B) In the case of the offense of assault with
2 intent to commit any felony (other than murder or
3 rape) committed by a defendant under section 113 (b),
4 the maximum term to which such defendant may be
5 sentenced shall be ten years.

6           “(C) In the case of the offense of assault with a
7 dangerous weapon, with intent to do bodily harm and
8 without just cause or excuse, committed by a defendant
9 under section 113 (c), the maximum term to which such 10 defendant may be sentenced shall be five years.

11           “(D) In the case of the offense of assault com-
12 mitted by a defendant under section 113 (d), the maxi-
13 mum term to which such defendant may be sentenced
14 shall be three months.

15           “(E) In the case of the offense of simple assault
16 committed by a defendant under section 113 (e), the
17 maximum term to which such defendant may be sen-
18 tenced shall be two months.

19           “(7) In the case of the offense of conspiracy to
20 murder committed by a defendant under section 1117,
21 the maximum term to which such defendant may be
22 sentenced shall be life imprisonment.

23           “(8) In the case of an offense committed by a
24 defendant under section 114, the maximum term to

1       which such defendant may be sentenced shall be seven
2       years.

3           “(9) In the case of an offense committed by a
4       defendant under section 2111, the maximum term to
5       which such defendant may be sentenced shall be fifteen
6       years.

7           “(10) In the case of an offense committed by a
8       defendant under section 2112, the maximum term to
9       which such defendant may be sentenced shall be fifteen
10       years.

11           “(11) (A) In the case of an offense committed by
12       a defendant under the first paragraph of section 2113
13       (a), the maximum term to which such defendant may 14       be sentenced shall be twenty years.

15           “(B) In the case of an offense committed by a
16       defendant under section 2113 (d), the maximum term to 17       which such defendant may be sentenced shall be twenty-
18       five years.

19           “(C) (i) In the case of an offense committed by a
20       defendant under section 2113 (e) involving the killing
21       of any person referred to therein, the maximum term to 22       which such defendant may be sentenced shall be death.

23           “(ii) In the case of an offense committed by a
24       defendant under section 2113 (e) involving the forcing

1 of any person to accompany such defendant without the
2 consent of such person, the maximum term to which
3 such defendant may be imprisoned shall be imprisonment
4 for life or death.

5 “(12) (A) In the case of an offense committed by a
6 defendant under section 2114 involving an assault with 7 intent to rob, steal, or purloin, the maximum term to
8 which such defendant may be sentenced shall be ten
9 years, except that, if such defendant, in attempting to 10 effect such robbery, stealing, or purloining, wounds the 11 person having custody of such mail, money, or property
12 referred to therein, or puts such person's life in jeopardy
13 by the use of a dangerous weapon, the maximum term
14 for such defendant may be twenty-five years.

15 “(B) In the case of the offense of robbery com-
16 mitted by a defendant under section 2114, the maximum
17 term to which such defendant may be sentenced shall be 18 ten years, except that, if such defendant in effecting such 19 robbery wounds the person having custody of such 20 mail, money, or property referred to therein, or puts such 21 person's life in jeopardy by the use of a dangerous
22 weapon, the maximum term for such defendant may be 23 twenty-five years.

24 “(13) (A) In the case of an offense committed by a
25 defendant under section 2115 involving an attempt, the

1 maximum term to which such defendant may be sen-
2 tenced shall be three years.

3 “(B) In the case of an offense committed by a
4 defendant under section 2115 involving a forcible break-
5 ing, the maximum term to which such defendant may be
6 sentenced shall be five years.

7 “(14) (A) In the case of the offense of violent
8 entry committed by a defendant under section 2116, the
9 maximum term to which such defendant may be sen-
10 tenced shall be two years.

11 “(B) In the case of an offense committed by a de-
12 fendant involving a willful or malicious assault under 13 section 2116, the maximum term to which such defend-
14 ant may be sentenced shall be three years.

15 “(C) In the case of an offense committed by a de-
16 fendant involving an interference under section 2116, the
17 maximum term to which such defendant may be sen-
18 tenced shall be two years.

19 “(15) (A) In the case of an offense of breaking a
20 seal or a lock under section 2117 committed by a
21 defendant, the maximum term to which such defendant
22 may be sentenced shall be five years.

23 “(B) In the case of an offense of entering under
24 section 2117 committed by a defendant, the maximum

1 term to which such defendant may be sentenced shall be
2 ten years.

3 “(16) (A) In the case of the offense of kidnaping
4 committed by a defendant under section 1751 (b), the
5 maximum term to which such defendant may be sen-
6 tenced shall be life imprisonment, except that, if death
7 results to any individual so kidnaped, the maximum
8 term for such defendant shall be death.

9 “(B) (i) In the case of the offense of attempting
10 to kill committed by a defendant under section 1751
11 (c), the maximum term to which such defendant may
12 be sentenced shall be life imprisonment.

13 “(ii) In the case of the offense of attempting to
14 kidnap committed by a defendant under section 1751
15 (c), the maximum term to which such defendant may
16 be sentenced shall be life imprisonment.

17 “(C) (i) In the case of an offense of conspiracy
18 to kill committed by a defendant under section 1751
19 (d), the maximum term to which such defendant may 20 be sentenced shall be life imprisonment, except that, if
21 death results to the individual who was the object of 22 such conspiracy, the maximum term for such defendant
23 shall be death.

24 “(ii) In any case of the offense of conspiracy to
25 kidnap committed by a defendant under section 1751

1 (d), the maximum term to which such defendant may
2 be sentenced shall be life imprisonment, except that, if
3 death results to the individual who was the object of
4 such conspiracy, such maximum term for such defendant
5 shall be death.

6 “(D) In the case of an offense committed by a
7 defendant under section 1751 (e), the maximum term
8 to which such defendant may be sentenced shall be
9 ten years.

10 ”(17) (A) In the case of the offense of kidnaping
11 committed by a defendant under section 351 (b), the
12 maximum term to which such defendant may be sen-
13 tenced shall be life imprisonment, except that, if death
14 results to any individual so kidnaped, the maximum term
15 for such defendant shall be death.

16 “(B) (i) In the case of the offense of attempting
17 to kill committed by a defendant under section 351 (c),
18 the maximum term to which such defendant may be
19 sentenced shall be life imprisonment.

20 “(ii) In the case of the offense of attempting to
21 kidnap committed by a defendant under section 351 (c),
22 the maximum term to which such defendant may be
23 sentenced shall be life imprisonment.

24 “(C) (i) In the case of an offense of conspiracy to
25 kidnap committed by a defendant under section 351 (d),

1 maximum term to which such defendant may be sen-
2 tenced shall be life imprisonment, except that, if death
3 results to the individual who was the object of such con-
4 spiracy, such maximum term for such defendant shall 5 be death.

6 “(ii) In the case of the offense of conspiracy to
7 kidnap committed by a defendant under section 351 (d),
8 the maximum term to which such defendant may be 9 sentenced shall be life imprisonment, except that, if
10 death results to the individual who was the object of 11 such conspiracy, such maximum term for such defendant
12 shall be death.

13 “(D) In the case of the offense of assault committed
14 by a defendant under section 351 (e), the maximum
15 term to which such defendant may be sentenced shall be 16 one year, except that, if personal injury results, such 17 maximum term for such defendant may be ten years.

18 “(18) (A) In the case of the offense of kidnaping
19 committed by a defendant under section 1201 (a), the
20 maximum term to which such defendant may be sen-
21 tenced shall be life imprisonment.

22 “(B) In the case of the offense of conspiracy com-
23 mitted by a defendant under section 1201 (e), the maxi-
24 mum term to which such defendant may be sentenced
25 shall be life imprisonment.

1           “(19) In the case of an offense committed by a
2 defendant under section 13 constituting the crime of
3 burglary as set forth therein, the maximum term to 4 which such defendant may be sentenced shall be six
5 years.

6           “(20) In the case of an offense committed by a
7 defendant under section 2031, the maximum term to
8 which such defendant may be sentenced shall be life
9 imprisonment or death.

10           “(21) In the case of an offense committed by a
11 defendant under section 2032, the maximum term to 12 which such defendant may be sentenced shall be fifteen
13 years.

14           “(1) For purposes of this chapter, the mitigating factors
15 to be considered in any such special sentencing hearing held
16 for the purpose of determining the sentence to be imposed
17 on any defendant within the purview of this chapter are as 18 follows:

19           “(1) The defendant played a minor role in the 20 offense for which such defendant is subject to sentencing.

21           “(2) The defendant committed the offense under 22 some degree of duress, coercion, threat, or compulsion,
23 insufficient to constitute a complete defense but which 24 significantly affected the conduct of the defendant.

1           “(3) The defendant exercised extreme caution in
2 carrying out the offense.

3           “(4) The victim or victims provoked the offense
4 to a significant degree by their conduct.

5           “(5) The defendant believed he had a claim or 6 a right to the property involved in such offense.

7           “(6) The defendant was motivated by a desire to 8 provide necessities for his family or himself.

9           “(7) The defendant was suffering from a mental 10 or physical condition that significantly reduced such 11 defendant’s culpability for the offense.

12           “(8) The defendant, because of his youth or old 13 age, lacked substantial judgment in committing the
14 offense.

15           “(9) The amounts of money or property taken
16 were deliberately very small and no harm was done or 17 gratuitously threatened against the victim or victims.

18           “(10) The defendant, though technically guilty of 19 the offense, committed the offense under such unusual
20 circumstances that it is unlikely that a sustained intent
21 to commit such offense motivated the defendant’s con-
22 duct.

23           “(11) For the purposes of this chapter, the aggravating
24 factors to be considered in any such special sentencing
25 hearing held for the purpose of determining the sentence to

1 be imposed on any such defendant within the purview of
2 this chapter are as follows:

3           “(1) The defendant was the leader of the criminal
4     enterprise.

5           “(2) The offense involved several perpetrators.

6           “(3) The offense involved several victims.

7           “(4) The victim or victims were particularly vul-
8     nerable.

9           “(5) The victim or victims were treated with par-
10    ticular cruelty during the perpetration of the offense.

11          “(6) The degree of physical harm inflicted on the 12    victim or victims was particularly great.

13          “(7) The amounts of money or property taken were 14    considerable.

15          “(8) The defendant, though able to make restitu-
16    tion, has refused to do so.

17          “(9) The defendant had no pressing need for the 18    money or property taken, but was motivated by thrills
19    or by the desire for luxuries.

20          “(10) The defendant has threatened witnesses, or 21    has a history of violence against witnesses.

22          “(n) In sentencing any defendant pursuant to sub-
23    section (e), (d), (e), or (g), the judge shall, if such 24    defendant has one prior conviction for a felony in a court
25    of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Common-

1 wealth of Puerto Rico, a territory or possession of the United
2 States, any State, or any political subdivision thereof, com-
3 mitted on an occasion different from the offense for which 4 such defendant is to be so sentenced, increase the amount
5 of such sentence otherwise authorized by such subsection by 6 an amount not to exceed 50 per centum thereof. In any 7 case in which any such defendant has two such prior convic-
8 tions, the judge shall increase such sentence by an amount
9 not to exceed 100 per centum thereof. If such defendant has 10 three or more such prior convictions, the judge shall increase
11 such sentence by an amount not to exceed 200 per centum
12 thereof, except that no sentence may be higher than that pro-
13 vided for in subsection (k). A conviction shown on direct 14 or collateral review or at the sentencing hearing to be 15 invalid or for which the defendant has been pardoned on the 16 ground of innocence shall be disregarded for purposes of this
17 subsection. Any increase in a sentence authorized by this 18 subsection shall be in addition to any maximum sentence
19 imposed pursuant to subsection (f).

20 “§ 3582. Separate hearing

21 “(a) With respect to any sentencing hearing held under 22 this chapter, the court shall fix a time for the hearing, and 23 notice thereof shall be given to the defendant and the United
24 States at least ten days prior thereto. The court shall permit
25 the United States and counsel for the defendant, or the

1 defendant if he is not represented by counsel, to inspect the
2 presentence report sufficiently prior to the hearing as to afford
3 a reasonable opportunity for verification. In extraordinary
4 cases, the court may withhold material not relevant to a
5 proper sentence, diagnostic opinion which might seriously
6 disrupt a program of rehabilitation, any source of information
7 obtained on a promise of confidentiality, and material pre-
8 viously disclosed in open court. A court withholding all or 9 any part of a presentence report shall inform the parties of 10 its actions and place in the record the reasons therefor. The 11 court may require parties inspecting all or any part of a
12 presentence report to give notice on any part thereof intended
13 to be controverted. In connection with the hearing, the de-
14 fendant and the United States shall be entitled to assistance
15 of counsel, compulsory process, and cross-examination of such 16 witnesses as appear at the hearing.

17 “(b) Any information relevant to any of the mitigating 18 factors set forth in section 3581 (l) may be presented by 19 either the Government or the defendant, regardless of its 20 admissibility under the rules governing admission of evi-
21 dence at criminal trials. Any information relevant to any of 22 the aggravating factors set forth in section 3581 (m) may 23 be presented by either the Government or the defendant, if 24 admissible under the rules governing the admission of evi-
25 dence at criminal trials.

1       “(c) The Government and the defendant shall be given
2 fair opportunity to rebut any information received at the 3 hearing, and to present arguments as to the adequacy of the 4 information to establish the existence of the factors set forth
5 in subsections (l) and (m) of section 3581, or any prior
6 convictions of such defendant.

7       “(d) The burden of establishing the existence of any of 8 the mitigating factors set forth in section 3581 (l) is on the 9 defendant, and is not satisfied unless established by a pre-
10 ponderance of the evidence. The burden of establishing the 11 existence of any of the aggravating factors set forth in sec-
12 tion 3581 (m) is on the Government, and is not satisfied
13 unless established beyond a reasonable doubt.

14       “(e) A duly authenticated copy of a former judgment
15 or commitment shall be prima facie evidence of such former 16 judgment or commitment. The burden of establishing the 17 existence of prior convictions is on the Government, and is 18 not satisfied unless established by a preponderance of the 19 information, including information submitted during the trial
20 of such conviction, the sentencing hearing, and the pre-
21 sentence report.

22       “(f) The imposition or execution of any sentence pur-
23 suant to this chapter or section 1111 (a) of this title, other
24 than a sentence imposed pursuant to subsection (g) of sec-
25 tion 3581, shall not be suspended, probation shall not be

1 granted, and chapters 311 and 402 of this title shall not be
2 applicable with respect to such sentence.

3 “(g) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 4161
4 of this title, each prisoner convicted of an offense against the 5 United States and confined in a penal or correctional institu-
6 tion for a definite term other than for life pursuant to a sen-
7 tence imposed under this chapter, whose record of conduct
8 shows that he has faithfully observed all the rules and has 9 not been subjected to punishment, shall be entitled to a deduc-
10 tion from the term of his sentence beginning with the day
11 on which the sentence commences to run, as follows:

12 “Seven days for each month, if the sentence is not less
13 than six months and not more than one year.

14 “Eight days for each month, if the sentence is more than 15 one year and less than three years.

16 “Nine days for each month, if the sentence is not less
17 than three years and less than five years.

18 “Ten days for each month, if the sentence is not less
19 than five years and less than ten years.

20 “Twelve days for each month, if the sentence is ten years
21 or more.

22 “When two or more such consecutive sentences are to 23 be served, the aggregate of the several sentences shall be the 24 basis upon which the deduction shall be computed.”

95TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

S. 1221

---

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

APRIL 4 (legislative day, FEBRUARY 21), 1977

Mr. SCOTT introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

---

A BILL

To amend chapter 44 of title 18 of the United States Code (respecting firearms) to penalize the use of firearms in the commission of any felony and to increase the penalties in certain related existing provisions.

1       Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-
2       tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,
3       That section 924 (c) of title 18 of the United States Code is
4       amended to read as follows:

5       “(c) Whoever—

6               “(1) uses any firearm to commit a felony with re-
7       spect to which the district courts of the United States
8       have original and exclusive jurisdiction under section
9       3231 of this title, or

1           “(2) uses any firearm transported in interstate or
2 foreign commerce or affecting such commerce to com-
3 mit any crime punishable by imprisonment for a term
4 exceeding one year, and is convicted of such crime in a
5 court of any State,
6 shall, in addition to the punishment provided for the com-
7 mission of such felony or crime, be sentenced to a term of 8 imprisonment for not less than one year, nor more than 9 three years. In the case of his second or subsequent con-
10 viction under this subsection, such person shall be sentenced
11 to imprisonment for any term of years not less than five,
12 nor more than ten years. Notwithstanding any other provi-
13 sion of law, the court shall not suspend the sentence in the 14 case of any person convicted under this subsection, or give 15 him a probationary sentence, nor shall the term of imprison-
16 ment run concurrently with any term of imprisonment im-
17 posed for the commission of such felony or crime.”.

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY

3 9999 05994 714 1

